By this arrangement, the Supreme Court would be spared much of that time which is so greatly needed for the trial of civil causes. With the original and exclusive jurisdiction of the numerous classes of cases, in which the punishment is imprisonment in the State Prison, no inconsiderable portion of each term, in the large Counties, is occupied in criminal trials, and with the imperative duty of delivering the Jails, these trials often greatly interfere with the business of the whole Court, on the Law Circuit.—Grand and Traverse Juries are also assembled immediately upon the dismissals of precisely similar Bodies in the Common Pleas, with no other diversity of duties, than what results from the difference of jurisdiction in the tribunals before which they are convened, and the Traverse Juries are often detained, waiting the argument of causes requiring the presence of the full Bench, to be afterwards put upon the discharge of their appropriate office in the trial of facts, before a single Judge.

With much reflection bestowed upon this subject, in all its various bearings, I am persuaded, that no greater improvement could be produced in the administration of Justice in this Commonwealth, than by the measure of transferring the criminal jurisdiction in the manner proposed. To make it effectual to the despatch of business in the Supreme Court, it should be vested, with the exception before suggested, exclusively in the Common Pleas. This only could prevent interference with the civil business of the higher tribunal, and save the occasion, most generally, either of Grand or Traverse Juries, at the Law Sittings. To provide for the trial of capital cases, at these terms, it might be required of the Sheriffs of the respective Counties to certify commitments for such offences, to the Chief Justice, who thereupon would give orders to the Clerks for issuing the proper venires for the attendance of Jurors. May it not also be worthy of inquiry, whether still further benefit would not result to the community, from enlarging the final Jurisdiction of the Common Pleas in civil cases, by increasing the sum which now restricts the right of appeal. This would have a tendency to advance the usefulness and respectability of that Court, while it would keep from the docket of the appellate jurisdiction, many cases of less pecuniary importance than the costs incurred in their litigation.

On former occasions, I have earnestly pressed upon the attention of the Legislature, the claims of the impoverished and unfortunate to an amelioration of the laws which subject the person to imprisonment for debt. Increased information, and greater liberality in public sentiment on this subject, encourage the hope that some measure of alleviation will now be adopted. Experience has abundantly proved how utterly unavailing is this species of coercion to the collection of debts. It may well be feared, that resort to it, in many instances, not only results in showing the incapacity, but in destroying, also the very inclination to make payment. Deep, extensive, unalleviated distress is the consequence of the imprisonment of the honest poor, and, with the privations of restraint to the debtor, are oft times mingled the keenest sufferings of tender and helpless families in want. Wise and provident legislation will mark the distinction between inability and fraudulent concealment, and while it will secure to the former the indulgence due to involuntary misfortune, it will punish the latter with a severity merited only by deliberate moral transgression. In the discussions which have been had before the public, various modes of relief have been proposed. But that which consists in extending exemption from arrest to a much larger amount of debt than at present, and in all other cases substituting security for the appearance of the debtor to submit to an examination, for imprisonment previous to an opportunity of showing his right to a discharge, appears to have been most favored. These are simple provisions and do the least violence to former opinions and accustomed habits of business. If more than this in your judgment, can practically be accomplished, without weakening the salutary restraints upon improvident credits, or impairing the motives to faithful endeavors in the fulfilment of contracts, it will meet from me a ready and most cordial approval.

---

ENGLISH CASES.

PREROGATIVE COURT — NOV.

Trillick vs. Allanson.

This was a question of Insanity, and was argued at considerable length last Term.

It appeared that the Rev. Mr Monkhouse, Rector of Bramshot, died in Oct., 1828, aged 70, leaving by a will executed the 16th of April, 1827, nearly the whole of his property, amounting to about 11,000*l.* in trust, to found a charity school in his parish. In the will, which is in his own hand writing, he excluded from the benefits of this charity the children of all persons addicted to cheating, lying, thieving, swearing, &c ; and, according to his estimate of his own flock, there were not ten persons who could avail themselves of his bounty. The deceased was the son of a farmer in Cumberland, was a man of talent and acquirements, and had been a Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Rectory of Bramshot, which was in the gift of the College. Here he resided for 20 years, and led a life of extraordinary eccentricity. Between himself and his family there was little or no intercourse, as he lived in great seclusion. The defendant, Mrs Allanson, is his only sister, to whom he never gave more than a few pounds. In the year 1817, a Mr Harrison and his wife, the daughter of the defendant and niece of the deceased, came to reside at Bramshot. Harrison was employed by the deceased to let his tithes and manage other business for him, and resided in the house with Mr Monkhouse for two years, when he removed to a distance of a mile, where he still continued to act for the deceased, upon whose recommendation Harrison became Churchwarden in 1827. Up to that period there existed no hostility between them, and Monkhouse declared his intention of leaving the bulk of his property to Harrison's family. In the month of April of that year, he labored under a delusion that he and two females, one the daughter of Harrison, were to be poisoned by Harrison and his wife. He was perfectly persuaded that poison was put in his milk, in his butter, and eggs : and he declared that there was as much arsenic in his well as would poison the parish ; nor could he be convinced to the contrary, though Harrison drank several glasses of the water in his presence. During his residence in the parish he had professed Unitarian Doctrines, though a Rector of the Established Church, and had texts of Scripture on his cart and on the handle of the pump. In the year 1819 he made a will, leaving 1,850*l.* for a school in the parish, and it appeared that he had all through an intention of founding an institution ; but the sum left was much greater than the wants of the parish required. In addition to the will of April 16, 1827, there were three codicils—one signed the 24th of the same month, and in this he leaves 100*l.* to the provost, Fellows, Scholars of Queen's College, Oxford, in trust, for a Unitarian Society for the promotion of Christian knowledge. He also bequeathed 1*l.* to procure good and wholesome milk for the parish, and one shilling he left to such person or persons as had poisoned his dog Carlo, an animal to which he was much attached, and whose death, in 1824, he attributed to poison. He wrote verses upon the death of this dog, and in his will he called him his faithful companion by day and guardian by night. Long previously to his suspicions of Harrison, he was afraid of being attacked, and went out armed with a pistol and dirk cane, and he fancied some poachers, whom he called the Headly Gang, were going to murder him and several of the parishoners ; but, notwithstanding, he had shown great ability and acuteness in some controversial writing, which he published. He thought his parishioners were very immoral, and frequently recorded his opinions of them in the parish registries, by adding to many names either the word 'bastard' 'illegitimate' or 'kept mistress.' He always kept 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.* in his house, which he hoarded up with more than a miser's fears, and kept a supply of fire arms to protect himself from attack. He was in every respect a moral and humane man, and anxious for the welfare of the poor, for whose comforts, however, it did not appear that he had made any sacrifices. His will was witnessed by two clergymen, to whom its contents were at the time unknown ; and these gentlemen did not think at the time there was any appearance of insanity about the deceased.

Dr Lushington this day, on the part of the defendant, contended that the statements of the several witnesses showed that the deceased, at the time of executing the will, was not of sane mind.

Sir John Nicholl said the whole question for him to decide was, whether, at the time of executing the will the deceased was of sound mind ; or whether it had been prepared by him when of sound understanding. In looking at the conduct of the deceased, his actions, up to April, 1827, could only be considered as one of extreme eccentricity ; and he could not say that the delusion under which he labored in April amounted to insanity. It was extremely difficult to draw the exact line between extreme eccentricity and derangement, but he did not think the deceased's state of mind amounted, at most, to more than a sort of monomania. The gentlemen who had witnessed the will did not perceive any symptoms of madness at the time ; and it appeared that in the ordinary occurrences of life, he had acted with shrewdness and caution. He should therefore pronounce in favor of the will, and grant the probate prayed for.

---

The King vs. Dynely.

The defendant in this case was an attorney, and had been convicted at the last Assizes for Worcester, of conspiring with a person named Loxley, now dead, but who had formerly been one of his own clerks, and had acted as professional agent to a gentleman named Marshall, to defraud the said Marshall of the sum of 2,000*l.*

The defendant was now brought up to receive the judgment of the Court, and he put in an affidavit, stating that it was not his intention to defraud the prosecutor ; for he expected to be enabled to repay the money, and had actually paid the interest up to 1820, when he became unable to do so. He also put in a number of affidavits from various persons to the effect that he had always borne a respectable character and reputation for integrity.

Mr Campbell and Mr Godson addressed the Court in mitigation of punishment ; Mr Sergeant Ludlow and Mr Curwood were heard in aggravation.

Mr Justice Parke, in delivering the judgment of the Court, told the defendant that he had been convicted of a great offence—that of conspiring to defraud, in conjunction with Mr Loxley, now deceased, a Mr Nicholas Marshall of the sum of 2000*l.* The evidence of his guilt did not depend upon the frail memory of witnesses, who, however desirous of speaking truly, might yet be deceived, but upon the unfailing testimony of his own hand-writing. Letters written by the defendant were found among the papers of Loxley after his death, in one of which he made the proposal to the latter to 'gammon' Mr Marshall out of 2000*l.* ; and, in the next, he stated the means by which it was to be done ; and, in this latter was contained a third letter to Loxley, applying to him, as the agent of Mr Marshall for the advance of 2,000*l.* upon a mortgage to which he (Dynely) was trustee for one Sarah Jenks and her children. The defendant, as a professional man, knew that he could not assign this mortgage without the consent of Sarah Jenks ; and he therefore, knew that the title was defective, and he must also have known that Mr Marshall would not have advanced the money if he had known that the title was not good. The defendant had alleged in his affidavit that he had no intention to defraud, because he expected, when he raised the money, that he would be enabled to repay it ; but this was the vain delusive hope with which all persons about to commit a fraud endeavored to stifle the voice of conscience, and the Court could not listen to it. This transaction took place so long as 14 years ago, which was a clear proof that no lapse of time could give impunity to crime. The Court felt itself bound to exercise a painful duty, and to impose upon the defendant a punishment such as would operate to deter others from similiar offences. In any man such a fraud deserved a severe punishment, but in a professional man it was still more serious, for a trust was placed in him which was not given to others. That confidence he had broken. It appeared that the father of the defendant was a Clergyman, now in his 81st year and the Court regretted, that, in the exercise of a painful duty, it must inflict a deep wound on the feelings of an old man, now sinking into the grave, and also cast a shadow over a young man now receiving his education. It also regretted that the defendant himself had lost that good character which it appeared he had hitherto maintained; but its duty to the public was imperative, and in the exercise of that duty it adjudged that the defendant should be imprisoned for eight calendar months in the gaol for the county of Worcester; and also that he should be struck off the Rolls of the Court, for, after being convicted of such an offence, he could not be suffered to continue to practise as an attorney of the Court.

The defendant was then taken away in custody.

RECENT ENGLISH DECISIONS.

One of the partners in a banking firm had caused certain stock of the plaintiffs to be transferred under a forged power of attorney. The Bank of England promised that, if the plaintiffs would prove the amount of the demand against the firm and make an assignment of their proof, the Bank would replace the stock, to which the plaintiffs assented: Held that, it being at the time a question of nicety and difficulty whether the Bank were liable to make good the loss, there was a good consideration for the agreement; that the plaintiffs therefore could not sue the Bank in respect of the stock, until they had proved for the amount in pursuance of the agreement.—Stracy vs. The Bank of England, 6 Bing. 755.

[As to the question, whether the Bank be liable in the case of forgery, see Davis v. Bank of England, 2 Bing. 393.]

The defendant was arrested by the plaintiff's testator, by whose death the action abated: Held that the defendant might be arrested again for the same cause of action at the suit of the executor.—Millin vs. Evans, 1 C. & J. 82.

The plaintiff had from time to time paid rent to the defendants for premises which he held of them; it afterwards turned out that they had no title; and the plaintiff was ejected, and compelled to pay the mesne profits, for the time during which he had held of the defendants: Held that he might recover back the rent in an action of assumpsit for money had and received. The objection was, that title to land could not be tried in this form of action.—Newsome vs. Graham, 10 B. & C. 234.

The defendant had engaged to carry a quantity of lime on board his barge for the plaintiff, which was put on board accordingly. The master of the barge deviated unnecessarily; during the deviation a storm wet the lime; and the barge being thereby set on fire, was lost with her whole cargo; Held, 1. That the deviation was a sufficiently proximate cause of the loss to render the owner liable. 2. That the law implies a duty in the owner of a vessel to proceed by the direct, usual and customary course, and that there was no necessity for averring in the declaration an express undertaking to carry by the direct course.—Davis vs. Garbett, 6 Bing. 716.

The plaintiff, having taken a place by the defendant's coach, was requested by one G. to book a parcel, containing among other things a 50*l.* note, at the defendant's office. The plaintiff, instead of booking it, put it into his own bag, intending to convey it himself. The parcel being lost without any particular negligence, on the part of the defendants: held that the plaintiff could maintain no action for the value. The ground principally relied on by the court appears to have been, that the plaintiff was himself a wrong-doer by depriving the defendants of the carriage of the parcel; but it was expressly stated that a carrier could not be permitted to enter into questions of title with his bailor.—Miles vs. Cattle, 6 Bing. 743.

Assumpsit for business done as an attorney, The plaintiff called his son to prove that the business was done, who swore that he was not in partnership with his father; but it appeared that the business had been carried on under the style of K. and Son, and that K. and Son was on the door of the office. The judge directed the jury to find for the plaintiff, if they believed the son's testimony, as to the business done and the non-existence of a partnership. They found for the plaintiff, and a new trial was moved for, on the ground that it ought to have been left to them to say, whether, the father and son had not been jointly employed; the court held the direction to be right.—Kell vs. Nainby, 10 B. & C. 20.

Action on a promissory note, dated January 1817, for 300*l.* payable to P. H. and Co., or order, with interest. The plaintiffs and H. (named in the note) carried on business as bankers; one of the defendants (A) kept an account with them, and, to obtain credit, induced the other defendants to join in the note; which being deposited with the bankers, they gave him credit on account of it, and charged him with interest for the same yearly. Between the giving of the note and the bringing of the action, H. died; and three changes had taken place in the firm by the retirement of old partners, or the introduction of new. On each occasion the note was transferred to the new firm but not endorsed. A. had at one time a balance in his favor of nearly 700*l.*, but it did not appear that it was a money balance. Held, 1. That the note was a continuing security, and that the liability of the makers was not affected by the changes of the firm. 2. That the action was properly brought in the names of the surviving original payees. 3. That even assuming the balance to be a money balance, the bankers were not bound to apply it in payment of the note. 4. That payment of interest by A. within six years, took the case out of the statute of limitations as to all the parties.—Pease vs. Hirst, 10 B. & C. 122.

This was an action of trespass for false imprisonment, against a justice of the peace. The jury found that the commitment was bona fide and intended for re-examination, but that it was for an unreasonable time. It was objected that case was the proper remedy, and that trespass was not maintainable for such a commitment, without improper or indirect motives. But the court held the action to be well brought; and intimated an opinion that, where the time is unreasonable, the commitment is void from the beginning.—Davis vs. Capper, 10 B. & C. 28.

If a witness remain in court after an order for the witnesses on both sides to withdraw, it is a question for the discretion of the judge, whether he shall be subsequently examined.—Parker vs. M'William, 6 Bing. 683.

[In the Exchequer a witness thus remaining is peremptorily excluded.—Attorney General vs. Bulpit, 9 Price, 4.]

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 22, 1831.

SUPREME COURT.

SUFFOLK COUNTY.—NOV. TERM.

Opinions were delivered by Judge Putnam in the following cases on the 18th instant.

Sturtevant vs. The Globe Ins. Company.

This was a case of Insurance on a vessel which got on shore about 30 miles from Charlestown, S. C. The master cut away the masts, saved what he could and sold her as a wreck. There was much contradictory testimony as to the conduct of the master, the extent of the damage to the ship and the loss on the cargo.

At the trial, it was contended on the part of the office, that the master was guilty of fraudulent conduct and that there was no necessity for a sale.

These allegations were denied by the plaintiff. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for a total loss. And a motion was made to set it aside as against the weight of evidence and for a new trial, which motion was now decided.

The court considered the case one of great doubt. The evidence was exceedingly balanced. The court was inclined to think the weight of the testimony was in favor of the defendants. That matter was, however, for the jury, and they having found it otherwise, the Court was not disposed to disturb their verdict. The Court could not say that the jury had found a verdict against the evidence. They had a right to judge of that, and having done so, their judgment must stand. Judgment on the verdict.

Joseph Bryant vs. Commonwealth Ins. Co.

This was assumpsit on a policy of Insurance by which the defendants caused the plaintiff to be insured a certain amount on the cargo and freight of the schooner William King, at and from Havana to her port of discharge in the United States. She was stranded on the 28th of December at the Washwoods, on the coast of Virginia, about 40 miles from Norfolk and the goods were landed without damage. The assured received a letter from the master on the 8th of January, relating the accident, and on the same day an abandonment was tendered but refused. The master, without waiting to hear from the assured, on the 11th of January, sold the goods on the beach for a small amount less than the Invoice value. The duties paid, the wreck master's commissions on the sales, and the expense of saving the goods amounted to more than half the invoice value. There was evidence that the goods, might have been carried to Norfolk, by land in three or four days, after the accident, and thence shipped, in another vessel to the port of destination, for something more than half the loss on the sale; but no attempt was made to send them on.

The case was submitted to the jury on a former trial and a verdict rendered for the plaintiff. On motion to set it aside as against the weight of evidence, the Court granted a new trial—March Term, 1828 (6. Pick. 131.) It was then decided that the owner of goods insured could not abandon on account of the vessel's being disabled, in the course of her voyage, if, upon the whole, it is reasonable, taking into view the nature of the voyage and the time, expense and risk of sending on the cargo, that the master should procure another vessel, for that purpose, although he should not be able to do it at the port of distress or one contiguous, and although it should be necessary to make use of land carriage to reship the goods. And it was considered that the loss was not affected by the duties, and as exclusive of those, the expenses of saving and sending the cargo to the port of destination would have been less than fifty per cent of the invoice value, there was no right of sale by the master or of abandonment by the assured.

That a usage for the master of a vessel stranded to sell the cargo, without a legal necessity, was void.

A new trial was afterwards had and the same verdict returned. A simular motion was made on the part of the office, and now, at this term, decided by ordering the verdict to be set aside and a new trial granted.

The court could not perceive any material change in the aspect of the case. If the jury had returned a special verdict finding the facts, the court could have entertained no doubt that the loss was partial, not total. The cargo was not technically totally lost. The expenses did not amount to 50 per cent.

The court has not altered its views of the law or the facts. It could not suffer the law to be wrested from its proper operation. The goods might have been transported to Norfolk. There was no evidence of a necessity to sell.

The verdict must be set aside as against the evidence and the law.

A new trial granted accordingly.

---

John H. Smith et al vs. The Oriental Ins. Co.

(Jury trial.)

This was an action on a Policy of Insurance by which the plaintiffs were insured a certain amount on the cargo of the Merrimack Packet, from Salem, to the coast of the Brazils—to one or more ports, one or more times, for the purpose of selling her outward and purchasing a homeward cargo—with liberty to touch on her homeward voyage in the West Indies.

The Plaintiffs claimed damages as for a total loss, by reason of a loss of the voyage, the vessel having been destined to Pernambuco, in the first instance, and thence intending to prosecute a trading voyage within the terms of the policy. They alleged that having been prevented going to that port by stress of weather and damage to the vessel, from the perils insured against, she was obliged to change her course and ultimately put in to Maranham. That the vessel was so much damaged as to create a necessity for a sale. That the cargo was injured, at any rate, to the amount of a partial loss, and could not have been transported to Permambuco, the place of her original destination, for less than half its value, if at all. The vessel and cargo were accordingly abandoned. The plaintiffs, therefore, claimed, in this action, damages of the office, as for a total loss, on the cargo, on account of a loss of the original voyage.

The grounds of defence, on the part of the office, were substantially, that the real object of the voyage was to go to Maranham. The Papers were all made out in accordance with such a design. The cargo was selected with a view to that market and well adapted to it. That it was not at all suited to the market of Pernambuco, that the voyage was not lost. If it were otherwise, there was no necessity for a change of the course of the voyage. There was no such damage to the vessel as to make such a change necessary. It took place, if at all, by design or accident, and not by reason of any of the perils insured against. There was not a technical total loss, of the vessel, nor a partial loss even of the cargo. If one of the objects of the voyage were to go to Para, that portion of the cargo, which could not be advantageously disposed of at Maranham, might have been transported to the former place, at a small expense, as there was a regular and direct communication between the Ports.

The cause occupied several days in the trial and was given to the Jury on the 18th by Judge Putnam.

He remarked that the Jury had to consider, in the first place, what the real design of the voyage was; and then if it were lost by inevitable necessity. If the vessel were prevented from going to Pernambuco by the act of the master, or by loss of reckoning or by any mistake or accident and put into Maranham, that must, in law, be considered the port of destination.

If, however, when there, the master would have gone to Para, had no loss happened, and could not, although a large part of the cargo had been sold at Maranham, it would, in that case, be a total loss.

The Jury would consider whether there was any necessity of sale such as the law regards. The state of facts at the time, and not the impression of the master, or of any of the survey or others —must determine that fact. Were the injuries which happened to the vessel, by the perils insured against, equal to one half her value? These are matters of fact, not of impression—or conjecture. If an abandonment be made upon the supposition that it would cost more than 50 per cent to repair the vessel and it turns out otherwise, the abandonment can be of no avail.

These principles apply as well to the question of necessity for a sale as of loss by damage to the vessel.

If the master mistake the existence of the necessity of a sale, the loss cannot fall on the underwriters.

If there were a total loss of the ship and the cargo could have been carried on, was there a partial loss of the cargo?

On this point there seemed to be no doubt.

If the grounds of the abandonment were substantially true, the abandonment was good.

Although it was intended to go to Maranham, in the course of the voyage, yet if the design was to go to Pernambuco, in the first place, and that was prevented, by any of the perils insured against, it was a total loss.

In making up the estimate of repairs, the jury would consider the repairs necessary to place the vessel, in as good a condition as she was in, before the injury, and not the expense of repairing her, in such a manner as to enable her to complete the voyage merely.

The Jury disagreed.

---

A NARROW ESCAPE.

In the administration of criminal justice, we are informed, that the following circumstance occurred. A young man had been arrested, on the charge of knowingly passing a counterfeit bank note—the grand jury had found a true bill against him—and he was placed on his trial. The evidence in support of the prosecution was strong; the note had been passed in a way to create suspicion; the prisoner's explanations were embarrassed and unsatisfactory; and little doubt seemed to remain of his conviction. The evidence was closed excepting the examination of a clerk of the bank, on which the forgery was supposed to have been committed, for the purpose of showing that the note was spurious. The court were detained a short time, he at length arrived; the note was placed in his hands, he examined it carefully and pronounced it good. The accused was of course immediately acquitted.

---

DOUBT ON AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

The principle, that the owner of property which has been stolen, or obtained by gross fraud, may follow and reclaim it wherever it is found, admits under very careful restrictions of exception—and that is in favor of commercial negotiable instruments—of money—and of bank notes. These, though originally stolen from the real owner, may be retained by a bona fide holder—who takes them in the course of business with due caution—and for a valuable consideration. In the case of bank notes, this exception is allowed in the language of Lord Mansfield, 'for the sake of the currency.' In a case lately tried before a learned and able Judge, (Hallowel,) in this city,—a very strong opinion was intimated, after argument by counsel, that in the case of notes of the Bank of England, passed or negotiated in this country, the reason of that exception, has no existence; and, that the exception, therefore would not here be permitted to prevail—that these notes would be treated as bonds, certificates of stock, or any other evidence of property.—The point was not expressly decided, as the case went off on other grounds. Lord Tenterden expressed lately a similar doubt in a case, in which fraud and transfer took place in France.—Jour. of Law.

---

Dr Sega's Work on the Prevention of Crimes.—The work some time since announced by Dr Sega, from the University of Pavia, is just published, bearing the title, 'What is Civilization, or Means to suppress the practice of Duelling, to prevent or to punish Crimes, and to abolish the Punishment of Death.' We cannot pretend to have leisure for the study of subjects of this sort and therefore cannot express any opinion upon the merits of this work. But the commendations the author has received from those much more competent to judge of his merits, leads us to believe it contains matter deserving of attention. The careful reader will not value it less, because it is strongly marked with a foreign idiom, when they consider that the author has been but a short time accustomed to speak or write our language. We hope he may meet with that reward, in the reception of the work by the public, to which his industry and talents entitle him.—Daily Adv.

---

ADVERTISEMENT.

A gentleman in the city, who has been seven or eight years in practice, and can furnish the best recommendations, would be glad to connect himself with some person of advanced standing and full business in the profession, as a partner or otherwise, on reasonable terms.—Address to A. B., at this office, with real name.

Dec. 4, 1830.

LIBRARY OF EDUCATION.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN,

The Library of Education, Vol. I. —Containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education.' By John Locke, and a 'Treatise of Education,' by John Milton, with an Appendix, containing Locke's Memoranda on Study. Edited by Wm. Russell, late editor of the Journal of Education.

Extract from the Preface.

'The present volume is intended to form one of a series of standard treatises on the subject of Education. The work now commenced will, it is hoped, form a useful source of information to parents and teachers; furnishing to the latter a sort of professional library, to which individuals may resort for assistance in the labor of instruction, and offering to the former an aid to the formation of just and extensive views of the whole scope of education, as well as a preparation for cooperating with instruction, in their exertions for the mental advancement of the young.' Jan. 1.

WHITMAN'S LETTERS.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, 'Two Letters to Rev. Moses Stuart,' on Religious Liberty, occasioned by his Letter to Rev. Wm. E. Channing. By Bernard Whitman. Jan. 1.

SIXTY MAPS of the various countries of the Globe, from the Epitome of Universal Geography. For sale at GRAY & BOWEN'S, 141 Washington Street. Price 50 cents, bound. Jan. 1.

PARLEY'S ASIA.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, Peter Parley's Tales about Asia, with a Map and numerous Engravings. This is designed as a fourth volume in a series of Geographical and Historical Tales for Children. Tales of America, Europe, and Africa, have already been published. Tales of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, Tales of the Sea, and Tales of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, will complete the series. These three last are in a state of forwardness.

GRAY & BOWEN, have just published, TALES OF TRAVELS West of the Mississippi, with a Map and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late Keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. This volume is the first of a series which is intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—
Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.
Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.
Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.
Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.
Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.
Peter Parley's Geography for Children. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, an APPENDIX to the American Almanac, for the year 1831, being the latter part of the fiftyfifth, and the beginning of the fiftysixth year of the Independence of the United States.

Extract from the Preliminary Observations on the Astronomical Department of the American Almanac.

The Appendix is intended to answer all the essential purposes of a Nautical Almanac, and the insertion therein of the distances of the Moon from the Planets, and of the proportional logarithm of the difference between the distances, it is hoped, will be found an improvement on any Almanac hitherto published. Jan.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK.
This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The North American Review, No. LXX. for January, 1831.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Statuary—Del' arte di vedere nelle belle arte del desegno, secondo i Principii di Sulzer e di Mengs.

II. Bank of the United States—Report of the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred so much of the Message of the President, as relates to the Bank of the United States.

III. Anatomy—Address to the Community on the Necessity of legalizing the Study of Anatomy. By order of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

IV. Clarence—A Tale of our own Times. By the Author of Redwood.

V. Hieroglyphics—Essay on the Hieroglphic System of M. Champollion, Jr, and on the advantages which it offers to Sacred Criticism. By J. G. H. Greppo, Vicar General of Belley. Translated from the French, by Isaac Stuart, with Notes and Illustrations.

VI. American System—1. Report from the Committee on Commerce to whom was referred so much of the President's Message, as relates to the Commerce of the United States with Foreign Nations, &c. 2. A Review of Mr Cambreleng's Report from the Committee of Commerce. By Mephistopheles. 3. Exposition and Protest reported by the Special Committee of the House of Representatives on the Tariff. 4. Mr McDuffie's Speech in the House of Representatives on the Bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures for the more faithful Collection of the Revenue.

VII. Grahame's History of the United States—The History of the Rise and Progress of the United States of N. America till the British Revolution in 1688. By James Grahame, Esq.

VIII. Memoirs of Madame De Genlis—Memoires Inedits de Madame la Comtesse de Genlis sur le dixhuitieme siecle et a Revolution Francoise, depuis 1756, jusqu' a nos jours.

IX. Phillips' Manual of Political Economy, with particular reference to the Institutions, Resources and Condition of the United States. By Willard Phillips.

X. History of the Jews—History of the Jews from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Rev. H. H. Milman. Jan. 22.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLII. for December, 1830.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Classes of American Society.—1. A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, first delivered Oct. 6, before the Charlestown Lyceum, and published at their request. By Edw. Everett. 2. Mr Tuckerman's Second Semi-annual Report of the Fourth Year of his Services as a Minister at Large in Boston.

II. The Jews.—The History of the Jews, from the Earliest Period to the Present time. By Rev. H. H. Milman.

III. Wheaton's Travels.—A Journal of a Residence during several months in London; including Excursions through various Parts of England; and a short Tour in France and Scotland, in the Years 1823 and 1824. By Nathaniel S. Wheaton, A. M.

IV. English Unitarian Methodists. An Account of the Rise and Progress of the Unitarian Doctrine, in the Societies at Rochdale, Newchurch in Rosendale, and other Places, formerly in Connexion with the late Rev. Joseph Cooke. In Ten Letters to a Friend. By John Ashworth.

V. Life of Mohammed.—The Life of Mohammed; Founder of the Religion of Islam, and of the Empire of the Saracens. By the Rev. George Bush, A. M.

VI. Anderson's Tour in Greece.—Observations upon the Peloponnesus and Greek Islands, made in 1829. By Rufus Anderson, one of the Secretaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Jan. 22.

GRAY AND BOWEN,
have just received, No. 1, of SURGICAL ANATOMY OF THE ARTERIES, with plates and illustrations. By Nathan R. Smith, M. D. Professor of Surgery in the University of Maryland. January 1.

MALTE-BRUN SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY.—This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK, The Malte-Brun School Geography, illustrated by numerous original engravings, and an Atlas of 19 Maps, Charts, and Tables. By S. Griswold Goodrich. Jan. 1.

GRAY AND BOWEN,
No. 141, Washington Street, Boston, have recently published the following valuable works.

I. THE DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION. Published under the Direction of the President of the United States, from the Original Manuscripts in the Department of State, conformably to a resolution of Congress, of March 27, 1818. Edited by JARED SPARKS.

This important Correspondence, now for the first time published, will form eleven volumes. Eight are already published and the remainder will appear very shortly.

II. JEFFERSON'S WORKS, In four Volumes. Accompanied with a Portrait on steel, and a fac-simile of the original draft of the Declaration of Independence. Second Edition.

III. THE NEW TESTAMENT, conformed to Griesbach's Text. 1 Vol. 12mo.

THE TOKEN, a Christmas and New Year's Present, for 1831. Edited by S. G. Goodrich.

'Then take my flower, and let its leaves
Beside thy heart be cherished near,
While that confiding heart receives
The thought it whispers to thine ear.'

The engravings for the Token of this year are executed by Cheney, Ellis, Gallaudet, and others; among the contributors are Dewey, Greenwood, Miss Sedgwick, Mrs Sigourney, Hall, Peabody, Wetmore, author of a Year in Spain, author of Tales of the Northwest, Neal, Thatcher, Mrs Hale, and others of the first reputation.

The work is larger than heretofore, and is done up in splendid embossed morocco. The literary department is considered decidedly superior to the former years, and in all respects it has received the greatest care and attention. Oct 23.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVI.

CONTENTS.

Art. 1. Mill's Phenomena of Mind. 2. Tytler's and Scott's Histories of Scotland. 3. Memoirs, Correspondence, and Papers of Thomas Jefferson. 4. Niebuhr's Geography of Herodotus. 5. Galt's Southennan. 6. Floods in Morayshire. 7. Troades of Euripides. 8. The Belgian Insurrection, and De Potter's Trial. 9. Alexander's Travels. 10. London Bridge. 11. Hydrophobia. 12. Mr Brougham and Local Judicatories. 13. Novels and Travels in Turkey. 14. The Three Days of Paris. 15. Brasse's Sophocles. 16. Geometry without Axioms. 17. Revolution of 1830. List of Books, Index, &c. Jan. 22.

AMERICAN ALMANAC,
Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

WORKING MEN'S PARTY.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, delivered before the Charlestown Lyceum, October 6, 1830. By Edward Everett.

EVENTS IN PARIS,
during the 26, 27, 28, and 29th of July, 1830. By several eye witnesses. Translated from the fourth Paris edition. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

THE JURISPRUDENT
IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.
BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 29, 1831. NO. XXVII.

MERCANTILE LAW.

CONTRACT OF SALE.

Continued.

That upon the completion of a sale, the risk of accidental loss in the interval before delivery devolves upon the buyer, is, as we have said, an obvious and necessary consequence of the change of ownership.* Accordingly, we find no case in which the principle has been questioned.† Undoubtedly in this, as in every other respect, the liability imposed by the law may be removed or varied by the special agreement of the parties; and if, as is frequently the case, the seller expressly undertake to deliver the goods, or such have been the customary course of dealing between him and the buyer, he will be bound by that agreement or custom, and the risk will remain with him until punctual fulfilment. But the general rule, we repeat, is undisputed. The question, where question has arisen, has for the most part been, whether the sale was complete so as to transfer the property; and of the criteria which have been already given for determining this question, one only was reserved for more particular consideration. It was stated generally, that so long as anything remained to be done for ascertaining either the specific commodity or the price, the transaction could not be considered as a perfect sale, and there would, consequently, be no change of property until that act had been done. The following instances will show the application of this rule to the doctrine of risk. A quantity of turpentine in casks of a nominal weight was sold by auction in different lots. It was announced by the auctioneer to the bidders that the casks were to be filled up before delivery. The plaintiffs were the purchasers of several lots, and paid an immediate deposit. Pursuant to the terms of the sale, all the casks, remained in the warehouses of the seller, where, not long afterwards, a fire broke out and consumed them. The plaintiffs claimed the return of their deposit, and the question in effect was, upon whom ought the loss to fall? Now at the time of the fire all the casks had been filled up except ten: and the court decided, that the property in the former had passed to the buyers; and that as to so much, the loss was consequently theirs; but that the property in the ten casks had not been changed, and that these, therefore, remained at the risk of the seller.‡ The principle of the decision seems to be this:—the commodity bargained for was certain casks filled with turpentine: so long, therefore, as there were any not filled up, it was impossible to say that they were the identical casks purchased. To borrow a phrase of Lord Ellenborough, applied to a case depending on a similar principle, 'there was something further to be done, to regulate the identity and the individuality of the thing to be delivered.'*

In another case† the bought note was as follows:—'Bought of Mr S. Z. &c, 289 bales of goat skins from Mogadore, per Commerce, containing five dozen in each bale, at the rate of 57*s.* 6*d.* per dozen, to be taken as they now lie, with all faults, paid for by good bills at five months.' It appeared that by the usage of trade it was the duty of the seller to count the skins over before delivery, for the purpose of ascertaining that each bale contained the specified number. In the present case this had not been done, when all the skins were consumed by fire, upon the wharf where they were lying at the time of sale. An action was brought against the buyers for not accepting bills according to the bargain, and the plaintiff was nonsuited, Lord Ellenborough being of opinion, that as the enumeration, which was necessary for ascertaining the price, had not been made when the fire happened, there was not a complete transfer of the property to the purchaser, and that the skins continued at the risk of the seller.‡ It will be observed, that in both these instances the act to be done was to proceed from the seller; and we apprehend that it will be necessary to limit the general proposition to such cases.§ At all events, there can be little doubt that if the buyer were in fault, the loss would in effect be visited upon him, even though he might not in strictness be clothed with the ownership.

In general, however, the rights and liabilities of the buyer are reciprocal; and so far as the property in goods is concerned, the one may for the most part be taken as a test of the other. Thus the goods are bound by the sale, and the vendor cannot in general resell them to another, so as to defeat the title of the first purchaser. The latter, again, in his character of owner, may sue and is entitled to compensation for any injury done to them while in the possession either of the vendor or of a stranger. Further, if the price has been paid, he has also a right to the immediate possession, and to speak technically, may maintain trover (a form of action in which both right of property and right of possession must concur) against any one who wrongfully withholds them from him. But payment in advance is of comparatively rare occurrence. In general payment is not made until delivery, and in the interval the buyer has indeed the right to say, 'These goods are mine;' but he has no right to take, or even to demand them, without payment or tender of the price. In our English system, where particular forms of action are appropriated to the different rights in which the injured parties sue, this distinction will be found very material. The doctrine is thus stated by Mr Justice Bayley:—'Where goods are sold, and nothing is said as to the time of delivery or the time of payment, and everything the seller has to do with them is complete, the property vests in the buyer, so as to subject him to the risk of any accident which may happen to the goods, and the seller is liable to deliver them whenever they are demanded upon payment of the price; but the buyer has no right to have possession of the goods till he pays the price.'* And as he has no right of possession, so neither can he maintain an action against the seller, for a breach of contract in not delivering, without averment and proof of the performance of that precedent condition. Nor is this right of the seller, as was observed by the same learned judge,† a mere lien‡ (which is an adscititious privilege depending upon actual possession) but rather, as it were, a reservation out of his original ownership and dominion, and therefore not forfeited, even though the goods pass into other hands. Whether he can, under any circumstances, without the consent of the buyer, resell the goods, admits perhaps of some doubt. Chief Justice Holt indeed, (no mean authority) states the law to be this:—'After earnest given, the vendor cannot sell the goods to another without a default in the vendee; and therefore if the vendee does not come and pay and take the goods, the vendor ought to go and request him; and then if

---

*If a man sell his horse for money, though he may keep him until he is paid for, yet the property of the horse is by the bargain in the buyer: and if the horse die in the vendor's stable between the bargain and delivery, still he may have an action of debt for the money, because by the bargain the property was in the buyer. Noy's Max. chap. 42.

†It was assumed in the cases of Phillimore v. Barry, 1 Camph. 573. Hinde v. Whitehouse, 7 East, 558. and Tarling v. Baxter, 6 B. & C. 360. the question in the two first cases being whether the requisites of the statute of frauds had been complied with so as to pass the property.

‡Rugg v. Minett, 11 East, 210.

*Zagury v. Furnel, 2 Campb. 240.

†In Busk v. Davis, 2 M. & S. 397.

‡The action might also have been answered thus: How could it be ascertained for what amount the bills were to be given, until the number of dozens by which the price was to be regulated had been ascertained by counting? The principle, however, which was taken by Lord Ellenborough seems to be admitted, and is confirmed by the case of Simmons v. Swift, 5 B. & C. 857. In this respect our law exactly coincides with the civil law. Si vinum vel oleum, &c, non uno pretio, sed ita venierint, ut in singulas amphoras vini, in singulas metretas olei, &c, certum pretium diceretur, non prius, quantum ad periculum, perfecta videatur venditio, quam res hujusmodi adnumeratæ, admensæ, appensæve sin, quasi venditio sub hac conditione contracta sit. Vin Comm. in Inst. 1. 3. tit. 24. The rule is thus neatly stated in Bell's Commentaries on the Laws of Scotland, vol. i. p. 444. 'While the sale is still incomplete, as where the quantity has not been separated from a common mass, or where the price is referred to weight or measurement, and the quantity has not been ascertained, or where the bargain is in reference to some test or criterion not yet applied, the risk is with the seller, and if the goods have perished, he will have no claim for the price.'

§See Tarling v. Baxter, 6 B. & C. 364.

*And the learned judge subsequently adds, 'The buyer, or those who stand in his place, may still obtain the right of possession, if they will pay or tender the price, or they may still act upon their right of property, if anything unwarrantable is done to that right. If for instance the original vendor sell when he ought not, they may bring a special action against him for the injury they sustain by such wrongful sale, and recover damages to the extent of that injury: but they can maintain no action in which right of property and right of possession are both requisite, unless they have both those rights. Trover is an action of that description.' Bloxam v. Saunders, 4 B. & C. 948. and see Tarling v. Baxter, 6 B. & C. 364.

†Ibid.

‡What is a lien will be best seen by examples. If I send my coat to a tailor to be repaired, he has a right to keep it till I pay for the repairing. A wharfinger has a right to detain goods landed at his wharf, till his charges are satisfied. An inn-keeper may detain the luggage of a guest, till the bill is paid. This right in each case is called a lien, and it differs from the vendor's right principally in this, that it is lost by parting with the possession of the goods either to the owner or to a stranger.

he does not come and pay and take away the goods in convenient time, the agreement is dissolved, and he is at liberty to sell them again to any other person.'* On the other hand, in a case where the course thus prescribed had been strictly followed, Lord Ellenborough considered it no defence in law to an action against the seller for not delivering, and expressed his opinion thus :—'If the buyer does not carry away the goods bought within a reasonable time, the seller may charge him warehouse room, or he may bring an action for not removing them, should he be prejudiced by the delay. But the buyer's neglect does not entitle the seller to put an end to the contract. The notice given to fetch away the goods could not discharge the defendant from his contract, nor empower him to sell the property of the plaintiff.'† In the conflict of authorities such as these it would ill become us to decide: thus much, however, may without presumption be said, that convenience seems to favor the doctrine of Chief Justice Holt.

But we come now to that far more numerous, as well as more important class of sales, in which the dealing is on credit. In general, sale-notes are exchanged between the parties, in which the time and place of delivery, the period of credit, the mode of payment, and in short the terms of the bargain generally, are specified. In large transactions, the usual stipulation is, that the buyer shall accept bills for the amount, either immediately, or at some future day. Occasionally, but far more rarely, a period is fixed for the payment, or credit given generally, without the intervention of negotiable securities. In some branches of trade again, a certain credit has been established by custom, which is, in such cases, equivalent to an express agreement; the law implying, that all persons deal according to the general usage, unless the contrary appears. Now, by giving credit in any of these modes, the seller waives his privilege of retaining until payment, and the buyer acquires, not only a right of property, but a right of possession also (either absolutely, or on his acceptance of bills, as the terms of the contract may be) immediate, when there is no stipulation as to the time of delivery—from that time, when there is. But if, as frequently happens, while the goods are yet, without fault on the seller's part, undelivered, the period of credit should expire, or the buyer should, before the expiration of the credit, become insolvent, or his bills should be dishonored, then, in any of these cases, the right of possession returns to the seller, and he may again insist on his privilege of retaining until payment.‡ This right or condition may, however, like every other condition, be waived by the act of the party for whose benefit it is introduced; and therefore if the seller choose, notwithstanding, to deliver the goods, actually or constructively, to the buyer, he cannot except in the single case of insolvency which will be considered hereafter, resume the possession, and re-invest himself with the privilege which he has abandoned. And this leads us to the next main division of our subject, the delivery of goods to the purchaser.

To be continued.

LORD JEFFERIES.

George Jefferies, afterwards successively recorder of London, attorney-general, chief justice of the king's bench, and lord high chancellor of England, was born at Acton, near Wrexham, in the country of Denbigh, about the year 1648. He was the sixth son of John Jefferies, Esq., of that place, by Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Ireland, Knight, of Bewsey, in the county of Lancaster. His father was a gentleman of small estate; but his paternal grandfather had filled the office of a Welsh judge. Young Jefferies received his education successively at the free-school of Shrewsbury, at Saint Paul's free-school, and at Westminster school, under the celebrated Dr Busby. Of the progress which he made in his studies, or of the motives which induced him to pursue the profession of the law, little is known. In consequence of the narrowness of his father's fortune, he was deprived of the benefit of an university education, and became at an early age a member of Inner Temple, where, in a mean and obscure apartment, he for some time applied himself with diligence to his professional studies.* At this period he derived his principal support from his grandmother, who supplied him with an annuity of forty pounds, to which ten pounds were added by his father.

It has been asserted that Jefferies was never regularly called to the bar†; and it appears that while yet a student, and only eighteen years of age, he assumed the gown of a barrister, and attended the Kingston assizes, during the prevalence of the plague in London; an irregularity which was probably overlooked in that season of calamity. In endeavoring to force himself into practice, Jefferies looked principally to the city, attending with diligence at Guildhall and Hick's Hall. In compliance also with the temper of the citizens, he not only professed the political principles at that time favored by them, but attempted to ingratiate himself with them by adopting all their convivial habits.* Nor did he neglect other artifices, equally mean, to promote his interests. We are told by Roger North† that, 'after he was called to the bar, he used to sit in coffee-houses, and order his man to come and tell him that company attended him at his chamber; at which he would huff and say, "let them stay a little, I will come presently," and thus made a show of business.'

These arts appears to have been successful, for he rose at a very early age into practice; and although he possessed no resources from his father, he was married, while yet in his minority, to Sarah, the daughter of Thomas Neesham, A. M. Such were his reputation and influence in the city even at this early age, that upon the 17th of March, 1670, on the resignation of Sir Richard Browne, he was appointed common sergeant. This office he enjoyed for several years, till, finding that the seat of recorder was likely to become vacant, he did not hesitate to sacrifice his political principles to his hopes of advancement, and having contracted such an acquaintance with Chiffinch, the king's favorite page, as, to use the words of Roger North, 'is apt to grow up between immane drinkers‡, he obtained through the influence of the court, the vacant appointment, and on the 22d of October, 1678, was elected recorder of London.

Being thus introduced to the court party, he was made solicitor to the Duke of York, and received various other appointments in rapid succession. On the 17th of February, 1680, he was called to the degree of Sergeant at law, and about the same time mas made a Welsh judge. On the 13th of April in the same year, he succeeded Sir Job Charlton as chief justice of Chester, on the 12th of May was made king's serjeant, and on the 17th of November, 1681, was created a baronet. The degree of influence which Jefferies possessed at court was displayed in his appointment to the chief justiceship of Chester. Sir Job Charlton, a venerable and learned man, was in possession of the office; but as the recorder was resolved to appropriate it to himself, Sir Job was told that it was necessary that he should accept the seat of a puisne judge in the common pleas. 'Sir Job,' says Roger North, 'laid this heavily upon his heart, and desired only that he might speak to the king, and receive his pleasure from his own mouth; but was diverted, as a thing determined. But once he went to Whitehall, and placed himself where the king, returned from his walk in Saint James' Park, must pass, and there he set him down like hermit poor. When the king came in and saw him at a distance, sitting where he was to pass, he concluded that he intended to speak to him, which he could not by any means bear; he therefore turned short off, and went another way. Sir Job, seeing that, pitied his poor master, and never thought of troubling him more, but buckled to his business in the common pleas.'§

While filling the office of recorder, it became the duty of Sir George Jefferies, as counsel for the crown, to prosecute many of the persons accused of a participation in the popish plot. At first he did not exhibit that violence and rancor against the prisoners which afterwards distinguished him. He was probably aware that the court would gladly, had it been possible, have dis-

*3 Langfort v. Administratrix of Tyler, 1 Salk. 113.

† Greaves v. Ashlin, 3 Camph. 426. In Comyn's Dig. tit. Agreement, B. 3. it is laid down that 'if a man agree for goods at such a price, the bargain shall be void, if the money be not paid immediately; for in every bargain payment ought to be made upon the delivery of the goods, except where a future day is agreed for the payment.' But this we apprehend must be understood as applying to cases where no earnest has been paid so as to bind the bargain.

‡ In Bloxam v. Sanders, 4 B. & C. 941. a quantity of hops had been sold on the usual credit of the trade. Payment was not made at the expiration of that time, and the purchaser having become insolvent, the vendors re-sold a part without his consent; whereupon his assignees brought an action of trover founded, of course, on a supposed right of possession. But the court held that it could not be maintained, Mr Justice Bayley saying, 'If goods are sold upon credit, and nothing is agreed upon as to the time of delivering the goods, the vendee is immediately entitled to the possession, and the right of possession and the right of property vest at once in him; but his right of possession is not absolute; it is liable to be defeated if he become insolvent before he obtains possession. Whether default in payment when the credit expires will destroy his right of possession, if he has not before that time obtained actual possession, and put him in the same situation as if there had been no bargain for credit, it is not now necessary to inquire; because this is a case of insolvency, and in case of insolvency the point seems to be perfectly clear.' The point thus left doubtful, was subsequently determined in the case of New v. Swain, Dan. & Lloyd's Merc. Cases, 193. There, hops had been bought to be paid for by a bill at three months. The bill was given, and the hops remained at the buyer's request in the warehouse of the seller, who upon the subsequent dishonor of the bill refused to deliver them without payment. Lord Tenterden said, 'We are all of opinion that on nonpayment of the bill, the defendant (the vendor) had a right to retain the goods.' And Mr Justice Bayley added, 'Where the owner of goods sells on credit, the buyer has a right to immediate possession; but if he suffer the goods to remain until the period of payment has elapsed, and no payment in fact is made, then the seller has a right to retain them.'

*Lives of the Chancellors, vol. i. p. 179.

†Life of Lord Keeper Guilford, vol. ii. p. 5.

*Life of Lord Guilford. vol. ii. p. 5.

†Id. p. 4.

‡Id. p. 8.

§Id. p. 12.

countenanced the prosecutions; but at length, when the popular feeling had risen to such a pitch, that common sense and justice were forgotten in the excitement, Jefferies readily adapted his conduct to the prevailing sentiment, and urged the conviction of the unfortunate prisoners with brutal vehemence. It is difficult to discover whether Jefferies himself felt convinced of the guilt of the accused. His attachment to the church of England, which assumed almost the semblance of a principle, might induce him to credit the reality of the plot; but even the most thorough conviction of its truth could not have excused the violence and injustice which he exhibited towards the accused. Nor was it in these trials alone that he manifested his disregard for the principles of truth and justice. The prosecutions for libels, which were at this time instituted by the court, afforded him an opportunity of promulgating certain unconstitutional doctrines which were doubtless intended to procure him favor from the government, and which probably led the way to his subsequent promotion.

At length the violence and intemperance of the recorder drew down upon him the reprehension of the party whose principles he had deserted. After the dissolution of the Oxford parliament in 1679, the country party petitioned for the calling of a parliament in terms offensive to the court; and in opposition to these petitions, the prerogative party addressed the crown, expressing their abhorrence of the tumultuous proceedings of the petitioners. In encouraging these abhorrers, as they were termed, Jefferies rendered himself eminently conspicuous; and on the meeting of the new parliament, in 1680, he fell, with the rest of those who had opposed the petition for its assembling, under the censure of the commons. Accordingly, on the 13th of November, 1680, it was resolved, 'that Sir George Jefferies, recorder of the city of London, by traducing and obstructing petitioning for the sitting of this parliament, hath destroyed the right of the subject.' And it was ordered that a humble address should be presented to his majesty to remove Sir George Jefferies from all public offices. To this address his majesty replied that he would consider of it. Jefferies himself trembled at the prospect of popular indignation. Being brought to the bar of the house, he received a reprimand on his knees; and such was the effect of this discipline upon his spirits, that he immediately resolved to resign his office of recorder, which drew from the king the observation that 'he was not parliament proof.'* On the 2d of December the office was accordingly surrendered, and was immediately afterwards filled by George Treby, of the Middle Temple.

Of the character acquired by Jefferies while chief justice of Chester, some idea may be formed from the speech of Mr Booth, afterwards Earl of Warrington, in which he denounces the profligate conduct of Jefferies in very severe terms. 'The county for which I serve is Cheshire, which is a county palatine, and we have two judges peculiarly assigned to us by his majesty; our puisne judge I have nothing to say against him, for he is a very honest man, for aught I know; but I cannot be silent as to our chief judge, and I will name him, because what I have to say will appear more probable. His name is Sir George Jefferies, who, I must say, behaved himself more like a jack-pudding than with that gravity which becomes a judge: he was mighty witty upon the prisoners at the bar; he was very full of his jokes upon people that came to give evidence, not suffering them to declare what they had to say in their own way and method, but would interrupt them because they behaved themselves with more gravity than he; and in truth the people were strangely perplexed when they were to give in their evidence; but I do not insist upon this, nor upon the late hours he kept up and down the city; it is said he was every night drinking till two o'clock, or beyond that time, and that he went to his chamber drunk: but this I have only by common fame, for I was not in his company—I bless God I am not a man of his principles or behaviour—but in the morning he appeared with the symptoms of a man that over night had taken a large cup. But that which I have to say is the complaint of every man, especially of them that had any lawsuits. Our Chief justice has a very arbitrary power in appointing the assize when he pleases, and this man has strained it to the highest point; for whereas we were accustomed to have two assizes, the first about April or May, the latter about September, it was this year, as I remember, the middle of August before we have had any assize; and then he despatched business so well, that he left half the causes untried, and, to help the matter, has resolved that we shall have no more assizes this year.'*

Jefferies was too firmly seated in the favor of the court to suffer from these attacks, and continued to deserve the good opinion of his patrons by the zeal with which he conducted the many important matters intrusted to his hands. On the trials of Fitzharris† and of Plunket‡ he displayed great acrimony and violence; but the full tide of his insolent vituperation burst forth in the case of Colledge, the 'protestant joiner.'§ He was also counsel for the crown in the prosecution of Pilkington and others for a riot, arising out of the attempt made by the court to secure the election of one of the sheriffs of London;‖ in the celebrated case of the quo warranto against the city of London,¶ and lastly in the prosecutions which followed the discovery of the Rye-house Plot. The good service which he did to government on these occasions, and especially on the trial of Lord Russell, in which he boldly endeavored to pervert the rules of evidence, in order to procure a conviction, entitled him to some substantial mark of royal gratitude; and on the death of Sir Edmund Saunders, the chief justice of the king's bench, he was on the 29th of September, 1683, appointed to the vacant office, and was soon afterwards sworn in as a member of the privy council. It was not until the 15th of May, 1685, that he was raised to the peerage, under the title of Baron Jefferies, of Wem.

The temper which distinguished Jefferies, when counsel on the prosecution of Lord Russell, was again exhibited by him when he sat as judge on the trial of Algernon Sidney. The same desire to convict, the same eagerness to pervert the law, the same fierce animosity towards the prisoner, were again visible. The conclusion of this trial exhibited a singularly impressive scene. Jefferies had no sooner pronounced sentence than the prisoner exclaimed, 'Then, O God! O God! I beseech thee to sanctify these sufferings unto me, and impute not my blood to the country, nor the city through which I am to be drawn; let no inquisition be made for it; but if any, and the shedding of blood that is innocent must be avenged, let the weight of it fall only upon those that maliciously prosecute me for righteousness' sake.'—'I pray God work in you,' said Jefferies, 'a temper fit to go unto the other world, for I see you are not fit for this.'—'My lord,' replied Sidney, 'feel my pulse (holding out his hand,) and see if I am disordered: I bless God I was never in better temper than I am now.'* The feelings with which Jefferies presided at this trial may easily be divined when we hear the language with which he not long afterwards insulted the memory of Russell and of Sidney. In his summing up on the trial of Sir S. Barnardiston, for a misdemeanor, he said, 'Then here is as I said, the sainting of two horrid conspirators; here is the Lord Russell sainted, that blessed martyr; my Lord Russell, that good man, that excellent protestant: he is lamented, and what an extraordinary man he was, who was fairly tried and justly convicted, and attainted for having a hand in this horrid conspiracy against the life of the king, and his dearest brother, his royal highness, and for the subversion of the government. And here is Mr Sidney sainted! What an extraordinary man he was! Yes, surely, he was a very good man, because you may some of you remember, or have read the history of those times, and know what share Mr Sidney had in that black and horrid villany, that cursed treason and murder—the murder, I mean, of King Charles I., of blessed memory; a shame to religion itself, a perpetual reproach to the island we live in, to think that a prince should be brought, by pretended methods of law and justice, to such an end at his own palace. And it is a shame to think that such bloody miscreants should be sainted and lamented, who had any hand in that horrid murder and treason, and who, to their dying moments, when they were upon the brink of eternity, and just stepping into another world, could confidently bless God for their being engaged in that good cause, as they call it, which was the rebellion which brought that blessed martyr to his death. It is high time for all mankind that have any Christianity, or sense of heaven or hell, to bestir themselves, to rid the nation such caterpillars, such monsters of villany as these are.'†

* North's Examen, p. 550.

*Chandler's Debate.
†State Trials, vol. viii. p. 223.
‡Id. p. 447.
§Id. p. 549.
‖Id. vol. ix. p. 187.
¶Id. vol. viii. p. 1039.

*State Trials, vol. ix. p. 902.
†State Trials, vol. ix. p. 1353.

To be continued.

LAW REFORM.

Whoever sets about the task of improving the administration of justice in this kingdom, with a view to making it cheaper and more accessible to the people, must be prepared to grapple with no common difficulties. There is a common saying among lawyers, that 'cheap law is bad law;' but though it may be bad for them, there is no reason why it should not be good for their clients. We cannot understand why law should be more excellent for being a luxury, of which only the rich can afford to partake; nor do we know what necessary connexion there is between justice and extortion. One of the wise measures of finance of Mr Pitt's Government was, to increase the cost of law proceedings by exorbitant stamp duties—although, without such additional cause of expense to the suitor, law was extravagantly dear, and well justified the sarcasm of Horne Tooke, that, 'Courts of Justice in this country were like the London Tavern—open to every person who could pay.' The reduction of the stamp duties has still left justice a very costly thing; and while the prices of all other commodities of English produce and manufacture have fallen, the price of English justice has suffered no depression. What is more, it seems resolved by a great number of those who deal in the commodity to make common cause against any man who attempts to reduce the price of the article to a level with the reduced resources of the community at large. This Mr Brougham has discovered in his endeavors to realise a plan for the recovery of small debts at little expense and delay, and to introduce some other reforms into the practice of the law in certain cases, with a view to the establishment of a limited system of cheap and expeditious justice. It will be recollected that we gave last year an abstract of the Bill of the Hon. and Learned Member for the erection of Courts of local jurisdiction, with some comments upon its provisions. Mr Brougham proposed that, even if his Bill should in theory appear deserving the sanction of the legislature, yet he wished it to be tried but on a small scale at first, that the practicability of giving a general application to the principle might be ascertained by the test of experiment. Certain members of the profession, however, have taken alarm at the prospect of Parliament giving encouragement to such a dangerous innovation upon ancient institutions as a cheap and expeditious system of law. Already they see in their alarmed imagination the business of the superior Courts of Westminster diminished at least one half, and, consequently, feel, like the silversmiths of Ephesus, that 'their craft is in danger.' Disinterested, no doubt, in their zealous advocacy of the existing system of law, as the others were in their support of the established system of religion, they cry out that the temple of Justice is threatened with as much danger, from the hands of profane innovation, as ever befel the temple of the 'great goddess Diana.' All established systems of imposition, to which the many have been, in all ages, subjected, for the benefit of the few, have claimed their chief title to preservation, when attacked by the weapons of reason, from the length of time during which they have been patiently endured, as if antiquity could consecrate abuse, or make absurdity venerable. Nothing can be more excellent than many of the principles of English law,—nothing can be worse, generally speaking, than its practice; and it will be understood that it is of the practice only, in the present instance, that we complain. It is to remedy the practice, and thereby make justice cheaper and less tedious than it is in certain cases, where the sums to be recovered, or the matters in dispute, are of small value, that Mr Brougham's Bill is intended. Another object is to prevent litigation in matters of minor importance by a process of reconcilement. Now these two objects—namely, to make the administration of justice cheap and expeditious in practice, and to prevent lawsuits about trifles, have excited the jealousy and alarm of the legal practitioners to whom we alluded—and hence the 'circular' to which Mr Brougham adverted in such pointed terms lately. We do not now enter into the merits of his Bill,—we have touched on those before. It may possibly admit of some improvement in its details; but those gentleman, by attempting to raise a violent prejudice against the measure, before it has been submitted to the test of experiment on the smaller scale, have at least, evinced their own conviction of its being likely to be of some public advantage; for they would not oppose anything which would have the effect of sacrificing the public good to their own profit.

The reformation in the administration of justice, which was promised in the Speech from the Throne at the commencement of the last Session of Parliament, has yet to be carried into effect. It is true some alterations in the practice of the law were made during that Session, but we fear they cannot be called improvements. Those alterations consisted in the abolition of the Welsh system of judicature—a system which afforded more cheap and expeditious justice to the people than the one that is substituted for it; a system, moreover, in which the inhabitants of the principality expressed their confidence; and, though they admitted some reforms were necessary, they depreciated abolition. A few of the aristocratic families of Wales supported the measure, but it was carried against the sense of the great body of the people. We need not wonder at this, when we find that the same Bill by which this abolition has been effected went to increase the patronage of the Ministers of the Crown, by the appointment of three new Judges, with a salary of 5,000*l.* a year each, in the Courts at Westminster. At the same time that this addition is made to the expenses of the judicial establishment of this country, it is notorious that we have four Judges in the Court of Exchequer, who, except at the periods of the Spring and Summer Assizes, have very nearly sinecure offices in the Court of Exchequer. It is true the Welsh Judgships have been abolished, but the expense of their appointments was not so great by some thousands as that of the three Judges who are to be appointed in their place. Thus neither has cheapness in the administration of justice, nor economy in the appointment of Judges, been consulted; and this is all the 'reformation' which the people have obtained! The dearness of justice is one of the greatest grievances under which the people of this country at present labor, and every attempt to reform the abuse has hitherto proved abortive. It is true there are some Courts of local jurisdiction, in which justice may be had comparatively cheap; but another grievance—that of monopoly—prevents their being in much favor with the public. One of these is the Lord Mayor's Court, which has a jurisdiction over certain causes of action arising in the City. In that Court, the other day, the Recorder, who presides as Assessor to the chief Civic Magistrate, expatiated on the advantages which the cheapness and expedition of the process afforded to suitors. He said that the action which had been then tried, and in which the plaintiff, a dealer in spirits, had obtained a verdict for 6*l.* 10*s.* against the defendant, as the price of a certain quantity of spirits delivered, if brought in any of the superior Courts at Westminster, would have produced a bill of costs to the amount of 40*l.* or 50*l.*; whereas in this Court they would not amount to more than one tenth of either sum—that is, to 4*l.* or 5*l.* Again: the plaintiff in the higher Courts would not obtain his money sooner than nine months after the verdict, while here he could get his decree in two or three days. This is not quite accurate, inasmuch as the successful plaintiff in the superior Courts can sue out execution on his judgment after four days of the ensuing Term have elapsed, unless in these four days the defendant should have moved for a new trial, or taken some other step to set the proceedings aside. Still it must be admitted that the superior Courts afford great opportunities for dilatory and vexatious proceedings by writs of error, sham pleas, &c, which are a disgrace to justice; but the cheapness and despatch of such civil tribunals as the Lord Mayor's Court and the Palace Court are not much estimated by the public, in consequence of the monopoly of Attorneys and Barristers in these Courts, which prevent suitors from employing as their legal advisers men in whose talents and judgment they can have confidence. What the public want is cheap and expeditious law, without the drawback and positive nuisance of legal monopoly.—London Morning Herald.

---

In House of Representatives of the State of Georgia.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 22.—The following communication was received from the Governor, which, after being read, with the accompanying document, was referred, on motion of Mr Haynes to a select committee, composed of Messrs Haynes, Beall, of Twiggs; Howard, of Baldwin; McDonald, and Schley.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
December 22, 1830.

I submit to the Legislature, for its consideration, the copy of a communication received this day, purporting to be signed by the Chief Justice of the U. States, and to be a citation of the state of Georgia to appear before the Supreme Court, on the second Monday in January next, to answer to that tribunal for having caused a person who had committed murder within the limits of the State, to be tried and convicted therefor.

The object of this mandate is to control the state in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction, which in criminal cases, has been vested by the constitution exclusively in its Superior Courts.

So far as concerns the exercise of the power which belongs to the Executive Department, orders received from the Supreme Court, for the purpose of staying or in any manner interfering with the decisions of the Courts of the state, in the exercise of their constitutional jurisdiction, will be disregarded: and any attempt to enforce such orders will be resisted with whatever force the laws have placed at my command.

If the judicial power thus attempted to be exercised by the courts of the United States, is submitted to, or sustained, it must eventuate in the utter annihilation of the state governments or in other consequences not less fatal to the peace and prosperity of our present highly favored country.

(Signed) GEORGE R. GILMER.

—

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, SS.

To the State of Georgia, Greeting:

You are hereby cited and admonished to be and appear at a Supreme Court of the United States, to be holden, at Washington, on the second Monday in January next, pursuant to a writ of error, filed in the Clerk's office of the Superior Court of the state of Georgia for Hall County, in the County of Hall, wherein George Tastle, alias George Tassles, alias George Tassel, alias George Tassle, alias George Tasslle, is plaintiff in error, and the said state of Georgia is defendant in error, to show cause, if any there be, why judgment rendered against the said George, as in the said writ of error mentioned, should not be corrected, and why speedy justice should not be done to the parties in that behalf.

Witness the honorable JOHN MARSHALL, Chief Justice of the said Supreme Court of the U. States, this 12th day of December, in the year of our Lord, 1830.

(Signed) J. MARSHALL,
Ch. Just. of the U. S

The committee to whom the above had been referred, made the following report, which was agreed to by the House, and concurred in by the Senate:

Whereas it appears by a communication made by his Excellency the Governor to the General Assembly, that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, has sanctioned a writ of error, and cited the state of Georgia, through her Chief Magistrates to appear before the Supreme Court of the United States, to defend said state against said writ of error, at the instance of one George Tassels, recently convicted in Hall Superior Court:

And whereas, the right to punish crimes against the peace and good order of this state, in accordance with the existing laws of this state, is an original and a necessary part of sovereignty which the state of Georgia has never parted with:

Be it therefore Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c, That they view with feelings of deep regret, the interference by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States in the administration of the criminal laws of this state, and that such an interference is a flagrant violation of her right.

Resolved further, That his Excellency the Governor be, and he and every other officer of this state, is hereby requested to disregard any and every mandate and process that has been or shall be served upon him or them, purporting to proceed from the Chief Justice or any associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States for the purpose of arresting the execution of any of the criminal laws of this state.

And be it further resolved, That his Excellency the Governor, be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, with all the force and means placed at his command by the constitution and laws of this state, to resist and repel any and every invasion, from whatever quarter, upon the administration of the criminal law of this state.

Resolved, That the state of Georgia will never so far compromit her sovereignty as an independent state, as to become a party to the case sought to be made before the Supreme Court of the United States by the writ in question.

Resolved, That his Excellency the Governor, be, and he is hereby, authorized to communicate to the Sheriff of Hall county, by express, so much of the foregoing resolutions, and such orders as are necessary to insure the full execution of the laws, in the case of George Tassels, convicted of murder in Hall county.

On the subject of the writ of the Supreme Court, served on the state of Georgia, the National Intelligencer remarks:

'The execution of the Indian was to have taken place, we believe, on the 24th ult. and no doubt did then take place, at the time set for it; so that the death of the plaintiff will have abated the suit and citation of the Chief Justice, and the Resolutions of the Legislature of Georgia, as regards that particular case, will be equally inoperative.'

—

From the Georgia Journal.

Our Indian Affairs are approaching a crisis. The reader will remember the resolutions adopted in consequence of the citation served upon the Governor, as published in our last paper. In obedience to the last of them, an express was despatched to Hall county, at 12 o'clock, on the night of their passage, and reached the sheriff on the day appointed for the execution of Tassels. Eberhart, the Sheriff of Hall county had been served with a citation from the Supreme Court of the United States, which he had determined to disregard, even if he had received no instructions from the state authority. Tassels was hung pursuant to his sentence.

During the past week the Governor received the following letter by special messenger:—

Head of Coosa, Cherokee Nation,
December 20th, 1830.

To his Excellency GEORGE R. GILMER,
Governor of the State of Georgia:

SIR—You will please to take notice, that on Saturday, the 5th day of March next, at the City of Washington, in the District of Columbia, the Cherokee Nation will by their Counsel, move the Supreme Court of the United States, which is expected to be then and there in session, for an injunction to restrain the state of Georgia, the Governor, Attorney General, Judges, Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Deputy Sheriffs, Constables and all the other officers, agents and servants of that state from executing and enforcing the laws of Georgia, or any of those laws, or serving process, or doing anything towards the execution and enforcement of those laws, within the Cherokee Territory, as designated by treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Nation: The motion will be made on the grounds set forth in the bill, a copy of which will be handed to you with this notice, which bill will be supported by the necessary affidavits and documents.

JOHN ROSS,
Principal Chief of the Cherokee Nation.

—

The bill referred to in the letter, consists of nine closely printed foolscap pages, and is endorsed thus:—

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The Cherokee Nation, vs. The State of Georgia.

BILL IN CHANCERY.

It commences thus:—'To the Honorable the Chief Justice, and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, sitting in Chancery.

'Respectfully complaining, show unto your honors, the Cherokee Nation of Indians, a foreign state, not owing allegiance to the United States nor to any state of this Union, nor to any other Prince, Potentate, or state other than their own,' &c, &c.

And concludes, after a detailed statement of their grievances, thus:—

'In tender consideration of all which, and inasmuch as your complainants are wholly remediless in the premises, except by the interference of this honorable court: to the end, therefore, that the said state of Georgia, one of the United States of America, may be made defendant hereto, with apt words to charge her as such, and that she may by her proper officers, according to the established forms of proceeding in this court, in like cases, true, full, and perfect answer make to all and singular the premises, as fully and particularly as if the same were herein again especially repeated, and they thereto particularly interrogated; that the said state of Georgia, her governor, attorney general, judges, magistrates, sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables, and all other her officers, agents, and servants, civil and military, may be enjoined and prohibited from executing the laws of that state within the boundary of the Cherokee territory, as prescribed by the treaties now subsisting between the United States and the Cherokee Nation, or interfering in any manner with the rights of self-government possessed by the Cherokee Nation within the limits of their territory, as defined by treaty: That the two laws of Georgia before mentioned as having been passed in the years 1828 and 1829, may by the decree of this honorable court, be declared unconstitutional and void; and that the state of Georgia and all her officers, agents and servants, may be forever enjoined from interfering with the lands, mines, and other property, real and personal, of the Cherokee Nation, or with the persons of the Cherokee people, for or on account of anything done by them within the limits of the Cherokee territory; that the pretended right of the state of Georgia to the possession, government or control of the lands, mines and other property of the Cherokee Nation, within their territory, may by this honorable court, be declared to be unfounded and void, and that the Cherokees may be left in the undisturbed possession, use, and enjoyment of the same, according to their own sovereign right and pleasure, and their own laws, usages, and customs, free from any hindrance, molestation, or interruption by the State of Georgia, her officers, agents, and servants; that these complainants may be quieted in the possession of all their rights, privileges, and immunities, under their various treaties with the United States; and that they may have such other and further relief as this honorable court may deem consistent with equity and good conscience, and as the nature of their case may require.'

—

The Savannah Georgian of January 3d contains the following paragraph:—

'We understand that on Monday last, John Ross, the President of the Cherokees, went into the Executive Office at Milledgeville, and served on the Governor some process from the Supreme Court, in contravention of the jurisdiction of Georgia over the Indians, but not signed, like the former one, by Chief Justice Marshall—entering abruptly into the office and retiring from it quickly without saying a word—perhaps anticipating—what we understand was intended had he been subsequently found—that the Governor would return the compliment, by serving some process quite as abruptly, on him, under the authority of the laws of Georgia to suppress the Indian Government—which make it a penal offence, punishable by four years' confinement in the Penitentiary, to exercise any authority whatever under the sanction of that government.

We regret that this redoubtable half bred hero had not remained a sufficient time to test the law of Georgia in his own proper person.'

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 29, 1831.

LAW REFORM.

Our friend of the Patriot, in the proposition and remarks submitted by him in the House of Representatives on Tuesday the 18th inst. which we publish today, has really laid his political axe at the root of the tree. He has, with the ardor of a reformer, put his shoulder to the pillars of Diana's Temple, and given timely warning to 'Demetrius the silver smith,' and all the Priests, Worshippers and Janitors there to look to their craft.

We think he entirely mistakes the feelings of the 'respectable class of practitioners' to whom he refers, in supposing they have the least disposition to put forth any opposition to the work of reform. We are satisfied that not one of them would wish to impose a hand's weight against the wheel set in motion by the distinguished efforts of Mr Brougham, who was a very zealous reformer in the house of Commons, and, we presume, if he takes the course of all his predecessors, now he has a seat on the woolsack, will make a very easy and loyal Lord Chancellor. There is nothing, which cools the ardor of reform like a good place at Court. As our friend has got the wheel well over the water and given it a new impetus here, if it roll well, he will find politicians and 'practitioners' enough willing and ready to jump on. Nothing, in truth, could do the profession less disservice than the Establishment of Courts of Reconcilement. Cheap litigation is by no means a short way to 'amicable and quick settlements.' To cure the evil of litigation, the remedy must go deeper still. Nothing short of making it penal to sue or be sued, to buy or sell advice, will meet the case, and that kind of Legislation would be about as successful as the Act for the suppression of lotteries. The truth is, there must be litigation where there is business. And there must be tribunals established to try and settle questions which admit of doubt. Suits in Court are not, as some would represent, all vexatious and frivolous; there is much honest and necessary litigation. A great portion of the cases tried in our Courts are of that character. And, after all, there is no extravagant and unnecessary pay for working the machine, if it is to be worked at all. Our Judges are neither too many nor too well paid. We have no Lord Chancellor, with £30,000 a year, reposing over the arrears of equity business, and nodding, at brief intervals stolen from political strife and debate, over unnumbered appeals and cases set down for hearing. No Vice Chancellor to help the Chancellor, and no Master to look after both, and more especially after the fees.

We have now all the necessary powers for submitting cases to referees, auditors, and arbitrators, whenever the parties choose it. But all experience has satisfied Courts, Counsel and parties that these domestic forums are the dearest and least likely to end litigation of any in the community. There is a wide difference between our condition in this country and that of England. Propositions for reform there can have little pertinency of application here, except, perhaps, in the single matter of special pleading. As to the necessity of a change, in that respect, we go with him who goes farthest. In other respects we have already stripped our system of most of the objectionable features of English Jurisprudence. We cannot well simplify it farther and preserve the substance or any of the forms of justice. The process by which the suit is commenced, and the evidence by which it is carried on, are procured at the cheapest rate and in the plainest form possible. The suitor pays for no service which is not rendered and of which he has not the benefit, and is never obliged, as is sometimes the case, in other countries, to buy justice at the hands of the judge. We believe it will be found, on examination, that, if our system of jurisprudence has in any degree failed of its object, the fault must be looked for elsewhere than in its theory or general adaptation to our condition.

However this may be, we think Mr Davis' speech a good one and calculated to be popular, although we are inclined to believe the importance of the topic overrated.

On motion of Mr Davis it was Ordered, That Messrs Davis of Boston, Baylies of Taunton, Shaw of Lanesborough, Betton of Boston, and Barton of Oxford, be a committee to inquire into the expediency of abolishing by law Special Pleadings to Civil Suits; also, into the expediency of providing by law for the examination of parties in civil suits; also, into the expediency of giving to the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas authority to act as Courts of Reconcilement; also, into the expediency of adopting more plain and simple indictments in criminal suits—reference being had, by such provisions, to their effect in lessening expense, and in preventing delay in legal proceedings in this Commonwealth.

Mr Davis of Boston said, it would have afforded him great pleasure had the propositions contained in the order been submitted by some gentleman his better both in years and knowledge. But, as they were both novel and important, a due respect for the House seemed to require, that he should accompany them with some explanation. He should not, however, have presumed to have done this, had not the state of the business of the House made it apparent, that there were now no subjects of pressing interest, requiring the attention of the House.

From the early period of English history, it was considered essential to the forms of freedom that justice should neither be sold, delayed nor denied. And if there were a privilege, which emphatically might be said peculiarly to distinguish a free, republican form of government, it was the impartial, easily accessible, and speedy and cheap administration of justice. In truth, in the Court of Justice could be found almost the only practical illustration of the sublime maxim, 'that all men are born free and equal.' In most concerns of life, accident, truth, superior habits of industry, greater energy of character, higher intellectual powers were constantly making distinctions—placing one man above—another below the general level: but in the Court of Justice all ephemeral distinctions were merged—every man stood on his own rights—be he high or low—rich or poor—knowing no distinction, but those arising from the immutable principles of right or wrong, as applied to this case.

The history of Massachusetts from its existence as a state, had been distinguished for the impartial and independent character of her judiciary. During periods of trial, of peril, of excitement, he might say, of party phrenzy and folly, the character of our judiciary had been not only above reproach but above suspicion. And the present elevated character of the Judges of both our Courts, among whom the recently appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court was deservedly eminent for his integrity, ability and sound learning, was the best guaranty that the merited distinction of our judicial tribunals in this respect would continue unimpaired. As to having justice easily accessible, by our system of circuits, not only for the trial of issues of fact, but also questions of law, he believed that we had in this Commonwealth for years enjoyed a system of justice, as it were, brought home to every man's door, far superior to what was now proposed to introduce into practice in England as a great improvement.

But as to having justice speedily and cheaply administered, he believed that changes might be made which on experiment would prove to be great improvements. The first inquiry was, what is the present expense of our judicial proceedings? A portion of this expense is apparent. By going to the Treasurer's Annual Reports, we could see the amount paid annually in salaries to our judges. It is a liberal compensation;—but not too liberal,—he would not reduce it one cent. By looking at our County Treasurer's accounts, we can see the amount paid to prosecuting county officers—to sheriffs—constables, clerks and jurors. But these sums in aggregate, make up not the largest sum of money paid for judicial proceedings. Estimating the number of civil suits, annually commenced in this Commonwealth at 20,000 and the costs on such suits to somebody at $15 each, it would seem that $300,000 annually was the cost of this part of judicial proceedings. If this estimate was too great, it would not affect the argument, because at all events the sum total would be a large one. He believed that every gentleman would concede that what went to shorten and simplify legal proceedings, would tend to make them cheaper. For the purpose of shortening civil suits, he would abolish special pleading. He was assured in so doing, that opposition is to be encountered. That highly respectable class of practitioners, who had become familiarized with this branch of practice, would naturally oppose it. No one had more respect for their talents and integrity himself. But human nature was the same in all ages in conditions. When Paul preached at Ephesus the cry was 'great is Diana of the Ephesians!' But the reason of the cry was, as Demetrius the silversmith said, 'Sirs, by this craft we have our wealth!' So now, it is not unreasonable to suppose that some of an able and respectable class of men, who have been successful in a particular branch of practice should be opposed to a proposition which went to its abolition. It will also be said that this is a great innovation on established usages and that innovations are dangerous. He maintained that every valuable improvement had in its day, been denounced as an innovation. The Mariner's Compass was thought to be a dangerous innovation by the men who followed coasting, but had it not been adopted, the Cape of Good Hope would not have been doubted—America would not have been discovered, and we, he said, should not have been here debating on Special Pleading. So of the Art of Printing—the manuscript writers considered it a dangerous innovation and one of its first professors, Faustus, was accused of being in league with a gentleman, who should be nameless in that House. He might make similar remarks of almost every valuable improvement, that had ever been made. The true doctrine seemed to him to be, to seek out for improvements—but to proceed cautiously—to make haste slowly—but once satisfied that a change proposed is an improvement, to take the lead in adopting it.

The question then to be considered was—Is Special Pleading intrinsically good? He did not deny that it was a very old system, but it was yet to be shown that it grew better, like some kinds of wine, as it grew older. Some kinds of wine spoiled by keeping them a long time, and it might be so with special pleading.

He should not undertake to go into a full analysis of the system of special pleading—but he hoped he might in a brief manner be able to exhibit some of its difficulties. The first step in pleading was the Declaration. This, instead of being concise, simple and intelligible, was prolix, complicated and obscure: so that on the most simple contracts, we often had five or six counts, neither of which would be intelligible to a well informed man, unacquainted with technical language. The reason of this is obvious. The Plaintiff's Attorney fearing he may have his heels tripped up, when he least expects it, like a prudent man spreads himself over as much ground as possible. He has, he well knows, to encounter obsolete distinctions and arbitrary rules, and he prepares himself accordingly. For instance, in an action for assault and battery, it has been decided that the omission of the technical words 'with force and arms' is fatal on demurrer. So that in a suit brought for spitting in a man's face in State-street, in which the injury is to the feelings—not to the body—it must be alleged that it was done with force and arms; or in other words, that must be alleged to secure redress, which is absolutely untrue. Another rule in trespass is, that the averment must be direct; and according to decisions in the books, the difference between in declaring using the word 'whereas' and 'because' makes in the result the important difference of the Plaintiff's securing or losing redress for the wrongs he has suffered. Mr D. stated other cases, equally glaring, of the absurdity of the arbitrary rules of the common law on this subject.

The next step to the declaration,—supposing it to steer clear of both special and general demurrer—is the plea. This also becomes prolix and obscure in proportion, generally, as the declaration was prolix and obscure. It assumes a great variety of shapes. It has to encounter technical difficulties, and arbitrary rules, not founded in reason or common sense. For instance, if in a real action a defendant sets forth one seizin, it is a good plea, but if he set forth two seizins, it is bad for duplicity. So that if a man tell half his story, he is safe—but if he tell his whole story, he loses, if not his rights, a heavy bill of costs. But, besides the plea, we have a replication and rejoinder, rebutter and surrebutter;—to the honor of the profession it ought to be said that the use of the rebutter and sur-rebutter is very unusual. In proceeding with pleading, another difficulty to be encountered is departure. The declaration may do well enough, but when the plaintiff comes to reply to the plea of defendant, he may find himself, if not deprived of, postponed in his rights by this arbitrary and technical error. Mr D. illustrated this difficulty by cases, which he stated. But supposing that the declaration is not bad on demurrer, the plea not had for duplicity, and the replication to make no departure, he asked, in the great majority of cases, of what use is the system of Special Pleading? A man is sued for goods sold—he pleads his infancy—the plaintiff replies that they were necessaries—the defendant rejoins they were not necessaries, and on this issue the case is tried. Of what use are these intermediate pleas, provided the law required that in all cases the party intending to avail himself of special matter, should give to the other party a short and informal notice thereof. He contended, in nine cases out of ten, that the system of pleading had no other effect than to prolong Judicial investigations.

He next asked the attention of the House to the history of Special Pleading in this Commonwealth. For a long time, it was the rule of the Common Law, that a defendant should have but one plea to the plaintiff's action. This rule was so inequitable, that the civilians compared it to requiring a man to fight a battle with one hand tied behind him. The statute of Anne was passed to authorize double pleas. In the action of slander the usual pleas were, the general issue and special pleas in justification. In a case that occurred in Berkshire, the Supreme Judicial Court having decided that the plea in justification was insufficient, the parties went to trial on the general issue. The plaintiff relied on the admissions of the plea in justification for her proof of the slander, and on such evidence the jury gave a verdict of damages. The full court afterwards decided that this use the plea of justification by the plaintiff was according to law, and the verdict was sustained. This rule of law, however, was altered by an act of the legislature, which provided that in case both the General Issue and the Pleas in justification were used, and the latter failed, the admissions therein contained should not be used by the plaintiff on the trial of the General Issue. In about a year, another case occurred, in which the pleas in justification only were used, and they failed. The defendant asked for leave to introduce evidence, to show that the alleged slander was published with good intent, believing it to be true and without malice—such evidence to go in mitigation of damages; but the court ruled out the evidence, the act of the legislature having reference only to cases in which both the General Issue and Special Pleas are used; and not to cases in which Special Pleas only are used. The difficulties that had occurred in this action of slander from our system of special pleading, he had the authority of very experienced members of the profession for saying, had occurred in almost every other kind of suit that is brought into courts of law.

He said the experience of our Commonwealth, as far as it had gone, was in favor of dispensing with special pleas. Administrators, Executors, Criminal and Civil Officers when such civil officers are sued for acts done in their official capacity are allowed to plead the general issue only. Why? Because it affords them a facility in making their defence. They are a favored class of defendants; but Mr D. knew of no good reason, why the privilege, if a valuable one, should not be extended to all defendants. He considered the system of special pleading as now obsolete. It was a sort of Gothic structure, which answered a good purpose, when our ancestors were satisfied to live in huts or caves, but not suited to the present times, when even the poor man lives in a house that would, at the period alluded to, have been thought a palace.

But with a view more effectually to shorten legal proceedings, he thought the examination of parties in civil suits might well be allowed. He respected the Common Law, but he did not believe it to be perfect. The examination of the parties, taken down in writing, would enable the judge to decide what case involved questions of fact;—what questions of law, and what neither questions of fact, nor law. This would save a vast deal of useless litigation and besides in the event of a trial, it would enable the parties to decide beforehand, what evidence is material and what not. Here again would be saving of great expense both of money and time. He did not believe that this would lead to perjury. The provision would be prospective. Placed at once upon suits already commenced, it might lead to perjury—but if parties before they plunged into wilful litigation knew that they must submit to this examination, and that their will could only be gratified in defiance of the pains and penalties of perjury, he believed they would pause before they commenced their downward career. The practice had been tried in Chancery with good results—it had been partially tried in the trustee process, which he presumed no one would now be willing to give up, and he fully believed it might be incorporated into our Common Law practice, with the best results.

But to carry out fully the idea of reducing the expense of litigation, he would invest the Court of Common Pleas, before which most of the business of the Commonwealth originates, with power to act as a Court of Reconcilement. He believed most would agree, if parties, before their passions were enlisted, could submit their whole case to an enlightened Judge, that in a vast proportion of cases they would come to an amicable and quick settlement. The experiment had been tried in Denmark. In 1795, courts of reconcilement were established there. In 1825, from an official report, it appeared that there had been in the previous year 31,000 suits commenced; of these 20,000 had been settled by courts of reconcilement; 600 had been dismissed as vexatious and frivolous; 9400 had been sent to the ordinary courts, and of these but 2400 had been tried. The beneficial effects that had resulted in Denmark might also result here from the same cause. The people of Massachusetts were as sagacious and well informed as to their rights, as any people on the face of the earth, and might well be trusted with the most speedy mode of settling their disputes.

He said he made no claim to originality in these propositions. He had had access to some recent debates in the British Parliament. These propositions had been made there. They struck him as highly valuable. In conversation with a gentleman of age and experience in the legal profession they had expressed themselves in their favor. He had urged them to offer these propositions to the House, but they being unwilling to encounter the labor of so doing—acting on the principle of young men for action and the more aged for counsel—having first assured himself of their countenance and support—he had concluded to offer the propositions himself. They would stand or fall according to their real merit.

His object was to excite the public attention to these interesting topics. He would through this House throw them out for the consideration of our constituents. He would have them examined and discussed;—mind should be brought into collision with mind—and he did not doubt that enough intellectual fire would be elicited fully to illuminate this whole matter. We should then see our way plain;—we could then try all things and hold fast to that which is good.

The order proposed merely to direct a committee to consider the expediency of certain measures. It did not ask the House to vote for the measures. This he should now consider premature. He did think the changes proposed were worthy of serious consideration, and he therefore hoped the House would sustain the order, instructing the committee to consider their expediency. He should be satisfied, he doubted not, with the result of the committee's deliberations.

Mr Baylies of Taunton, said that in addition to the subjects which had just been proposed for inquiry he wished to offer one concerning the form of indictment. It so happens on account of the extreme nicety and length required in those instruments that notorious rogues not unfrequently escape justice, although the indictment may be deficient only in some very trifling respect,—the Court not allowing of an amendment being made therein. He thought that shorter and more simple forms might be prescribed by statute, and therefore proposed an order to that effect in addition to the orders which had just been submitted. Mr Davis accepted the amendment.

Mr Mann of Dedham, thought that these orders should go to a special committee instead of the judiciary, who have already as much as they can do. Besides he thought that it was desirable that the mover himself should be one of the committee who should have this subject under consideration,—it being evident that he had given great and careful attention to it. It was therefore important to have his services upon the committee.

LIBRARY OF EDUCATION.

This day published by GRAY & BOWEN,

The Library of Education, Vol. I. —Containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education.' By John Locke, and a 'Treatise of Education,' by John Milton, with an Appendix, containing Cotton's Memoranda of Study. Edited by Wm. Russell, late editor of the American Journal of Education.

Extract from the Preface.

'The present volume is intended to form one of a series of standard treatises on the subject of Education. The work now commenced will, it is hoped, form a useful source of information to parents and teachers; furnishing to the latter a sort of professional library, to which individuals may resort for assistance in the labor of instruction, and offering to the former an aid to the formation of just and extensive views of the whole scope of education, as well as a preparation for cooperating with instruction, in their exertions for the mental advancement of the young.' Jan. 1.

WHITMAN'S LETTERS.

This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, 'Two Letters to Rev. Moses Stuart,' on Religious Liberty, occasioned by his Letter to Rev. Wm. E. Channing. By Bernard Whitman. Jan. 1.

SIXTY MAPS

of the various Countries of the Globe, from the Epitome of Universal Geography. For sale at GRAY & BOWEN'S, 141 Washington Street. Price 50 cents, bound. Jan. 1.

PARLEY'S ASIA.

This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, Peter Parley's Tales about Asia, with a Map and numerous Engravings. This is designed as a fifth volume in a series of Geographical and Historical Tales for Children. Tales of America, Europe, and Africa, have already been published. Tales of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, Tales of the Sea, and Tales of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, will complete the series. These three last are in a state of forwardness.

GRAY & BOWEN, have just published, TALES OF TRAVELS West of the Mississippi, with a Map and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. This volume is the first of a series which is intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.
Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.
Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.
Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.
Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.
Peter Parley's Geography for Children. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED,

by GRAY & BOWEN, an APPENDIX to the American Almanac, for the year 1831, being the latter part of the fiftyfifth, and the beginning of the fiftysixth year of the Independence of the United States.

Extract from the Preliminary Observations on the Astronomical Department of the American Almanac.

'The Appendix is intended to answer all the essential purposes of a Nautical Almanac, and the insertion therein of the distances of the Moon from the Planets, and of the proportional logarithm of the difference between the distances, it is hoped, will be found an improvement on any Almanac hitherto published. Jan. 1.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK.

This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED,

by GRAY & BOWEN, The North American Review, No. LXX. for January, 1831.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Statuary—Del' arte di vedere nelle belle arte del desegno, secondo i Principii di Sulzer e di Mengs.

II. Bank of the United States—Report of the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred so much of the Message of the President, as relates to the Bank of the United States.

III. Anatomy—Address to the Community on the Necessity of legalizing the Study of Anatomy. By order of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

IV. Clarence—A Tale of our own Times. By the Author of Redwood.

V. Hieroglyphics—Essay on the Hieroglphic System of M. Champollion, Jr, and on the advantages which it offers to Sacred Criticism. By J. G. H. Greppo, Vicar General of Belley. Translated from the French, by Isaac Stuart, with Notes and Illustrations.

VI. American System—1. Report from the Committee on Commerce to whom was referred so much of the President's Message, as relates to the Commerce of the United States with Foreign Nations, &c. 2. A Review of Mr Cambreleng's Report from the Committee of Commerce. By Mephistopheles. 3. Exposition and Protest reported by the Special Committee of the House of Representatives on the Tariff. 4. Mr McDuffie's Speech in the House of Representatives on the Bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures for the more faithful Collection of the Revenue.

VII. Grahame's History of the United States—The History of the Rise and Progress of the United States of N. America till the British Revolution in 1688. By James Grahame, Esq.

VIII. Memoirs of Madame De Genlis—Memoires Inedits de Madame la Comtesse de Genlis sur le dixhuitieme siecle et a Revolution Francoise, depuis 1756, jusqu' a nos jours.

IX. Phillips' Manual of Political Economy, with particular reference to the Institutions, Resources and Condition of the United States. By Willard Phillips.

X. History of the Jews—History of the Jews from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Rev. H. H. Milman. Jan. 22.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED,

by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLII. for December, 1830.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Classes of American Society.—1. A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, first delivered Oct. 6, before the Charlestown Lyceum, and published at their request. By Edw. Everett. 2. Mr Tuckerman's Second Semiannual Report of the Fourth Year of his Services as a Minister at Large in Boston.

II. The Jews.—The History of the Jews, from the Earliest Period to the Present time. By Rev. H. H. Milman.

III. Wheaton's Travels.—A Journal of a Residence during several months in London; including Excursions through various Parts of England; and a short Tour in France and Scotland, in the Years 1823 and 1824. By Nathaniel S. Wheaton, A. M.

IV. English Unitarian Methodists. An Account of the Rise and Progress of the Unitarian Doctrine, in the Societies at Rochdale, Newchurch in Rosendale, and other Places, formerly in Connexion with the late Rev. Joseph Cooke. In Ten Letters to a Friend. By John Ashworth.

V. Life of Mohammed.—The Life of Mohammed; Founder of the Religion of Islam, and of the Empire of the Saracens. By the Rev. George Bush, A. M.

VI. Anderson's Tour in Greece.—Observations upon the Peloponnesus and Greek Islands, made in 1829. By Rufus Anderson, one of the Secretaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Jan. 22.

GRAY AND BOWEN,

have just received, No. 1, of SURGICAL ANATOMY OF THE ARTERIES, with plates and illustrations. By Nathan R. Smith, M. D. Professor of Surgery in the University of Maryland. January 1.

MALTE-BRUN SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY.

—This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK, The Malte-Brun School Geography, illustrated by numerous original engravings, and an Atlas of 19 Maps, Charts, and Tables. By S. Griswold Goodrich. Jan. 1.

GRAY AND BOWEN,

No. 141, Washington Street, Boston, have recently published the following valuable works.

I. THE DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION. Published under the Direction of the President of the United States, from the Original Manuscripts in the Department of State, conformably to a resolution of Congress, of March 27, 1818. Edited by JARED SPARKS.

This important Correspondence, now for the first time published, will form eleven volumes. Eight are already published and the remainder will appear very shortly.

II. JEFFERSON'S WORKS, In four Volumes. Accompanied with a Portrait on steel, and a fac-simile of the original draft of the Declaration of Independence. Second Edition.

III. THE NEW TESTAMENT, conformed to Griesbach's Text. 1 Vol. 12mo.

THE TOKEN, a Christmas and New Year's Present, for 1831. Edited by S. G. Goodrich.

'Then take my flower, and let its leaves
Beside thy heart be cherished near,
While that confiding heart receives
The thought it whispers to thine ear.'

The engravings for the Token of this year are executed by Cheney, Ellis, Gallaudet, and others; among the contributors are Dewey, Greenwood, Miss Sedgwick, Mrs Sigourney, Hall, Peabody, Wetmore, author of a Year in Spain, author of Tales of the Northwest, Neal, Thatcher, Mrs Hale, and others of the first reputation.

The work is larger than heretofore, and is done up in splendid embossed morocco. The literary department is considered decidedly superior to the former years, and in all respects it has received the greatest care and attention. Oct 23.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED,

by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVI.

CONTENTS.

Art. 1. Mill's Phenomena of Mind. 2. Tytler's and Scott's Histories of Scotland. 3. Memoirs, Correspondence, and Papers of Thomas Jefferson. 4. Niebuhr's Geography of Herodotus. 5. Galt's Southennan. 6. Floods in Moray's'hire. 7. Troades of Euripides. 8. The Belgian Insurrection, and De Potter's Trial. 9. Alexander's Travels. 10. London Bridge. 11. Hydrophobia. 12. Mr Brougham and Local Judicatories. 13. Novels and Travels in Turkey. 14. The Three Days of Paris. 15. Brasse's Sophocles. 16. Geometry without Axioms. 17. Revolution of 1830. List of Books, Index, &c. Jan. 22.

AMERICAN ALMANAC,

Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

WORKING MEN'S PARTY.

This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, delivered before the Charlestown Lyceum, October 6, 1830. By Edward Everett.

EVENTS IN PARIS,

during the 26, 27, 28, and 29th of July, 1830. By several eye witnesses. Translated from the fourth Paris edition. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS.

This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1831. NO. XXVIII.

MERCANTILE LAW.

CONTRACT OF SALE.

Continued.

There are few things which more strikingly illustrate the necessity of that multiplication of rules, which the ignorant and unreflecting impute as a fault to the law, than the subject upon which we are now, not without some degree of apprehension, entering. Apparently, no transaction can be more simple, than the transfer of commodities from the possession of the seller to the possession of the buyer; and so in the infancy of trade undoubtedly it was. But the rules, which are sufficient for the purposes of direct traffic between the grower and consumer, are ill adapted to a state of things in which the merchant in England buys goods in Hindostan, and commodities of unwieldy bulk, stowed in ships, or bonded in warehouses, change owners often more than once a day. Accordingly, there has sprung up in the mercantile law of England a multitude of lesser rules, or, to speak more properly, of exceptions from, and qualifications of the more general rules, to suit the real or fancied exigencies of commercial dealing. We say the fancied exigencies, because it cannot be denied, that this accommodating spirit has been carried too far, and that not the necessities only (to which extent alone can it be strictly justified) but the mere convenience of trade has been consulted in the decisions of the courts. The consequence has been an over-refinement and subtility in inventing distinctions, and sanctioning substitutes for actual delivery, and a confusion which can only be conceived by those, who have toiled through the endless variety of cases which are to be found reported on this subject of delivery. Thus, a principle has one day been relaxed to invest the buyer with a property in the goods, and the next day tightened to favor the seller's equitable right of reclaiming them. For it is necessary, before we enter upon the investigation, to premise, that delivery is to be regarded under different aspects, according to the effect which is proposed to be given to it. For instance, there is a large class of sales, indeed, by far the most numerous of those which come under the cognizance of the courts, in which the property in goods sold is not transferred until delivery. These are, when a general order is given for commodities of a certain quantity, quality and price, without any selection or specific designation of the individual articles purchased. Thus, a broker contracts for so many tons of hemp, or so many hogsheads of wine, at so much per ton or hogshead, and so long as the article delivered is of the kind, quality and quantity contracted for, the bargain is equally fulfilled by the delivery of this hemp or wine, or of any other. But, by the act of delivery, the identical subject of the purchase is set apart and appropriated, and thenceforth the property in that subject passes to the buyer. It is by no means, therefore, an unfrequent inquiry, whether there has been such a delivery as to change the property. Another material question will be, whether the delivery has been such as to satisfy the contract of the seller, where he has entered into an express agreement to deliver, or to entitle him to the price, where there has been no such agreement. Again, as we have seen, by delivery the seller waives his right of retaining until payment; and this effect may be produced, though he may not have done all which would entitle him to demand payment. Even after the goods have left the seller, if the buyer become insolvent before they reach his hand, or the destination which he has appointed, in such case either the seller may stop them in their transit, and retake possession, or the buyer, with the consent of the seller, may agree to return them, and thereby prevent them from passing with the rest of his property to the general body of his creditors. Nor, lastly, must it be forgotten, that in treating of the requisites prescribed by the statute of frauds for giving validity to contracts of sale, one of the alternatives, the acceptance, namely, of the whole or some part of the goods by the buyer, was reserved for after-consideration, as necessarily connected with the subject of delivery. Now, in the three last cases, viz. acceptance by the buyer, stoppage in transitu and restitution in case of insolvency, it is evident, that delivery must be considered with reference, not merely to the passing out of the possession of the seller, but to the passing into the possession of the buyer. And yet, however obviously convenient it might seem to keep these cases entirely distinct from the rest, in which this latter ingredient is not strictly necessary, it is in practice impossible to do so. Both in the reasonings and in the decisions which have taken place upon the cases of delivery, they have been so mixed up together, and they do, in fact, so frequently illustrate each other, that one class cannot be considered altogether apart from the rest; and we are, therefore, compelled to adopt a more artificial arrangement of the subject, contenting ourselves with pointing out the distinctions when they occur, and reserving, as far as may be, the three subjects last mentioned for more specific investigation hereafter.

Immediate delivery from the hand of the seller to the hand of the buyer, needs of course no observation. For the rest, it may be convenient to consider, first, those cases in which the goods to be delivered are in the actual possession of the seller, and, secondly, those in which they are in the custody of another. Under each of these heads, again, a distinction may be made between the cases where an actual tradition takes place, and those, in which the transfer is merely symbolical or constructive.

And first, of goods in the seller's own possession, of which actual tradition is made. It is not necessary that the delivery should be made to the buyer in person. It is sufficient if made into his warehouse, whether in the care of himself or a servant, or even into the warehouse of any other person which he has been accustomed to use, or has adopted for the occasion, as the depository of his goods. Under such circumstances, delivery into the warehouse of a wharfinger,* a packer,† a carrier,‡ has been considered in the respective cases as complete delivery to the purchaser.* Delivery into a public warehouse, in the name and to the use of the buyer is good: much more then is the delivery of goods bonded in the buyer's name into a bond warehouse, which by the express words of the act is for that purpose the buyer's own warehouse.

Delivery to a servant or agent† of the purchaser, or to a third person at his request,‡ is a valid delivery to himself. It has even been considered that a delivery of goods by the seller to his own servant, to be conveyed to the premises of the buyer, is sufficient to vest the property in the latter.§ At all events there can be no doubt that a delivery into the buyer's own cart, wagon, boat, or other conveyance, or on board a vessel which he has either chartered for a certain period‖, or taken of freight for the particular voyage,¶ or, following up the same principle, to a carrier, whether by land or water, specially named by the vendee, and therefore of course his agent for the purpose, is effectual delivery for all consequences which do not depend upon the actual arrival of the goods at their ultimate destination. But further, delivery to a carrier by whom commodities have been before conveyed to the same purchaser without dissent on his part, and even to a common carrier usually plying between the two places, is for many purposes a good and valid delivery.†† The carrier,

* Goss v. Richardson, 3 B. & P. 119.

† Scott v. Petit, 3 B. & P. 469.

‡ Foster v. Frampton, 6 B. & C. 187.

* Even so as to put an end to the right of stoppage.

† Leeds v. Wright, 3 B. & P. 320. Dixon v. Baldwin, 5 East, 175.

‡ Bull v. Sibbs, 8 T. R 328.

§ Blakey v. Dinsdale, Cowp. 664. A quantity of corn had been sold by sample to be delivered in a month. It was sent within the month by the seller, in a cart under the charge of his own servant, to the premises of the purchaser, and while the servant was in the act of uncarting the corn, part being actually delivered, and the rest still on the cart, a seizure was made of a portion of that which remained on the cart, for non-payment of a market toll. One question was, whether the buyer had a right of property in the grain, so as to maintain an action of trespass for this seizure. Lord Mansfield gave it as his opinion that the delivery to the vendor's servant was in respect of third persons a delivery to the buyer, adding, however, that the case was still stronger, inasmuch as it was absolutely brought to the plaintiff's house, and part of it unloaded before the trespass complained of was committed. It is evident that the real question was one not strictly of delivery, but of specific appropriation, and in this view there is no difficulty in the case: because there was clearly an appropriation by the vendor, and the assent of the vendee was signified not only by his acceptance of the part actually unloaded, but also by his bringing the action. See Rohde v. Thwaites, 6 B. & C. 688.

‖ Fowler v. M'Taggart, 7 T. R. 442.

¶ Bothlingk v. Inglis, 3 East, 395.

 Dawes v. Peck, 8 T. R. 330. Vale v. Bayle, Cowp. 294. In this latter case the vendee directed the goods to be sent by land carriage to Carmarthen. But there was but one carrier by land to that place, and it was consequently equivalent to a naming of him specially.

†† Dutton v. Solomonson, 3 B. & P. 582. 'It is a proposition,' said Lord Alvanley, 'as well settled as any in the law, that if a tradesman order goods to be sent by a carrier, though he does not name any particular carrier, the moment the goods are delivered to a carrier, it operates as a delivery to the purchaser; the whole property immediately vests in him; he alone can bring an action for injury done to the goods; and if any accident happen to the goods, it is at his risk. The only exception to the purchaser's right over the goods is that the vendor in case of the former becoming insolvent may stop them in

in fact, is considered the agent, not of the seller but of the buyer. By the latter alone, except perhaps under special circumstances of contract, can an action be maintained, in case of loss or damage to the goods in the course of conveyance ;* to him the property, if not previously transferred, and with it the risk, passes by this delivery ; and the seller's right of possession is gone, to be resumed only in case of insolvency. The same rule applies of course to carriage by water as to carriage by land. Accordingly, where the vendor has placed his goods on board even of a general ship,† deliverable to the order of the buyer, and bills of lading to that effect have been signed by the master, he has done his part, and all the consequences attach which have been above enumerated.‡ It will follow, therefore, that whatever accident may befal the goods in their transit, the seller will nevertheless be entitled to treat them as delivered, and to sue the purchaser for the price. But this must be taken with a large qualification. In the first place, though it is true in general that the risk of loss is the buyer's, so soon as he is clothed with the property, yet it is only true on the supposition that that loss is not imputable to any negligence or fault of the vendor. Again, where it is the delivery alone which transfers the property, it will not be effectual, so as to cast the risk upon the buyer, unless or until the goods are in the usual and regular course of conveyance. Nor, lastly, can the seller pretend, that he has satisfied either a particular engagement to deliver, or the general obligation cast upon him by the law, unless he has used all reasonable care either to procure the safe arrival of the goods at the place of their destination, or at least to furnish the buyer with a remedy against the intermediate parties, if loss or damage should occur.

[To be continued.]

transitu.' The rule, we apprehend, is equally true, whether the vendor says anything about a carrier, or not, for, as Lord Ellenborough, observed in the case of Copeland v. Lewis, 2 Stark. N. P. C. 33. 'when nothing is said as to any carrier, according to common sense it is to be understood that the goods are to be delivered in the most usual and convenient way, and the delivery is complete as soon as they are put in such a course of delivery.' And see Harwood v. Lester, 3 B. & P. 617. and Huxham v. Smith, 2 Campb. 21.

* It seems to have been once a settled opinion, that as it was the vendor by whom the bargain was actually made with the carrier for the conveyance of the goods, he it was by whom the action should be brought in case of loss. It was on this principle that the cases of Davis v. James, 5 Burr, 2680. and Moore v. Wilson, 1 T. R. 659. were decided. In the latter, it is remarkable enough that Mr Justice Buller, who had been of a contrary opinion at nisi prius, expressed himself in banc as convinced, upon looking into the authorities, that he had been in error. It was Lord Kenyon, we believe, who first put the matter on the right footing, by asking on whom was the risk cast? because if the loss were to be the buyer's (which according to the settled principles of mercantile law it would be,) to him of course was the injury, and he therefore ought to sue. Accordingly the vendor, in making the bargain with the carrier, is now considered as the agent of the vendee, from whom he has an implied authority to do all which may conduce to the safe conveyance of the goods. In King v. Meredith, 2 Campb. 639. the vendors of certain spirits which had been seized on their passage, by the officers of excise, brought an action against the buyer for the price. The vendors were to pay the carriage, and it was contended that the spirits were consequently at their risk until arrival. But Lawrence, J. said, 'The mode in which the carrier was to be paid makes no difference. The moment the spirits were delivered to him, the property vested in the defendant.'

† A general ship is one, which is not under charter-party to any particular person, but takes in cargo for different consignees, subject to the payment of freight on delivery.

‡ 'When orders have been received and executed, and delivery has been made to the master of the ship, and bills of lading signed, the seller is functus officio, except in the peculiar case in which he is again re-instated by the privileges of the vendeur primitif.' By Lord Stowell in the case of the Constantia, 6 Rob. Adm. Rep. 321. Abbott on shipping, 5 ed. p. 372. Groning v. Mendham, 5 M. & S. 189. Brown v. Hodgson. 2 Campb. 36. And see Walley v. Montgomery, 3 East, 585. where Grose, J. says, 'The property was once in Schumann and Co. (the vendors), but by the bill of lading and invoice sent to the plaintiff, and the delivery to the captain, the property passed from them to the plaintiff, to every purpose except as to the right of stopping them in transitu to the vendee.'

LORD JEFFERIES.

Continued from page 211.

The hatred with which Jefferies regarded the presbyterian party found a free vent on the trial of the celebrated Richard Baxter, for publishing what was termed a seditious libel. The language which, during this trial, Jefferies applied both to the counsel and to the defendant, was more gross, vulgar, and indecent than had ever before been heard in a court of justice. Interrupting Mr Wallop, the counsel for Mr Baxter, he said, 'Mr Wallop, I observe you are in all these dirty causes ; and were it not for you gentlemen of the long robe, who should have more wit and honesty than to support and hold up these factious knaves by by the chin, we should not be at the pass we are at.'—'My lord,' said Mr Wallop, 'I humbly conceive that the passages accused are natural deductions from the text.'—'You humbly conceive!' cried Jefferies, 'and I humbly conceive.—Swear him—swear him!' Soon afterwards he added, 'Sometimes you humbly conceive, and sometimes you are very positive ; you talk of your skill in church history, and of your understanding Latin and English : I think I understand something of them too as well as you, but in short must tell you, that if you do not understand your duty better, I shall teach it you.' Upon this Mr Wallop sat down. On Baxter endeavoring to address the court, Jefferies stopped him. 'Richard! Richard! dost thou think we will hear thee poison the court? Richard, thou art an old fellow, an old knave, and thou hast written books enough to load a cart. Every one is as full of sedition, I might say treason, as an egg is full of meat. Hadst thou been whipped out of thy writing trade forty years ago it had been happy. Thou pretendest to be a preacher of the gospel of peace, and thou hast one foot in the grave. It is time for thee to begin to think what account thou intendest to give; but leave thee to thyself, and I see thou wilt go on as thou hast begun ; but by the grace of God, I'll look after thee ! I know thou hast a mighty party, and I see great many of the brotherhood in corners waiting to see what will become of their mighty don, and a doctor of the party (looking at Dr Bates) at your elbow ; but, by the grace of Almighty God, I will crush you all.'

When the chief justice had finished his summing up, Baxter said, 'Does your lordship think that any jury will pretend to pass a verdict upon me upon such a trial?'—'I'll warrant you, Mr Baxter,' replied Jefferies; 'don't you trouble yourself about that.' The jury immediately found a verdict of guilty.*

The rebellion of the Duke of Monmouth, in the autumn of 1685, quickly followed by the total rout and defeat of his army at Sedgmoor, opened a wide field for the display of those ferocious tastes by which Jefferies was distinguished. Monmouth had been highly popular in the west, through which, in the year 1680, he had made the triumphal progress celebrated by Dryden in his Absalom and Achitophel :—

> The crowd that still believe their kings oppress,
> With lifted hands their young Messiah bless :
> Who now begins his progress to ordain,
> With chariots, horsemen and a numerous train.

Of the popular rejoicings to which this visit gave rise, an account has been preserved by a contemporary writer.* 'In August, 1680, the Duke of Monmouth went into the country to divert himself, visiting several gentlemen in the west of England, by whom he was received and entertained with a gallantry suitable to the greatness of his birth and the relation he stood in to his majesty, incredible numbers of people flocking from all the adjacent parts to see this great champion of the English nation, who had been so successful both against the Dutch, French, and Scots. He went first into Wiltshire, and was pleased to honor the worthy esquire Thyme with his company for some days. From thence he went to Mr Speaks in Somersetshire, in which progress he was caressed with the joyful acclamations of the country-people, who came from all parts twenty miles about, the lanes and hedges being everywhere lined with men, women, and children, who with incesant shouts cried, 'God bless king Charles and the protestant duke!' In some towns and parishes which he passed through, they strewed the streets and highways where he was to pass with herbs and flowers.' Five years afterwards the duke again appeared, and was joined by great numbers of his former friends, who little foresaw that the festivities and rejoicings, with which they had hailed their deliverer were so soon to be replaced by the terror and dismay which the scaffold, the axe, and the halter inspired.

The unfortunate men who had adhered to Monmouth had of course incurred the penalties of high treason. To punish these ignorant and devoted wretches, Jefferies was despatched to the west, not only with a commission of oyer and terminer, but with a military commission as general of the west; and the carnage that ensued was in strict accordance with the latter character. In the Life of James II., written by himself,† an attempt is made to exculpate the king from the guilt of these unheard-of cruelties. 'His imprudent zeal,' observes the royal biographer, speaking of Jefferies, 'or as some said, avarice, carrying him beyond the terms of moderation and mercy, which were always most agreeable to the king's temper, he drew undeservedly a great obloquy upon his majesty's clemency, not only in the number but the manner, too, of several executions.' The following letter, addressed by James II. to the Prince of Orange, and dated the 24th of September, 1685, seems to prove that the king was well acquainted with the course of these proceedings, during which it will be seen that he did not neglect to solace himself with the recreation of fox-hunting :—'Since I came back from Winchester I received yours of the 21st from Loo, by Mr Sidney, and having been a fox-hunting on Tuesday last, had not then time to let you know it. I was this day again at the same sport, the weather being now very proper for it, having ended stag-hunting the day I returned hither. As for news, there is little stirring, but that lord chief justice has almost done his campaign. He has already condemned several hundreds, some of which are already executed, some are to be, and the others sent to the plantations, which is all that I have now time to tell you, but that I shall always be as kind to you as you can desire.'* The singular story of Major Holmes is mentioned by the king as a proof of his own clemency and of the severity of Jefferies. 'This gentleman had been engaged with Monmouth, had lost a son and his arm in the battle, was taken prisoner, and brought up to town. The king being desirous to see him, he behaved himself in such a manner as gained an esteem from every body. His carriage was free from dejection, yet full of respect. He owned his fault, but had recourse to his majesty's mercy; but told him that, considering his losses and his age, the favor he asked would be more advantageous for his majesty's reputation to grant than beneficial to him to receive. The king, who loved courage even in an enemy, could not refrain countenancing of him, discoursed freely with him, and no one was more frequently in the king's antechamber, till it was thought fit to send him down into the west, as one who could best inform the lord chief justice who were the most criminal, and who most deserved mercy, and that he might do some service before he received his pardon, which was deferred only for that reason till after his return. But instead of that, the first news the king heard of him was that he had been hanged with the rest. This his majesty was very much surprised at, and made him question the chief justice at his return: but he palliated that and his other severities with the pretence of necessary justice, which the king having made him judge of, knew not how to contradict, especially since he had the precaution not only to send four other judges as his assistants along with him, but Mr Pollexfen likewise, in quality of his solicitor, who being a known favorer of the presbyterian party, he hoped would moderate the chief justice's heat; so that after all this care and foresight his majesty had reason to acquiesce to what had been done, though it was a great disservice to him at the bottom; but my lord chief justice making it pass for an excess of zeal hindered not his majesty from conferring the title of a baron upon him as a reward for his former merit.'†

* State Trials, vol xi. p. 500.

* Historical Account, &c, of James Duke of Monmouth

† Vol. ii. p. 43.

The progress of Jefferies through the western counties might have been tracked by the blood which he so lavishly shed; and some anecdotes of his cruelties have been preserved which strike the reader with indignant horror. When the sisters of one of the prisoners who had been convicted stopped his coach, to the wheels of which they clung, begging mercy for their brother, he ordered his coachman to cut their arms and hands with his whip.‡ And upon another occasion, when a lady interceded for the life of one of the prisoners, to whom she was betrothed, he answered her with a jest so cruel, so coarse, and so unmanly, that the very relation of it rouses the feelings almost like a present insult.§ The avarice of Jefferies is alluded to by the king, and there is no doubt that in many instances, persons who had been implicated in the rebellion purchased their lives from him with money. From Mr Prideaux, a gentleman of Devonshire, he received so large a sum as £15,000 for not bringing him to trial.‖

One of the most barbarous of the many cruel executions which took place at this time was that of Mrs Lisle, a gentlewoman of upwards of seventy years of age, who had been in fact, guilty of no offence whatever. She had harbored two men who had escaped from the rout at Sedgmoor; but it did not appear that she was acquainted with their participation in the rebellion. One of the witnesses, for the prosecution was a person of the name of Dunne a presbyterian, whom Jefferies suspecting to be an unwilling witness, attacked with a coarseness of language and violence of demeanor, which appear almost to have deprived the man of his senses. A few passages will sufficiently illustrate the temper of the chief justice. 'Why, thou vile wretch! dost thou think, because thou prevaricatest with the court here, that thou canst do so with God above, who knows thy thoughts? And it is infinite mercy that with those faleshoods of thine he does not strike thee into hell! Jesus God! there is no sort of conversation or human society to be kept with such people as these are, who have no religion, but only in pretence.' Soon afterwards, addressing himself to the jury, he said, 'I hope, gentlemen of the jury, you take notice of the strange and horrible carriage of this fellow, and withal you cannot but observe the spirit of that sort of people, what a villanous and devilish one it is. Good God! that ever the thing called religion (a word that people have so much abused) should ever wind up persons to such a height of impiety, that it should make them lose the belief that there is a God of truth in heaven! * * * A Turk is a saint to such a fellow as this; nay, a pagan would be ashamed to be thought to have no more truth in him.' Colonel Penruddock having stated that Dunne, the witness, had asserted, that he apprehended the persons who had taken refuge with Mrs Lisle to be rebels, the following examination took place —

'Jefferies. What do you say to that, Dunne? It seems you told Barton that you apprehended them to be rebels.

'Dunne. I apprehended them for rebels, my lord!

'Jefferies. No, no! you did not apprehend them for rebels; but you hid them for rebels. But did you say to Barton that you took them for rebels?

'Dunne. I take them to be rebels!

'Jefferies. You blockhead! I ask you, did you tell him so?

'Dunne. I tell Barton so!

'Jefferies. Ay, is not that a plain question?

'Dunne. I am quite cluttered out of my senses; I do not know what I say.

'Jefferies. But to tell the truth would rob thee of none of thy senses, if ever thou hadst any; but it should seem that neither thou nor thy mistress, the prisoner, had any, for she knew nothing of it neither, though she had sent for them thither.'

At length the case went to the jury, who manifested a desire to retire, 'upon which the Lord Jefferies expressed a great deal of impatience, and said he wondered that in so plain a case they would go from the bar.' Having retired, 'he would have sent to them with an intimation, that if they did not come quickly, he would adjourn, and let them lie by it all night.' The jury in about half an hour appeared, but it was only to express a doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence. Jefferies told them that the fact they referred to had been proved. The foreman replied that they did not remember it. Jefferies repeated his assertions, and, added, that 'if there were no proof, the circumstances and management of the thing were as full proof as need be.' Upon this the jury, after some deliberation, brought in a verdict of guilty. It is stated by many historians, that the jury, three several times, brought in a verdict of acquittal, which, by the threats of the chief justice, they were induced to retract; but this fact does not appear from the report in the State Trials.*

Mrs Lisle was convicted on the 27th of August. 'Look you, Mrs Lisle,' said Jefferies; 'when I left his majesty, he was pleased to remit the time of all executions to me, that, wherever I found any obstinacy or impenitence, I might order the executions with what speed I thought best. Therefore, Mr Sheriff, take notice, you are to prepare for the execution of this gentlewoman this afternoon; but withal I give you, the prisoner, this intimation: we that are the judges shall stay in town an hour or two; you shall have pen, ink, and paper brought you; and if, in the meantime you employ that pen, ink, and paper, and this hour or two well (you understand what I mean), you may hear further from us in a deferring the execution.'

At the intercession of several divines, a respite was granted till the 2d of September, and in the mean time an application was made to the king, by Lady St John and Lady Abergavenny for mercy; and a petition was presented from the prisoner herself, praying for a commutation of the punishment, from burning to beheading. To the appeal for mercy, James replied, 'that he would do nothing in it, having left all to the chief justice,' —to the petition, 'that he would not reprieve her one day; but, for altering the sentence, he would do it, if there were any precedents for it.'† Here, at all events, was an opportunity afforded to the king of extending mercy, and as he chose to reject it, the grievous odium of this unjust and cruel punishment must rest with him: yet, with a meanness proportioned to the cruelty of the act itself, he endeavors in his own memoirs to affix the stigma wholly upon Jefferies.‡

* Dalrymple's Appendix, part ii. p. 165.
† Life of James II., vol. ii. p. 113.
‡ Granger, vol. ii. p. 543.
§ See Dalrymple and Ralph.
‖ Dalrymple's Mem. p. 140.

* Vol. xi. p. 371.
† State Trials, vol. xi. p. 376.
‡ Life of James II., vol. ii. p. 43.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.

Keeps the Great Seal, not to judge according to the common law, as other courts do, but to dispense with such parts as seem in some cases, to oppress the subject; and to judge according to equity, conscience and reason. He presides in the High Court of Chancery, which is the most important of all the King's civil courts of justice. He takes precedency of every temporal lord, and is by office Speaker of the House of Lords. To him belongs the appointment of justices of the peace throughout the kingdom; and he is patron of all the ecclesiastical benefices, under the yearly value of £20 in the King's Books. He is also the general guardian of all infants, idiots, and lunatics. The Court of Chancery in which the Lord Chancellor alone sits and determines without a jury, judges causes in equity, in order to moderate the rigor of the law, to defend the helpless from oppression, and especially to extend relief in cases of accident, fraud, and breach of trust. From this court an appeal lies immediately to the House of Peers which is the Supreme Court of Judicature in the kingdom.

The office is filled at present by Mr Brougham.

For the Jurisprudent.

It is not wonderful that judicial tribunals even those composed of the ablest men, in seeking for distinction to justify an exception to a settled rule of law, should sometimes overlook the reason of the rule, and virtually abolish the rule itself. It has appeared to me that such has been the fate of the rule, which excludes the confessions of a party accused of a crime, as inadmissible in evidence against him, if they were influenced by promises of favor. If I am mistaken in my views upon this subject, it is a mistake in which many others have participated; if otherwise, it may not be amiss to point out an error, which ought not to remain uncorrected in a code claiming to be the perfection of reason.

The rule alluded to has been established in consequence of the danger of trusting to declarations made under an improper influence. Innocent persons, when accused of crimes, will sometimes declare their guilt, with a view of avoiding the risk of a trial. Their fears being alarmed by the accusation and the circumstances attending it, they are easily persuaded that their best course is to purchase safety by confessions of guilt. In countries where the administration of justice is regulated by the true principles of civil liberty, conscious innocence will generally, no doubt, hazard a trial of criminal charges rather than propitiate the ministers of justice by admitting the truth of an accusation which is unfounded. Persons are to be found, however, in the most enlightened countries, who are liable, when placed in an untried situation, to be intimidated into an acknowledgment of guilt, although innocent, especially if by so doing they should expect to insure their safety. This infirmity of human nature, of the existence of which there can be no doubt, is sufficient to sanction the principle of excluding evidence of confessions when induced by promises of favor.

Where hopes of favor have been held out to the accused and confessions have immediately followed, the presumption is, that the confessions were influenced by the promises, unless there be circumstances sufficient to control such presumption. And if confessions, which may have been influenced by promises of favor or made with a view of obtaining security from apprehended danger, are not admissible in evidence because the party may have been induced thereby to confess what is not true, it will be difficult to discover a difference in principle between such confessions as are induced by absolute promises and those induced by conditional ones, whether the condition be performed or not. Suppose, for instance, that indemnity be promised on condition that the party accused will testify against a supposed accomplice, and confessions be thereupon made which implicate the latter, but the accused afterward refuses so to testify. How can confessions obtained by such means be regarded as better evidence of guilt than if there had been no such condition? In either case, the promised indemnity is the inducement to confess; and a person who would accuse himself falsely for the sake of security, would hardly hesitate to implicate others; nor would his refusal afterward to testify upon oath to the facts disclosed by him have any tendency to give them a stamp of truth which they would not have without that circumstance. A refusal to comply with the condition, upon which impunity is promised, can have no other effect, in the reason of things, than to leave the party accused without any claim for the performance of the promise: at any rate, it cannot alter the character of the confessions. He will be liable to be proceeded against as if no such promise had been made; but his refusal to perform the condition annexed to the promise can have no tendency to show that the confessions were not induced by hopes of favor; and to admit them on that account would be inconsistent with the principle by which they are excluded in other cases. Why then should so much importance be attached to such refusal, as to permit it to vary the rule of evidence? Surely the party accused gains no advantage from an annexed conditional promise of favor. Is there such an obligation on him to perform the condition, upon which the promised indemnity depends, as that a refusal to perform it ought to subject him to the penalty of being convicted upon evidence which otherwise would have been inadmissible? It would require a more thorough adept in casuistry than I am, to discover any such imperious obligation; and in no view of the subject which I have been able to take, can I see any more reason in admitting confessions in evidence, because the party refuses to testify upon oath against one whom he has implicated by his confessions, than because he refuses to repeat confessions which criminate none but himself.

If confessions of guilt, when they are obtained by promises of favor, are inadmissible in evidence, on the ground that the party accused may have been induced by such promises to confess what is not true, the same reason would seem sufficient to exclude them in all cases where similar causes may produce similar effects. But besides the inconsistency in not permitting that reason to operate in all cases, an exception to the rule, grounded on a refusal to testify upon oath against a person implicated as an accomplice, is liable to a more serious objection. If the exception should be applied in practice, this consequence will follow;—that where a party, by his confessions, implicates another as an accomplice, indemnity having been promised on the condition that he will testify against the person thus implicated, his only safety must lie in his persisting in the charge and supporting it by his testimony whether it be true or false. If the confessions, in such case, are true, he will be rewarded by an exemption from punishment for betraying an accomplice. If they are not true, and the party, for that reason, should afterward refuse to give them the sanction of his oath, he will be bound by them as if they were true, it being presumed that they are so, although experience says they may be false. Having once confessed under such circumstances, he cannot retract. He must either bear false testimony against him whom he has once implicated, or be condemned on a confession obtained by promises of favor.

LUCIUS.

ENGLISH CASES.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH—OCT.

(Sitting at Guildhall, before Lord Chief Justice Tenterden and Common Juries.)

Morgan and Another vs. Read.

This was an action brought by two Gravesend pilots, to recover salvage from the owners of the East India ship Providence, which had run aground on the Chaplin Sands, when coming up the river on her voyage home, heavily laden with East India produce.

It appeared, from the evidence for the plaintiffs, that they had exerted themselves from three o'clock in the afternoon until half-past one o'clock in the morning, when, on the return of the tide, they, with other assistance, succeeded in getting her off the sands with little damage. The evidence also went to show that, had she not been got off that tide, she must have gone to pieces; for on the return of the next ensuing tide it blew a strong gale, and at high water the tide did not rise within three feet of what it was when the vessel was got off.

For the defence, it was admitted that the services had been performed in a skilful manner; but it was contended that the ship was never for one moment in danger, and the owners had offered 13*l.* to the plaintiffs, and other parties who exerted themselves, as remuneration for their time and labor on the occasion. It was also contended that the case could not in law be considered as a case of salvage, for there must be peril of life attending the services rendered, or the parties could only claim for work and labor in the ordinary way, and not for salvage. It was further attempted to be shown, though the evidence on the point was rather vague, that an agreement was made by the Captain with the parties, and that in a subsequent interview, when this agreement was mentioned by him, they replied that they never were bound by agreements in cases of that kind.

Evidence was adduced by the plaintiffs to show that, viewing the case as one of salvage, the services rendered would not be too well paid at the rate of from 30*l.* to 50*l.* per man.

On the other hand evidence was adduced by the defendant to show that the sum offered to the men (13*l.*)was sufficient for their services.

Lord Tenterden charged the Jury that they must find a verdict for the defendant, if they believed that an agreement had been entered into with all the parties engaged on the occasion, because, having entered into an agreement together they had no right subsequently to bring separate actions. They should, in that case, therefore, become together plaintiffs in one action. There was no peril in the case, nor was there any very extraordinary skill required; but still the services were such as could not be brought under the denomination of ordinary work and labor; though at the same time the sum of 50*l.* each man appeared to be far too great to meet the justice of the case.—Should they therefore be of opinion that there was no agreement, they would award such damages as the promptness with which the assistance was afforded might seem to them to merit.

The Jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs —Damages 10*l.*

It was then arranged between the Counsel that in the case of the other parties a verdict should be taken, giving to each man 5*l.* being the same damages as in the case which was tried. There being seven persons in all, the total amount awarded in both actions was of course, 35*l.*

ROLLS COURT.

Humphreys vs. Howes.—Judgment.

In this case a testator had given property to one person for life, with remainder to a class of children, and he directed that if any of the latter should die before his interest became due and payable, his share should go over to the survivor or survivors. It so happened that one died during the life of the testator, and the question was, whether, in that event, the interest of such a child, after the death of the tenant for life, should survive to the other children? On referring to the cases cited, his Honor said he found that in that of Williams v. —, 3d Pere Williams, an interest had been given to two persons, to be vested at 21, with a proviso that that if either died before that age, then the whole should go to the survivor. One died during the life of the testator, and it was held that his share went over to the survivor. In the argument on the case before the Court, it had been stated that Williams v. —— contained an important distinction in not having a tenant for life. The objection founded on this distinction had been supported by various cases, and chiefly by that of Bone v. Cook. Upon reference to that case, he (the Master of the Rolls) was of opinion that the principle on which it proceeded was inapplicable to the present case. There a testator gave an interest for life, and, after the death of the tenant for life, remainder to another, and he declared that, if that other should die before the interest given to him should become due and payable, then it should accrue to his executors and administrators. The remainder-man died during the life of the testator, and it was held that his legacy lapsed, on the ground that the testator, having given a life interest, must have intended that the death by which the right should be transferred to the executors, &c, should not take place before the death of the testator, but should happen during the tenancy for life. The case of Walker v. Beam (as we understood his Honor to say) had decided the peculiarity of the present case, and it has there been held that the death of one child during the life of the testator did not cause the legacy to lapse, but to go over to the survivors. Judgment should be given accordingly.

RECENT ENGLISH DECISIONS.

EQUITY.

Parol evidence of collateral circumstances relating to the ages of the devisees, and the situation of the parties and to their being married or unmarried, is admissible in evidence for the purpose of construing the will.—Low vs. Lord Huntingtower, 4 Russ. 532.

In construing the meaning of a devise to the next of kin of a deceased married couple; the chancellor made use of the fact that they were not related, as aiding the construction. This fact not appearing on the face of the will, was of course obtained by parol evidence.—Pycroft vs. Gregory, 4 Russ. 530.

Parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of identifying a plan referred to in a contract concerning lands.—Hodges vs. Horsefall, 1 Russ. & 4 M. 116.

Where an executor was employed by his co-executor, who had alone power to sell under the will, to sell the testator's estate, and handed over the proceeds of the sale to the co-executor by whom they were misapplied; it was held that he was not answerable for the misapplication, as he had no right to retain the money, he being a mere agent.—Davis vs. Spurling, R. & M. 64.

Where an executor, after settlement of accounts, confesses there was an error, and before suit, corrects it and pays over the amount, and a bill is afterwards filed to surcharge and falsify, the error is not a ground for the decree prayed; for at the time of the bill filed there was, in this respect, no existing error, and no cause of complaint by the plaintiff.—S. C.

A feme covert may execute a power of appointment, when, in the instrument creating the power, she was described as a married woman.—Downs vs. Timperon, 4 Russ. 334.

The Court refused to set aside a voluntary deed executed by an old and infirm man, in favor of a person who had attended him as surgeon and had been occasionally consulted by him respecting the management of his property, and received the dividends of some stock for him, it appearing that there was no undue influence, and that the deed was explained to the grantor by his solicitor.—Pratt vs. Barker, 4 Russ. 507.

If an agent employed to purchase an estate, become the purchaser for himself, he is to be considered as a trustee for his principal.—Lees vs. Nuttall, 1 Russ. & M. 53.

Surety paying the specialty debt, for which he was liable for his principal, is entitled to stand in in the place of the creditor, even although he take an assignment of the debt, but he is only a simple contract creditor of his principal.—Jones vs. Davids, 4 Russ. 277.

The vendor's lien on the estate sold for his unpaid purchase money, exists as well for the benefit of others as himself. If therefore, on the decease of the purchaser, the purchase money is paid out of the personal estate of the purchaser, so as to exhaust it to the prejudice of simple contract creditors, they and as it seems, even legatees, are entitled to have the assets marshalled against the devisee of the purchaser and to stand in the place of the vendor to the extent of his lien.—Selby vs. Selby, 4 Russ. 336.

An infant cannot sustain a suit for specific performance of a contract, because the remedy is not mutual.—Flight vs. Bolland. 4 Russ. 298.

The statute of frauds requiring a contract for purchase of lands to be signed only by the party to be charged; a specific performance can be enforced against one who has signed at the suit of a party who has not signed.—Dictum in S. C.

A purchaser is not compelled to take a title depending upon the words of a will which were too doubtful to be settled without litigation.—Sharp vs. Adcock. 4 Russ. 374.

Where the title is doubtful, a case will not be directed to the judges, as to the title at the request of the vendor, for even if the judgment were found in favor of the title, it would not bind the purchaser to accept it.—S. C.

Vendor is bound to convey to purchaser, notwithstanding before conveyance the purchaser has incumbered his equitable estate and the incumbrancer gives him notice not to convey. If he does not he will have to pay costs of suit to compel him.—Walford vs. Walford, 4 Russ. 372.

If a good title cannot be made to part of the property agreed to be sold, which is material to the enjoyment of the rest, the purchaser is not bound to complete the contract, even with compensation for the defective part.—Smith vs. Tolcher, 4 Russ. 302.

A vendor during the treaty for sale assumed to be the agent of another. The purchaser will be compelled to complete his contract, notwithstanding this deception, provided it had not the effect of obtaining better terms and not the inducement for the purchaser to enter into the contract. —Fellows vs. Lord Gwydyr, 1 Russ. & Mylne, 83.

Notice to a purchaser that a certain person was the late occupier of the estate contracted for, does not render it necessary for him to inquire the nature of his title.—Miles vs. Langley, 1 Russ. & M. 39.

The purchaser of an estate had no notice at the time of his contracting with the vendor, that any part of the estate was in the occupation of a third person: Held, that the mere occupation of part of estate by a stranger, was not constructive notice to the purchaser of the agreement under which he held.—S. C.

The vague and exaggerated description of a particular of sale is not such a misrepresentation as will avoid a contract. Thus, if land imperfectly irrigated, is described in a particular of sale, as uncommonly rich water-meadow, the purchaser must complete his contract.—Scott vs. Hanson, 1 Russ. & M. 128.

A testator bequeathed the lease and good-will of a public-house, with the stock therein to J. M., in consideration of his paying all the testator's debts, and appointed him residuary legatee and executor. J. M. proved the will, and entered and carried on business in the house. He afterwards filed a bill, praying, as the debts far exceeded the value of the personal assets, that the deficiency might be raised rateably out of the different freeholds devised. But, held, that he having accepted the bequest, must be bound by the condition annexed, and pay the debts.—Messenger vs. Andrews, 4 Russ. 478.

Where a testator bequeathed to the two sons, and the daughter of T. L. 50*l*. each, and at the making of the will, there were five children of T. L. namely, one son and four daughters: the court held, that each of the five were entitled to a legacy of 50*l*.—Harrison vs. Harrison, 1 Russ. & M. 72.

Equal sums given by a will and codicil were held to be substitutional, and not accumulative, although the latter was only conditional: the question always is, whether from the whole of the instruments taken together, an intention on the part of the testator to substitute the one legacy for the other can be collected.—Fraser vs. Byng, 1 Russ. & M. 90.

A testator gave the interest of a fund to his widow for life, with a power of appointment among all his children, and in default of appointment, among all such children with a gift over to the widow, in case all the children should die before their shares should become payable. The widow appointed the fund to her children, one of whom died in her life time: Held that the survivor took the whole fund.—Bielefield vs. Record, 2 Sim. 334.

---

Oglander, in his Memoirs of the Isle of Wight, written in 1700, gives us the following record of a blessing formerly enjoyed by that favored spot. 'I have heard,' says our author, 'and partly know it to be true, that not only heretofore was there no lawyer nor attorney in the Wight, but in Sir George Cary's time, 1588, an attorney coming to settle there was, by his command, and with a pound of candles hanging at his breech, lighted with bells about his legs, hunted out of the island.'

---

The croakings against the new Lord Chancellor in the House of Commons on Tuesday night has brought to general remembrance that very venerable adage—'Those who are out, will pout.'

---

Ohio.—Hon. John C. Wright, late member of Congress, has been elected by the legislature of Ohio, in joint ballot, a judge of the Supreme Court of that state.

LORD BROUGHAM'S FAMILY.—An account of the family of Lord Brougham has run the round of the London Journals, copied from the Leeds Intelligencer, which contains nearly as many errors as it contains lines. Henry, Lord Brougham, is the eldest son of a gentleman of small fortune, but ancient family, (the Chancellor had, we believe, a latent claim as heir-general to the Barony of Vaux, and hence his creation by that title,) in Cumberland. His mother was the daughter of a Scotch clergyman; in the mansion of whose widow, on the Castle Hill of Edinburgh, the father of Lord Brougham lodged when prosecuting his studies at the University there. Chambers, the laborious topographical historian of the Modern Athens, says that Lord Brougham was born in St Andrew's-square, in that City, though we have heard this disputed. The family of the late Mr Brougham consisted of four sons:—Henry; John, an extensive wine-merchant in Edinburgh, who died at Boulogne about eighteen months ago; James, the Chancery Barrister, who sat with Baron Abercromby in the last Parliament for Tregony, and sits at present for Calne: and William, who is, we believe, an Equity draughtsman—he is noticed as such in the Law List.*—Lord Brougham, sat first for Camelford, afterwards for Winchelsea, then for Knaresborough, and lastly for Yorkshire. It is an instructive example of the working of our admirable system of representation, that up to the 16th of last October, Henry Brougham, the greatest orator and statesman that perhaps ever enlightened Parliament, was indebted for his seat to the patronage of a borough holding Peer. In 1812, he contested Liverpool with Mr Canning, and failed: in the same year he was nominated, as we have elsewhere noticed, for the Inverkeithing district of boroughs, and failed there also. In 1818 he contested Westmoreland, with the Lowthers; and again in 1826, but unsuccessfully in both instances. Lord Brougham was originally a Scotch barrister, and practised for some time in the Supreme Court there. It was while at the Scotch bar, that, in conjunction with the late Mr Francis Horner and Mr Jeffrey he planned and established the celebrated Edinburgh Review, of which he was for many years a most able and constant supporter. Lord Brougham married, in 1816, Mary Anne, relict of John Spalding, Esq. of Holme, in Gallowayshire; by whom we believe he has had two children, a boy and a girl. Lady Brougham's maiden name is Eden: she is a near kinswoman of the Auckland and Hendley families. At her marriage with Mr Spalding, in 1808, she was accounted an extremely beautiful young woman, and she was still possessed of great personal charms at the period of her second union. Lady B. had by her former marriage a son, who inherits his father's estate, and is an officer in the army, and a daughter. Lord Brougham is, we believe, about fifty years of age.—Spectator.

* Mr William Brougham is a pleader of considerable talent, who will probably obtain in time nearly as high a reputation at the Bar as his brother Henry, the present Lord Chancellor.—EDITOR.

SCOTTISH MARRIAGE LAW.

The following is an abridged report of a case of marriage and legitimacy, published in a late number of the Scottish Jurist:—The defendant, Sir R. Honeyman, had endeavored to secure the affections of a Miss Campbell, who was governess in his father's family. She hesitated to accept his proposal to marry her, because she was afraid that he would make a sacrifice in the estimation of his relatives, which might injure his future prospects, she having neither connexions nor wealth to qualify her for such a union. He persisted in paying his addresses, and, at length she consented that he should call her wife. He, in return had asked her to call him husband, to which she replied, 'Dearest, dearest Dick, you are my husband.' It was proved that afterwards he had frequently admitted her to be his wife. Subsequently she bore two children to him. This was established: and it was further shown, from the language used in his correspondence, that the connexion was virtuous. The Judges were of opinion that the promise, followed by cohabitation, constituted marriage; and that it was not necessary to prove such promises by written documents.

She was accordingly declared by the law of Scotland to be the legal wife of Sir R. Honeyman.

---

Superior Court.—The December Term of the Superior Court for this county commenced at Fairfield on Tuesday last; his Hon. Judge Hosmer on the Bench. Three causes only were submitted to the consideration of the Jury during the past week; the most important one was that of Holly v. Pond and others. Some time after the failure of the Eagle Bank, Sheriff Pond, one of the defendants in this case, by virtue of a writ of attachment in favor of said Bank against Wm. C. Holly, of New York, levied upon a large quantity of iron, at that time in possession of the plaintiff, D. Holly. at his Rolling Mill in this place, as the property of the said Wm. C. Holly—the iron was removed, and subsequently sold under an execution by Sheriff Pond, the sales amounting to about 19,000 dollars. D. Holly brought an action of trover against the defendants for taking the aforesaid iron, claiming it as his property, and demanding 25,000 dollars damages. The cases by appeal from the Court below and continuances, came to this term for trial, and was ably argued on the part of the Plaintiff by T. Betts, of Norwalk and Calvin Goddard, of Norwich; and for the defendants by N. Smith, of New Haven, and R. M. Sherman, of Fairfield. Verdict for the Defendants.—Stamford Sentinel.

---

LIBEL SUIT.—A cause, which has excited great interest in New York, has been recently tried before the Court of Sessions in that city. The indictment charges Doctors Vaught and Anderson with publishing a libel in the American Lancet of 15th October, of which the defendants are editors. Said libel charged that there was a secret society in existence among certain physicians of the city of New York, and gave the names of seventeen belonging thereto. The indictment was laid for a libel on Doctors Beck, Ludlow, and others. After a trial which occupied the court about three days, the cause was given to the jury, who, in a few minutes returned a verdict of Not Guilty.

---

The Court of King's Bench, for the District of Montreal, has decided that proprietors of steamboats are to be considercd as common carriers, and legally responsible for the safe delivery of all goods entrusted to them, notwithstanding every clause to the contrary in their advertisements, bills of lading, or other documents. The Chief Justice maintained in his charge, that as bills of lading could not contain any valid clause annalling the existing laws, all such stipulations were void. The law is the same as to stage proprietors.

SUNDAYS.—At the Court of Exchequer, a case was decided in the latter part of November, in which the payment of a bill of exchange was objected to on account of its having been drawn and accepted on Sunday. Baron Garrow observed that the statute did not apply to all work done on Sundays—the object of it was, to prohibit persons from following their ordinary occupations—that a servant might be lawfully hired on Sunday. This bill, he said, came within the 'works of necessity,' and was therefore valid.

---

Sir R. Peel declined the Peerage which was offered him by the King when he tendered his resignation—probably preferring at present to take a part in the discussions of the Lower House to enjoying a seat in the Upper, where he and his great antagonist, Lord Brougham, must once more have come into hostile collision. The late Home Secretary, when he declined the Peerage, asked one favor of his Majesty, and that was, that his brother-in-law, Mr George R. Dawson, should be nominated a Privy Councillor, which his Majesty immediately granted.

---

It is reported that one of the first measures of the new Administration will be to separate the political from the judicial duties of the Lord High Chancellor, and thus prevent the great inconvenience and expense to which suitors in this Court are exposed from a change in Ministers.—Standard.

---

EPIGRAM.

'The lateness of the hour at which the House despatches a great part of its business accounts for a great deal of the foolish and reckless legislation which disgraces the Statute book, and reflects anything but credit on the intellect of the country.'—Morning Herald, 3d Sept. 1830.

'I wonder,' quoth John, to his friend t'other day,
Why our Laws are so DARK and obscure;
If the wisdom's employed in the manner you say,
The Laws should be all that is pure.'

'The reason is clear,' quoth his friend, in reply—
And as plain as the sun it is bright;
They are made when good folks are asleep, by the bye,
And are passed in the SHADES of the night.'

---

How to raise a Bell.—The Boston Commercial Gazette recommends a small bell, which, it says, could be raised 'by subscription,' to announce to the merchants the arrival of the steam-boats and mails. 'The suggestion,' it adds, 'did not emanate from us, but from a friend at our elbow.'

---

A TREATISE on the principles and practice of the Action on Ejectment, and the resulting action for Mesne Profits. By John Adams, of the Middle Temple, Esq. Barrister at Law. From the last London edition.—To which are added, Notes of the Decisions made by the Supreme and Circuit Court of the United States, and by the Courts of the several States, whose decisions have been reported upon the Addition of Ejectment, and the Action for Mesne Profits, and Notes of Decisions upon those subjects, made in the English Courts to the present time, except those cited in the text; together with the Statutory Provisions, in relation to those Actions, contained in the Revised Statutes of the State of New York; and Precedents of entries, pleadings and power adapted thereto.—By John L. Tillinghast, Counsellor at law.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1831.

AMERICAN REPORTS.

The following is we believe nearly a perfect list of the reports of cases decided in the federal and state Courts of the United States:—

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Dallas' Reports, 3 vols. The 2d, 3d, and 4th vols. of Dallas contain all the Reported Cases decided in the United States Supreme Court previous to the 1st Cranch; and all the Reported Cases decided in the U. S. Circuit Court for the 3d Circuit previous to 1st Washington.
Cranch's Reports, 9 vols.
Wheaton's Reports, 12 vols.
Peters' Reports, 4 vols.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Gallison's Reports, in the 1st Circuit, 2 vols.
Mason's Reports, " " 4 vols.
Paine's Reports, 2d " 1 vol.
Wallace's Reports, 3d " 1 No.
Washington's Reports, 3d " 4 vols.
Peters' Reports, 3d " 1 vol.

Washington's and Peters' Circuit Court Reports contain the whole series of the late Judge Washington's Decisions from 1803 to October Term, 1827, inclusive.

STATE OF MAINE.

Greenleaf's Reports, 5 vols.

VERMONT.

Chipman's Reports, 1 vol.
Tyler's Reports, 2 vols.
D. Chipman's Reports, 1 vol.
Aiken's Reports, 2 vols.
Brayton's Reports 1 vol.
Vermont Judges' Reports, 1 vol.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

New Hampshire Reports, 4 vols.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Massachusetts Reports, 17 vols.
Pickering's Reports, 8 vols.

CONNECTICUT.

Kirby's Reports, 1 vol.
Root's Reports, 2 vols.
Day's Cases, 5 vols.
Connecticut Reports, 6 vols.

NEW YORK.

Caines' Term Reports, 3 vols.
" Cases in Error, 2 vols.
Coleman and Caines' Cases, 1 vol.
Anthon's Nisi Prius Cases, 1 vol.
Johnson's Cases, 3 vols.
Johnson's Reports, 20 vols.
Johnson's Chancery Rep. 7 vols.
Cowen's Reports, 9 vols.
Wendell's Reports, 3 vols.
Hopkins' Chancery Reports, 1 vol.
Rogers' City Hall Recorder, 1 vol.
Wheeler's Criminal Law in New York and elsewhere, 3 vols.
Paige's Chancery Reports, 1 vol.

NEW JERSEY,

Pennington's Reports, 2 vols.
Coxe's Reports, 1 vol.
Southard's Reports, 2 vols.
Halsted's Reports, 5 vols.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Dallas' Reports, 4 vols.
Addison's Reports, 1 vol.
Peters' Admiralty Decisions, 2 vols.
Binney's Reports, 6 vols.
Yeates' Reports, 4 vols.
Sergeant & Rawle's Reports, 17 vols.
Rawle's Reports, 1 vol.
P. A. Browne's Reports, 2 vols.

MARYLAND.

Harris & M'Henry's Reports, 4 vols.
Harris & Johnson's Rep. 7 vols.
Harris & Gill's Reports, 2 vols.

VIRGINIA.

Call's Reports, 3 vols.
Hening & Munford's Reports, 4 vols.
Munford's Reports, 6 vols.
Gilmer's Reports, 1 vol.
Randolph's Reports, 6 vols,
Leigh's Reports, 1 vol.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Taylor's Reports, 1 vol.
Cameron & Norwood's Reports, 1 vol.
North Carolina Law Repository, 2 vols.
Heywood's Reports, 2 vols.
Murphey's Reports, 3 vols.
Hawkes' Reports, 4 vols.
Ruffin's Reports.
Martin's Reports.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Bay's Reports, 2 vols.
Bee's Reports, 1 vol.
M'Cord's Chancery Reports, 2 vols.
Nott & M'Cord's Reports, 2 vols.
Harper's Law Reports, 1 vol.
M'Cord's Reports, 4 vols.
Desaussure's Chancery Reports, 4 vols.
Constitutional Court Reports, 4 vols.
Harper's Equity Reports, 1 vol.

KENTUCKY.

Hughes' Reports.
Hardin's Reports.
Bibb's Reports, 4 vols.
Marshall's Reports, 3 vols.
Littell's Reports, 6 vols.
Monroe's Reports, 6 vols.

TENNESSEE.

Overton's Reports, 2 vols.
Cooke's Reports.
Heywood's Reports, 3 vols.
Peck's Reports, 1 vol.

LOUISIANA.

Martin's Reports.

GEORGIA.

Charlton's Reports.

Law Intelligencer.

ENGLISH COMMON LAW REPORTS.

The Volumes published of the English Common Law Reports Condensed, edited by THOMAS SERGEANT and JOHN C. LOWBER, Esquires, contain as follows:

Vol. 1. Taunton's Reports, C. P. vol. 5 and 6.
2. " " 7.
Starkie's " N. P. 1.
3. Starkie's " N. P. 2.
Holt's " N. P. 1 vol.
4. Taunton's " C. P. vol. 8.
Marshall's " C. P. 2 vols.
Moore's " C. P. 3 vols.
5. Broderip & Bingham, C. P. 1 vol.
Barnewell & Alderson, K. B. 3.
Gow's Reports, N. P. 1. part 1.
6. Broderip & Bingham, C. P. 2.
Barnewell & Alderson, K. B. 4.
7. Broderip & Bingham, C. P. 3.
Barnewell & Alderson, K. B. 5.
8. Bingham's Reports, C. P. 1.
Barnewell & Cresswell, K. B. 1.
9. " " 2.
Bingham's Reports, C. P. 2.
10. Barnewell & Cresswell, K. B. 3 and 4.
11. " " K. B. v. 5, p. 1 and 2.
Bingham's Reps. C. P. v. 3, p. 1 and 2.
Carrington & Payne, N. P. 1.
12. Barn. & Cress. K. B. 5, p. 3 and 4.
Carrington & Payne, N. P. 2.
13. Bingham's Rep. C. P. 3, p. 3 and 4.
" " 4, p. 1 and 2.
Barnewell & Cresswell, K. B. 6.
14. " " 7.
Carrington & Payne, N. P. 3.
Starkie, N. P. 3 part 1.
15. Barnewell & Cresswell, K. B. 8.
Bingham, C. P. 4, p. 3 and 4.
" C. P. 5.
Dowling & Ryland, K. C. & N. P. 8 vols.
Moore, C. P. & E. C. vols. 4 and 5.
17. Moore, C. P. & E. C. vols. 6 to 10.
Moore & Payne, " " 1 and 2.
Manning & Ryland, C. B. vols. 1 and 2.
Barnewell & Cresswell, K. B. vol. 6.

Subscription Price of the first sixteen Volumes, $5 per Volume; of the seventeenth and subsequent Volumes, $4 per Volume.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Law of Attorneys, with Practical Directions, in Actions and Proceedings by and against them, and for the Taxation and Recovery of Costs; also the Law of Costs, at Common Law, in Equity, in Bankruptcy, and in Criminal Proceedings and Penal Actions. By John Merrifield, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-law.

The Acts relating to the Administration of Law in Courts of Equity, passed in the Session 11 Geo. IV. and 1 W. IV. with an Introduction and Notes. By W. T. Jemmett, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-law.

Supplement to the Practice of the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, containing all the Statutes, Rules of Court, and Reported Cases on Practical Subjects, since the Publication of the Ninth Edition; particularly the late Act for the more effectual administration of Justice in England and Wales, and also a practical Treatise on the Tender of Money, and the Law relating to Fees of Officers of the Courts; with an Appendix of practical Forms under the above Act, and a copious Index. By W. Tidd, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-law.

The Slavery of the British West India Colonies Delineated, as it exists both in Law and Practice, and compared with the Slavery of other Countries, ancient and modern. Vol. 2. being a Delineation of the State in point of Practice. By James Stephen, Esq.

Russell's Reports in Chancery. vol. 4.

Russell and Mylne's ditto. vol. 1. part 1.

Barnewell and Cresswell's Reports in K. B. vol. 10 part 1.

Bingham's ditto, in C. P. vol. 6. part 5.

A Collection of all the Statutes relating to indictable Offences in England, passed during the Reign of George 4. and 1 W. 4. and now in force, with Notes and recent Decisions thereon; to which are prefixed the Statutes relating to Treason. By J. B. Greenwood, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-law.

Hansard's Parliamentary Debates. vol. 23.

LIBRARY OF EDUCATION.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN,
The Library of Education, Vol. I. —Containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education.' By John Locke, and a 'Treatise of Education,' by John Milton, with an Appendix, containing Locke's Memoranda on Study. Edited by Wm. Russell, late editor of the Journal of Education.

Extract from the Preface.

'The present volume is intended to form one of a series of standard treatises on the subject of Education. The work now commenced will, it is hoped, form a useful source of information to parents and teachers; furnishing to the latter a sort of professional library, to which individuals may resort for assistance in the labor of instruction, and offering to the former an aid to the formation of just and extensive views of the whole scope of education, as well as a preparation for cooperating with instruction, in their exertions for the mental advancement of the young.' Jan. 1.

WHITMAN'S LETTERS.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, 'Two Letters to Rev. Moses Stuart,' on Religious Liberty, occasioned by his Letter to Rev. Wm. E. Channing. By Bernard Whitman. Jan. 1.

SIXTY MAPS of the various countries of the Globe; from the Epitome of Universal Geography. For sale at GRAY & BOWEN's, 141 Washington Street. Price 50 cents, bound. Jan. 1.

PARLEY'S ASIA.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, Peter Parley's Tales about Asia, with a Map and numerous Engravings. This is designed as a fourth volume in a series of Geographical and Historical Tales for Children. Tales of America, Europe, and Africa, have already been published. Tales of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, Tales of the Sea, and Tales of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, will complete the series. These three last are in a state of forwardness.

GRAY & BOWEN, have just published, TALES OF TRAVELS West of the Mississippi, with a Map and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. This volume is the first of a series which is intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—
Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.
Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.
Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.
Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.
Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.
Peter Parley's Geography for Children. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED,
by GRAY & BOWEN, an APPENDIX to the American Almanac, for the year 1831, being the latter part of the fiftyfifth, and the beginning of the fiftysixth year of the Independence of the United States.

Extract from the Preliminary Observations on the Astronomical Department of the American Almanac.

The Appendix is intended to answer all the essential purposes of a Nautical Almanac, and the insertion therein of the distances of the Moon from the Planets, and of the proportional logarithm of the difference between the distances, it is hoped, will be found an improvement on any Almanac hitherto published. Jan. 1.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK.
This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,
'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Eveniugs in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The North American Review, No. LXX. for January, 1831.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Statuary—Del' arte di vedere nelle belle arte del desegno, secondo i Principii di Sulzer e di Mengs.

II. Bank of the United States—Report of the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred so much of the Message of the President, as relates to the Bank of the United States.

III. Anatomy—Address to the Community on the Necessity of legalizing the Study of Anatomy. By order of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

IV. Clarence—A Tale of our own Times. By the Author of Redwood.

V. Hieroglyphics—Essay on the Hieroglphic System of M. Champollion, Jr, and on the advantages which it offers to Sacred Criticism. By J. G. H. Greppo, Vicar General of Belley. Translated from the French, by Isaac Stuart, with Notes and Illustrations.

VI. American System—1. Report from the Committee on Commerce to whom was referred so much of the President's Message, as relates to the Commerce of the United States with Foreign Nations, &c. 2. A Review of Mr Cambreleng's Report from the Committee of Commerce. By Mephistopheles. 3. Exposition and Protest reported by the Special Committee of the House of Representatives on the Tariff. 4. Mr McDuffie's Speech in the House of Representatives on the Bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures for the more faithful Collection of the Revenue.

VII. Grahame's History of the United States—The History of the Rise and Progress of the United States of N. America till the British Revolution in 1688. By James Grahame, Esq.

VIII. Memoirs of Madame De Genlis—Memoires Inedits de Madame la Comtesse de Genlis sur le dixhuitieme siecle et a Revolution Francoise, depuis 1756, jusqu' a nos jours.

IX. Phillips' Manual of Political Economy, with particular reference to the Institutions, Resources and Condition of the United States. By Willard Phillips.

X. History of the Jews—History of the Jews from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Rev. H. H. Milman. Jan. 22.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLII. for December, 1830.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Classes of American Society.—1. A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, first delivered Oct. 6, before the Charlestown Lyceum, and published at their request. By Edw. Everett. 2. Mr Tuckerman's Second Semi-annual Report of the Fourth Year of his Services as a Minister at Large in Boston.

II. The Jews.—The History of the Jews, from the Earliest Period to the Present time. By Rev. H. H. Milman.

III. Wheaton's Travels.—A Journal of a Residence during several months in London; including Excursions through various Parts of England; and a short Tour in France and Scotland, in the Years 1823 and 1824. By Nathaniel S. Wheaton, A. M.

IV. English Unitarian Methodists. An Account of the Rise and Progress of the Unitarian Doctrine, in the Societies at Rochdale, Newchurch in Rosendale, and other Places, formerly in Connexion with the late Rev. Joseph Cooke. In Ten Letters to a Friend. By John Ashworth.

V. Life of Mohammed.—The Life of Mohammed; Founder of the Religion of Islam, and of the Empire of the Saracens. By the Rev. George Bush, A. M

VI. Anderson's Tour in Greece.—Observations upon the Peloponnesus and Greek Islands, made in 1829. By Rufus Anderson, one of the Secretaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Jan. 22.

GRAY AND BOWEN,
have just received, No. 1, of SURGICAL ANATOMY OF THE ARTERIES, with plates and illustrations. By Nathan R. Smith, M. D. Professor of Surgery in the University of Maryland. January 1.

MALTE-BRUN SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY.—This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK, The Malte-Brun School Geography, illustrated by numerous original engravings, and an Atlas of 19 Maps, Charts, and Tables. By S. Griswold Goodrich. Jan. 1.

GRAY AND BOWEN,
No. 141, Washington Street, Boston, have recently published the following valuable works.

I. THE DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION. Published under the Direction of the President of the United States, from the Original Manuscripts in the Department of State, conformably to a resolution of Congress, of March 27, 1818. Edited by JARED SPARKS.

This important Correspondence, now for the first time published, will form eleven volumes. Eight are already published and the remainder will appear very shortly.

II. JEFFERSON'S WORKS, In four Volumes. Accompanied with a Portrait on steel, and a fac-simile of the original draft of the Declaration of Independence. Second Edition.

III. THE NEW TESTAMENT, conformed to Griesbach's Text. 1 Vol. 12mo.

THE TOKEN, a Christmas and New Year's Present, for 1831. Edited by S. G. Goodrich.

'Then take my flower, and let its leaves
Beside thy heart be cherished near,
While that confiding heart receives
The thought it whispers to thine ear.'

The engravings for the Token of this year are executed by Cheney, Ellis, Gallaudet, and others; among the contributors are Dewey, Greenwood, Miss Sedgwick, Mrs Sigourney, Hall, Peabody, Wetmore, author of a Year in Spain, author of Tales of the Northwest, Neal, Thatcher, Mrs Hale, and others of the first reputation.

The work is larger than heretofore, and is done up in splendid embossed morocco. The literary department is considered decidedly superior to the former years, and in all respects it has received the greatest care and attention. Oct 23.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVI.

CONTENTS.

Art. 1. Mill's Phenomena of Mind. 2. Tytler's and Scott's Histories of Scotland. 3. Memoirs, Correspondence, and Papers of Thomas Jefferson. 4. Niebuhr's Geography of Herodotus. 5. Galt's Southennan. 6. Floods in Morayshire. 7. Troades of Euripides. 8. The Belgian Insurrection, and De Potter's Trial. 9. Alexander's Travels. 10. London Bridge. 11. Hydrophobia. 12. Mr Brougham and Local Judicatories. 13. Novels and Travels in Turkey. 14. The Three Days of Paris. 15. Brasse's Sophocles. 16. Geometry without Axioms. 17. Revolution of 1830. List of Books, Index, &c. Jan. 22.

AMERICAN ALMANAC,
Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

WORKING MEN'S PARTY.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, delivered before the Charlestown Lyceum, October 6, 1830. By Edward Everett.

EVENTS IN PARIS,
during the 26, 27, 28, and 29th of July, 1830. By several eye witnesses. Translated from the fourth Paris edition. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

THE JURISPRUDENT
IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.
BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1831. NO. XXIX.

MERCANTILE LAW.

CONTRACT OF SALE.

Continued.

These are propositions of great practical importance, and it may be useful, therefore to illustrate them by a few instances. An action was brought* for the price of certain chairs, treating them as goods sold and delivered. The plaintiff had been in the habit of supplying chairs to the defendant, and the usual mode of delivery was this: They were sent to a wharf, from whence they were forwarded by water. Sometimes they were booked, at other times not; all, however, except the present consignment, had arrived safe. The goods in question, which never came to hand, had been taken to the wharf—there laid down in the presence of one not known to be a servant of the wharfinger—no entry made, and no receipt taken. There was consequently a verdict for the defendant, Lord Ellenborough saying: 'A delivery of goods to a carrier or wharfinger with due care and diligence is sufficient to charge the purchaser. But he has a right to require that in making this delivery due care and diligence shall be exercised by the seller. Before the defendant can be charged in the present instance, he must be put into a situation to resort to the wharfinger for his indemnity. The plaintiff was bound to procure them to be booked, or to deliver them to the wharfinger himself, or to some person who can be proved to be his agent for the purpose of receiving them.'† In one case,‡ the doctrine was carried so far, that a vendor, who had omitted to pay the extra premium required by the carrier for insuring parcels beyond the value of 5l. was held to have precluded himself by this neglect from recovering the price of the goods, which had been lost on the passage. 'He had,' said Lord Ellenborough, 'an implied authority, and it was his duty to do whatever was necessary to secure the responsibility of the carriers for the safe delivery of the goods, and to put them into such a course of conveyance as that in case of a loss the defendant might have his indemnity against the carriers.' But however unquestionably sound the principle of this decision, a month had not elapsed before Lord Ellenborough himself doubted whether it had not been pushed to an unwarrantable extent in the case just cited, and from the result of this latter decision§ with the observations which accompanied it, it may be safer to lay down the rule thus: that the vendor is bound to insure, when either he has instructions to that effect from the vendee, or such has been the course adopted in former dealings between them.‖ Where this is not the case, it is undoubtedly the duty of the seller to advise the buyer of the consignment, in order that he may either insure or take such other steps as may be necessary for indemnifying himself against the consequences of loss. Accordingly such is universally the practice —where the carriage is inland, notice being ordinarily given by the post; and when by ship, the bill of lading and invoice being transmitted to the consignee on the earliest opportunity.

But we have said that the goods are not at the risk of the buyer until they are in the due and regular course of conveyance, and of this the following is an instance:* A quantity of wine, represented as the finest Pouillac claret, was purchased to be transmitted from Lubec to London. The vendors, however, sent it overland from Lubec to Hamburgh, from whence it was shipped for England. On arrival it was found not to answer the representation of its quality, and the purchasers thereupon brought an action against the seller for a breach of his contract. It was proved on the one side, that the wine was of good quality when it left Lubec, and on the other that on its arrival in London it was altogether unfit for sale or consumption, but where or how the deterioration took place, did not appear. On this state of facts Lord Tenterden directed a verdict for the plaintiff, saying, 'If any accident happened to the wine after it was shipped at Hamburgh, the defendant must have a verdict, for he is not liable for a loss subsequent to the time of shipment. The defendant has proved in what state the wine was when it left Lubec, but he does not show what became of it after it left Lubec for Hamburgh, nor of what quality it was when put on board at Hamburgh. The plaintiffs expected, as was natural, that it would be shipped direct from Lubec, and the carriage overland therefore from thence to Hamburgh was at the risk of the defendant. There was no delivery to the purchaser until the wine was put on board.'

Hitherto we have supposed an actual removal of the commodities from the possession of the seller. It may, however, and often does happen, that the goods are too bulky for immediate transfer, or that the buyer may wish, for his own convenience, that they should remain where they are, in the keeping of the vendor. Accordingly the law, departing from its ancient simplicity, has in later times recognised, under the name of emblematic or constructive transfer, certain acts as evidence from which delivery may be presumed: 'Where,' says Lord Kenyon, 'goods are ponderous and incapable of being handed over from one to another, there need not be an actual delivery; but it may be done by that which is tantamount, such as the delivery of the key of a warehouse in which the goods are lodged, or by delivery of other indicia of property.'† In one respect, this doctrine of constructive delivery was carried by Lord Ellenborough to an extent, from which the courts at present seem anxious to escape. That eminent judge decided, that the charging of warehouse rent by the seller to the buyer, for goods remaining in his warehouse with the permission, or at the request of the latter, amounted to a complete and executed delivery. 'The acceptance of warehouse rent,' he said, 'is a complete transfer of the goods to the purchaser. If I pay for a part of a warehouse, so much of it is mine; the goods are transferred to the person who pays the rent, as much as if they were removed to his own warehouse, and there deposited under lock and key.'* In the case to which these observations were applied, the charge of warehouse rent had been made, not in pursuance of any agreement to that effect with the buyer, but simply in consequence of his delay to fetch away the goods at the time appointed; and it certainly seems a somewhat forced construction of such an act, to presume that the seller, in making the charge, intended to waive the privilege, resulting from his possession, of retaining the goods in case of non-payment or insolvency. Accordingly, in the later decisions, that circumstance alone has not been considered equivalent to, or even evidence of delivery.† If, indeed, the goods remain in the warehouse by the express request of the purchaser and upon an agreement by him for the payment of rent, there will be great force in the reasoning of Lord Ellenborough. In that case, in all but the manual formality of tradition, the transfer will be complete. The goods which were in the warehouse of the seller, are now in the warehouse of the buyer; and to the objection, that it would be hard by presumption only to deprive the seller of his lien, it may be answered, that the consequences are before him when he assents to the agreement, and takes upon himself for hire to become the warehouseman of the purchaser.‡ Reasonable, however, as the doctrine to this extent undoubtedly is, and although not unsupported by other authority,§ it has nevertheless been determined, in a recent case,‖ where there was an express stipulation for the payment of warehouse rent, that the vendor's right to retain was not forfeited by that agreement. 'There is no difference,' Mr Justice Bayley observed, 'in principle, whether the seller charges the buyer with a rent or not. The goods are still in his possession.' And upon the whole, therefore, it may be concluded that the charge, or even payment of warehouse rent is by no means a criterion of delivery on which much reliance can be placed.

Another circumstance indicative of a deliberate transfer of possession, and therefore received as strong evidence of delivery, is the marking of the goods after the sale by the buyer in the presence

*Buckman v. Levi, 3 Campb. 414.

† Compare with this case Cooke v. Ludlow, 2 N. R 119.

‡ Clarke v. Hutchins, 14 East, 475.

§ Cothay v. Tute, 3 Campb. 129.

‖ The proof of which lies upon the vendee.

*Ulock v. Reddelen, Dan. and Lloyd's Mer. Cases, 6.

† In Chaplin v. Rogers, 1 East, 194. See also 1 Taunt. 460.

*Hurry v. Mangles, 1 Campb. 452. And his lordship expressed the same opinion in the subsequent case of Harman v. Anderson, 2 Campb. 243.

† Bloxam v. Sanders, 4 B. & C. 941. Winks v. Hassall, 9 B. & C. 372. Dan. & Lloyd, 312.

‡ The case of Elmore v. Stone, 1 Taunt. 460. was decided on this principle. The defendant had bought two horses, at the same time requesting the plaintiff, as he had neither stable nor servant of his own, to keep them at livery for him. The plaintiff did so, and afterwards sued him for the price, treating the horses as delivered. A question arose upon the statute of frauds, which resolved itself into this; whether the circumstances amounted to a delivery; and the court held that they did, Mansfield, Ch. J. observing that the plaintiff by assenting to the buyer's request had waived his lien, and that the latter would have been entitled (on tendering the rent and keep) to take away the horses without payment of the price.

§ Elmore v. Stone, see last note.

‖ New v. Swain, Dan. & Lloyd, 193.

and with the permission of the seller. Thus, where the purchaser went to the vendor's cellar, and selected several pipes of wine at a certain price, whereupon the spills or pegs by which the wine is tasted were cut off, the buyer's initials marked in his presence on the casks, and the gauge numbers taken by him, these acts were considered as amounting to a delivery.*

A mere assumption of ownership or control by the purchaser is not of itself sufficient evidence of a delivery. Two cases, it is true, are to be found, which seem to warrant a contrary opinion :† but as the decision in each of these is attributable in part to an unwillingness of the court to disturb the finding of a jury, and as the result has been not only questioned, but is in fact repugnant as well to principle as to subsequent authorities,‡ little hazard will be incurred in altogether disregarding them. Indeed, the general doctrine of constructive delivery is at present held in little favor; and it must be carefully borne in mind, that as it is avowedly founded on presumption, any circumstance inconsistent with that presumption, will prevent the consequence from attaching. Thus where the seller expressly declares,§ or it may be reasonably inferred from the terms of the bargain,‖ or the previous course of dealing,¶ that he does not intend to part with the goods without payment, the strongest acts unaccompanied by actual change of possession will not amount to a delivery. Again, the presumption is negatived where there has been no specific appropriation, such as separating the quantity sold from a larger mass, or where something remains to be done, such as counting, weighing, &c, either for putting the goods into a deliverable state, or for ascertaining the price, without which the seller in the one case could not, and in the other case cannot be supposed to have intended to divest himself of the actual possession by delivery.*

We now come, in the second place, to the consideration of those cases in which the goods are not, at the time of sale, in the personal custody of the seller. These, where an actual tradition takes place, with the concurrence of the seller, have of course little to distinguish them from the like cases, where the goods are in his own possession; but where there is no such removal, other acts are admitted as evidence of a constructive transfer of possession. Thus, where the goods sold are in the hands of a warehouseman or wharfinger, a transfer in his book to the name of the buyer, by order of the seller, amounts to a complete and irrevocable delivery, making the middle-man the custodier or warehouseman of the buyer.† Lord Ellenborough, indeed, went further; for he decided that the same effect was to be given to the mere order of the seller, even though the transfer was not made ;‡ but although this may well operate as a delivery for the purpose of changing the property, and taking the possession out of the seller; it may not unreasonably be doubted whether, without some indication of assent on the part of the middle-man, the goods can be supposed to have come into the possession of the buyer, so as to put an end to the right of stoppage in transitu,§ or to constitute an acceptance, where necessary, under the statute of frauds.‖ The change of mark from that of the seller to that of the buyer, made by the direction of both parties on goods in the possession of a warehouseman, is also equivalent to delivery. But, as in the former instances of constructive delivery, so these cases also are to be taken with the qualification, that all has been done which must necessarily precede actual delivery. The first case which determined this important limitation was an action of trover, brought by the assignees of a bankrupt, for a quantity of starch sold to the bankrupt. A note had been given by the seller to the buyer, and by him taken to the warehousekeeper, in whose custody the starch was lying, directing him to weigh and deliver it to the buyer. A part was accordingly weighed and delivered, and the rest remained with the warehousekeeper unweighed, when, the buyer becoming bankrupt, the seller countermanded the order for delivery. For this residue the action was brought; but the court was of opinion, that it could not be maintained, Lord Ellenborough saying, 'the weight must be ascertained, in order that the price may be known and paid, and unless the weighing precede the delivery, it can never, for these purposes, effectually take place at all. If anything remain to be done on the part of the seller, as between him and the buyer before the commodity purchased is to be delivered, a complete present right of property has not attached in the buyer.'¶ The rule thus laid down has been since followed up in other instances, and may now, therefore, be regarded as an established principle in the doctrine of constructive delivery. A distinction, however, was once taken where the goods sold, though subsisting in bulk, and not specifically appropriated, had been resold to another, and an order at the same time given, directing the original vendors to hold the goods to the account of the latter, which order was assented to by them; and it was thought that the non-separation of the quantity sold from the bulk was no objection to an action of trover by the second purchaser, between whom and his vendor all had passed which was necessary for perfecting the transfer.* But this decision seems contrary to the general rule, that the buyer can have no property (which the action of trover supposes) in an undivided portion of a whole; and as it has been since doubted, if not virtually overruled,† its authority may be regarded as at least questionable. Still, where the objection is, not that the commodity is part of a larger bulk, and unappropriated, but merely that some act has not been done, necessary for ascertaining the price, that objection will not be allowed to countervail an express acknowledgment by the person in whose custody the goods are, that he holds them on account of the second purchaser, and he will be, in technical phrase, estopped from setting it up in answer to a demand of possession by such purchaser.‡

To be continued next week.

*Anderson v. Scott, 1 Campb. 235. n. It was an action by the buyer for non-delivery. The question was, whether there had been an acceptance by the buyer, to satisfy the statute of frauds. Lord Ellenborough was of opinion that there had been, on the ground that there was a complete constructive delivery assented to by him. It was then retorted that if so the contract was satisfied, and therefore the action must fail. But the learned judge wriggled out of the dilemma, by saying that although there was an incipient delivery so as to satisfy the statute, yet it was not complete, so as to satisfy the contract. It seems, however, notwithstanding this ingenious distinction, that the action should have been in trover. See further as to the marking of goods, Stoveld v. Hughes, 14 East, 308.

†Chaplin v. Rogers, 1 East, 192. and Blenkinsop v. Clayton, 1 Moore, 328. The first was an action for the price of a hay-stack sold and delivered. The bulk precluded an actual delivery; but the defendant re-sold it to a third person, who without the consent of the original vendor took away a part. The jury found that there was a delivery to and acceptance by the first vendee, which verdict the court refused to disturb. In the other case, the defendant had bought a horse of the plaintiff's servant, whom he desired to deliver it at his stables. In the meantime the defendant showed it for sale to another, who declined to purchase. The jury found that this was a delivery to the defendant, and the court held that they were warranted in so finding.

‡Tempest v. Fitzgerald, 3 B. & A. 680. and Carter v. Toussaint, 5 B. & A. 855. These were actions for the price of a horse. In both, the horse remained by the permission of the buyer in the vendor's stable; and in both, directions were given by the buyer as to the treatment and disposal of the horse. But the court did not consider these circumstances sufficient to warrant the inference that the seller intended to part with the possession without payment; and unless he did so intend, there was of course no delivery.

§ Goodall v. Skelton, 2 H. Bl. 316. The goods were removed by the vendor to a hovel, from whence they were to be fetched away by the buyer.

Tempest v. Fitzgerald, supra.

¶ Holderness v. Shackels, 8 B. & C. 612. Dan. & L oyd, 203.

* White v. Wilkes, 5 Taunt. 176. Simmons v. Swift, 5 B. & C. 857. and see post.

‡ Searle v. Reeves, 1 Esp. N. P. C. 598. Harman v. Anderson, 2 Campb. 243. Graves v. Hepke, 2 B. & A. 131. Bloxam v. Morley, 4 B. & C. 952.

‡ Harman v. Anderson, ubi supra.

§ We shall have occasion to refer to this subject hereafter. In one case Mr Justice Parke seems to have considered a delivery order not acted upon as altogether inoperative. Winks v. Hassell, 9 B. & C. 372.

‖ Bentall v. Burn, 3 B. & C. 423.

¶ Hanson v. Meyer, 6 East, 614.

 Wallace v. Breeds, 13 East. Withers v. Lyss, 4 Campb. 237. Shepley v. Davis, 5 Taunt. 619. Busk v. Davis, 2 M. & S. 397. Simmons v. Swift, 5 B. & C. 857.

*Whitehouse v. Frost, 12 East, 614.

†Austen v. Craven, 4 Taunt. 644. That was trover for certain hogsheads of sugar, of which there had been a re-sale assented to by the original vendors, in whose custody they remained. The sugar was in mass, the quantity sold not having been weighed off. And the court was decidedly of opinion that the action could not be maintained, both on the ground that no property passed, and that there was nothing to raise the inference that it was the intention of the vendors to waive their lien. See also Busk v. Davis, 2 M. & S. 397, where Le Blanc, J. endeavored to distinguish and reconcile the case of Whitehouse v. Frost, but, as it seems, with little success.

Hawes v. Watson, 2 B. & C. 543. That case was as follows; A sells tallow to B, who obtains a delivery order on the wharfinger. B sells to C; and, in order to satisfy him, procures an acknowledgment from the wharfinger that he holds for C. B stops payment, whereupon A countermands the delivery, and C brings trover against the wharfinger. The tallow had been sold at so much per cask, and there had been no weighing so as to ascertain the price; but the court held, that after their acknowledgment, the wharfingers were precluded from saying that they did not hold the tallow as warehousemen of C. It is to be observed that, in this case, the vendors had sold all their tallow lying at the wharf. See also Stonard v. Dunkin, 2 Campb. 244.

LORD JEFFERIES.

Continued from page 219.

During his 'western campaign,' Jefferies discovered a gross abuse which had prevailed for some time at Bristol, but to which he put a very speedy termination. The affair is thus related by Roger North :—'There is one branch of that chief's expedition in the west, which is his visitation of the city of Bristol, that hath some singularities, of a nature so strange, that I think them worth my time to relate. There had been an usage among the aldermen and justices of the city (where all persons, even common shopkeepers, more or less, trade to the American plantations), to carry over criminals, who were pardoned with condition of transportation, and to sell them for money. This was found to be a good trade; but not being content to take such felons as were convict at their assizes and sessions, which produced but a few, they found out a shorter way, which yielded a greater plenty of the commodity. And that was this: the mayor and justice, or some of them, usually met at their tolsey (a court-house by their exchequer) about noon, which was the meeting of the merchants, as at the exchange at London; and there they sat and did justice-business, that was brought before them. When small rogues and pilferers were taken and brought there, and, upon examination, put under the terror of being hanged, in order to which, mittimuses were making, some of the diligent officers attending, instructed them to pray transportation, as the only way to save them; and for the most part they did so. Then, no more was done; but the next alderman in course took one and another, as their turns came; sometimes quarrelling whose the last was, and sent them over and sold them. This trade had been driven for many years, and no notice taken of it. Some of the wealthier aldermen, although they sat in the court and connived, as Sir Robert Cann, for instance, ever had a man; but yet they were all involved in the guilt when the charge came over them. It appears not how this outrageous practice came to the knowledge of the lord chief justice; but when he had hold of the end he made thorough-stitch work with them; for he delighted in such fair opportunities to rant. He came to the city, and told some that he had brought a broom to sweep them. The city of Bristol is a proud body, and their head, the mayor, in the assize commission, is put before the judge of assize; though, perhaps, it was not so in this extraordinary commission of oyer and terminer. But for certain, when his lordship came upon the bench and examined this matter, he found all the aldermen and justices concerned in this kidnapping trade, more or less, and the mayor himself as bad as any. He therefore turns to the mayor, accoutred with his scarlet and furs, and gave him all the ill names that scolding eloquence could supply; and so, with rating and staring, as his way was, never left till he made him quit the bench, and go down to the criminal's post at the bar; and there he pleaded for himself, as a common rogue or thief must have done: and when the mayor hesitated a little, or slackened his pace, he bawled at him, and stamping, called for his guards; for he was general by commission. Thus the citizens saw their scarlet chief magistrate at the bar, to their infinite terror and amazement. He then took security of them to answer informations, and so left them to ponder their cases among themselves. At London, Sir Robert Cann applied, by friends, to appease him, and to get from under the prosecution, and at last he granted it, saying, "Go thy way; sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee." The prosecutions depended till the revolution, which made an amnesty; and the fright only, which was no small one, was all the punishment those juridical kidnappers underwent. And the gains, acquired by so wicked a trade, rested peaceably in their pockets.'*

Stained with the blood of the aged, the weak, and the defenceless, Jefferies returned to the capital to claim, from the hands of the master he had so faithfully and acceptably served, the reward due to his singular merits. That reward was immediately conferred upon him, and on the 28th of September he received the great seal and was appointed lord high chancellor.

Having thus gained the summit of his ambition, Jefferies appears to have in some degree relaxed his activity in carrying into effect the wishes of the court. It is possible, too, that the heart, which no sentiment of humanity could affect, was touched by some religious scruples. He had no bias whatever towards catholicism; and though, for his own advancement, he had ever been ready to forward the designs of the court, he felt no inclination to offend his conscience without some corresponding advantage. Nor is it improbable that he foresaw the dangers to which the king was exposing herself by thus attacking the dearest prejudices of his subject. In consequence, probably, of some advice to this effect tendered to the king, the favor of Jefferies began to decline at court. This is asserted by Burnet, and we have some confirmatory evidence to the same effect in the lately published Ellis Correspondence. 'I am very confident,' says the letter-writer, 'that matters are brewing to break the neck of our wide-mouthed, high-paced ——— &c, and as conjurors throw a dog or a cat to allay the devil with, so he may be thrown as a choosing morsel to the next parliament. Herbert has represented, since his return from the western circuit, the disservice done by the management of the former circuit, and the rapine; and I am creditably told it works to admiration; and his dear friend, the thin great man at Whitehall, quits him.'* To regain his favor at court, Jefferies did not hesitate to abandon his church of England friends, and to suggest to the king the establishment of the celebrated ecclesiastical commission. It was obvious to James, that some measures had become necessary in order to depress the church of England party, who had manifested the strongest opposition to the designs contemplated by the court in favor of the catholics. By the advice of Jefferies, therefore, he resolved to re-establish the court of high commission, though, as the existence of that tribunal had been denounced by statute, it was necessary to bestow a different title upon the new court. A commission was therefore issued, appointing the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor Jefferies, Lord Rochester, Lord Sunderland, the Bishops of Durham and Rochester, and the lord chief justice to be commissioners, for reforming all abuses of which the ecclesiastical law had cognizance. The proceedings under this commission against the Bishop of London, the University of Cambridge, and Magdalen College, Oxford, were in strict conformity with the character and object of the tribunal. The vice-president and fellows of Magdalen College were cited to appear before the commissioners at Whitehall, and having appeared, they tendered an answer to the charge of disobeying the king's commands. This answer was signed by only five of the delegates, Dr Fairfax, the sixth, not consenting to it. He desired to state to the commissioners his reasons for this refusal, upon which Jefferies, imagining that he was about to tender his submission, exclaimed, 'Ay, this looks like a man of sense, and a good subject; let us hear what he will say.' Fairfax then argued that the matter was cognizable in Westminster Hall, and not before the commissioners. Jefferies replied that he was a doctor of divinity, and not of law. The doctor then demanded by what commission and authority they sat? The boldness of this question threw the chancellor into a most violent paroxysm of passion. 'Pray what commission have you,' said he, 'to be so impudent in court? This man ought to be kept in a dark room.—Why do you suffer him without a guardian? Pray let the officers seize him.'*

The conspicuous part which Jefferies acted on this commission rendered him extremely odious to the nation at large; and his cruelties in the west were almost forgotten in his severities towards the suffering members of the church of England. When, in consequence of the increase of the popular discontents, and of the rumors from Holland of the preparations on foot for the expedition to England, the king was advised to call a parliament in order to appease the people, Jefferies, well aware that on the first meeting of the commons he should probably be assailed as the great grievance of the nation, vehemently opposed, at the council-table, the proposition for calling a parliament.† That proposition, indeed, had been made too late; and Jefferies was saved from the vengeance of the people's representatives only that he might experience the fiercer passions of the people themselves.

The period now approached when Jefferies was to be dragged from the elevated station he had so long disgraced by his violence, his cruelty, and his want of principle. On the approach of the Prince of Orange, and the flight of the king from London, the people, terrified by the report of a popish massacre, rose tumultuously; and Jefferies, justly dreading their vengeance, attempted to make his escape. The following is a circumstantial narrative of this attempt:—'The chancellor, now without protection, having rendered himself obnoxious to most people, and being perfectly hated by the nation, on Monday, between three and four in the morning withdrew, and having in disguise got down safe to Wapping, put himself on board a collier, which was pretended to be bound for Newcastle, but indeed was designed for Hamburg; but some persons having notice thereof, by means of the mate, they went to a justice for a warrant to apprehend him; but he thought fit to put them off, whereupon they applied themselves forthwith to the lords of the council, who granted them a warrant, and they went immediately to search the ship. But he, on Tuesday night, not thinking himself safe on board the collier in which he was to pass, lay in another ship hard by, so that those who came that day to search for him missed of him on board, but had information given them that he was hard by at a little peddling alehouse, where accordingly they found him, being the sign of the Red Cow, in Anchor and Hope Alley, near King Edward's Stairs, from whence they immediately hurried him in a coach, guarded with several blunder-busses, to the lord mayor's; where the crowd was so great, and the rabble so numerous, all crying out together Vengeance! Justice! Justice! that the lord mayor was forced to come out into his balcony, with his hat in his hand, and to desire the people to go away and keep peace, and did promise them that he had already sent to the lords of the council about the matter, and that they should have justice done them, and that in the meantime their prisoner should be safely guarded. Whereupon the people withdrew, and soon after my lord, under a strong guard, was sent to the lords of the council, who committed him to the Tower, where he continued to the 18th of April, 1689, when he was freed by death from his earthly confinement. He had for some years before been subject to terrible fits of the

* Life of Lord Guilford, vol. ii. p. 24.

* Vol. i. p. 104. and see ib. p. 222.

* Rennett, vol. iii. p. 504.
† Ellis Cor. vol. ii. p. 144.

stone, which in all probability now accelerated his death, though others gave out he abandoned himself to excessive drinking, thinking to support his sinking spirits by it, and that that helped forward to put a period to his life. He was buried privately in the Tower the Sunday night following by an order his relations got from King William.'*

Burnet adds to his account of the capture of Jefferies, that 'the lord mayor was so struck with the terror of the rude populace, and with the disgrace of a man who had made all people tremble before him, that he fell into fits, of which he died soon after.'

The deep and indignant feelings which cruelty and oppression excite, render it difficult to form a cool and impartial opinion of the character of Jefferies. In all the essential qualities of mind which a judge ought to possess, he seems to have been totally deficient. Unprincipled, cruel, irascible, and impatient, he stained the pure fountains of justice with blood and with corruption. No sentiment of integrity, no feeling of mercy, ever found a place in his bosom. To these qualities he added a brutal levity of conduct, strangely unbecoming the judicial character. His acquirements as a lawyer were of a mean order; and it is not dealing too harshly with him to adopt the censure of Mr Justice Foster, and to pronounce him 'the very worst judge that ever disgraced Westminster-hall.'

The ease with which those who are conversant with courts of justice learn to disregard the sufferings of others, and the faculty, which too often follows of turning those sufferings into ridicule, are but modifications of those brutal qualities which in Jefferies appeared in their full perfection. It may perhaps tend, in some degree, to prevent the growth of those callous and inhuman feelings to observe them in the odiousness of their complete development, and to remark the execration and abhorrence which they never fail to excite in every heart of common sensibility. It is a salutary lesson to see the memory of Jefferies descending to posterity darkened with the indignant reproaches of each succeeding age, and weighed down by an ever increasing weight of infamy. To affix to his polluted name an additional stigma, to brand his dishonored memory with a fresh mark of reprobation, is an office grateful to humanity.

To be concluded.

* Lives of the Chancellors, vol. i. p.185.

ENGLISH CASES.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS—OCT.

Williams and another vs. C. Woodward, Gent.

This was an action of assumpsit brought by the plaintiffs to recover a sum of 154*l.* which they alleged had been paid by them in mistake. The defendant pleaded the general issue.

From the statement of Mr Sergeant Wilde, Counsel for the plaintiffs, it appeared that the plaintiffs are bankers, and the defendant was, at the time of this transaction, an attorney in the City, and kept an account at their house, besides drawing cheques upon them in his character of Secretary to the Independent Gas Light Company. On the 3d of Nov. last, a person named Jones, who was a brother-in-law of the defendant, presented at the plaintiff's counter a cheque, the body of which was in his own handwriting, but the signature, to all appearance, that of the defendant, and it was paid without hesitation. On the Monday following, the defendant, when the cheque was shown him, pronounced it to be a forgery, and the plaintiffs, not having reason to doubt his honor, were content to put up with the loss. In the meantime Jones had absconded, but being discovered at Hull, was apprehended, brought to London, and carried before the Lord Mayor, when Mr Woodward attended as a witness, but did not then seem so positive as formerly that the signature was not his, but stated most distinctly that the instrument was not his, and that it had been fraudulently filled upon a signature in blank, which he had made for some other purpose. He afterwards qualified that assertion, and said that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, he had not given the prisoner any authority to fill it up. As such a filling up, if unauthorised, was as much a forgery in law as the counterfeiting the name of an individual, the prisoner was committed for trial. Mr Woodward was one of the witnesses who went before the Grand Jury. What he then stated it was impossible to say; but the result was, that the bill was thrown out. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs now contended that the defendant was bound to reimburse them the money they had paid him. The case that most resembled this was that of Young v. Grote, in which the Court held a man liable for the amount of a cheque that he had signed in blank, and which was afterwards fraudulently filled up, in consequence of the negligence of the person to whom he had entrusted it.

Witnesses were called in support of this statement, and a letter was put in and read, which the defendant had addressed to a person connected with the Independent Gas Light Company, announcing the fraud committed by Jones, and warning his correspondent against the possibility of Jones' attempting by means of his (the defendant's) signature, or in any other way, to dispose of shares in the Company.

Mr Sergeant Russell (with whom was Mr Sergeant Jones) contended that the plaintiffs had failed in establishing a right to recover this money; but said, that although the Jury might save him from the pecuniary loss which it was the object of this action to fix upon him, it was to be feared that an unfavorable and unjust impression might attach to his character through this proceeding. This last consideration was one of infinitely greater consequence to the defendant than the other. He was still a young man, and had quitted that branch of the profession in which he had began life to pursue his studies at College. What had been his conduct throughout this affair? He was a man who had been defrauded by one in his confidence, but he took the earliest and most effectual means of protecting his friends and connexions from the consequences of that person's dishonesty. The fact of the defendant having at first denied his signature, and then admitted it, denying the instrument to which it was attached, was made to appear a glaring inconsistency; but there was in reality, nothing surprising in it. Every one must know that, when a man sees an instrument which he knows not to have been his, he is strongly, hastily, perhaps rashly, but honestly, inclined to deny the whole instrument, signature and all, and it may be only upon a very deliberate consideration that he some time subsequently discovers the signature to be genuine, though it had been fraudulently employed. The use which the plaintiff's sought to make of the dismissal of the bill of the Grand Jury was a most strange one. Because the Grand Jury had thought the forgery not proved, the plaintiffs would have the Jury assume that the whole instrument was the genuine instrument of the defendant, and that he must bear the loss of his own negligence; but he felt assured they would think that an assumption too strong for them to make on such weak grounds, and would, therefore, feel it to be their duty, under such circumstances, to return a verdict for the defendant.

His Lordship, after summing up the case, told the Jury that, unless the plaintiffs had, subsequently to their re-crediting the defendant's account, discovered something to show them that they had been in error, they could not recover in the present action. If the Jury should be of opinion that the re-credit had been given in mistake, they must find for the plaintiffs; but if otherwise, for the defendant.

The Jury found for the plaintiffs; but said they wished it to be understood that they did not cast the least imputation on the character or conduct of the defendant.

POLICE.—MARYLEBONE.

Yesterday John Williams, a young man respectably dressed, and apparently about 24, was charged before Mr Griffith with obtaining money under false pretences.

Mrs Mary Anne Trody, a lady residing at 13, Edward street, Portman-square, stated that on Monday last the prisoner came to her house, and represented himself as the son of a Welch Clergyman. He said he was at present in great distress, that he had been brought up to no profession, although he was educated at one of the Universities; but that he had obtained an engagement in a school, through a Mr Johnson, residing in Warwick-court, Holborn; that he was not to go into the situation for three months, and requested Mrs Trody to give him a small sum to relieve his present necessities. The complainant offered him a shilling, which he refused at once as inadequate to his wants; and fixing the minimum of her bounty at three shillings, refused to leave the house until the same was furnished him. Mrs Trody unwilling to have any disturbance, was alarmed into compliance, and he received the money, with which he departed. Mrs Trody hoped she had got rid of the Clergyman's son, but the prisoner's success was too brilliant not to induce him to pay her a second visit, and accordingly he made his appearance yesterday morning again, when, as a dernier resort, the lady called in a police constable, and gave him in charge.

Mr Griffith (to the prisoner)—Why, it appears, Sir, that you are a common beggar.

'A common beggar! a common beggar!' exclaimed the prisoner, elevating his voice to an octave, 'I am not a common beggar, Mr Griffith, I borrowed three shillings of that person, and will pay her when 'tis in my power; and surely you do not call that being a common beggar?'

'I think,' said Mr Griffith, 'I have seen your face before somewhere.'

'Oh, yes, yes,' replied Williams, with the most perfect nonchalance. 'Pray, Mr Griffith, have you no recollection of you and I having taken a glass of wine together in your little parlor?'

Mr Griffith—I do now recollect your having called upon me three or four times with a tale of distress, and that I relieved you.

The prisoner—Yes, so you did, and you spoke to me as a father and a countryman; but from your tone today, you don't seem disposed to behave like either; you lent me some money too, which I'll pay you.

'Was your father a Clergyman?'—'My father is now dead, and it matters not what he was.'

'You represent yourself as having been educated at one of the universities—at which of them?'

'Now, I'll tell you what, Mr Griffith; old men are very curious, but I am determined not to gratify your curiosity in that respect. This much I'll tell you,' he added, elevating his voice and striking the bar violently with his clenched fist, 'I received a better education than ever you did.'

'Don't speak so loud, Sir.'

'Oh!' rejoined Williams ironically, 'I was given to understand that you were a little deaf, Mr Griffith, and spoke loud entirely for your sake.

'You are a very insolent rascal,' replied the Magistrate.

'There, there,' resumed Williams; 'that proves what I said about having received a better education than you did to be true; for, in the whole of our conversation, I never called you a rascal. However, when we had the wine together in your little parlor, you then treated me as a gentleman.'

Mr Griffith—I am very sorry I did.

The prisoner—Sorry! why, how else should two gentlemen behave to each other?

Mr Griffith—I shall remand you until Saturday, and direct inquiries to be made in the interim into the story you told about Mr Johnson, of Warwick-court, and if I find it out to be untrue, I shall commit you for obtaining money under false pretences.

'Ay, do; commit me for anything,' exclaimed Williams, as he left the bar, with the same sang froid which marked him there, 'commit me for anything but being a common beggar.'

RECENT ENGLISH DECISIONS.

EQUITY.

The rule that a gift confined expressly to the donee's life with a power of disposition superadded, confers a power only over the remainder after the estate for life, while a gift to a person indefinitely with a superadded power of disposition passes the absolute interest, applies to personal state as well as real.—Reith vs. Seymour, 4 Russ. 263.

Therefore the testator bequeathed all his personal estate to his wife for life, and after her decease one moiety thereof was to be at her disposal, either by will or otherwise the other moiety being given to other persons, she had the moiety for her life with a mere power of appointment. S. C.

Where a testator gives annuities, and directs them to be paid without any deduction whatsoever, and where, from the nature of the property out of which the annuities are to be paid, there could be no deduction, except in respect of the legacy duty, there the annuities shall be paid clear of legacy duty.—Smith vs. Anderson, 4 Russ. 352.

A gift to A. and B., 'whom I appoint my executors, of all that I possess in any way belonging to me, by them freely to be possessed or enjoyed, of whatever nature or manner it may be,' will pass the fee simple of real estate.—Thomas vs. Phelps, 4 Russ. 348.

Testator devised real estates to his daughter, or such person as she should first marry, (if before the age of twentyone years, with the consent of guardians); He then bequeathed to her a legacy of 5,000*l.* upon her marriage with such consent as aforesaid, and the sum of 5,000*l.* two years afterwards; she married under age without consent; her husband died; having attained her full age, she marries again; Semble that neither she or her husband is entitled to the legacies.—Clifford vs. Beaumont, 4 Russ. 325.

Testator gave an annuity and pecuniary legacies, and then devised all the rest, residue and remainder of his freehold, copyhold and leasehold estates to trustees for the use and benefit of the children. Inasmuch as the words rest, residue and remainder evince that some prior purpose was to be satisfied out of the estates, held, that the annuity and legacies were charged on those estates.—Cole vs. Turner, 4 Russ. 376.

'Child or children,' may mean 'issue.' A testator bequeathed property to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his daughter during her life, and directed that in case she should leave any issue living at her death, that the property should be disposed of, and the produce thereof paid to and among such child or children as she should appoint, and in default of appointment, to and among such issue as tenants in common, or if there should be but one child, the whole to be paid to such one; and if there should be no issue of his daughter living at her decease, or they should die infants, then over. Held, that the words 'child or children,' must be construed 'issue,' and therefore, that an appointment to the children to the exclusion of the grandchildren was void.—Dalzell vs. Welch, 2 Sim. 326.

Bequest to one for life, with remainder to the eldest surviving son of A, and failing the male issue of A, to the daughters of A, living at the demise of such male issue. Held that 'male issue,' meant 'sons.' Murray vs. Addenbrook, 4 Russ. 407.

Bequest to one for life, with the remainder to the eldest surviving son of A. This does not mean a surviving of the testator, but of the tenant for life. The words 'surviving,' and 'living,' in such cases being to be referred to the time when the interest falls into possession. S. C.

Under a bequest of 'all moneys, goods, chattels, clothing, &c, my property, which may remain after paying the charges incident to my funeral, and such debts as I may owe at my death,' the testator's interest in moneys and stock will pass.—Kendall vs. Kendall, 4 Russ. 361.

The words 'moneys,' 'goods,' or 'chattels,' will include 'stock,' or not, according to the context. —S. C.

The words 'family and relations' may mean 'family in general,' 'next of kin,' or 'heir,' according to circumstances. In a will of personality, if testator give a person a power of appointing among a family or relations, the terms will be taken in the popular and large sense.—Grant vs. Lynam, 4 Russ. 292.

But if there be a direct bequest of personality to a family or relations, convenience has given rise to the rule to confine the distribution to next of kin.—S. C.

Where the word 'heir' is used to denote succession, it may well be understood to mean such persons as would legally succeed to the property according to its nature or quality; and therefore, in the case of personality, in such a case it would mean next of kim. But where the word is used to described a legatee, it will be taken in its legal and ordinary sense, unless controlled by the context. Therefore a legacy to testatrix's heir was held to vest in three persons who formed her coheirs.—Mounsey vs. Blamire, 4 Russ. 384.

The court will not, unless forced by the plainest words, adopt a construction, by which the interest of a child of full age and settled in life, would be devested, if he happened to die before the youngest child attained twentyone.—Crozier vs. Fisher, 4 Russ. 401.

A codicil does not revoke or alter a will to a greater extent than was intended. A testator, by his will, gave certain legacies exclusively charged on real estate. By a codicil, after reciting so much of the will, as related to those legacies, he revoked that part of his will, and in lieu of the legacies therein given, gave smaller ones. The object of the codicil being only to alter the amount of the legacies, held that it could not extend to charge the personal estate, and not being attested by three witnesses, could not alter the legacies charged on the real estate. —Kirke vs. Kirke, 4 Russ. 435.

Obliterations and interlineations by the testator in his will, coupled with an ineffectual codicil, does not amount to a revocation, but is a substitution, which failing, the original disposition stands good.—S. C.

A person served with a subpœna ad testificandum is not protected between the service and the day appointed for this examination.—Gibbs vs. Phillipson, 1 Russ. & M. 19.

If a person comes from the country to London for the purpose of being examined, he is protected during the whole time of his remaining there bonâ fide for the purpose of giving his testimony. —S. C,

A witness is not proteced in going to the solicitor's office to look at the interrogatories, prepartory to his examination.—S. C.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

TAXES.

No presumption is raised in behalf of a collector who sells real estate for taxes, to cover any radical defect in his proceeding; and the proof of the regularity of the procedure devolves upon the person who claims under the collector's sale. Rokendorf vs. Taylor, 4 Pet. 349.

TIME.

Where a collector was required to give public notice of the sale of real estate, for taxes, by advertising in a newspaper once a week for three months, it was held, that an advertisement, within the week succeeding a former advertisement, but after an interval of eleven days, was sufficient. Rokendorf vs. Taylor, 4 Pet. 349.

USURY.

1. The taking of interest in advance by a bank for sixtyfour days, on a note given for sixty days, is not usury, if by the usage and custom of the bank the note was not due and payable until the sixtyfourth day. Thornton vs. The Bank of Washington, 3 Pet. 37.

2. Where such a note is renewed by the discount of another note on the sixtythird day, though on the new note interest for sixtyfour days is deducted, it is not usury. Ib.

3. The requisites to constitute usury, are: 1. A loan either express or implied: 2. An understanding that the money lent shall or may be returned: 3. That a greater rate of interest than is allowed by law, should be paid. Per M'Lean, J. Lloyd vs. Scott, 4 Pet. 205.

4. The intent with which the act is done is an important ingredient to constitute this offence. An ignorance of the law will not protect the party from the penalties of usury, where it is committed; but where there was no intention to evade the law, and the facts which amount to usury, whether they appear on the face of the contract, or by other proof, can be shown to have been the result of mistake or accident, no penalty attaches. Per M'Lean, J. Ib.

5. In consideration of $5000, A granted to B an annuity or rent charge of $500, payable annually, to be issuing out of and charged upon certain houses and lands, with a right to distrain in case of non-payment of the annuity, and B covenanted that if A, at the expiration of five years, paid to him $5000, with all arrears of the rent, he would release and extinguish the annuity thus created. A afterwards conveyed the houses and lands to C, subject to the payment of the annuity. Held, that as this was admitted to be a contract for the loan of money, it was a usurious transaction, and that C might avail himself of the usury as a defence against a claim for the rent, asserted by a distress. Ib.

6. An annuity may be purchased like other property, and inequality of price, of itself, will not make the contract usurious. Ib.

7. If a party agree to pay a specific sum, exceeding the lawful interest, provided he do not pay the principal by a day certain, it is not usury. By a punctual payment of the principal, he may avoid the payment of the sum stated, which is considered as a penalty. Per M'Lean, J. Ib.

8. Where a loan is made to be returned at a fixed day, with more than the legal rate of interest, depending on a casualty which hazards both principal and interest, the contract is not usurious; but where the interest only is hazarded, it is usury. Per M'Lean, J. Ib.

9. Usurious securities are not only void as between the original parties, but the illegality of their inception affects them even in the hands of third persons who are strangers to the transaction. Ib.

10. Where a note, originally founded on a good consideration, is afterwards sold for less than it is nominally worth, this does not make a case of usury. Harick vs. Jones, 4 M'Cord, 402.

VERDICT.

Where, in an action on a bond on a plea of nil debet, the jury have found a verdict for ten cents, the court will not, after a lapse of ten years, interfere with the verdict, although an error might possibly have been committed. Belser vs. Irwin, 4 M'Cord, 380.

WAGER.

1. No wager concerning any human being, is recoverable in a court of justice. Phillips vs. Ives, 1 Rawle, 36.

2. Therefore, a wager, whether or not Napoleon Bonaparte, would, within a specified time, be released or escape from the island of St Helena, was held to be illegal and void. Ib.

WILL.

1. A testator used the following words in the first clause of his will: 'My widow to remain and enjoy this my mansion house and farm during her widowhood.' He, in a subsequent clause, devised the same premises with an additional quantity of land, to his grandson forever. Held, that the latter clause was not inconsistent with the former, and that the grandson took a fee simple subject to the use of the wife during her widowhood. Petters vs. Petters, 4 M'Cord, 151.

2. All the personal estate which a man has, at the time of his death, passes by his will, although acquired after the time of its execution. Case of Elcock's Will, 4 M'Cord, 39.

3. A will, as to personal property, is considered as having existence only from the death of the testator, and not from the time of its execution; and must be executed according to the provisions of the law in force at the time of the death of the testator. Ib.

4. Thus a testator, in 1823, made his will of personal property, which was attested by two witnesses only, according to the provisions of the law in force at that time. By the statute of 1824, of South Carolina, it is required, that wills of personal property shall be attested by three witnesses. The testator died in 1825, leaving no other will. It was held, that the will was void. Ib.

5. A testator bequeathed to his wife his negroes, naming them. The will then proceeds as follows: 'Item, I bequeath to my wife one sorrel mare, one brown cow. Item. All my household furniture, and the increase of the said negroes, during her natural.' Held, that all the sentences were to be considered as one clause, and that the wife took a life estate in the negroes, the word life being clearly omitted. Geiger vs. Brown, 4 M'Cord, 418,

6. Where a testator, after bequeathing to his wife a life estate in certain negroes, proceeds thus: 'To my son I bequeath all my lands, &c, and my other negroes, with the remainder of my personal estate, shall be kept together for the use of my children.' Held, that the residuary bequest did not include the reversionary interest which would be left after the death of the wife in the negroes given to the wife. Ib.

7. A testator in his will used the following words: 'I give unto my wife H. B., my two female slaves, L. and H; I also give her one third of my income annually, during her life, to revert after her decease to my estate.' He then gave to his son and to his heirs, one third of his income, and to his daughter, the remaining third of his income, for her sole benefit during life, and then to descend to her heirs lawfully begotten. The will then proceeds; 'After the decease of my wife, the whole of my estate to be equally divided between my son and daughter, and their heirs lawfully begotten.' Held, that the wife took an absolute estate in the two slaves, and not merely a life estate. Blewer vs. Brightman, 4 M'Cord, 60.

8. Where a testator bequeaths slaves to a tenant for life, without any further disposition of them, they revert, upon the death of the tenant for life, to the testator's legal representatives. Geiger vs. Brown, 4 M'Cord, 418.

9. A subsequent statute cannot affect a devise of land by a testator who died before the act was passed. Boatwright vs. Faust, 4 M'Cord, 439.

10. A will made in another state, and executed according to the laws of that state, will be effectual to pass the personal property of the testator in South Carolina, though not executed according to the laws of the latter state. Gause vs. Gause, 4 M'Cord, 382.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1831.

STUDY OF THE LAW.

Advice on the Study and Practice of the Law; with Directions for the choice of Books. Addressed to Attorneys' Clerks. By WILLIAM WRIGHT. Third edition: London, 1828.

When Fulbeck, in the year 1620, published in London his 'Preparative to the Study of the Law,' his professed object was to show what things ought to be observed, and what ought to be eschewed and avoided, by the law student. If at that early period, there was occasion for such admonition, how much more necessary is it in our time, when, to read the numerous treatises, abridgments, essays, &c, that have been published upon the multifarious divisions and subdivisions of municipal law, since the appearance of the work from which we have just quoted,—to say nothing of Reports,—would require a greater portion of time than is ordinarily allotted to human existence! No legal noviciate of the present day ever dreams of qualifying himself for practice, without some direction as to what he should 'eschew' and what 'avoid;' and this preparatory knowledge he either derives from some one of the several works which have in later years been designed to afford him instruction, or from the preceptor in the school, or the head of the office where he is placed for tuition. Among the different courses of legal study that have been marked out for the student, it would be singular if any two of them should be found to exactly correspond; and some we know differ from each other essentially. It is not our design, however, on this occasion to point this difference, or to discuss the merits of any of the plans that have been recommended; but, inasmuch as it is probable that some satisfaction and even advantage may be derived from a comparison of one course with another, we propose to call the reader's attention to the views and suggestions contained in the work of an author, who has lately assumed the office which was systematically undertaken by the ancient writer we have mentioned, more than two centuries ago.

Mr Wright cautions the student not to commence his studies with the laws of his own country alone; for if he does, he will soon perceive he has begun with works which, while unacquainted with technical language, he cannot clearly understand. The student in fact should not endeavor 'to acquire from the rivulets what is only to be gained from the fountain of jurisprudence.' An elementary knowledge of the law of nature and nations and the civil law is earnestly insisted on, instead of beginning, as English lawyers too often do, with books of English law only. After recommending Grotius and Puffendorf, and bestowing some critical remarks on those celebrated publicists, he says the student may afterwards have recourse to the Elementa Juris Naturæ et Gentium of Heineccius, and to the works of Vattel and Wood. The best way, Mr W. thinks, to obtain a sound knowledge of the civil law, is to study the Corpus Juris Civillis itself, and more especially the Digests. Mr W. has devoted an entire chapter to this subject, and thus manifests a high degree of respect for a system of jurisprudence which has hitherto, generally speaking, commanded too insignificant a share of attention with English jurists. For the purpose of acquiring a knowledge of the civil law, Mr W. also recommends the fortyfourth Chapter in Gibbon, the Elementa of Heineccius, Justinian's Institutes by Harris, and Observations on the Study of the Civil Law by Dr Irvin. As some parts of the Digests cannot be studied with advantage, without a Lexicon of Civil law, Mr W. recommends Calvin's Lexicon Juridicum.

The subject to which the student is next advised to bestow attention is history; and a particular knowledge of the history of England is considered to be very essential. Hume's History, Miller's View of the English Government, and Turner's History of the Anglo-Saxons are referred to in terms of great approbation. When the student has comprehended the principles of the law of nature and nations, and acquired a knowledge of English history, he is to study. De Lolme on the English Constitution,—then Lord John Russell on the same subject,—then Eunomus,—then Hale's History of the common Law, and Sullivan's and Woodeson's Lectures on the Constitution and Laws of England. Reeves' History of the English Law is next recommended. Of Reeves, Mr W. says:

'Reeves has studiously avoided inquiries beyond the pale of the English law, and confined himself to those of more utility to young students. He might have enlarged many parts of his history, had it been written for lawyers; but he wrote for students, and by closely pursuing his labors, his work is more useful than if it had contained many useless though erudite discussions. Some parts of our law will perhaps forever remain in obscurity, and it is not a fit employment for young men in their clerkship to puzzle themselves with unimportant theories.' p. 86.

Of Blackstone's Commentaries, which Mr W. says should next be read, he says:

'This very valuable elementary work reflects honor on the author and the profession, and it is no less admired by the lawyer for the general accuracy of its contents, than by the critical scholar, for the elegance of diction and the correct didactic style in which it is written.'

Much stress is laid on an accurate knowledge of the feudal tenures, and to the information on this subject which is to be acquired from the works before enumerated, must be added, says Mr W., an intimate acquaintance with Wright's Law of Tenures. The learning and ability which Mr Butler has displayed upon the same subject in one of his notes to Coke upon Littleton, is also referred to. After these books the student is to proceed to the perusal of treatises on the different branches of English law. The books of this class which are recommended are Jones' Essay on Bailments, Toller's Law of Executors, Fonblanque's Treatise on Equity, and the late edition by Mr Preston of Watkins' Principles of Conveyancing. The student is next allowed to take successively in hand Cruise's Digest and Preston's edition of the Touchstone of Common Assurances; and as an introductory work on suits in the courts of common law and on special pleading, Saunders' Reports by Williams. The latter book is thought to be peculiarly worthy the attention of students. From that and from Atkyns' Reports—Peere Williams' Reports, and the English edition of Plowden's Reports, the student, says Mr W., will acquire very important and necessary information. Mr W. then proceeds with his directions and observations as follows:

'From great attention to the books already mentioned, the student will perhaps find that his progress has exceeded his most sanguine expectations. After he is well acquainted with their contents, but not till then, he should study the Notes to Coke upon Littleton, by Hargrave and Butler,—Saunders on Uses,—Watkins on Descents,—Adams on Ejectment,—Powell on Devises, and on Mortgages,—Sugden on Powers,—Fearne's Essay on Contingent Remainders, and on Executory Devises,—and Preston's Essay on Estates, on Conveyancing, and on Abstracts.'

After mentioning the above works, the author proceeds to give a piece of very wholesome advice to law students in relation to a fault which, as far as our observation has gone, is somewhat common in this country.

'In these books, several cases of almost similar import are placed before the eyes of the student. To draw the conclusions which they warrant, these authors have bestowed great pains; and on some occasions their distinctions are so very nice, that he will be at a loss, without considerable attention and repeated perusal, to draw a proper inference from them; yet ultimately he will clearly comprehend their reasoning. This should animate him to persevere in his labors; and it will tend to repress that absurd arrogance which prompts young men to decide dogmatically on doubtful points without having qualified themselves by reading or reflection, to discuss such subjects.'

It has been customary, our author says, to recommend Coke upon Littleton immediately after reading Blackstone; but of that order he does not approve. In the study of Pleading, Chitty is recommended; and with regard to Evidence, 'the student will find Mr Phillips' an excellent work, and with it he may read Selwyn's Nisi Prius, which is the best book we have on the subject.' We shall here take the liberty of mentioning Mr Starkie's work on evidence, which is not referred to by Mr Wright, the first volume of which we humbly imagine, would tend very much to enlighten the mind of the law student, upon the subject of which, with great clearness and method, it treats.

The student is recommended by Mr W. to attend occasionally to the modern Reports, while engaged in the preceding course of study, but not, however, until he has obtained a copious fund of elementary knowledge; and in reading Reports, 'he is to distinguish between those points which are determined on the argument, and the obiter dicta of the judges—the latter never being entitled to the respect which is due to formal decisions.' For occasional reading, or rather reference, Comyn's Digest and Bacon's Abridgment will be found very valuable. The former is an estimable production, but the cases are too much abridged for a student, and require constant reference to illustrate the author's positions.'

From the above analysis, it will appear that the work before us, (although 'addressed to Attorneys' Clerks,') is yet well worth the perusal, as 'Advice on the Study and Practice of the Law,' to all students of law.

In reference to an opinion which it seems exists in England, as well as in this country—viz: that a person who is in the situation of an 'articled clerk' should content himself with doing the work of the office, and with the knowledge he may acquire from routine,—Mr Wright says, that 'a man of acute understanding and ready wit may be able to go through the ordinary routine of practice without ever having been a diligent student, and indeed without having pursued any regular course of study; but this cannot be done early in life, or without having seen extensive practice.' The men who maintain the opinion alluded to, in England, we are told belong to 'rather an antiquated school.' Mr Preston (who, as we conceive, is entitled to very high respect) in the preface to his Essay on Conveyancing, has lamented the consequences arising from an opinion so mistaken. We shall conclude by adducing his remarks on the subject, and we quote them because we think they are far from being inapplicable in our own country. If the student undertakes to qualify himself for the practice of the law without a regular course of study, according to Mr Preston, 'he is taught by form or precedent rather than by principle. He is made to copy precedents without knowing either their application or those rules on which they are grounded. When he begins to prepare draughts, he is led to expect all his information from these forms, and his knowledge is in the end as limited as the means by which he has been instructed.'—Law Int.

---

We subjoin the following list of the cases in which the Supreme Court of the United States have decided that State laws were unconstitutional, embracing all the cases of this description, from the establishment of that Court to the present time, a period of more than thirtysix years, citing the volumes in which they are reported, and the years in which they were decided, viz:

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Georgia v. Brailsford, | 3 | Dallas' Rep. | 4 Georgia, | 1794 |
| Vanhorne v. Dorrance, | 2 | do | 304, Penn. | 1795 |
| Ware v. Hylton, | 3 | do | 199, Virginia, | 1796 |
| U. States v. Dorrance | 2 | do | 371, Penn. | 1797 |
| Clerke v. Harwood, | 3 | do | 342, Maryland, | 1797 |
| Ogden v. Blackledge, | 2 | Cranch's Rep. | 272, N. C. | 1804 |
| Hopkirk v. Bell, | 3 | do | 454, Va. | 1806 |
| U. States v. Peters, | 5 | do | 115, Penn. | 1800 |
| Fletcher v. Peck, | 6 | do | 87, Geo. | 1810 |
| N. Jersey v. Wilson, | 7 | do | 164, N. J. | 1812 |
| Terrett v. Taylor, | 9 | do | 43, Va. | 1815 |
| Town of Rawlett v. Clark, | | do | 292, Vt. | 1815 |
| Chirac v. Chirac, | 2 | Wheaton's Rep. | 259, Md. | 1817 |
| Sturgis v. Crowninshield, | 4 | do | 122, N. Y. | 1819 |
| M'Millan v. M'Neil, | 4 | do | 209, Lou. | 1819 |
| M'Culloch v. Maryland, | 4 | do | 316, Md. | 1819 |
| Dartmouth College case, | 4 | do | 518, N. H. | 1819 |
| Farmers' & Mech. Bank v. Smith. | 6 | do | 131, Penn. | 1821 |
| Green v. Biddle, | 8 | do | 1, Ken. | 1823 |
| Gospel Soc'y v. Wheeler, | 8 | do | 464, Vt. | 1823 |
| Gibbons v. Ogden, | 9 | do | 1, N. Y. | 1824 |
| Osborn v. U. S. Bank, | 9 | do | 738, Ohio, | 1824 |
| Ogden v. Saunders, | 12 | do | 213, N. Y. | 1827 |
| Brown v. Maryland, | 12 | do | 419, Md. | 1827 |
| Western v. City Counsel, | 2 | Peters' Rep. | 449, S. C. | 1829 |
| Bank of Hamilton v. Dudley, | 2 | do | 525, Ohio, | 1829 |

It appears by the above statement, that 2 State laws of Georgia have been pronounced unconstitutional, 4 of Pennsylvania, 3 of Virginia, 4 of Maryland, 1 of North Carolina, 1 of New Jersey, 2 of Vermont, 3 of New York, 1 of Louisiana, 1 of Kentucky, 2 of Ohio, 1 of South Carolina, and 1 of New Hampshire—in all 24.

In the following cases the decisions of the Supreme Court were in favor of the constitutionality of State laws, viz:

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Cowper v. Telfair, | 4 | Dallas' Rep. | 14, Georgia, | 1800 |
| Houston v. Moore, | 5 | Wheaton's Rep, | 1, Penn. | 1820 |
| Owings v. Speed, | 5 | do | 420, Virginia, | 1820 |
| Williams v. Norris, | 12 | do | 117, Tenn. | 1827 |
| Montgomery v. Hernandez, | 12 | do | 129, Lou. | 1827 |
| Wilson v. Blackbird, | 2 | Peters' Rep. | 251, Del. | 1829 |
| Satterlee v. Mathewson, | 2 | do | 380, Penn. | 1829 |
| Bank of Hamilton v. Dudley, | 2 | do | 523, Ohio, | 1829 |
| Wilkinson v. Leland, | 2 | do | 627, R. Isl. | *1829 |
| Providence Bank v. Billings, &c. | 4 | do | 627, do | 1830 |

* The act of Rhode Island confirmed in this case, was a private one, passed with the view of perfecting title to an estate.—Pat.

---

NEW PUBLICATION.

A Treatise on the Doctrine of Presumption and Presumptive Evidence, as effecting the Title to Real and Personal Property. By John H. Mathews, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law. —With Notes and References to American Cases, by Benjamin Rand, Esq.

LIBRARY OF EDUCATION
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN,
The Library of Education, Vol. I. —Containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education.' By John Locke, and a 'Treatise of Education,' by John Milton, with an Appendix, containing Locke's Memoranda on Study. Edited by Wm. Russell, late editor of the Journal of Education.

Extract from the Preface.

'The present volume is intended to form one of a series of standard treatises on the subject of Education. The work now commenced will, it is hoped, form a useful source of information to parents and teachers; furnishing to the latter a sort of professional library, to which individuals may resort for assistance in the labor of instruction, and offering to the former an aid to the formation of just and extensive views of the whole scope of education, as well as a preparation for cooperating with instruction, in their exertions for the mental advancement of the young.' Jan. 1.

WHITMAN'S LETTERS.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, 'Two Letters to Rev. Moses Stuart,' on Religious Liberty, occasioned by his Letter to Rev. Wm. E. Channing. By Bernard Whitman. Jan. 1.

SIXTY MAPS of the various countries of the Globe, from the Epitome of Universal Geography. For sale at GRAY & BOWEN'S, 141 Washington Street. Price 50 cents, bound. Jan. 1.

PARLEY'S ASIA.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, Peter Parley's Tales about Asia, with a Map and numerous Engravings. This is designed as a fourth volume in a series of Geographical and Historical Tales for Children. Tales of America, Europe, and Africa, have already been published. Tales of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, Tales of the Sea, and Tales of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, will complete the series. These three last are in a state of forwardness.

GRAY & BOWEN, have just published, TALES OF TRAVELS West of the Mississippi, with a Map and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. This volume is the first of a series which is intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—
Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.
Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.
Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.
Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.
Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.
Peter Parley's Geography for Children. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED,
by GRAY & BOWEN, an APPENDIX to the American Almanac, for the year 1831, being the latter part of the fiftyfifth, and the beginning of the fiftysixth year of the Independence of the United States.

Extract from the Preliminary Observations on the Astronomical Department of the American Almanac.

The Appendix is intended to answer all the essential purposes of a Nautical Almanac, and the insertion therein of the distances of the Moon from the Planets, and of the proportional logarithm of the difference between the distances, it is hoped, will be found an improvement on any Almanac hitherto published. Jan. 1.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK.
This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,
'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The North American Review, No. LXX. for January, 1831.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Statuary—Del' arte di vedere nelle belle arte del desegno, secondo i Principii di Sulzer e di Mengs.

II. Bank of the United States—Report of the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred so much of the Message of the President, as relates to the Bank of the United States.

III. Anatomy—Address to the Community on the Necessity of legalizing the Study of Anatomy. By order of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

IV. Clarence—A Tale of our own Times. By the Author of Redwood.

V. Hieroglyphics—Essay on the Hieroglphic System of M. Champollion, Jr, and on the advantages which it offers to Sacred Criticism. By J. G. H. Greppo, Vicar General of Belley. Translated from the French, by Isaac Stuart, with Notes and Illustrations.

VI. American System—1. Report from the Committee on Commerce to whom was referred so much of the President's Message, as relates to the Commerce of the United States with Foreign Nations, &c. 2. A Review of Mr Cambreleng's Report from the Committee of Commerce. By Mephistopheles. 3. Exposition and Protest reported by the Special Committee of the House of Representatives on the Tariff. 4. Mr McDuffie's Speech in the House of Representatives on the Bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures for the more faithful Collection of the Revenue.

VII. Grahame's History of the United States—The History of the Rise and Progress of the United States of N. America till the British Revolution in 1688. By James Grahame, Esq.

VIII. Memoirs of Madame De Genlis—Memoires Inedits de Madame la Comtesse de Genlis sur le dixhuitieme siecle et a Revolution Francoise, depuis 1756, jusqu' a nos jours.

IX. Phillips' Manual of Political Economy, with particular reference to the Institutions, Resources and Condition of the United States. By Willard Phillips.

X. History of the Jews—History of the Jews from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Rev. H. H. Milman. Jan. 22.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLII. for December, 1830.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Classes of American Society.—1. A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, first delivered Oct. 6, before the Charlestown Lyceum, and published at their request. By Edw. Everett. 2. Mr Tuckerman's Second Semiannual Report of the Fourth Year of his Services as a Minister at Large in Boston.

II. The Jews.—The History of the Jews, from the Earliest Period to the Present time. By Rev. H. H. Milman.

III. Wheaton's Travels.—A Journal of a Residence during several months in London; including Excursions through various Parts of England; and a short Tour in France and Scotland, in the Years 1823 and 1824. By Nathaniel S. Wheaton, A. M.

IV. English Unitarian Methodists. An Account of the Rise and Progress of the Unitarian Doctrine, in the Societies at Rochdale, Newchurch in Rosendale, and other Places, formerly in Connexion with the late Rev. Joseph Cooke. In Ten Letters to a Friend. By John Ashworth.

V. Life of Mohammed.—The Life of Mohammed; Founder of the Religion of Islam, and of the Empire of the Saracens. By the Rev. George Bush, A. M

VI. Anderson's Tour in Greece.—Observations upon the Peloponnesus and Greek Islands, made in 1829. By Rufus Anderson, one of the Secretaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Jan. 22.

GRAY AND BOWEN,
have just received, No. 1, of SURGICAL ANATOMY OF THE ARTERIES, with plates and illustrations. By Nathan R. Smith, M. D. Professor of Surgery in the University of Maryland. January 1.

MALTE-BRUN SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY.—This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK, The Malte-Brun School Geography, illustrated by numerous original engravings, and an Atlas of 19 Maps, Charts, and Tables. By S. Griswold Goodrich. Jan. 1.

GRAY AND BOWEN,
No. 141, Washington Street, Boston, have recently published the following valuable works.

I. THE DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION. Published under the Direction of the President of the United States, from the Original Manuscripts in the Department of State, conformably to a resolution of Congress, of March 27, 1818. Edited by JARED SPARKS.

This important Correspondence, now for the first time published, will form eleven volumes. Eight are already published and the remainder will appear very shortly.

II. JEFFERSON'S WORKS, In four Volumes. Accompanied with a Portrait on steel, and a fac-simile of the original draft of the Declaration of Independence. Second Edition.

III. THE NEW TESTAMENT, conformed to Griesbach's Text. 1 Vol. 12mo.

THE TOKEN, a Christmas and New Year's Present, for 1831. Edited by S. G. Goodrich.

'Then take my flower, and let its leaves
Beside thy heart be cherished near.
While that confiding heart receives
The thought it whispers to thine ear.'

The engravings for the Token of this year are executed by Cheney, Ellis, Gallaudet, and others; among the contributors are Dewey, Greenwood, Miss Sedgwick, Mrs Sigourney, Hall, Peabody, Wetmore, author of a Year in Spain, author of Tales of the Northwest, Neal, Thatcher, Mrs Hale, and others of the first reputation.

The work is larger than heretofore, and is done up in splendid embossed morocco. The literary department is considered decidedly superior to the former years, and in all respects it has received the greatest care and attention. Oct 23.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVI.

CONTENTS.

Art. 1. Mill's Phenomena of Mind. 2. Tytler's and Scott's Histories of Scotland. 3. Memoirs, Correspondence, and Papers of Thomas Jefferson. 4. Niebuhr's Geography of Herodotus. 5. Galt's Southennan. 6. Floods in Morayshire. 7. Troades of Euripides. 8. The Belgian Insurrection, and De Potter's Trial. 9. Alexander's Travels. 10. London Bridge. 11. Hydrophobia. 12. Mr Brougham and Local Judicatories. 13. Novels and Travels in Turkey. 14. The Three Days of Paris. 15. Brasse's Sophocles. 16. Geometry without Axioms. 17. Revolution of 1830. List of Books, Index, &c. Jan. 22.

AMERICAN ALMANAC,
Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

WORKING MEN'S PARTY.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, delivered before the Charlestown Lyceum, October 6, 1830. By Edward Everett.

EVENTS IN PARIS,
during the 26, 27, 28, and 29th of July, 1830. By several eye witnesses. Translated from the fourth Paris edition. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

THE JURISPRUDENT
IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.
BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1831. NO. XXX.

MERCANTILE LAW.

CONTRACT OF SALE.

Continued.

But goods are frequently secured in bond warehouses, as well as deposited for temporary custody, in the private warehouses of individuals. The warehousing acts* have, however, with one exception which will be presently noticed, left the mode and validity of transfer, on the sale of goods so secured, to the ordinary rules of the common law: and, therefore, upon the principle laid down by Lord Ellenborough, as applicable to the case of wharfingers, a delivery order to the warehouse-keeper is here also recognised as a sufficient transfer of possession. But where goods are bonded in the warehouses of docks,† the usual and regular mode of transfer is by indorsement and delivery of the dock warrant or certificate. Indeed, the original warrants contain a blank form of indorsement, to be filled up as occasion may require, and by long established mercantile usage the handing of the indorsed warrant from the buyer to the seller is recognised, both in practice and in the law, as a complete transfer of the goods into the possession of the former.‡ But a difficulty arose where the proprietor of the warehouse was also the owner of the goods; because a delivery order addressed to himself, or an entry of transfer in his own books could hardly be relied upon as evidence of delivery. To obviate this, it is expressly provided by the act, that if any goods lodged in any warehouse shall be the property of the occupier of such warehouse, and shall be bonâ fide sold by him, and upon such sale there shall have been a written agreement signed by the parties, or a written contract of sale made, executed, and delivered by a broker or other person legally authorized and the amount of the price stipulated in the said agreement or contract shall have been actually paid or secured, every such sale shall be valid, although the goods remain in the warehouse, provided that a transfer of the goods according to such sale shall have been entered in a book to be kept for that purpose by the officer of the customs having charge of the warehouse, who is thereby required to keep such book, and to enter the transfer upon application of the owners of the goods.*

For this mode of transfer by indorsement of the dock warrant, a ready precedent was furnished in the practice which had for ages prevailed as to the indorsement of bills of lading.† This practice, however, was derived out of the nature of the instrument itself. The master, by the delivery of a bill of lading to the shipper, binds himself to deliver the goods, which he acknowledges to have received on board in good condition, either to the shipper or his order, or assigns; or to the bearer; or to the consignee or his assigns. Where it is made to the order of the shipper, he indorses it either specially or in blank; i. e. either with an order to a particular person by name, in which case it has the same effect as if the name of that person had been inserted in the body of the instrument, or without the addition of a name. The effect, therefore, is, that the master is bound to hold the goods shipped on board for the benefit of him who shall acquire by indorsation the right to the bill of lading, and to deliver them to the holder of that instrument: and thus it is that goods on their passage at sea may be sold, and the right of immediate possession transferred to the purchaser by the simple act of indorsement.‡

One question only remains as applicable to the general doctrine of delivery, and it is this: Whether delivery, to the purchaser of a part of the goods bought will have the effect of transferring the property and right of immediate possession as to the whole, so as consequently to defeat the right of the seller to retain for the price. And it seems that, whatever may be the case when the goods have passed out of the possession of the seller, and are in their transit to the buyer, as to which we shall have occasion to inquire hereafter, yet as between the vendor and vendee immediately, part-delivery will have no such effect, but the former will still be entitled to his lien over the rest.*

We have now examined, in the order prescribed, the doctrine of delivery, whether actual or constructive, and we have hitherto viewed it principally, and as far as possible exclusively, with reference to its effect in transferring the property, and with it the risk, entitling the seller to payment, and devesting him of his lien for the price. It remains that we consider it more particularly as to the arrival of the goods at the hands of the vendee, with reference both to the statutory requisite of acceptance by the buyer, and the doctrine of stoppage in transitu and restitution.

And first, as to the acceptance of goods by the buyer. The words of the statute, we may recollect, are these: 'Unless the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same into his possession.' And if words have any force, the meaning of the legislature plainly was, that there should be an acceptance in the way of final appropriation to himself of the whole or some part of the subject of his purchase.† Now the question whether there has been such an appropriation is evidently two-fold; first, whether there has been a quitting of possession by the seller, and secondly, whether there has been a taking into the possession of the buyer. Of the first, something has been said already; and, from the principles laid down it may be collected, that unless the vendor either had no lien for the price, or it be clear that he intended to waive it in favor of the purchaser, nothing but an actual tradition into the keeping of the buyer will be received as a delivery. This principle has been frequently adverted to by the courts.‡ In one case, Mr Justice Holroyd observed: 'upon the sale of specific goods for a specific price, by parting with the possession, the seller parts with his lien. The statute contemplates such a parting with the possession; and, therefore, so long as the seller preserves his control over the goods, so as to retain his lien, he prevents the vendee from accepting and receiving them as his own within the meaning of the statute.'§ Accordingly it has been decided that directions given by the buyer as to the treatment of a horse which he had purchased—the horse in the mean-

---

* Consolidated in the 6 Geo. 4 c. 112. This act has for its object the warehousing of goods imported into England, for home consumption, so as to secure the duties payable on importation, without calling for payment till the goods are finally taken into the market. The commissioners of the treasury are empowered to appoint by warrant certain ports to be warehousing ports, and therein certain warehouses, either of special or of ordinary security; the first being intended for more effectual security against the introduction into the English market of prohibited merchandise, imported only for re-exportation; the other having merely in view the safe deposit of the goods, and insuring payment of the duties. To secure these duties a bond is given either by the proprietor of the warehouse, for payment within three years of the full duties of importation, on all goods which shall be warehoused therein, or otherwise for the exportation thereof; or by the importer, in respect of the particular goods, which is to be in force for three years, and no longer; and which may be superseded by the bond of the purchaser, in case of sale, without removal.

† Dock Companies, usually incorporated by act of parliament, are established in all the principal ports of Great Britain, having extensive warehouses attached to the docks. Such are the London Dock Company, the East, and West India Dock Companies, and others in the port of London. The company, or the proprietors and directors (if not incorporated) stand in the situation of warehousemen to the owners of goods bonded in their warehouses. In general, in these establishments, the enfries and transfers in the books are made with great regularity and precision. A warrant is usually given on the depositing of the goods. To this is added a certificate of the transfer into the books of the warehouse, signed by a clerk, and describing the goods, ship, name of the importer, &c, with a schedule of the marks and weight of each bale or cask. To this again is subjoined a blank delivery order, to be filled up as occasion may require.

‡ Spear v. Travers, 4 Campb. 251. Lucas v. Dorrieu, 7 Taunt. 278. Zwinger v. Samuda, 7 Taunt. 265.

* Section 9. The officer here mentioned is a person appointed by the crown, having only a superintendence and key for the security of the duties.

† We must conclude then that the negotiation or assignment of an invoice or bill of lading, completes the transfer to the person receiving them, without waiting for the actual tradition, or requiring notice; like the indorsation of a letter of exchange, or a note payable to the bearer. Valin. i. 608. As to the nature of a bill of lading, see Abbott on Shipping, 5 ed. p. 214, & seq.; and as to the indorsement, p. 368, & seq. We shall have occasion to recur to this subject hereafter.

‡ Evans v. Martlett, 1 Lord Raymond, 271. Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 74. 75. Abbott on shipping, 369.

* Payne v. Shadbolt, 1 Campb. 427, is an express authority to this effect, and the same result seems to follow from the case of Holderness v. Shackels, 8 B. & C. 612. But see an observation of Littledale J., in Simmons v. Swift, 5 B. & C. 865.

† See the observations of Abbott, Ch. J. in Howe v. Palmer, 3 B. & C. 321. Where the act is equivocal, and depends on the intention of the party at the time, it is properly a question for the jury. Thus in Phillips v. Bertolie, 2 B. & C. 571, a lot was knocked down to the defendant who took it into his hand, and after keeping it for three or four minutes, returned it, saying that he had been mistaken as to the price. By the conditions of sale, the purchaser was also to pay an immediate deposit. And the court was of opinion on motion for a new trial, that it ought to be left to the jury to say whether there was an intention on the part of the auctioneer, to give up the goods without payment of the deposit, or on the part of the buyer to take them finally to himself.

‡ Carter v. Toussaint, 5 B. & A. 855. Baldey v. Parker, 2 B. & C. 44. Phillips v. Bistoli, 2 B. & C. 513. Smith v. Surman, 9 B. & C. 577. per Parke, J.

§ In Baldey v. Parker.

time remaining in the vendor's stable in one case,* at livery in his name in another case,† though in compliance with the request of the buyer—constituted no acceptance, the circumstances not being inconsistent with an intention on the part of the vendor to keep possession until payment; and upon the same principle, where the buyer had agreed for various articles from a linen-draper, of which, some he marked with a pencil, others were measured in his presence, and others he assisted to cut off from a larger bulk, finally desiring the whole to be sent with a bill of parcels to his house, these circumstances were not considered sufficient to satisfy the statute. The buyer in short could not be said 'actually to receive the goods into his possession,' so long as the seller had the control over them, and might refuse, if so minded, to deliver them without payment.‡

Neither, secondly, can the buyer be considered as taking the goods by way of final appropriation, so long as he has a right to object to either the quantity or quality of the goods when actually delivered to him. It follows, therefore, that in general the goods must have arrived at their ultimate destination, before there can be such an acceptance as will satisfy the statute. Accordingly, though it was once held at nisi prius,§ that delivery to the master of a ship, (the course of conveyance being that which was customary between the buyer and seller) was an acceptance by an authorized agent of the buyer, and therefore within the statute, yet in the greater accuracy of construction which has prevailed in later times, that doctrine has been altogether exploded,‖ and the principle above laid down may be considered as immoveably established. Indeed, in an early case,¶ Mr Justice Heath had well expounded the statute thus: 'According to the words of the statute, the exception does not apply, unless the vendee both receive and accept. Now that acceptance I cannot consider to be any other than the ultimate acceptance, and such as completely affirms the contract.' Upon the whole it may be safely laid down, that no receipt of the goods by a mere carrier or middle-man, on their way to the buyer, will be construed into an acceptance by him, so long as the right remains to him of inspection and repudiation on their ultimate arrival.

It had been determined in one case, that a delivery order to a wharfinger handed by the seller to the buyer, constituted an acceptance by the latter, even though no transfer took place in the books of the wharfinger. But upon this decision it might well be asked, how could the terms of the statute, which requires an actual taking into the possession of the buyer, be fulfilled, when there was not even a constructive transfer by the change of entry. And accordingly it has been lately decided, that until the order is assented to by the warehouseman to whom it is addressed, the requisite of the statute is not complied with.*

Of part-acceptance by the taking of samples we have spoken already.† Our next will be devoted to the important subject of stoppage in transitu.

To be continued.

* Tempest v. Fitzgerald, 3 B. & A. 680.
† Carter v. Toussaint.
‡ Baldey v. Parker.
§ Hart v. Sattley, 3 Campb. 588. per Chambre, J.
‖ Astley v. Emery, 4 M. & S. 264. Hanson v. Armitage, 5 B. & A. 559. In the latter case tea had been despatched to the defendant according to order, and sent by the usual mode in which former parcels had been forwarded to the same purchaser. The tea never arrived, having been lost on its passage, but it was contended that the acceptance by the wharfinger was an acceptance by the vendee, and consequently that the plaintiff might recover the price, though there had been no contract in writing. From this notion the whole court dissented. The principle had been before laid down in Howe v. Palmer, 3 B. & A. 321.
¶ Kent v. Huskinson, 3 Bos. & Pul. 233.
 Searle v. Reeves, 1 Esp. N. P. C. 598.

* Bentall v. Burn, 3 B. & C. 423. The sale was of a hogshead of wine lying in the warehouses of the London Dock Company. A delivery order was handed by the seller to the buyer, but no transfer made in the books of the company. P. Cur. 'There could not have been any actual acceptance of the wine by the vendee, until the dock company accepted the order for delivery, and thereby assented to hold the wine as the agents of the vendee. It has been said that the London Dock Company were bound by law, when required, to hold the goods on account of the vendee. That may be true, and they might render themselves liable to an action, for refusing so to do; but if they did wrongfully refuse to transfer the goods to the vendee, it is clear that there could not then be any actual acceptance of them by him, until he actually took possession of them.'
† Ante, p. 147. And see Rohde v. Thwaites, 6 B. & C. 388.

LORD JEFFERIES.

Concluded from page 226.

In his personal character, Jefferies was remarkable for his laxity and disregard of the decencies of his station. Roger North has left a character of him, which, though perhaps highly colored, is certainly, in its main representations, correct. 'His friendship and conversation lay much among the good fellows and humorists, and his delights were accordingly drinking, laughing, singing, kissing, and all the extravagances of the bottle. He had a set of banterers for the most part near him, as in old times, great men kept fools to make them merry, and these fellows, abusing one another and their betters, were a regale to him; and no friendship or dearness could be so great in private, which he could not use ill, and to an extravagant degree, in public. No one that had any expectations from him was safe from his public contempt and derision, which some of his minions at the bar bitterly felt. Those above, and that could hurt or benefit him, and none else, might depend on fair quarter at his hand. When he was in temper, and matters indifferent came before him, he became his seat of justice better than any other I ever saw in his place. He took a pleasure in mortifying fraudulent attorneys, and would deal forth his severities with a sort of majesty. He had extraordinary natural abilities, but little acquired, beyond what practice in affairs had supplied. He talked fluently and with spirit: and his weakness was, that he could not reprehend without scolding and in such Billingsgate language as should not come out of the mouth of any man. He called it giving a lick with the rough side of his tongue. It was ordinary to hear him say, Go, you are a filthy, lousy, nitty rascal, with much more of like elegance. Scarce a day passed that he did not chide some one or other of the bar, when he sat in the chancery, and it was commonly a lecture of a quarter of an hour long. And they used to say, This is yours; my turn will be tomorrow. He seemed to lay nothing of his business to heart, nor care what he did, nor what he left undone, and spent in the chancery court what time he thought fit to spare. Many times on days of causes at his house, the company have waited five hours in a morning, and after eleven he hath come out inflamed, and staring like one distracted, and that visage he put on when he animadverted on such as he took offence at, which made him a terror to real offenders, whom also he terrified with his face and voice, as if the thunder of the day of judgment broke over their heads, and nothing ever made men tremble like his vocal inflictions. He loved to insult, and was bold without check, but that only was when his place was uppermost. To give an instance: A city attorney was petioned against for some abuse, and affidavit was made that, when he was told of my lord chancellor, "My lord chancellor!" said he, "I made him!" meaning his being a means to bring him early into city business. When this affidavit was read, "Well," said the lord chancellor, "then I will lay my maker by the heels," and with that conceit, one of his best old friends went to jail. One of these intemperances was fatal to him. There was a scrivener of Wapping brought to hearing for relief against a bummery bond: the contingency of losing all being shown, the bill was going to be dismissed; but one of the plaintiff's counsel said that he was a strange fellow, and sometimes went to church, sometimes to conventicles, and none could tell what to make of him, and it was thought he was a trimmer. At that the chancellor fired: "A trimmer!" said he; "I have heard much of that monster, but never saw one. Come forth, Mr Trimmer! turn you round, and let us see your shape!" and at that rate talked so long, that the poor fellow was ready to drop under him; but at last the bill was dismissed with costs, and he went his way. In the hall, one of his friends, asked him how he came off. "Came off!" said he; "I am escaped from the terrors of that man's face, which I would scarcely undergo again to save my life; and I shall certainly have the frightful impression of it as long as I live." Afterwards, when the prince of Orange came, and all was in confusion, this lord chancellor, being very obnoxious, disguised himself, in order to go beyond sea: he was in a seaman's garb, and drinking a pot in a cellar. This scrivener came into the cellar after some of his clients, and his eye caught that face, which made him start; and the chancellor, seeing himself eyed, feigned a cough, and turned to the wall with his pot in his hand: but Mr Trimmer went out and gave notice that he was there, whereupon the mob flowed in, and he was in extreme hazard of his life; but the lord mayor saved him, and lost himself. For the chancellor being hurried, with such crowd and and noise, before him, and appearing so dismally, not only disguised but disordered, and there having been an amity betwixt them, as also a veneration on the lord mayor's part, he had not spirit to sustain the shock, but fell down in a swoon, and not many hours after died.'*

Evelyn, who was acquainted with Jefferies, tells us, that being present at the wedding of Mrs Castle, a city lady, he met there 'Sir George Jefferies newly made chief justice of England, who, with Mr Justice Withings danced with the bride, and was exceeding merry. These great men,' adds Evelyn, 'spent the rest of the afternoon, until eleven at night, in drinking healths, taking tobacco, and talking much beneath the gravity of judges, who had but a day or two before condemned Mr Algernon Sidney.'† Sir John Reresby‡ also has left us an account of a dinner party at the house of Jefferies, while he was chancellor, at which the lord mayor and some other gentleman were present. Jefferies according to custom, drank deep at dinner and in order, as he said, to divert the company, he called for Mountfort, one of his gentlemen, who had been a comedian, and who was an excellent mimic. Mountfort was then desired to plead before them, which he did, imitating all the great lawyers of the day, to the great diversion of the lord chancellor.

* Life of Lord Guilford, vol. ii. p. 31.
† Memoirs, vol. i. p. 530.
‡ Memoirs.

The person and character of Jefferies have been thus sketched by an anonymous writer:—'He was rather above the middle stature; his complexion fair; his face well enough, though mixed with an air a little malicious and unpleasant. He was a man of tolerable sense, and had, by long practice, acquired some tolerable knowledge of the law, though, as little as it was, more than he had occasion to make use of. He had a pretty large stock of ill nature and wit, in which lay his greatest excellence, though an unenvied one. But, in short, his law and his tongue were the two best accomplishments he was master of; by the help of which he sometimes put falsehood, but more frequently truth, out of countenance.

'He spoke many pleasant things, but very few handsome ones, disgracing his wit by his intolerable railing, and mean passions; and would frequently, even upon the bench itself, fall into such heats as were not only unworthy of a judge, but even of a private man. To do him justice, he had a great deal of baseness and cruelty in his nature, having a particular delight and relish in such things as give horror to the rest of mankind.'*

On some rare occasions Jefferies did indeed display feelings approaching to kindness and gratitude. When chief justice of Chester, certain proceedings instituted against the celebrated Philip Henry, for attending a conventicle, were brought to his notice; but in this instance, at least, he manifested no desire to persecute a man whose conscientious discharge of his duty had already subjected him to much suffering. 'He did not,' says the biographer of Mr Henry, 'in private conversation, seem to applaud what was done in this matter, as was expected; whether out of a private pique against some that had been active in it, or for what other reason is not known; but it was said, he pleasantly asked some of the gentlemen, by what new law they pressed carts, as they passed upon their occasion along the road, to carry away goods distrained for a conventicle? It was also said that he spoke with some respect of Mr Henry; saying, he knew him, and his character well, and that he was a great friend of his mother's (Mrs Jefferies of Acton, near Wrexham, a very pious, good woman), and that sometimes, at his mother's request, Mr Henry had examined him in his learning, when he was a schoolboy, and had commended his proficiency. And it was much wondered at by many, that of all the times Sir George Jefferies went that circuit, though it is well enough known what was his temper, and what the temper of that divine, yet he never sought any occasion against Mr Henry, nor took the occasions that were offered, nor countenanced any trouble intended him, though he was the only non-conformist in Shropshire.'†

Mr Seward, in his collection, has preserved another anecdote favorable to the character of Jefferies. On his arrival at Taunton, previously to opening the commission for the trial of the persons concerned in Monmouth's rebellion, he was waited upon by the minister of the church of Saint Mary Magdalen, in that town, who, in a very mild manner, remonstrated with him on the barbarity of his proceedings. Jefferies listened to him with great calmness, and soon after his return to London, sent for the clergyman, and presented him to a stall in the cathedral of Bristol.*

* Life and Character of Jefferies, p. 44.

† Life of Mr Philip Henry, p. 150. ed. 1825.

* Seward's Anecdotes, vol. ii. p. 85.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

DANIEL WEBSTER'S OPINION.

We have never seen a document on the subject of Imprisonment for Debt, which corresponded so entirely with our own views as the following letter from the Hon. Daniel Webster, to the Secretary of the Prison Discipline Society at Boston. We approve of his sentiments, not because they are his, but because they are the dictates of sound sense united with humanity, regarding alike the interests of debtor and creditor, and making a just distinction between honesty and fraud.—New York Journal of Commerce.

LETTER FROM HON. DANIEL WEBSTER, DATED MAY 2, 1830.

SIR—I have received your letter of the 19th April, asking my opinion upon several questions, all relative to the subject of imprisonment for debt. I am quite willing to express my general opinions on that interesting subject, although they are not so matured as to be entitled to influence other men's judgments.—The existing laws, I think, call loudly for revision and amendment. Your first four questions seek to know what I think of imprisonment for small sums. I am decidedly against it; I would carry the exemption to debt of thirty or forty dollars at least. Individual instances of evil or hardship might, I am aware, follow from such a change; and I am persuaded the general result would be favorable, in a high degree, to industry, sobriety, and good morals, as well as to personal liberty.

You ask, in the next place, what I think of imprisonment for debt in any case where there is no evidence of fraud. Certainly I am of opinion that there should be no imprisonment for debt where it appears that no fraud has been practised or intended either in contracting the debt, or in omitting to pay it. But, then, it seems to me, that, when a man does not fulfil a lawful promise, he ought to show his inability, and to show also that his own conduct has been fair and honest. He ought not to be allowed merely to say that he cannot pay, and then to call on the creditors to prove that his inability is pretended or fraudulent. He ought to show why he does not and cannot fulfil his contract, and to give reasonable evidence that he has not acted fraudulently; and this being done, his person ought to be held no longer. In the first place, the creditor is entitled to the oath of his debtor, and, in the next place to a satisfactory explanation of any suspicious circumstances.

There are two sorts of fraud, either of which when proved, ought to prevent a liberation of the person, viz. fraud in contracting the debt, and fraud in concealing, or making way with the means of payment. And the usual provisions of the bankrupt act ought to be added, that no one should be discharged, who is proved to have lost money in any species of gaming; and I should include in this class, all adventurers in lotteries. Having tendered his oath, and made just explanation of any circumstances of suspicion, if there be such, and not having lost money by gaming, the debtor ought to be discharged at once; which answers another of your questions; for the detention of thirty days, before the oath can be taken, appears to me wholly useless.

You are pleased to ask, whether, in my judgment, Christians can, with a good conscience, imprison either other Christians or infidels. He would be very little of a Christian, I think, who should make a difference in such a case, and be willing to use a degree of severity towards Jew or Greek, which he would not use towards one of his own faith. Whether conscientious men can imprison anybody for debt, who they do not believe dishonest or fraudulent, is a question which every man, while the law allows such imprisonments, must decide for himself. In answer to your inquiry, whether I have found it necessary to use such coercion in regard to debts of my own, I have to say, that I never imprisoned any man for my own debt, under any circumstances; nor have I, in five and twenty years' professional practice, ever recommended it to others, except in cases where there was manifest proof, or violent and unexplained suspicion, of intentional fraud.

Imprisonment for debt, my dear sir, as it is now practised, is, in my judgment, a great evil; and it seems to me, an effectual remedy for the larger part of the evil is obvious.

Nineteen-twentieths of the whole of it would be relieved, in my opinion, if imprisonment for small debts were to be abolished.—That object I believe to be attainable; and to its attainment, I think, the main attention of those who take an interest in the subject should be directed. Small credits are often given, on the confidence of being able to collect the debt by the terrors of the Jail; great ones, seldom or never.

Three simple provisions would accomplish all, in my opinion, that may be considered as absolutely required to a just state of the law, respecting imprisonment for debt in Masschusetts.

1. That no imprisonment should be allowed, when the debts, exclusive of costs, did not amount to $30.

2. That there should be no necessity of imprisonment for thirty days, as preliminary to taking the poor debtor's oath; nor any longer detention than such as is necessary to give parties notice, and time to prepare for examination; and that a convenient number of magistrates, in every county, should, for the purpose of administering the oaths, be appointed by the government; and that such magistrates should be clothed with such further powers as might be thought expedient in order to enable them to make a thorough investigation of the fairness or fraud of the debtor's conduct.

3. That in cases where the debtor had been discharged, if the creditor would make oath to newly discovered evidences, proving original fraud, or to his belief that the debtor had subsequently received property, and concealed or withheld the same from his creditors, it should be competent to such creditor to have investigation of such charge, and, it made out, to have execution against the person and if not made out, that the creditor should pay the cost of the proceeding.

Other provisions might doubtless be useful; but if these three alone could be obtained, they would, in a great measure, clear the jails of debtors, and give general satisfaction, I have no doubt, to creditors.

I ought to add that the imprisonment of females in the common jails, for mere debt, is a barbarism which ought not to be tolerated.—Instances of such imprisonment, though rare, do yet sometimes occur, under circumstances that shock every human mind. In this respect, the law ought, in my judgment, to be altogether reformed

ENGLISH CASES.

COURT OF CHANCERY—JULY.

Exparte elsee in the Matter of Joiner.

When this petition was called on this morning, the following discussion ensued between the solicitor-general and Mr Montague, with reference to the system of giving retaining fees to the Gentlemen of the Bar; and, as the question is one of some public interest, and particularly to the suitors of the Court, we give the following full report of what transpired:—

The Solicitor-General said that he was instructed by a Mr Leigh, a solicitor, to appear for the petitioner. Mr Jacob and Mr Montague were on the other side. He had just suggested to his Learned Friend, Mr Montague, whether he could with propriety appear on this occasion against the petitioner. He was frequently himself placed in a very painful situation with regard to retainers. The public, he thought, was much deceived with respect to the feelings of Counsel who had received retainers. If a barrister had a retainer on one side, another person comes and gives him a retainer on the other. Nothing was more painful to a Gentleman of the Bar than to exercise his right of appearing, if he had that right, on a subsequent occasion, against a party whom he had formerly supported. He (the Solicitor General) had very often to entreat persons to take back their retaining fee under such circumstances.

The Lord Chancellor observed, that it was much to the inconvenience of Counsel to be so retained.

The Solicitor General said that he was fully sensible that it was so, but that it was also contrary to the best feelings of Gentlemen at the Bar; and the public, he was very sorry to say, was much deceived with regard to their feelings on this subject. He thought, however, that the system became one of important consideration; when a party claimed his right to act, it then became necessary to see whether that right existed or not.

The Lord Chancellor said that that was a point which he believed was never referred to the Court for its decision.

The Solicitor-General said that the objection might be taken, and it had been taken in Court.

The Lord Chancellor said that he thought that such points were generally settled by a reference to the feelings of the Bar.

The Solicitor-General said that it might be in the recollection of his Lordship, a case in which he (the Solicitor-General) was stopped upon a similar objection being taken, and the case was adjourned, that it might be referred to a Gentleman of the Bar to say for which party he should appear, both parties claiming his service.

The Lord Chancellor said that he could understand such a mode of proceeding, but he could not take upon himself to say that a Gentleman of the Bar had not a right to appear. If there was any doubt about the matter, perhaps Mr Montague would not appear until the doubt was removed.

Mr Montague said that he entertained no doubt about the matter, and he should now appear.

The Lord Chancellor said that he did not think he had any power to prevent him.

Mr Montague said that it had been decided by Lord Eldon, upon a petition presented to restrain him (Mr M.) from so acting, on which occasion he argued that the Court had nothing to do with the matter, only the Counsel themselves, and he (Lord Eldon) decided that the Court could not interfere. The regular proceeding in such cases had been followed in this case. A case was drawn and settled by both parties; that case was referred to Mr Bell, and he had declared that he (Mr M.) was at liberty to act for the party for whom he then appeared, although he had originally a retainer on the other side.

The Solicitor-General said that his Learned Friend was mistaken. The present petition arose out of his client's original petition. Mr Montague was retained on the original petition, and the question referred to Mr Bell was, the propriety of Mr Montague's appearing on a supplemental petition.

The Lord Chancellor—Has the case been mentioned to Mr Bell at all?

The Solicitor-General apprehended not.

Mr Montague said that a day or two ago Mr Leigh, who was the Solicitor-General's client, required his (Mr M.'s) services on this occasion. He (Mr M.) told him that if he would send a brief to his (Mr M.'s) chambers, he would direct another case to be laid before Mr Bell for his opinion, but Mr Leigh had not done it.

Mr Leigh said that he had not done so. He insisted, and did insist, on his right upon his retainer.

The Lord Chancellor said that the party ought not to be put to the expense of sending a brief, and also of sending a case upon it to another gentleman. That he thought was never done.

Mr Leigh said Mr Montague had made a motion to the Court in this matter, of the very same nature which was now made; he made an indorsement on his brief of the result of that application, and now he came to the Court to appear against his former clients, who presented this petition.

Mr Montague said that he was much flattered by Mr Leigh, by his being so desirous of having him as his Counsel.

Mr Leigh said he only desired what was right.

Mr Montague said that if it was desired that this case should stand over until tomorrow he had no objection.

The Lord Chancellor said that if there really existed any doubt about the strict propriety of his acting, he thought it would be better that the case should stand over until the point was settled.

The Solicitor-General thought that it ought really to stand over; all he wished was that they should proceed regularly upon the subject of their retainers, for there was a very strong feeling excited in the public mind upon this subject although, he thought, erroneously. He thought it was highly necessary that the public should be made aware of what the feelings of the Bar was upon the subject.

The Lord Chancellor said he had heard dissertations upon many and most subjects, but he never had heard of any upon retainers.

Mr Montague informed his Lordship that he had written a work upon this subject, and he would send his Lordship a copy if he would condescend to accept it. It was stated that, in the time of Queen Elizabeth, there was but one Sergeant in the Court of Common Pleas, and that he used to take fees from both sides.

The Solicitor-General said that was what often happened in cases at the Quarter Sessions.

The Lord Chancellor told Mr Montague that he thought the case ought to stand over, to have an opinion on the point, and, if possible, to have it settled.

Mr Montagu assentede, and said he would send his Lordship a copy of his book on this subject.

The Lord Chancellor said he would be glad to see it. In the meantime the case should stand over.

Here the matter ended for the present.

---

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS—NOV.

This was an action to recover the sum of 450*l.* as the price of a horse named Criterion, alleged to have been sold by plaintiff to the defendant. At the trial of the cause two letters were produced as evidence that such a sale had been made; and the defendant's Counsel having shown that the defendant knew that a few days before the same horse had been sold for 100*l.* and in the interval had received a kick from another horse; and having also proved, from the evidence of several persons, that they never considered the horse worth more than 100*l.* went to the Jury on the improbability of such a contract as that now attempted to be enforced having ever been entered into. The Jury, after considering the circumstances, gave a verdict for the defendant.

A rule had been obtained to set aside the verdict and have a new trial, and cause was now shown against it by Mr Sergeant Wilde and Mr Sergeant Adams: and the rule was supported by Mr Sergeant Taddy and Mr Sergeant Andrews.

The Chief Justice said, it seemed to him that the question here had properly gone to the Jury, and that their verdict ought not to be disturbed. The whole of the plaintiff's case consisted of two letters, which were read not as the contract between the parties, but only as evidence that such a contract had been made. He did not think the evidence sufficient for that purpose. It was utterly improbable that such a contract should have been entered into. The defendant knew that the horse had just before been purchased for 100*l.* and the two letters, which were relied on as evidence of the contract, differed from each other. In the first, the contract was spoken of as complete and absolute; in the next, it was described only as an offer. Besides this, it appeared that the defendant had, before then, paid above 100*l.* for the defendant's use, and it was quite improbable that he would make such a contract without stipulating for the payment of the money he had advanced. The whole question was one for the Jury, whose verdict in his Lordship's opinion, ought not to be disturbed.

The other Judges concurring, the rule for a new trial was discharged.

---

THE BEER BILL.—At Stockport Petty Sessions last week, informations were exhibited against ten retailers of beer, for suffering beer to be drunk or consumed on their premises after ten o'clock at night. Mr Brandt, the barrister, appeared for the defendants, and contended that, by the 14th clause of the Retail Beer Act, his clients were exempt from any penalty for consuming at that hour; for though the former part of the clause distinctly states that they shall not sell or suffer beer to be drunk after the hour of ten o'clock in the evening, yet in the penal or latter part of the clause, the law does not recognise consuming as any offence, all mention of it being omitted. On that ground the cases were dismissed.—London pap.

---

Lord Lyndhurst, the ex-chancellor, has, it is said, accepted the office of Chief Baron of the Exchequer.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

WILL.

A will made in another state, according to the laws of that state, but not according to the provisions of the laws of South Carolina, either as to real or personal property, cannot be admitted to probate in the latter state, in the first instance. Gause vs. Gause, 4 M'Cord, 436.

The decree of the ordinary against a will is not conclusive against the rights of a devisee of the lands, or of one who takes a power to sell lands, or their privies. Crosland vs. Murdock, 4 M'Cord, 217.

So, if he allows a will, his probate is not evidence against the heir at law. Ib.

An instrument in the form of a deed being voluntary, and to take effect at the death of the maker, may operate as a devise of real estate. Singleton vs. Breman, 4 M'Cord, 12.

A testator directed his real estate to be sold by his executors, and that when sold and the money collected, they should pay all his just debts and all the just debts of his son L. contracted up to the date of the will, but none that he might contract after that date. He then directed that his wife should have and enjoy all his estate, real and personal, during her life, and that at her death, one moiety should be left at her own disposal. The other moiety he directed to be put out at interest for the use and benefit of his son L., for him to receive the interest of the same annually during his natural life; and at his decease, the principal and interest of the same to be at his own disposal. The wife survived the testator, and died intestate. The son L. survived his father and mother, and died intestate, leaving the the plaintiff, his only child.

Held, that after the death of the widow, without appointment, one half of the estate vested absolutely in the son L. as next of kin, and was liable to his debts; and that as to the other half, it went to the son L. for life, and after his death without appointment to the plaintiff as next of kin to the testator, and was not liable to the debts of the testator's son L. Thomas vs. Thomas, 1 Rawle, 112.

Although land devised is not expressly charged with the maintenance of infirm children of the testator, yet, if such an intention can be clearly collected from all the parts of the will, considered in reference to the testator's circumstances, the charge will attach upon the land, and follow it into the hands of subsequent purchasers. Ripple vs. Ripple, 1 Rawle, 386.

The words 'any earthly property,' in a will, if they appear from the context not to have been intended to include real estate, will be confined to personal property. Brown vs. Dysinger, 1 Rawle, 408.

---

WITNESS.

Where a third person brings an action on an administration bond in the name of the ordinary, indorsing his name on the record, aud acknowledging himself liable for costs, the ordinary is a competent witness to prove the bond. For the record can never be given in evidence for him in any future action in which he may be individually concerned. Price vs. Gregory, 4 M'Cord, 261.

A party of record to an action cannot be examined as a witness. Vineyard vs. Brown, 4 M'Cord, 24.

Thus an executor, party to an issue of devisavit vel non, though he takes nothing by the will, is inadmissible as a witness in the cause. Ib.

The declarations of a witness, that he is interested in the event of the suit, are not per se sufficient to deprive the party by whom he is called, of the benefit of his examination. Cotchell vs. Discon, 4 M'Cord, 311.

To exclude a witness it is not enough, that he has an interest in the subject matter in litigation, but it must be an interest in the event of the particular cause. Ib.

A witness is presumed to be admissible till his incompetency is proved and either by an examination on his voire dire, or by evidence aliunde. Ib.

In a suit by the city council of Charleston for a penalty for retailing without a license, a citizen of the town, though one the corporators, is a competent witness. City Council vs. King, 4 M'Cord, 487.

An agent authorized to settle an account, and to give a note in the name of the principal for the balance, is a competent witness to prove his agency and the fact of giving the note, where suit is brought upon the note. Covington vs. Bussey, 4 M'Cord, 412.

The maker of a usurious promissory note against whom a judgment has been recovered by the indorsee (the lender) is a competent witness to prove the usury in action by such indorsee against the indorser. Recheley vs. Cheer, 4 M'Cord, 397.

Merchants, shopkeepers, &c, are permitted to prove their book-entries, although parties to the suit. Ib.

A party to a fraud is competent to prove it. Langer vs. Felton, 1 Rawle, 141.

In an action against the indorser of a promissory note, the drawer, to whom the defendant has executed a release, is not incompetent as a witness for the defendant, on the ground of interest, though he has given to the indorser a judgment and mortgage, to secure him against the indorsement. Griffith vs. Reford, 1 Rawle, 196.

But he is incompetent, (on the ground that a witness cannot impeach a writing he has given,) to prove that the consideration of the note was usurious; that the indorsee was in fact the lender, and that the security was put into a negotiable form, merely for the sake of convenience. Ib.

A legatee who has assigned his interest under a will to another person is a competent witness to prove the will, although the consideration of the assignment is a bond for a giving sum, payable to him at future day. M'Ilroy vs. M'Ilroy, 1 Rawle, 433.

---

HOUSTON SUPERIOR COURT.

Central Bank vs. H. Kendrick and his securities.

The facts in this case are as follows:

By the third section of the act of 1824, (page 90) on the subject of the Macon Bridge, certain commissioners thereof, were authorised to rent the same annually, at public outcry, to the highest bidder, taking bond and security for the faithful payment to the state of the sum for which the bridge should rent. The bridge, (which was the property of the state) was rented accordingly. In the year ———, Harvey Kendrick became the highest bidder, and the commissioners took his promissory note with security for the amount of the rent. By virtue of the act of 1828, incorporating the Central Bank, all debts due to the State were vested in said Bank, and under the authority of said act the note above mentioned was transferred to said Bank. An action has been instituted upon the note by the Bank, and the defendants have plead that the note is void, not having been taken in conformity with the statute, which requires a bond. The question to be determined is, shall the plea prevail? My opinion is, that it ought not to be sustained. The taking of a promissory note, although not in conformity with the mere letter, was certainly not violative of the spirit and object of the law. It is hardly necessary to remark, that the bond intended by the statute, was of course to be a mere money bond, viz:—a written engagement under the hands and seals of the obligor and his securities, binding themselves to pay a certain sum of money at a certain time. Now, as to the end in view, and the obligations incurred, there is no difference between such a bond and a promissory note executed by the same parties, and for the same sum, and payable at the same time.

The difference is only in the form of the undertaking; the substance is the same in each case. A promissory note is not exempt from the operation of the statute of limitations for as long a period as a bond—but in that respect, (if the maxim, 'nullum tempus occurit regi,' would not apply in a case of this kind) the taking of a note instead of a bond was beneficial to the defendants, and furnishes no ground of legitimate objection on their part. For every purpose contemplated by the legislature, the taking of a promissory note was a substantial, though not a literal compliance with the statute. For that part of the statute, which designates a bond as the security to be taken, I regard as directory to the commissioners, but not as absolutely prohibitory of every other form of security. On the part of the defendants, an attempt has been made to analogise the present case, to cases which have arisen under the statute 23d H. 6, c. 9, in relation to bail bonds. As to bail bonds, it is true the courts have freqnently adjudicated that any variance from the form and condition required by statute, is fatal; and for the obvious reason that the statute is not only imperative as to the form and condition of the security, but expressly enacts that every security other than that prescribed by the statute, shall be void—10 Co. 101—1 T. R. 418—7 T. R. 109—4 East, 568—1 Archbold's Practice, 74.

Besides, the principal object of the statute was to prevent the extortion and oppressive exactions to which defendants were often subjected by Sheriffs, Colore Officii previous to the statute. There is no analogy then between the statute 23 H. 6, and the act of 1824, under which the commissioners acted.

They are equally dissimilar in their objects and terms. One was enacted to correct abuses, and prescribes the form and requisites of a bail security, at the same time declaring every obligation different therefrom, to be void. The object of the other was to invest certain commissioners with authority to rent a certain portion of the public property. It directs them to take bond and security from the lessee for the payment of the rent, but does not inhibit them from taking any other equivalent security, nor does it declare that any security other than a bond shall be void. These are essential points of difference between the two statutes. The statute of New York on the subject of bail bonds was copied from the English statute. Hence the remarks made concerning the latter, will apply with equal force with the former, and to the cases which have occurred under it, some of which have been cited on the part of the defendants—8 John. Rep. 76—7 ib. 159. and 19 ib. 223.

That there is a well founded distinction between an imperative requisition of a statute and a clause merely directory to an officer, is illustrated even in the case of a bail bond. Thus a sheriff may take a bond with one security only notwithstanding the statute mentions securities, in the plural number—2 Saunders, 61 c.—1 Archbold's Practice, 75.

Again the, statute, 12 G. 1 c. 29, enacts that the sheriff shall take bail for the sum indorsed on the writ and no more, yet if the bond be taken for more it will not avoid it if no intention to oppress the defendant appear—2 Willes 60—1 Burr. 331—1 Arch. Pr. 74. The same distinction is supported in the case of Speak et al. vs. U. S.—9 Cranch, 28—in which the court held 'that a bond taken by virtue of the 1st section of the Embargo Law of January, 1808, was not void, though taken after the vessel had sailed by consent of parties—the statute, as to the time of taking the bond, was merely directory to the collector.' On the subject of statutory bonds generally, I am aware that the authorities go to the extent, that the insertion of conditions not authorized by law, renders such bonds void in toto—3 Wash. C. C. Rep. 10. If the point, however; were now res integra, it might be well worthy of consideration, whether it would not better comport with reason and justice that the unauthorized conditions only should be held void—1 Gallis, 86. But without engaging in that inquiry now, I will remark, that the present case does not fall witin the reason of those authorities, as no onerous or authorised conditions have been exacted from the defendants. The obligation incurred by them under their contract, is only co-extensive with that which the legislature intended to impose. The departure from the statute consists in the form, not in the substance of the contract. Where there has been a substantial compliance with the law, the want of a rigid conformity with the mere letter of a statute requiring a bond to be taken is not a fatal objection to the bond. In the case of the United States vs. Morgan et al. (3 Wash. C. C. R. 10) the court held that although the second section of the Embargo law of December, 1807, directs the bond which therein required, to be given to the collector, yet it is valid if taken to the United States—(see also U. States vs. Smith et al.—2 Hall's American Law Journal, 458.)

The case of Cole et al. vs. Gower and Piggott, 6 East, 110, has been cited on the part of the defendant. In that case, certain parish officers had taken from the putative father of a bastard child, a promissory note for an absolute sum, whereas by the statute, (6 G. 2 C. 31) they were only authorised to take security from him to indemnify the parish. Upon a suit brought upon the note, the defendants pleaded a tender of a sum less than the note called for, as the amount of the charge actually sustained by the parish. The court held that the parish officers were not authorized to make a note for an absolute sum, and that the plaintiffs could not recover beyond the amount tendered. At the first blush this case seems to be somewhat in point, but is really not so. The taking of a note for an absolute sum was not only contrary to the letter, but to the whole spirit of the law. By the statute, the liability of the putative father, was limited to the mere indemnity of the parish; but by taking a note for an absolute sum, the statutory measure of his liability was wholy disregarded, and an arbitrary one substituted. On the one hand, if the amount of the note exceeded the actual charge incurred by the parish, then more was exacted from the defendant than the law required; on the other hand, if the amount of the note was less than the actual charge, then the parish was not indemnified, and the object of the law was defeated. The proceeding too, as was justly observed by the court, was contrary to public policy, Grose, J. said, 'that the parish officers could not convert a power given to them for the mere purpose of indemnity, into a matter of bargain and speculation, upon the life and the death of the child, thereby making it the interest of the parish to get rid of the child as soon as possible.' To show the want of analogy between this case in East, and the present, it is only necessary to observe that the commissioners of the Macon bridge in taking a note, did not vary in the least degree the legal measure of the defendants, liability, and that the transaction was in no wise inconsistent with public policy.

Authorities relating to mercantile and commercial agencies have been adduced to show that an agent acting under a particular and not a general authority, cannot bind his principal beyond the extent of the authority granted—(Paley on Agency—2 John. 48, 3 T. R. 757.) This doctrine is admitted, but the present case does not fall within its limits. If the defendants were principals, seeking to avoid some act of their agent upon the ground that he had transcended his power, then the authorities cited would not be inapplicable. The commissioners, however, by taking a promissory note did not subject the state whose agents they were, to any unauthorised liability. If this were a case of private commercial agency, another principle no less true than that which has been already stated would apply. It is this—Although an agent cannot bind his principal by an act, exceeding the agent's authority, the want of such authority may be supplied by a subsequent express, or implied ratification of the act by the principal,' omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato equiparatur.'—1 Bosanquet et Puller, 316. 13 John. 367. 2 John. Ca. 424, 1 Livermore on Agency, 44. In this instance the note taken by the commissioners was accepted by the state through its proper public functionary; and under the authority of an act of the Legislature, it has been transferred and delivered to the plaintiff as an evidence of debt due to the state. Similar acts of adoption in the case of a private mercantile agency would cure any defect of authority on the part of the agent. I do not insist upon the application of this principle to the present case, but advert to it to show that the defendants can derive no aid from the law of commercial agencies.

As a general proposition, it is not denied that a special or particular authority must be strictly pursued. But in the several which have been cited on the part of the defendants, wherein the principle has been practically applied, it will be found that the rights, duties, obligations or liabilities which were attempted to be created by an undue execution of a limited authority, were in some degree variant from those, for the creation of which, the power was given. Hence the decision that such an execution of a limited power is not valid. But from the manner in which the commissioners of the Macon bridge executed the authority delegated to them, no such variance results. Under the promissory note which they accepted, the right which thereby accrued to the state, and the obligation and liability incurred by the maker, were exactly commensurate with those which it was the object of the statute to create, to wit, a right on the part of the state to receive—and a corresponding obligation on the part of the lessee of the bridge and his securities to pay a certain sum of money at a specified period. Reference has been made by defendant's council to a class of cases which have arisen under special statutory powers, affecting the property and vested rights of individuals without their assent. In all such cases it is admitted that a strict pursuance of the authority delegated is indispensable—1 Burr. 377, Cowp. 26, 7 T. R. 363, 3 Johns Ca. 107.

Thus it has been repeatedly determined that a collector of taxes or other officer empowered in particular cases to sell land for taxes, must strictly pursue the statutory direction in every matter which the law required to precede the exercise of the power delegated to him: and that no title is conveyed by a sale when any pre-requisite act has been omitted—4 Wheat. 77, 6 ib. 119, 4 Cranch, 402, 9 ib. 64.

It is an obvious dictate of justice, that no man shall be deprived of his property against his will, except under circumstances defined, and in the manner prescribed by law. But these decisions do not reach the case under consideration. The authority of the commissioners of the Macon bridge, was not a power affecting compulsorily, the private interests of individuals. The defendants were voluntary parties to the instrument now sought to be invalidated.

The doctrine of powers whereby estates are limited and settled, has been referred to by counsel—1 T. R. 707, Willes, 169. That doctrine, however, has but little application to a case like the present. In the case of Taylor vs. Herde et al. (1 Burr, 120,) Lord Mansfield doubtless laid down the correct rule in relation to the construction of such powers. 'The intent of the parties who gave the power ought to govern every construction. He to whom it is given, has a right to enjoy the full exercise of it—they, over whose estate it is given, have a right to say 'it shall not be exceeded.' The condition shall not be evaded; it shall be strictly pursued, in form and substance.' The reason that such powers are to be strictly pursued, is that the rights of remainder-men, or parties having reversionary interests in the estate, are connected with, and affected by the execution of such powers—a reason wholly foreign to the case before the court.

Finally, the note was given for a valuable consideration, it was voluntarily executed by the defendants—it created no right in the state, and imposed no obligation upon the defendants beyond the purview of the statute; but the right on the one hand, and corrective obligation on the other, are the same as would have arisen under the security mentioned in the statute. I hold, therefore, that the commissioners substantially executed their power, and that the note is not void.

LUCIUS Q. C. LAMAR.

Whereupon, it is ordered, that the rule Nisi for a new trial, in this case, be discharged, and that the execution do proceed.

C. B. STRONG, Judge.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1831.

Tillinghast's Edition of Adams on Ejectment.—The revised statutes of New York have made a sweeping provision on the subject of real actions, having substituted ejectment for all other actions to try claims relating to real property. P. 3, 4, 5, tit. 1, s. 1 and 2. Vol. 2. p. 303. The provisions are as follows, s. 1: 'The action of ejectment is retained and may be brought in the cases and manner hereafter accustomed, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained.' S. 2. 'It may also be brought in the same cases in which a writ of right may now be brought by law, to recover lands, tenements, or hereditaments; and by any person claiming an estate therein, in fee or for life, either as heir, devisee, or purchaser.' S. 2. 'By any widow entitled to dower, or by a woman so entitled, and her husband, after the expiration of six months from the time of her right accruing, to recover her dower of lands, tenements, or hereditaments.' And again, Part 3, c. 5. tit. 7, s. 24. vol. 2, p. 343: 'All writs of right, writs of dower, writs of entry and writs of assize, all fines and common recoveries, and all other real actions known to the common law, not enumerated and retained in this chapter, and all other writs and other process heretofore used in real actions, which are not specifically retained in this chapter, shall be and they hereby are abolished.' The real actions enumerated and retained in the chapter are waste and nuisance. But these provisions will make no great alteration in the practice as far as the form of action is concerned, that of ejectment having, as our readers very well know, been in general use there as in England, to try titles to real estate. One alteration made by the revised statutes we are glad to see, to wit, the absolute proscription and outlawry of 'Jackson ex dem.' the legal representative of the Roe ex dem. of the English reports, to whom all the lands of England have heretofore been demised and to farm let for these many years past, but who was notwithstanding by no means a great land-holder, for no sooner was an interest in real estate at any time granted to him, than one Casual Ejector, a pestilent persecutor of Doe, was instantly upon him with an ouster, and has been, time out of mind, and still is, chasing him from place to place, all over England, never giving him a moment's rest in the possession of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments whatsoever. And so it has fared with Jackson ex dem. his representative in the state of New York. But to settle the matter, both he and Casual Ejector, his tormentor, have been banished from that state forever, by p. 3, c. 5, tit. 1, s. 6, of the revised statutes, whereby it is enacted, that 'the use of fictitious names of plaintiffs or defendants, and of the name of any other than the real claimants and the real defendants, and the statement of any lease or demise to the to the plaintiff, and of an ejectment by a casual or nominal ejector are hereby abolished.'

These innovations render Mr Tillinghast's new edition of Adams on Ejectment very opportune. To the last London edition the editor has added one hundred and thirty or forty English, and seventeen or eighteen hundred American cases.—Jurist.

---

Examination of Parties in Civil Suits.—Lord Wynford, better known as Mr Chief Justice Best, of the Common Pleas, has introduced into the British House of Lords a proposition to abridge the expense of testimony in lawsuits, by subjecting the parties to examination on interrogatories, as is already done in chancery and in trials before the commissioners of bankruptcy. The testimony by witnesses and all the proceedings in the trial would thus be narrowed down to the questions actually in dispute.

In regard, at least, to actions ex contractu this practice would suppress such a mass of litigation, —would tend so effectually to prevent surprise and circumvention,—would so materially reduce the expense of trials,—and is, withal, so just between the parties, that we are only surprised at its not having been long since universally introduced in England and the United States. This practice is, as we see by the trial of the French ex-ministers, adopted in criminal trials in France.

Revival of County Courts in England.—Mr, now Lord Chancellor, Brougham is also pressing the measure of establishing county courts, distinct from the assizes held by the judges of Westminster Hall, with a jurisdiction in actions of debt, for sums not exceeding £100, and in actions for damages for tort, not exceeding £50. This he considers not so much an innovation as the restoration of the old county courts, which originally had jurisdiction of claims under 40*s.* equal, in the opinion of Chief Justice Hale, to £10 in his time, and, in that of Lord Brougham, to £40 at the present time. He proposes that the experiment shall first be made in only two counties.—Ib.

---

IMPORTANT TO STAGE OWNERS.—An interesting case was yesterday, 14th inst. decided in the Supreme Court of this State, sitting in this City. It was a prosecution against the proprietors of the Providence and Boston Citizens' line. The plaintiff took passage in one of their coaches, and on Boston neck, was overturned, thrown under the carriage, had his leg severely fractured and was otherwise injured. An action for damages resulted yesterday, in a verdict for the plaintiff of Fifteen Hundred Dollars.

The counsel for the defendants argued that the overturning of the coach was an accident, which no care could have avoided, and the injury was owing to the carelessness of the plaintiff.

The Judge in his charge very clearly pointed out the responsibilities of proprietors of stages.—They are bound to prepare proper accommodations for passengers; to have good and sufficient coaches, horses, harness and drivers—to keep them always in such repair that full dependence can properly be placed upon them—and in case of the overturning of the coach, running away of the horses; breaking of the harness or breaking down of the carriage, and injury thereby occurring to passengers, the proprietors are liable, unless they can prove the accident to have arisen from causes wholly without the control of the driver.—But it is not suffcient that the agents of the proprietors are properly directed; they must carry their orders into execution. If a carriage break down while upon a smooth road, the presumption in law (as laid down by the judge) is, that it arose from neglect on the part of the owner of the stage, and the burden of proof lies with the stage proprietor to rebut the charge.

The result of this case is of great importance to the public whether interested in stages as proprietors or passengers. Decisions have been made in England which have established the principle of reponsibilities of stage and steam boat owners: but we have now for the first time a decisive opinion upon this subject and learn the law in this Commonwealth to be the same in this respect as that of England. Accidents in steam boats and stages have become too frequent, and it is full time that the public are informed that the law will afford them some relief against the carelessness of stage drivers and steam boat engineers. Loss of a limb, or a maim for life, it is true, cannot be compensated by pecuniary restitution: but as great expense and loss of time are always attendant upon extensive injuries, it is some satisfaction to know that a remedy in law lies against the employer of reckless drivers.—Traveller.

---

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

American Jurist and Law Magazine, No. IX.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Address of Chief Justice Shaw—An Address delivered before the Bar of Berkshire, by Lemuel Shaw, on his first taking his seat as Chief Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, September Term, 1830.

II. Written and Unwritten Systems of Laws—De la Codification en general, et de celie de l'Angleterre en particulier en une serie de lettres addresses a M. C. P. Cooper, A vocal Anglais. par J. D. Meyer, Chevalier de l'ordre Royal du Lion Belgique, &c, &c.

III. Corporators' Liability Laws—Opinion on the constitutionality of the Massachusetts Statutes of 1808, c. 65, 1817, c. 183, and 1821, c. 38, rendering the members of manufacturing corporations personally liable on the contracts of the corporation, and subjecting their property to attachment as mesne process, and their persons liable to arrest and imprisonment, and their property liable to be seized and sold on executions in actions against such corporations.

IV. Opinion of the Right of Set-Off.

V. Angell on Limitations—A Treatise on the Limitation of Actions at Law, and Suits in Equity. To which is added an Appendix, containing an Abstract of the Statutes of Limitation of the several States, Brook's Reading upon the Statute of Henry VIII. &c. By Joseph K. Angell.

VI. Legislation on Banking.

VII. Rules of Evidence, No. II—Incompetency of Witnesses from Infamy of Character. Digest of Recent Decisions—Principal Cases in Wendell's Reports, vols. 2, 3 and 4. Legislation, Maine—Short Reviews and Notices. Tillinghast's Forms and Precedents—Tillinghast's Edition of Adams on Ejectment—Goodwin's New England Sheriff—Eunomous' Letters on British Law Reform—Juridical Letters addressed to the Right Hon. Robert Peel, in reference to the present crisis of Law Reform, Lettters I. and II. By Eunomous—Intelligence and Miscellany.—Shipper's Lien on the Ship for Damage to the Goods—Cases in the General Court of Virginia, November, 1830—Examination of Parties in Civil Suits—Revival of County Courts in England—New Judges in Westminster Hall and new Regulations as to Writs of Error and Bail—Judge Barbour's Valedictory to his Constituents—Rules of Chancery Practice in Maine—Georgia and the Cherokees—List of Judges—Quarterly List of Law Publications.

A General Collection of Forms and Precedents of Process, Entries, and Pleadings, in Civil Actions at Law; adapted to the Revised Statutes of New York. By John L. Tillinghast, Counsellor at Law.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

LIBRARY OF EDUCATION. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN,

The Library of Education, Vol. I.—Containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education,' By John Locke, and a 'Treatise of Education,' by John Milton, with an Appendix, containing Locke's Memoranda on Study. Edited by Wm. Russell, late editor of the Journal of Education.

Extract from the Preface.

'The present volume is intended to form one of a series of standard treatises on the subject of Education. The work now commenced will, it is hoped, form a useful source of information to parents and teachers; furnishing to the latter a sort of professional library, to which individuals may resort for assistance in the labor of instruction, and offering to the former an aid to the formation of just and extensive views of the whole scope of education, as well as a preparation for cooperating with instruction, in their exertions for the mental advancement of the young.' Jan. 1.

WHITMAN'S LETTERS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, 'Two Letters to Rev. Moses Stuart,' on Religious Liberty, occasioned by his Letter to Rev. Wm. E. Channing. By Bernard Whitman. Jan. 1.

SIXTY MAPS of the various countries of the Globe, from the Epitome of Universal Geography. For sale at GRAY & BOWEN'S, 141 Washington Street. Price 50 cents, bound. Jan. 1.

PARLEY'S ASIA. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, Peter Parley's Tales about Asia, with a Map and numerous Engravings. This is designed as a fourth volume in a series of Geographical and Historical Tales for Children. Tales of America, Europe, and Africa, have already been published. Tales of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, Tales of the Sea, and Tales of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, will complete the series. These three last are in a state of forwardness.

GRAY & BOWEN, have just published, TALES OF TRAVELS West of the Mississippi, with a Map and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. This volume is the first of a series which is intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—
Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.
Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.
Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.
Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.
Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.
Peter Parley's Geography for Children. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, an APPENDIX to the American Almanac, for the year 1831, being the latter part of the fiftyfifth, and the beginning of the fiftysixth year of the Independence of the United States.

Extract from the Preliminary Observations on the Astronomical Department of the American Almanac.

The Appendix is intended to answer all the essential purposes of a Nautical Almanac, and the insertion therein of the distances of the Moon from the Planets, and of the proportional logarithm of the difference between the distances, it is hoped, will be found an improvement on any Almanac hitherto published. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLII. for December, 1830.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Classes of American Society.—1. A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, first delivered Oct. 6, before the Charlestown Lyceum, and published at their request. By Edw. Everett. 2. Mr Tuckerman's Second Semiannual Report of the Fourth Year of his Services as a Minister at Large in Boston.

II. The Jews.—The History of the Jews, from the Earliest Period to the Present time. By Rev. H. H. Milman.

III. Wheaton's Travels.—A Journal of a Residence during several months in London; including Excursions through various Parts of England; and a short Tour in France and Scotland, in the Years 1823 and 1824. By Nathaniel S. Wheaton, A. M.

IV. English Unitarian Methodists. An Account of the Rise and Progress of the Unitarian Doctrine, in the Societies at Rochdale, Newchurch in Rosendale, and other Places, formerly in Connexion with the late Rev. Joseph Cooke. In Ten Letters to a Friend. By John Ashworth.

V. Life of Mohammed.—The Life of Mohammed; Founder of the Religion of Islam, and of the Empire of the Saracens. By the Rev. George Bush, A. M.

VI. Anderson's Tour in Greece.—Observations upon the Peloponnesus and Greek Islands, made in 1829. By Rufus Anderson, one of the Secretaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Jan. 22.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The North American Review, No. LXX. for January, 1831.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Statuary—Del' arte di vedere nelle belle arte del desegno, secondo i Principii di Sulzer e di Mengs.

II. Bank of the United States—Report of the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred so much of the Message of the President, as relates to the Bank of the United States.

III. Anatomy—Address to the Community on the Necessity of legalizing the Study of Anatomy. By order of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

IV. Clarence—A Tale of our own Times. By the Author of Redwood.

V. Hieroglyphics—Essay on the Hieroglphic System of M. Champollion, Jr, and on the advantages which it offers to Sacred Criticism. By J. G. H. Greppo, Vicar General of Belley. Translated from the French, by Isaac Stuart, with Notes and Illustrations.

VI. American System—1. Report from the Committee on Commerce to whom was referred so much of the President's Message, as relates to the Commerce of the United States with Foreign Nations, &c. 2. A Review of Mr Cambreleng's Report from the Committee of Commerce. By Mephistopheles. 3. Exposition and Protest reported by the Special Committee of the House of Representatives on the Tariff. 4. Mr McDuffie's Speech in the House of Representatives on the Bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures for the more faithful Collection of the Revenue.

VII. Grahame's History of the United States—The History of the Rise and Progress of the United States of N. America till the British Revolution in 1688. By James Grahame, Esq.

VIII. Memoirs of Madame De Genlis—Memoires Inedits de Madame la Comtesse de Genlis sur le dixhuitieme siecle et a Revolution Francoise, depuis 1756, jusqu' a nos jours.

IX. Phillips' Manual of Political Economy, with particular reference to the Institutions, Resources and Condition of the United States. By Willard Phillips.

X. History of the Jews—History of the Jews from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Rev. H. H. Milman. Jan. 22.

GRAY AND BOWEN, have just received, No. 1, of SURGICAL ANATOMY OF THE ARTERIES, with plates and illustrations. By Nathan R. Smith, M. D. Professor of Surgery in the University of Maryland. January 1.

MALTE-BRUN SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY.—This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK, The Malte-Brun School Geography, illustrated by numerous original engravings, and an Atlas of 19 Maps, Charts, and Tables. By S. Griswold Goodrich. Jan. 1.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES. GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

Nos. 13 and 14, North American Series.

These numbers contain articles on Motion of Fluids—Iron Brestramers—Caoutchouc—Liverpool and Manchester Railway—Weight and Pressure in Ships of War—Steam Canal Navigation—Improved Electrical Apparatus—Stephenson's Locomotive Engine—On Flying—Mariner's Life Grapple—Marine Steam Engine—Perpetual Motion, &c, &c; with very numerous engravings. Subscriptions received as above. Feb. 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVI.

CONTENTS.

Art. 1. Mill's Phenomena of Mind. 2. Tytler's and Scott's Histories of Scotland. 3. Memoirs, Correspondence, and Papers of Thomas Jefferson. 4. Niebuhr's Geography of Herodotus. 5. Galt's Southennan. 6. Floods in Morayshire. 7. Troades of Euripides. 8. The Belgian Insurrection, and De Potter's Trial. 9. Alexander's Travels. 10. London Bridge. 11. Hydrophobia. 12. Mr Brougham and Local Judicatories. 13. Novels and Travels in Turkey. 14. The Three Days of Paris. 15. Brasse's Sophocles. 16. Geometry without Axioms. 17. Revolution of 1830. List of Books, Index, &c. Jan. 22.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

WORKING MEN'S PARTY. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, delivered before the Charlestown Lyceum, October 6, 1830. By Edward Everett.

EVENTS IN PARIS, during the 26, 27, 28, and 29th of July, 1830. By several eye witnesses. Translated from the fourth Paris edition. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1831. NO. XXXI.

JUDGE JACKSON'S OPINION,

AS TO THE MODE OF ADJUSTING PARTIAL LOSSES IN CERTAIN CASES.

A question has lately arisen among the Insurance Companies in Boston, as to the mode of adjusting a partial loss on a ship when the old materials or a part of them have been saved. It is said that the uniform practice in this town has been, first to deduct from the cost of the repairs the allowance of one third, new for old, and from the balance to deduct the value of the old materials, and that the residue is the amount for which the insurers are liable: and this is said to be the usage in most, if not all, of the commercial States in Europe. It appears however that our Supreme Judicial Court in a late case (Brooks v. The Oriental Insurance Company of Salem) which is not yet reported, have decided that the value of the old materials must first be deducted from the costs of the repairs, and the allowance of the one third be made only on the balance. A like decision was made in New York in the year 1823, 1 Cow. Rep. 265, Byrnes v. The National Insurance Company; and this opinion was adopted as the settled law by Chief Justice Savage in the case of Dickey v. The New York Insurance Co. 4 Cow. Rep. 222, 245. Chancellor Kent also in his Commentaries, 3. 283, states the law in the same way, but without citing any authority, probably considering the point as settled by the two cases in Cowen's Reports.

Under these circumstances several of the Insurance Companies in Boston have proposed to present this question anew to the consideration of the court; and they wish for an opinion upon it, considered as an open question, independently of the authority of any decisions or usage.

The Boston policies, in the clause containing the enumeration of the perils insured against, after specifying the seas, fire, enemies, &c, add, 'and all other losses and misfortunes which have or shall come to the damage of the said ship, &c, to which assurers are liable by the rules and customs of Assurance in Boston.' The insurance companies therefore inquire, 2dly. Whether this clause, coupled with the uniform practice or custom above mentioned, will not settle the question on all policies effected in this town, whatever may be the general rule of law.

OPINION.

From the sketch which I have seen of the opinion of the court in the case of Brooks v. The Oriental Insurance Company, it does not appear whether this question was fully argued, and deliberately considered by the court; or whether it was hastily decided as a point already settled by the two cases in New York. However that may have been, as the point has never been considered but once in our court, it is no proof of disrespect to present it again for a revision by the same court. In New York also, it may be said to have been argued and considered but once only; as in the second case the point was not at all discussed, but was taken for granted; and if those decisions are opposed to the common usage and the opinions of practical men, in this country and in Europe, it ought not perhaps to be deemed presumptuous if the insurers attempt to obtain a removal of them. I presume therefore that the court would have no objection to see the question brought again before them, and that they would readily give it a new examination.

When in repairing a ship her old rigging or other materials are replaced by new, it must generally happen that the ship is better than she was before the accident; and therefore if the assured recover the whole expense of the repairs he will be more than indemnified. If we could always ascertain exactly the extent to which the value of the ship was increased, we ought to deduct that amount from the sum paid for the repairs, and the balance (when there is no salvage) would be the real amount of the loss to the assured. If he receive more or less than that balance, he receives so much more or less than an indemnity. But as it is difficult, and sometimes impossible to ascertain precisely the amount of this increase in value, the law has assumed one third as the difference in all cases between the new and the old materials; and if the fact always corresponded with this legal presumption, I believe there would never have been any doubt on the question now under consideration. The sum which goes to increase the value of the ship is obviously not paid to repair the damages caused by the perils of the seas; that sum therefore should always be first deducted, and the residue of the expenses is the amount of the actual loss, when there is no salvage. If there is anything saved from the old materials and sold, and the proceeds applied to pay for the repairs, this does not alter the proportion previously existing between the value of the ship before the accident, and her value after the repairs. If fifteen hundred dollars are expended in repairs, and her value is thereby increased five hundred dollars, it can make no difference whether the fifteen hundred dollars is received from one source or another; whether part of it is derived from the sale of the old materials, or the whole advanced by the assured or his agents. The allowance therefore, on account of the increased value, should always be made on the gross amount expended for repairs.

The proportion of one third new for old, established by law, however convenient and just as a rule of practice, is often very far from the truth; and it is, I think, by imagining and stating strong cases arising out of that rule, that so much obscurity and doubt have been thrown on the other rule, which respects the manner of making or deducting the allowance.

If, in stating a case, we take in one part of our statement, the increased value at one third, as established by law, and in another part we take the increased value according to the fact, as for example, at one sixth, it is not surprising that the result should appear to be incorrect and unjust. But if, as before observed, the fact corresponds with the presumption; or if, in settling the present question, we look only to the fact, and disregard the presumption; or, thirdly, if we adhere to the presumption throughout the whole of the case, I believe it will appear that the rule which I am recommending will in every instance give to the assured a complete indemnity and no more.

Let us suppose for example, that the ship loses a cable which is one third worn, and which in that state is worth two hundred dollars; and this is immediately replaced with a new cable which costs three hundred dollars. The loss is two hundred dollars, and if the assurer pay that sum, the assured is fully indemnified. If after this payment, the old cable should be recovered, and taken by the assured for his own use, it is obvious that he would receive more than an indemnity. But if the assurer takes it to his own account, the assured is still indemnified. He has lost nothing in consequence of the cable being fished up, and delivered to the assurer, and as he was indemnified before, he is not the less so now. If the cable, when thus restored to the assurer, is still worth the 200 dollars, the latter will have lost nothing; and this is as it should be, because in the events which have happened there has been no loss. If it had been recovered in like manner and restored uninjured to the assured before the purchase of the new cable, it is obvious that he would have sustained no loss; and it does not alter the amount of the actual damage sustained by the ship, whether the cable is thus recovered before, or after an adjustment of the loss. So if the cable, instead of being slipped, had parted in a storm, so that when recovered it was worth only half of what it was before, say 100 dollars; the assurer having paid the 200 dollars towards the cost of the new cable, would be entitled to the 100 dollars for which the old cable was sold, or else the assured would receive more than an indemnity. Then suppose in this latter case that the old cable had been recovered and sold by assured before purchasing the new cable, it would make no difference in the amount of his actual loss, nor in the sum due from the assurer. He would still have (as before) a new cable, worth 100 dollars more than his old one; and he would receive 200 dollars for the loss of that old one; and the assurer in both cases ought to pay eventually but 100 dollars, which is the actual amount of the loss. It is then evident that when the fact corresponds with the legal presumption, and the value of the old materials at the time of the accident is exactly two thirds that of the new, the allowance of new for old should be made from the whole cost of the repairs, and the proceeds of the old materials should be deducted from the balance, in order to give to the assured an exact indemnity and no more.

We shall find that this rule will lead to the same result, whatever may be the proportion between the value of the old and the new materials, provided that value be estimated alike in every stage of the adjustment. Suppose for example that the cable is half worn at the time of its loss, and is then worth 150 dollars, and that it is replaced with a new one worth 300 dollars. The loss to the assured is obviously 150 dollars, and if it were not for the rule as to the one third, the assurer would pay 150 dollars, and the assured would be fully indemnified. If the old cable was afterwards recovered, and the assurer should take it or the proceeds of the sale of it, the assured would still remain fully indemnified. So if the old cable at the time of the loss had been only one sixth worn, and worth 250 dollars, and it had been replaced with a new one worth 300, the loss to the assured would have been 250 dollars, and, but for the rule as to the one third, he would be entitled to this sum. Suppose he had received it, and the old cable had been afterward recovered and delivered to the assurer, the assured would still have had his indemnity and no more. If in this latter case the old cable had been broken by the accident, so that it was worth only 125 dollars when recovered, this sum, whether received by the assured or the assurers, would reduce the actual loss from 250 dollars to 125.

If in the preceding case the allowance to the assurer on the account of new for old, instead of one sixth, according to the fact, had been one third, according to the legal presumption, and the assurer had accordingly paid only 200 dollars towards the loss, it is evident that the assured would receive less than an indemnity by the sum of 50 dollars: and this would be his condition whether the old cable were recovered or not.—This injustice to the assured arises from the operation of the general rule as to new for old, and not from any disposition of the salvage, because this is his condition when there is no salvage. If then the cable in this latter case is afterwards recovered, and is taken by the assurer, it is true that he gets 50 dollars more than he had paid, and more than he is equitably entitled to. But he would have gained, or saved, this same sum of 50 dollars if there had been no salvage; that is, by paying 50 dollars less than was equitably due from him. This gain therefore to the assurer arises not from the manner of disposing and accounting for the salvage, but from the operation of the rule as to the one third.

So in the other case above stated, where the cable was half worn, the assurer would be required by the rule to pay 200 dollars, although the real loss was only 150 dollars, and the assured would receive 50 dollars more than an indemnity; and if the old cable should be afterwards recovered and taken by the assurer, he would still have paid 50 dollars more than was equitably due from him. In this case the rule operates unjustly on the assurer, as in the other it did on the assured; but in both it is attributable to the cause before mentioned; and the result does not tend in any measure to impeach the justice and equity of the principle which I am endeavoring to establish.

I have supposed a simple case, of the loss of one article only, for the more convenient illustration of my views, but the principle will equally apply to the most complicated cases. Suppose for example that a ship is dismasted, and that it costs 1500 dollars to repair her. If her masts and rigging were one third worn and decayed at the time of the accident, the loss to the owner, if there were no salvage, would be 1000 dollars. But some of the spars and rigging, having been saved at the time of the disaster, though not in a condition to be used in the repairs, are sold by the owner for 500 dollars; and the consequence is, that, instead of 1500 dollars, he advances out of his own pocket only 1000 dollars for the repairs. Still his ship is worth 500 dollars more than it was before, and therefore his loss in the latter case is only 500 dollars: and if he receives more than this he gets so much more than an indemnity.

If the loss in this latter case were adjusted according to the rule adopted in Byrnes v. The National Insurance Company, the 500 dollars proceeds of the old materials would be deducted from the 1500, the whole cost of the repairs, and the allowance of one third would be made on the balance, making 333 dollars only; when according to the fact, and according to the legal presumption also, the ship was really increased in value by the sum of five hundred dollars. It is no answer, to say that the 500 dollars, proceeds of the old materials, was not the property of the assurer. It is not the less true, that the ship is worth $500 more than she was before the disaster, and that the assured has advanced and expended only 1000 dollars in making her so, and has therefore lost only 500 dollars; and if he receives 666 dollars as he would upon the New York rule, he gets 166 dollars more than an indemnity.

But if it were necessary to the argument, I think it would not be difficult to maintain the proposition, that the old materials are, to certain purposes, the property of the assurer. If he has paid the full amount of the loss, and the materials are afterwards recovered, it is evident from some of the cases first stated above, that the assurer alone is entitled to them, unless the assured can claim more than an indemnity. So if they are recovered before the adjustment of the loss, they are applied, either specifically or by the proceeds of their sale, to reduce the amount which the assurer must otherwise have paid for the repairs. If part of a cargo is lost, and after the loss is paid by the assurer, the lost articles are recovered, would any one doubt that those articles would belong to the assurer? And yet there is not in that case any actual and formal abandonment of the lost articles of the cargo, no more than there is in the other case, of the old materials of the ship. So in the case of a partial loss of the cargo, if the articles are recovered before the adjustment of the loss, they are sold and the proceeds are applied to reduce the amount which the assurer must otherwise have paid.

It is in fact a contradiction in terms, to call the salvage, (that is, what is saved,) a part of the loss. Thus in the case last put of the dismasted ship, the old spars and rigging to the value of $500 were never lost, and are not paid for by the insurer. The real loss is $500; that being the sum necessary (with the $500 saved from the old materials) to make the ship as good as she was before the accident. But in thus repairing her, the assured does in fact make her $500 better than before. For this latter sum therefore he has no claim on the insurer, but must pay it himself. It still appears, therefore, in whatever light the subject is viewed, that in order to give the assured an indemnity and no more, we must first deduct from the cost of the repairs, the amount by which the value of the ship is increased, and then deduct from the balance the amount of the salvage. If this rule ever appears to operate unjustly, it is only because we adopt in one part of the statement the legal presumption, that the increased value is one third of the expense of the repairs, while in another part we consider it as either more or less than that proportion. Thus in the case of the cable above stated, when it is considered as one sixth worn in ascertaining the value of the salvage, it ought to be considered as one sixth worn in adjusting the amount originally payable by the assurer, and so, if it is one half worn in one part of the calculation, it ought to be computed at the same rate in every other part. In other words, as we are obliged by the established rule to consider the increased value as always amounting to one third of the expense of the repairs, we ought to adopt the same supposition throughout, and not to suppose a case where old materials, if all saved, would exceed, or fall short of, that sum. This legal presumption would be as near the truth in one case as the other; and would not be more unjust in its operation when there is a salvage to be disposed of, than when it is applied solely to the allowance of new for old, in paying for the repairs.

If the old materials, instead of being sold, are used in making the repairs, the assurers claim no allowance on that part of the repairs, because, so far as those materials are used, the ship is no stronger nor better than before. Take for example the case above stated of the dismasted ship, and suppose that the old spars and rigging, which are one third worn and decayed, are all worked up in the repairs, and that in adddition to this, the assured pays 1000 dollars for the repairs. Whether we estimate the increased value of the ship according to the fact, or according to the legal presumption, we shall allow nothing on account of these old materials; and the allowance of new for old, in either case, will be one third of the 1000 dollars paid for the repairs.

There is one other case which I will consider briefly, not as differing in principle from one that I have already mentioned, but because it has been urged as exhibiting in a strong light the supposed injustice and even absurdity of the rule which I am endeavoring to establish. It is the case of a new ship, which on going out of the harbor on her first voyage is driven ashore and caused to leak badly, and is obliged to return into port to repair. It is necessary to take off a part of her copper to find the leak, which is then discovered to have arisen from the starting of a butt. The butt is bolted anew and secured at an expense of ten dollars; but the copper which was taken off cannot be used again, and it is replaced with new copper; the whole expense of the repairs amounting to 600 dollars. The assurer according to the established rule pays only 400 dollars, and if he is entitled to the copper which was stripped off, he may even be a gainer; because the old copper has lost nothing of its weight, and is worth as much as it was before excepting only the expense and waste of melting and rolling it out anew.—Now the whole injustice and absurdity in this case arises, not from assurer's receiving the old copper, but from the assured's receiving only 400 dollars when he has really lost 600. His ship after the repairs is worth no more than she was before the disaster; but as the law presumes that she is worth more by 200 dollars, it deprives him of his indemnity to that amount. This loss of the assured is not enhanced, nor is the injustice aggravated, by the amount which the assurer may receive from the salvage. If the assurer should receive nothing from that source, still the assured will have lost 200 dollars; and if the assurer finally realizes 500 dollars from the salvage, still the loss of the assured remains the same. I repeat, therefore, that the injustice and absurdity, if there be any, arises not from the amount of the salvage, or the manner in which it is disposed of, but from the operation of the rule which allows in all cases one third, new for old, and by which in the case supposed, the assured receives two hundred dollars less than a full indemnity.

The last case is one that will not often occur; and when it does the assured, not being in any case compellable to call on the assurer, may pay all the expenses and retain the salvage to his own use. If on stating his account of the transaction, he finds on the one side an expense and real loss of 600 dollars, and on the other a salvage of 450; but the law will not allow him to state his loss at more than 400, while the salvage still remains 450 dollars; he will see that although he has in fact lost 150 dollars, yet he can recover nothing of the assurer, and he will make no demand upon him.

There is one other objection that may be made to the rule which I am advocating, which it may be well to answer before concluding this opinion. It often depends on the discretion or will of the master, whether to sell the old materials, or to use them in the repair of the ship; and it may be said that if he sells them, he will, by the operation of this rule, give one third part of the proceeds to the assurer; whereas if he uses them in the repairs, the whole will go to the benefit of the assured, and the assurer will have no allowance on account of those materials. I answer that if the old materials are sold, suppose for 500 dollars and that sum, together with 1000 more, is expended in repairing the ship with new materials, the ship is better by the difference in value between the old and the new, which in the case above stated we have supposed to be one third; and therefore if the assured does not pay one third of the expense of the repairs, he gets more than an indemnity. On the other hand, if the old materials are all worked up in the repairs, and the whole additional expense is only 100 dollars, the ship, as far as the old materials are used, is no better than before, and her value is increased only by the difference between the new materials, included in the 1000 dollars, and the old for which these are substituted. In this case therefore, the allowance of the one third must be made only on the 1000 dollars, or else the assured will not get his full indemnity. The fallacy of the argument on which the objection is founded consists in considering the old materials, when thus used in repairs, as worth precisely 500 dollars, and yet as being no more in number and quantity than new materials that would cost 500 dollars; whereas if they are one third worn, and yet are equal in value to the new, they must contain fifty per cent more in quantity. Suppose, for example, that thirty hundred weight of old rigging, one third worn, is used in the repair; no allowance should be made for this, because it is no better than it was before. But if this old rigging had been sold, the proceeds of the sale would purchase only twenty hundred weight of new rigging; and if no more than this is used in the repairs, the ship is no better than before; because, though she has new rigging, which is fifty per cent better than the old, yet she has in the same proportion less in quantity. But if the master sells the thirty hundred weight of old rigging, and purchases an equal quantity of new, he must pay for it fifty per cent more than the old produces; and as the old is replaced by new, the assured must allow for the difference. The fallacy consists, as before observed, in supposing the two parcels of rigging when equal in quantity, to be also equal in value.

On the whole, therefore, if this were a new question which had never been judicially considered and decided, I should feel the fullest confidence in the opinion, that the allowance for the increased value of the ship after being repaired, should first be deducted from the whole expense of the repairs, and from the balance should be deducted the proceeds of the sale of the old materials and the residue would be the amount for which the assurer is liable.

2d. As to the second question, I think there is no doubt that 'the rules and customs of assurance in Boston,' thus referred to in the policy, do in effect constitute a part of the contract; and, when proved, will be considered as if they had been inserted in words at length in the policy. But these rules and customs are not referred to as prescribing the mode in which a partial loss shall be adjusted; but rather, as it appears to me, for the purpose of ascertaining whether any loss has happened for which the assurers are liable. The words are introduced in the clause which enumerates the perils insured against, in which after specifying 'the seas, fire, enemies,' &c, it is said, 'and all other losses and misfortunes, &c, to which assurers are liable by the rules and customs of assurance in Boston.' This clause may enlarge the list of perils to which the assurers are liable, and may include some which are not specifically mentioned in the policy; but it cannot, I apprehend, affect the mode of adjustment of those losses and perils that are included.

In the present case there is no question as to the nature of the loss, as it is supposed to be by the peril of the seas, which are expressly mentioned in the policy. The only question is, how the loss shall be adjusted; and for this, it appears to me that we are not referred to the rules and customs in Boston, but that we must resort to the general principles of the law, which govern in all other parts of the country.

CHA'S. JACKSON.

To Samuel A. Wells,
President of the Atlas Insurance Company.
Boston, July 7, 1829.

JUDGE LAW'S OPINION.

Has the State of Georgia a right to extend its laws over the territory occupied by the Cherokee Indians, within its chartered limits, so as to control the conduct of all persons within that territory?

The question thus submitted for consideration is confined within very narrow limits.—The effect upon the Indians of birth and residence within the territorial limits of the State, in working the destruction of their separate independent existence as a tribe or nation, and subjecting them to the laws of the State; the compatibility of the existence of a separate and independent people within the territorial limits of another, with the idea of complete sovereignty in that other—these are questions about which there might be room for a difference of opinion, but which are not involved in that submitted. Neither does it require me to enter into the inquiry of the policy, justice or propriety of the extension of the State laws so as to embrace the Indians. But the abstract question of the right in the State so to legislate as to control the conduct of all persons within its territorial limits, appears to me, susceptible only of an affirmative answer, unless the State has parted with some portion of the essential attributes of its own sovereignty. The complete ultimate title to, and dominion of the territory in question, was vested in the Crown of Great Britain upon the principle, which regulated the nations of Europe, that discovery upon the American continent gave title. As between Great Britain and the natives, the relation permitted to exist was the dictate of the will of the former, upon the principle that the conqueror prescribes its own limits. By the treaty of peace between Great Britain and the United States, 'the powers of Government and the right of soil' were relinquished to the States. The powers of Government are co-extensive with the right of soil. The temporary suspension of the exercise of those powers does not destroy the right to their exercise.—The Government of the U. States have recognised the right of the States, under the treaty, by the acceptance, from the States, of cessions, of soil and jurisdiction. Whatever rights, therefore were continued to be exercised by the Indians, were permitted by the State within whose chartered limits they resided. Humanely regarding and respecting the right of occupancy in the Indians, the whites permitted them to retain the possession of their lands, but they, being incapable alike of amalgamation with the whites, or of accommodating themselves to any system of laws, which civilization could have prescribed for their Government even as a distinct tribe subject to the whites, after many sharp conflicts and struggles, retired at the approach of the whites to more distinct and remote portions of the territory.—There they have been permitted to live, exercising a kind of self-government, and if not heretofore subject to the existing laws of the State by virtue of their residence and birth for reasons which as I before said it is not required here to discuss, certainly always liable to be embraced by those laws by an express extension of them at the will of the State. This conclusion is the inevitable result of that unlimited sovereignty over her territory which the principles and facts we have been considering affirm in the State.

Has the State parted with any portion of that sovereignty, by which this question may be affected? I am not apprized of the surrender by the State of any of those rights essential to the maintenance of the result at which we have arrived. I know of no act on the part of the State of Georgia, by which she has parted with her right of jurisdiction and soil in the territory in question. On the contrary she has uniformly asserted them when that assertion seemed to have been rendered necessary by the acts of others.—The State of Georgia has a right to govern and control by her laws every human being within her limits.—Georgia Constitutionalist.

OFFICE OF CORONER.

The office of Coroner depicts the benificent spirit of our ancient institutions. There is no similar power, of which history records. The Latins possessed their Consuls, Qæster, &c; but no authority similar to our Courts of Record—for the investigation of the causes of the death of persons. The Grecians enjoyed the Areopagus, to which Court, in cases of murder, where one killed another by accident, appeals lay for judgment—whose powers were both judicative and executive; such not being the twofold nature of the Coroner's Court. His power is merely judicative: he is locum tenens to the Sheriff; having alone authority to enter appeals and indictments; not being able to proceed, but deliver them for next gaol delivery.

The Coroner's is a very ancient office at common Law, and is called Coronator, because he has to do with the pleas of the Crown. Thus, in this light, the Lord Chief Justice is principal Coroner to the kingdom, and may exercise the jurisdiction of Coroner in any part of the realm. So, to the establishment of this power may we, perhaps, impute the effect—the few murdered, comparatively with what might be, in default of the existence of such a Court. In Italy, Spain, and many other parts of the world, assassins make a trade of their profession; and on this account, that they can exercise their calling with impunity, since there is no Magistrate to whom appeal can be made. In some countries, also, there are places of refuge for assassins and murderers. Thus, among the ancient Jews, we read that, with the exception of murder—and, in this case, one witness was not sufficient—there were places of refuge set apart for their protection—as, see Numbers, chap. xxxv. Such impunity, however, exists not in England, nor will it ever happen, as long as the constitution of our common law connects the municipal relations of the State as they now appear. Thanks to the great wisdom of our immortal Alfred for the division of the country into its many local Courts, whereby, with the assistance of the sublime institution of the Trial by Jury, to no man right will be denied. It is true that, for a time, the trial by ordeal stained the meekness of our laws; and the judicium ferri, aquæ et ignis, which was called the vulgari purgatio, was a part of our common law, but it was not usually enforced; and the authority of the Coroner, in most cases, was confined to the gentle administration of distributive justice.

The Coroner should be a man of great experience and profound judgment, chosen by the freeholders: he should be a man, qui melius et sciat, et velit, et possit officio illi intendere. He, however, by the King's writ, de coronatore exonerando, can be deprived of his office, as on account of incompetency, old age or want of property. So, as belonging to a Court of Record, he has the power to summon evidence and witnesses, for the purpose of obtaining every information relative to cases brought before him, for eliciting the truth, that a verdict may be recorded for the satisfaction of the Jury: thus showing the exquisite feature of our law, by confining his prerogative of law to the judicature alone.

It is thus evident that a Coroner should have, not merely legal, but pathological knowledge, and be a man of undaunted integrity: independent of that, have the Jury important duties to discharge. They have a high office to fulfil, having to investigate every contingent relation with respect to the decease of a person. It is true that, in some few instances, their verdict is executive, as in cases of deodand; but, where a murder is committed, they have no jurisdiction over the life of the murderer. Hence the Coroner should have judgment to direct the Jury in circumstances where it is supposed they are incompetent to exercise opinion; as, from the nature of the occupation of Jurymen, it is not possible to suppose they would always have the faculty. Such has the wisdom of our ancestors prescribed.—London Morning Herald.

---

The offices of Common Sergeant and Common Pleader to the City of London, vacant by the resignation of Sir Thomas Denman, and the decease of the late Mr Burnaby, will be filled up at a Court of Common Council, to be held on Thursday next.

Mr Hill, who is mentioned as having become a candidate for the office of Common Sergeant, in succession to Mr Denman, is a gentleman of high professional character, and, as he is strongly recommended by Mr Brougham, his success is considered certain. He possesses excellent talents, and is a decided Liberal.—Manchester Guardian.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

ACTION.

1. An action will not lie against an officer of the army, on his promise to pay a reward offered for the apprehending a deserter, he acting in his official capacity, and as an agent of the government. Belknap vs. Reinhart, 2 Wend. 375.

2. Where a feme covert has a separate estate vested in a trustee, and services are rendered on the estate, and credit for such services is given to her, the husband is not liable to an action for such services. Stammers vs. Macomb, 2 Wend. 454.

3. On a promise to take the assignment of a judgment when obtained, and pay the amount thereof, an action will not lie until after a tender of such assignment. Payne vs. Lansing, 2 Wend. 525.

4. The rendition of the judgment alone in such case gives no cause of action; and where the defect appears in the declaration, it may be taken advantage of by general demurrer. Ib.

5. An action for a false return will not lie against a sheriff for returning an execution nulla bona, where the property of a firm is levied on by virtue of an execution against one of its members, and previous to a sale, an execution against the firm comes to the hands of the sheriff, under which the property levied on by virtue of the first execution is sold and exhausted. Dunham vs. Murdock, 2 Wend. 553.

6. A parol enlargement of the time set in a sealed instrument for the performance of covenants is good; but where there is such enlargement of a condition precedent, the party loses his remedy upon the covenant itself, and must seek it upon the agreement enlarging the time of performance. Langworthy vs. Smith, 2 Wend. 587.

7. Debt and not assumpsit is the proper form of action for the recovery of money from a stake holder of a bet on a trotting match. McKeon vs. Caherty, 3 Wend. 194.

8. The action may be maintained, although the plaintiff in fact acted as the agent of others in making the bet. Ib.

9. The proceeds of real estate placed by a father under the control of a son for the benefit and support of a daughter who is a feme covert, cannot be recovered in an action at law in the name of the husband and wife: the remedy is in equity. Duval vs. Covenhoven, 4 Wend. 561.

---

ACTION ON THE CASE.

1. An action on the case will lie for the assertion of a falsehood with a fraudulent intent as to a present or existing fact, where a direct, positive, and material injury results from such assertion. Benton vs. Pratt, 2 Wend. 385.

2. Where a contract would have been fulfilled but for the false and fraudulent representation of a third person, an action will lie against such person, although the contract could not have been enforced by action. Ib.

3. The owner of a vessel navigating a river, having it in his power to avoid collision with another vessel, and thus avoid an injury, refusing or neglecting to exercise the power he possesses, is guilty of negligence, and liable to respond in an action on the case, although the vessel damaged has the wind, if the owner of such latter vessel does all in his power to avoid collision. Hawkins vs. Dutchess and Orange Steam Boat Co. 2 Wend. 452.

4. A father, liable to a third person for the expenses of the lying-in of a daughter, who has been seduced within the age of 21, may maintain an action on the case for seduction, although the daughter is a servant de facto of another, and the father has permitted her to leave his house, and has relinquished all claim to her services, and has incurred no actual expense. Clark vs. Fitch, 2 Wend. 459.

5. A father may at pleasure revoke such license, recal his daughter and control her services; and having such right, the relation of master and servant exists. Ib.

6. Whether a suit, brought under such circumstances, is instituted by the direction of the plaintiff, cannot be inquired into on the trial of the cause. Ib.

7. Continued attentions to a female for several months, followed by an improper intercourse, is evidence sufficient to warrant the inference of seduction. Ib.

8. An action on the case for obstructing the execution of mesne process, cannot be maintained, unless the plaintiff aver and prove that he had a cause of action against the person whose arrest was prevented. Campbell vs. Neely, 2 Wend. 559.

9. The directors of a moneyed institution are responsible, in an action on the case, for improperly obtaining and disposing of the funds or property of the company. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. vs. Jenkins, 3 Wend. 130.

10. They are liable, however, only individually and severally, and not jointly as directors, unless the act complained of be done by a majority of the board of directors, when by the act of incorporation of the company, a majority only is competent to the transaction of the business of the company. Ib.

11. When a board of directors consists of sixteen, a joint action against four of the number for an act done as directors, cannot be maintained. Ib.

12. A general charge in a declaration, that the defendants, as directors of an insurance company, loaned the funds of the company upon inadequate security, knowing such security to be insufficient, without any specification of time, persons, or circumstances, is insufficient; and a demurrer for this cause will be sustained. Ib.

13. The declaration will also be adjudged bad if the grievances complained of are alleged to have been committed in part by the want of care and attention, and in part by the corrupt and wilful mismanagement of the defendants. Ib.

14. It seems, that in a declaration, charging directors with having squandered the funds of a moneyed institution, it should be averred of what the funds, credits, and effects of the company consisted. Ib.

15. Where, in consequence of the want of ordinary care and skill in laying the foundations of a house about to be erected, damage was sustained by the owner of an adjoining house and the parties thereupon entered into an agreement, by which it was stipulated that the work should proceed, that a partition wall should be built for the benefit of both parties, and that the damages and compensation should be passed upon by arbitrators; which submission was revoked previous to an award made, and an action for breach of covenant brought by the person who built the house to recover a compensation for a portion of the wall, in which action the defendant set off his damages, it was held, that such damages were a legitimate subject of consideration in such action of covenant, under the agreement between the parties, and having been submitted to and passed upon by a jury, a suit could not subsequently be sustained for a recovery of the same damages. Skelding vs. Whitney, 3 Wend. 154.

16. It seems, that where a defence has been insisted on in a former action, submitted to and passed upon by a jury, and not objected to by the plaintiff in such action, although such defence be not the subject of set-off in such action, a party will be precluded from subsequently maintaining an action for the subject matter thus set off by way of defence. Ib.

17. The owner of lands adjacent to the shore of a navigable river, obtaining from the commissioners of the land office a grant of land under water, on which he erects a wharf after filling in the same, cannot sustain an action on the case against the agents of a company to whom subsequently the legislature give the privilege of erecting a mole or pier in the river for the purpose of constructing a basin for the safety and protection of boats, and who erect such mole or pier entirely encompassing the wharf on the side of the water, so as to leave no communication between it and the river but through a sloop lock at one extremity of the basin; although the privileges of such owner of the wharf be materially impaired by the construction of such works, the loss sustained by him is damnum absque injuria, for which no action lies. Lansing vs. Smith, 4 Wend. 9.

18. The grant by the commissioners of the land office conveys only the land described in it by metes and bounds, and being in derogation of the rights of the public, nothing is to be taken in favor of it by implication; on the contrary, if it be considered as giving the right to erect a wharf, a reservation to the legislature to regulate the use of it and of the waters adjacent will be implied. Ib.

19. The grant to the company to erect the pier, although subsequent to the former grant, is not a violation of the constitution of the United States providing that no state shall pass a law impairing the obligation of contracts, nor of the constitution of New York, declaring that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation; the former grant by the commissioners of the land office not precluding the legislature from making a great public improvement for the benefit of commerce. Ib.

20. Every individual who suffers actual damage, whether direct or consequential, from a common nuisance, may maintain an action for his own particular injury, although there may be many others equally damnified. Ib.

---

AMENDMENT.

1. A certiorari may be amended, though a term intervenes between its teste and return. Kissam vs. Morris, 2 Wend. 259.

2. Under the rule allowing an amendment as of course, the plaintiff cannot add words, giving a new and distinct cause of action from that originally set forth. Wiley vs. Moore, 2 Wend. 259.

3. Where a verdict is found for an amount exceeding the damages claimed in the declaration, the plaintiff will not be permitted to amend his declaration by increasing the damages, unless he abandons his verdict, pays the defendant's costs of the trial and of resisting the motion, and consents to a new trial. Dox vs. Dey, 3 Wend. 251.

4. Amendments will not be granted to enable a party to set up the defence of usury or of the statute of limitations, if he has not availed himself of the opportunity to interpose such defence in the first instance. It seems, however, that where such defences are defectively set forth, an amendment will be allowed to give the party the benefit of the defence which he intended to present, but he will not be permitted to put in a new or additional plea or answer. Beach vs. Fulton Bank, in error, 3 Wend. 573.

---

APPEAL FROM CHANCERY.

1. The Court of Chancery may direct upon what terms and conditions an appeal shall operate as a stay of proceedings, unless the Court of Errors, on a special application or by a general rule, restricts the power. Irving vs. Dunscomb, 2 Wend. 205.

2. An appeal will lie from an order of the Court of Chancery refusing to open the proofs in a cause for the purpose of re-examining a witness, who, since his examination, has disclosed facts material and pertinent to the issue depending in chancery, which he did not disclose when on examination; such order of the Court of Chancery affecting the merits of the cause. Beach vs. Fulton Bank, 2 Wend. 225.

3. It lies when the order appealed from materially affects the merits of the cause. Per Sutherland, J. Or is of such a character that the party may be aggrieved by it. Per Walworth Chancellor. Ib.

4. Although the order appealed from be made by the Court of Chancery in the exercise of its discretionary powers, or touching the mode of its proceedings, an appeal will be entertained, if not of an equivocal character. It does not, however follow, that no appeal will be dismissed which does in fact, or may by possibility affect the merits of the cause. Per Marcy, J. Ib.

---

ARBITRATION.

1. In a submission to arbitration, where three arbitrators are named, with power to two to make an award, two have power to proceed and hear the parties, where the third arbitrator has been notified of his appointment, and refuses to attend. Crofoot vs. Allen, 2 Wend. 494.

2. A submission of a cause pending in court to arbitration, is a discontinuance of the suit, although the arbitrators have not taken upon themselves the burden of the submission, have not met to hear the parties, and have not made any award, or done any act under the submission. The court will not look beyond the submission. Larkin vs. Robbins, 2 Wend. 505.

3. A promise by a party in whose favor an award is made, to correct any mistakes which may have been made by the arbitrators, is void for want of consideration. At all events a defendant cannot avail himself of such defence in an action on the award. Efner vs. Shaw, 2 Wend. 567.

4. Proof that arbitrators before making an award, resigned their authority, and that such resignation was accepted by the parties, is admissible in bar of an action on an award. Relyea vs. Ramsay, 2 Wend. 602.

---

ARREST.

1. An arrest of a felon may be justified by any person without warrant, whether there be time to obtain one or not, if a felony has in fact been committed by the person arrested. Holly vs. Mix, 3 Wend. 350.

2. If an innocent person is arrested upon suspicion by a private individual such individual is excused if a felony was in fact committed, and there was reasonable ground to suspect the person arrested. Ib.

3. But if no felony be committed by any one, and a private individual arrest without warrant, such arrest is illegal; an officer, however, would be justified if he acted upon information from another which he had reason to rely on. Ib.

4. A constable may, ex officio and without warrant, arrest a breaker of the peace, and bring him before a justice. It seems, however, that this should be done within a reasonable time after the affray. Taylor vs. Strong, 3 Wend. 384.

---

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

1. The party first attacked in a personal rencontre between two individuals, is not entitled to maintain an action for an assault and battery, if he uses so much personal violence towards the other party, exceeding the bounds of self-defence, as could not be justified under a plea of son assault demesne, were he the party defendant in a suit. Elliot vs. Brown, 2 Wend. 497.

2. Infants are liable in the same manner as adults for trespass and assault. Bullock vs. Babcock, 3 Wend. 391.

3. Where the injury is not the effect of an unavoidable accident, the person by whom it is inflicted is liable to respond in damages to the sufferer. Ib.

4. It seems, that an injury might probably be considered an unavoidable accident in the case of infants, which would not be so considered in the case of adults. Ib.

---

ASSUMPSIT.

1. An action for money had and received, will not lie by one party against another, to recover money received under a contract made in violation of the statute to prevent and punish champerty and maintenance. Best vs. Strong, 2 Wend. 319.

2. An action for money paid, laid out, and expended, will lie at the suit of an indorsee of a promissory note against an indorser for money paid on a judgment obtained against the former by the holder of the note, although such payment is but in part satisfaction of the debt; and such suit will lie for every payment made in good faith, and with the bona fide intent of reducing or extinguishing the debt. Butler vs. Wright, 2 Wend. 369.

3. In an action for use and occupation, where there has been a tenancy at a special annual rent, and there is a holding over, the tenant will be deemed to hold upon the terms under which he entered; but he is not precluded by an agreement to pay a fixed sum for a term less than a year, Evertsen vs. Sawyer, 2 Wend. 507.

4. A promise to pay will be implied from an agreement of parties to abide by the decision of individuals named between them to appraise the value of certain work and services done and performed by one party for the other. Efner vs. Shaw 1 Wend. 567.

5. Where there is an agreement to demise a house for five years, and leases to be executed under which the party enters, and subsequently refuses to accept a lease, the owner may maintain assumpsit for the use and occupation. Little vs. Martin, 3 Wend. 219.

6. Taking the key of the house without a continued actual occupation, is enough to entitle the plaintiff to sustain the action. Ib.

7. The plaintiff is not bound to sue upon the agreement, and the statute of frauds cannot be objected to a recovery, as the suit is not on the contract. Ib.

8. Where A agreed to furnish a certain number of bales of cottton towards completing the cargo of a vessel bound to a foreign port, principally freighted by B, on B's paying him the full price of the cotton; the shipment, however, to be made one half on account of A and the remaining half on account of B, and on returns of sales coming to hand, A to receive his share of the profits, or to pay his share of the loss and the cotton was shipped by B to his consignees, abroad, it was held, that an action for money paid would not lie, A being liable only in an action on the special agreement for a loss, if any sustained, in the sale of the cotton, and not for the total amount of the advance on his account. Pellier vs. Sewall, 3 Wend. 269.

9. Such agreement did not create a partnership; the parties were tenants in common in the articles shipped. Ib.

10. Where a promissory note made to be discounted at a bank, for the accommodation and benefit of an individual, signed by him, and by three other persons as his sureties, is refused to be discounted by the bank, unless further names are procured, and another person is procured by the principal to put his name to the note, when it is discounted, and such person is subsequently compelled to pay a part of it, he cannot recover for money paid in a joint action against the principal and the three persons who originally signed as sureties, although he expressly signed the note as surety; he will be considered as a co-surety, unless a state of facts is shown from which it appears positively, or by legal intendment, that those who originally signed intended, as to the subsequent signer, to stand in the character of principals. Warner vs. Price, 3 Wend. 397.

11. The admission by one of the original sureties, that the plaintiff signed as surety for all the makers of the note, will not bind his co-sureties; no partnership being shown to exist between them. Ib.

12. An action of assumpsit may be maintained on a promise by a grantor, to refund the consideration money and interest of same of lands sold by him, notwithstanding a covenant of warranty, where the grantor, on being informed that actions of ejectment had been commenced against his grantees by a third person, admitted the title to be in such claimant, desired the persons in possession to surrender the possession to him, agreed to refund the consideration money paid to him, with the interest thereon, and instructed his agent to pay to his grantees the amount due each, as soon as in funds, on showing a compliance with the condition of the promise, viz. the surrender of the premises. Miller vs. Watson, 4 Wend. 167.

13. Such action may be maintained by a grantee, who had conveyed his interest in the land to third persons, with covenants of seizin and warranty, if it appears that such third persons have, in pursuance of the request of the original grantor, surrendered the possession of the land conveyed to them to the claimant, and that their claims upon their grantor have been satisfied by a re-payment of the moneys advanced to him. Ib.

14. In such case, however, the plaintiff must declare on the special contract, and is not entitled to recover under the common money counts or an insimul computassent. Ib.

15. After such admission of the title of the claimant, the grantor is estopped from showing title in himself. Ib.

16. Where a party contracted to do a job of work by a stipulated time, and in the contract was contained a provision that a portion of the work should not be done until directions were given by the other party, it was held, that the power to suspend the doing of the work did not continue so long as to prevent the completion of it within the time agreed on. Dubois vs. The Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, 4 Wend. 285.

17. Where one party was prevented from performance within the stipulated time by the omission of the other, and subsequently performed the work agreed upon, but at an enhanced expense, it was held, that he was not obliged to bring his action upon the contract, but might resort to the quantum meruit to obtain his indemnity. Ib.

18. There is not it seems, any precise rule which when applied to the breach of a contract, certainly settles the question whether it is thereby abandoned or not; but if the act of one party be such as necessarily to prevent the other from performing on his part according to the terms of the agreement, the contract will be considered as rescinded, and the party may resort to his quantum meruit. Ib.

19. So a plaintiff may recover on the quantum meruit where the defendant has done no act to prevent the performance, and where the evidence is sufficient to warrant the plaintiff's action on the general count, supposing no special agreement had been laid in the declaration, but in such case, the terms of the special agreement regulate the compensation. Ib.

20. If a contract has been rescinded, the plaintiff may resort to his general counts; so if the contract has been completely executed he may recover in indebitatus assumpsit the stipulated price, unless the terms of the contract will be thereby infringed. Ib.

21. Where a work is done under a special contract at estimated prices, and there is a deviation from the original plan by the consent of the parties, the estimate is to be the rule of payment as far as the special contract can be traced, and for the extra labor, the party is entitled to his quantum meruit; so also for any additional expense incurred in consequence of the party being obliged to do the work under disadvantageous circumstances, occasioned by the opposite party, he is entitled to an allowance. Ib.

22. A contract made by an agent in the name of his principal, he having authority to do the act, is not binding upon him individually. Ib.

23. Assumpsit against the principal, is the proper form of action, atthough the agent affixes a seal to his name, it being the seal of the agent and not of his principal. Ib.

24. Assumpsit for money had and received will lie by an indorser of a note against the holder, to recover back money paid under a judgment against such indorser, where the holder previous to the payment makes an arrangement with a prior indorser, by which he discharges him, or enters into a covenant not to sue him. Brown vs. Williams, 4 Wend. 319.

25. The rule which governs as to the effect of a discharge or the varying the contract of a principal debtor by a creditor, without the concurrence of the surety, applies to the discharge of a prior indorser; the subsequent indorsers are discharged in cases where the surety would be discharged. Ib.

26. A prior indorser, in reference to subsequent indorsers, stands in the place of a principal debtor; his discharge, or a covenant not to sue him, releases the subsequent indorsers. Ib.

27. Where a sheriff actually levies an execution on the property of a defendant two months before its return, and then seven months after the writ is returnable, returns that he has made the amount directed to be levied, such evidence is prima facie sufficient to establish the fact that he received the money antecedent to the commencement of a suit brought against him, nearly three months after the time when the writ was returnable. Crane vs. Dygert, 4 Wend. 675.

---

ATTORNEYS.

Attorneys and counsellors of the Supreme Court of New York are not privileged from arrest, although such arrest prevents the contemplated attendance upon court, if the arrest be made while they remain at home. Corey vs. Russell, 4 Wend. 204.

---

A PRACTICAL LESSON.

It is not uncommon especially during the winter season, for persons travelling upon the highway, either through sport or from malicious motives, to impede the progress of those behind them, by travelling at a slow gait, and so managing their own vehicle as to prevent others passing; and it seems that too many are not aware that such conduct is in direct violation of the laws of the state, and that an action can be sustained against all who may, in any degree, thus intentionally violate the rights of others. A prosecution occurred in this county a few days since, and although the offence was not perhaps of the most aggravated nature, yet a verdict of fifty dollars was promptly awarded to the plaintiff by the jury. It appeared that a number of persons had attended a singing school, about three miles from the village in which they resided; that the defendants (six in number) who were to occupy one sleigh, had determined, on account of hostile feelings, to perplex and delay the progress of the plaintiff on his return—that the former had proceeded at a slow pace, about three fourths of a mile, when they were overtaken by the latter—that every attempt of the plaintiff to pass the sleigh of the defendants was purposely frustrated, and the remaining distance was travelled at the rate of a slow walk. There were three gentlemen and two or three ladies in the sleigh of the plaintiff, and the weather being extremely cold their sufferings were severe. The plaintiff, instituted the suit, it appeared, more for the purpose of convincing the defendants that the laws afford a remedy in such cases, than for that of recovering damages; and when the verdict was made known, he, with more generosity than will at all times be met with, proposed to exact nothing further from the defendants than the payment of costs of prosecution.—Ontario Rep.

---

William the Conqueror abolished capital punishment in England, but substituted the still more horrid one of mutilation of the limbs of criminals, that they might live, and be a terror to others.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1831.

RETAINERS.

When a barrister has drawn pleadings in a cause, or has advised upon it in some advanced stage of its progress—in short, when he has necessarily become acquainted with the case of one party, he ought, if not to consider himself absolutely retained in behalf of that party, at all events to give him a preference, or if we may use the expression, a right of refusal before he accepts a retainer from the adverse party. It is mere affectation to pretend that there would be any difficulty in carrying such a rule into practice. The business of no barrister, except the few great leaders, to whom the rule can scarcely be applicable, is so extensive as to make it doubtful to him whether the papers in the cause have been previously before him. And as it is a matter which, in our opinion, materially involves the character of the profession, and places those who have not sufficient self-reliance to break through an absurd usage, in a very painful situation, we may be pardoned for earnestly pressing the suggestion upon the consideration of our brethren.

A retainer ought not to be invalidated by any merely formal change, whether in the name or in the mode of proceeding, while the cause remains in substance the same. Neither, as it seems to us, is any inconvenience to be apprehended from this qualification of the existing rule; because there will always be enough of resemblance to identify the cause, and a simple inquiry from the attorney offering the second retainer, will immediately elicit the fact. As to the practice, if such a practice exist, of appearing first as the advocate of one party and then in a cause which is literally another and the same, suddenly shifting sides, and maintaining the exact contrary of all which has been urged before,—if any man can fail to perceive that such conduct is degrading, not only to himself individually, but to the whole body of which he is a member, we envy him not the state of his moral perceptions. And here let us not be met with objection, that there is any rule or etiquette of the bar in the way. No arbitrary regulation can be binding, when it becomes inconsistent with a man's own notions of right and honor; and we are quite sure that the rule in question was never intended to be carried to the extreme which we have been condemning. We call upon the profession to vindicate themselves from imputation but too readily, and, we are quite sure, groundlessly cast upon them, of a venal prostitution of their talents. If a precedent be wanted for departing, on occasion, from that etiquette, which in reality furnishes only a decent pretext for doing, what otherwise a man would feel ashamed of doing, we can furnish one perfectly satisfactory. A learned member of the profession, now at the head of it, was recently placed in the very dilemma which we are considering. A life had been insured in two public offices: actions being brought against each, the learned gentleman was retained for the plaintiff in one, for the defendant in the other; the circumstances of both being, of course, precisely the same. And how did he extricate himself from the difficulty? why—by cutting the knot to be sure,—by acting as all men of stronger mind do act, when required to decide upon such alternatives. He declared that he would not, for any such regulation as was urged upon him, consent to stultify himself: and having held the brief on the one side, he declined to appear as the advocate of the other.

Our objections to the fourth rule * are not, perhaps, of so serious a nature: but, for the reasons which have been already assigned, we should be glad that it were altered. The rule, in our opinion, ought to be, that the first retainer, whether special or general, should be binding and conclusive. The uncertainty which results from the present practice is a subject of much perplexity and annoyance to the clients; and as it seems difficult to find any assignable reason for it except the one which we have rejected as incredible, there can be no impediment in the way of the proposed alteration. To say the truth, we are anxious, not only that nothing should exist, in fact, derogatory to the dignity of the profession, but that all occasion for evil speaking should be removed. The honor of the Bar ought to be like that of Cæsar's wife, not only free from stain, but beyond the reach even of suspicion or reproach. These are searching and incredulous times. People are not content, now-a-days, to take a man's own account of himself as a sufficient voucher for his respectability. Reputation must be maintained, not by prescription, but by conduct which justifies it. It is not enough that we should style ourselves the honorable society of the Bar; we must show our title to the appellation by unimpeachable evidence of facts. Nor let it be thought a matter of small importance in what degree of public estimation the profession is held. On the contrary, it is of the last consequence that a general opinion should prevail of its uprightness and independence. The duties of the advocate form so essential a part of the dispensation of justice,—the very end and being of the social league,—that every taint which affects the practice of the Bar must necessarily in some degree vitiate the whole administration of the law, and can never therefore be of small importance, either to the members of that body or the community at large. Whether there be in reality any difference in the components of the body, between modern times and those which have preceded us, we know not. It is a common fashion, and almost as common an error, to suppose that every thing degenerates. Still, there are circumstances which induce us to think, that these are not exactly the times most favorable to the character of the Bar. In saying this let us not be misunderstood—that an immense majority are in no respect obnoxious to the reproach which not we, but the hardly judging world is disposed to cast upon the whole body, we not only most devoutly believe, but do most certainly know; but we also know that needy adventurers, not lacking in talent, but destitute, alas! of that far more important qualification, an accurate sense of honor and propriety, are to be found in the ranks of the profession. We cannot stay to analyse the cause, nor are we prepared with the remedy; but one step, at least towards our amelioration will have been made, if the leading members can be induced, not so much by anything here written, as by their own sense of fairness and propriety, to repeal or modify what is obnoxious in the regulation on which we have been commenting. In the meantime we call upon each person, individually, to show in his own practice that he will not suffer his notions of right to be controlled or superseded by any rule of merely professional etiquette.—Law Mag.

* 'A special retainer on behalf of A. against B. may be superseded by a general retainer on behalf of B. C. and D.'

---

Alteration in the Terms.—The Act of Parliament for regulating the Terms will come into operation next month. In future, Hilary Term will commence on the 11th of January, and end on the 31st: Easter Term will commence on the 15th of April, and end May 9th; Trinity Term will commence on May 23d, and end June 13th; and Michaelmas Term will commence on the 2d November, and end the 25th.—Morn. Her.

---

'Lord Brougham and Vaux, like a newly-married lady forgetful of her new name, often signs his letters in his old style—'Henry Brougham.' His Lordship has deserted the wig-party, and set the example of what Lord Eldon would call a dangerous and revolutionary innovation. He appeared on the woolsack, on Monday night, in a little cropped wig—a ludicrous contrast to the frosty honors that have, from time immemorial, adorned the heads of Chancellors on the Woolsack. His Lordship seems quite distrait in the ordinary business of putting questions, &c, and is totally au desespoir when a few saucy young Lords break through the rules of the House. But when Lord Brougham leaves the Woolsack, and addresses the House, the effect is electrical, and we advise certain persons to beware how they incur his withering sarcasms. We suspect some of the Lords felt as awkwardly situated under their present official head as he feels above them.—Ib.

---

Samuel Nelson, judge of the 6th circuit, has been appointed by the Senate, on the nomination of the Governor, a judge of the Supreme Court of this State, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of judge Marcy.

John Tracy, of Oxford, Chenango county, has been appointed judge of the 6th circuit, in the place of Judge Nelson, appointed to the bench of the Supreme Court.—Ontario Repository.

---

Mr Bousfield, the solicitor, has given the following notice of a motion to the Court of Common Council, of which he is a Member:—'That this Court do petition both Houses of Parliament, praying that the whole of the present 14 lists of Commissioners of Bankrupt may be abolished, and that, in lieu thereof, an efficient and regular Court be constituted to sit daily in matters of bankruptcy.'

---

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Elements of Conveyancing, with cursory remarks upon the study of that science, including a list of Books for the use of students and practitioners, and also observations and directions relative to the practice of conveyancing, particularly with respect to the perusal of abstracts of titles, and preparing of deeds and assurances, of real and personal property, the 2nd edition, carefully revised and corrected, with great additions and improvements. By C. Barton, of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law, 5 vols. 8 vo.

Advice on the Study and Practice of the Law; with directions for the choice of books, addressed to Attorneys' Clerks. By Wm Wright, 3d ed. enlarged, 1v. 12mo.

The Domestic Lawyer; or a practical exposition of the laws of England. By James Shaw, Esq. 1 v. 12mo.

Fennelly's Law and Practice of Elections in England, Scotland, and Ireland, 1 vol. 12 mo.

Hayes's Concise Conveyancer, with practical remarks, 1 vol. 12 mo.

The Bankrupt Act 6, Geo. IV. cap. 16, with notes by C. Sturgeon, 1 vol. 12 mo.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK.

This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & COCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

LIBRARY OF EDUCATION.

This day published by GRAY & BOWEN,

The Library of Education, Vol. I. —Containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education.' By John Locke, and a 'Treatise of Education,' by John Milton, with an Appendix, containing Locke's Memoranda on Study. Edited by Wm. Russell, late editor of the Journal of Education.

Extract from the Preface.

'The present volume is intended to form one of a series of standard treatises on the subject of Education. The work now commenced will, it is hoped, form a useful source of information to parents and teachers; furnishing to the latter a sort of professional library, to which individuals may resort for assistance in the labor of instruction, and offering to the former an aid to the formation of just and extensive views of the whole scope of education, as well as a preparation for cooperating with instruction, in their exertions for the mental advancement of the young.' Jan. 1.

WHITMAN'S LETTERS.

This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, 'Two Letters to Rev. Moses Stuart,' on Religious Liberty, occasioned by his Letter to Rev. Wm. E. Channing. By Bernard Whitman. Jan. 1.

SIXTY MAPS

of the various countries of the Globe, from the Epitome of Universal Geography. For sale at GRAY & BOWEN'S, 141 Washington Street. Price 50 cents, bound. Jan. 1.

PARLEY'S ASIA.

This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, Peter Parley's Tales about Asia, with a Map and numerous Engravings. This is designed as a fourth volume in a series of Geographical and Historical Tales for Children. Tales of America, Europe, and Africa, have already been published. Tales of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, Tales of the Sea, and Tales of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, will complete the series. These three last are in a state of forwardness.

GRAY & BOWEN, have just published, TALES OF TRAVELS West of the Mississippi, with a Map and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. This volume is the first of a series which is intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.
Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.
Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.
Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.
Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.
Peter Parley's Geography for Children. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED,

by GRAY & BOWEN, an APPENDIX to the American Almanac, for the year 1831, being the latter part of the fiftyfifth, and the beginning of the fiftysixth year of the Independence of the United States.

Extract from the Preliminary Observations on the Astronomical Department of the American Almanac.

The Appendix is intended to answer all the essential purposes of a Nautical Almanac, and the insertion therein of the distances of the Moon from the Planets, and of the proportional logarithm of the difference between the distances, it is hoped, will be found an improvement on any Almanac hitherto published. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED,

by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner General Review, No. XLII. for December, 1830.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Classes of American Society.—1. A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, first delivered Oct. 6, before the Charlestown Lyceum, and published at their request. By Edw. Everett. 2. Mr Tuckerman's Second Semi-annual Report of the Fourth Year of his Services as a Minister at Large in Boston.

II. The Jews.—The History of the Jews, from the Earliest Period to the Present time. By Rev. H. H. Milman.

III. Wheaton's Travels.—A Journal of a Residence during several months in London; including Excursions through various Parts of England; and a short Tour in France and Scotland, in the Years 1823 and 1824. By Nathaniel S. Wheaton, A. M.

IV. English Unitarian Methodists. An Account of the Rise and Progress of the Unitarian Doctrine, in the Societies at Rochdale, Newchurch in Rosendale, and other Places, formerly in Connexion with the late Rev. Joseph Cooke. In Ten Letters to a Friend. By John Ashworth.

V. Life of Mohammed.—The Life of Mohammed; Founder of the Religion of Islam, and of the Empire of the Saracens. By the Rev. George Bush, A. M

VI. Anderson's Tour in Greece.—Observations upon the Peloponnesus and Greek Islands, made in 1829. By Rufus Anderson, one of the Secretaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Jan. 22.

JUST PUBLISHED,

by GRAY & BOWEN, The North American Review, No. LXX. for January, 1831.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Statuary—Del' arte di vedere nelle belle arte del desegno, secondo i Principii di Sulzer e di Mengs.

II. Bank of the United States—Report of the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred so much of the Message of the President, as relates to the Bank of the United States.

III. Anatomy—Address to the Community on the Necessity of legalizing the Study of Anatomy. By order of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

IV. Clarence—A Tale of our own Times. By the Author of Redwood.

V. Hieroglyphics—Essay on the Hieroglphic System of M. Champollion, Jr, and on the advantages which it offers to Sacred Criticism. By J. G. H. Greppo, Vicar General of Belley. Translated from the French, by Isaac Stuart, with Notes and Illustrations.

VI. American System—1. Report from the Committee on Commerce to whom was referred so much of the President's Message, as relates to the Commerce of the United States with Foreign Nations, &c. 2. A Review of Mr Cambreleng's Report from the Committee of Commerce. By Mephistopheles. 3. Exposition and Protest reported by the Special Committee of the House of Representatives on the Tariff. 4. Mr McDuffie's Speech in the House of Representatives on the Bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures for the more faithful Collection of the Revenue.

VII. Grahame's History of the United States—The History of the Rise and Progress of the United States of N. America till the British Revolution in 1688. By James Grahame, Esq.

VIII. Memoirs of Madame De Genlis—Memoires Inedits de Madame la Comtesse de Genlis sur le dixhuitieme siecle et a Revolution Francoise, depuis 1756, jusqu' a nos jours.

IX. Phillips' Manual of Political Economy, with particular reference to the Institutions, Resources and Condition of the United States. By Willard Phillips.

X. History of the Jews—History of the Jews from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Rev. H. H. Milman. Jan. 22.

GRAY AND BOWEN,

have just received, No. 1, of SURGICAL ANATOMY OF THE ARTERIES, with plates and illustrations. By Nathan R. Smith, M. D. Professor of Surgery in the University of Maryland. January 1.

MALTE-BRUN SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY.

—This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK, The Malte-Brun School Geography, illustrated by numerous original engravings, and an Atlas of 19 Maps, Charts, and Tables. By S. Griswold Goodrich. Jan. 1.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES.

GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel,

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15.
Feb. 19.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.

—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

Nos. 13 and 14, North American Series.

These numbers contain articles on Motion of Fluids—Iron Brestramers—Caoutchouc—Liverpool and Manchester Railway—Weight and Pressure in Ships of War—Steam Canal Navigation—Improved Electrical Apparatus—Stephenson's Locomotive Engine—On Flying—Mariner's Life Grapple—Marine Steam Engine—Perpetual Motion, &c, &c; with very numerous engravings.
Subscriptions received as above. Feb. 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS.

This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D.
Feb. 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED,

by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVI.

CONTENTS.

Art. 1. Mill's Phenomena of Mind. 2. Tytler's and Scott's Histories of Scotland. 3. Memoirs, Correspondence, and Papers of Thomas Jefferson. 4. Niebuhr's Geography of Herodotus. 5. Galt's Southennan. 6. Floods in Morayshire. 7. Troades of Euripides. 8. The Belgian Insurrection, and De Potter's Trial. 9. Alexander's Travels. 10. London Bridge. 11. Hydrophobia. 12. Mr Brougham and Local Judicatories. 13. Novels and Travels in Turkey. 14. The Three Days of Paris. 15. Brasse's Sophocles. 16. Geometry without Axioms. 17. Revolution of 1830. List of Books, Index, &c.
Jan. 22.

AMERICAN ALMANAC,

Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

WORKING MEN'S PARTY.

This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, delivered before the Charlestown Lyceum, October 6, 1830. By Edward Everett.

EVENTS IN PARIS,

during the 26, 27, 28, and 29th of July, 1830. By several eye witnesses. Translated from the fourth Paris edition. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS.

This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface.
Jan. 8.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1831. NO. XXXII.

CHANCELLOR KENT.

Mr Chancellor Kent was appointed a puisne judge of the Supreme Court of New York on the sixth of February, 1798, Chief Justice of the same court on the second of July, 1804, and upon the resignation of Mr Chancellor Lansing, succeeded to the distinguished station of Chancellor of New York, on the 25th of February, 1814. He has been long, therefore, before the public in a judicial character, which he has sustained with increasing reputation, a reputation as pure as it is bright; and he is, at the very moment we are writing, devoting himself to the labors of jurisprudence with a diligence and enthusiasm, which excite the admiration of the veteran counsellor at the bar even more than of the ambitious student just struggling for distinction. He has always been remarkable for an unwearied attention to business, a prompt and steady vigilance, and a sacred reverence for judicial authorities. For him the easy course of general reasoning, popular analogies, and fanciful theories, has no charms. He does not believe that judicial discretion is the arbitrium boni judicis, much less boni viri; or that he is at liberty to promulgate rules, either of law or equity, measured by his own abstract notions of what is fit or unreasonable. He contents himself with administering the common law as he finds it, without the rashness to presume himself wiser than the law or the vanity of distinguishing himself by innovations. His life has been devoted, sedulously and earnestly, to professional studies. He has fathomed the depths and searched the recesses of the ancient law, the black lettered relics of former times, so much disparaged, and yet of such inestimable value. He has traced back the magnificent streams of jurisprudence to their fountains, lying dark and obscure amidst the rubbish of monkish retreats, or stealing silently from the chivalric heights of feudal grandeur. His researches have been, amidst the dust and cobwebs of antiquated lore, pursued in the unfashionable pages of the Year Books, and Glanville, and Fleta, and Britton, and the almost classical Bracton. He has dared to examine the abridgments of Brook, and Fitzherbert, and Statham, (books, from which the modern student starts back with doubt and apprehension,) as the great reservoirs, whence have been drawn the best principles of modern times, and hence must be drawn the body and the soul of that learning which distinguishes the professor from the sciolist. He has not stopped short at a survey of the mere Gothic structures of the law; but has examined with eager and enlightened curiosity the beautiful systems with which the commercial law has been adorned in our day. He has mastered all their refinements, and has in no small degree contributed to their beauty and perfection. He has drawn deeply from the commercial law of foreign nations; the works of Straccha, and Roccus, and Valin, and Pothier, and Emerigon are familiar to his thoughts and his writings. He has there found the sources, from which our own jurisprudence is to be illustrated; and one is at a loss which most to admire, the incomparable discernment of the judge, or the attractive excellence of the materials. If his attainments had found their boundary here, they would have entitled him to great praise; but he has nobly extended his inquires beyond the common and commercial law, and explored the Roman jurisprudence through its texts and commentaries, with uncommon acuteness and accuracy. This has been done with no idle view, to gratify a mere speculative curiosity, or to gather up the fragments of antiquarian fame. Like all his other studies, this has been made subservient to the great purposes of his life, the promotion of justice, and the establishment of a solid jurisprudence founded in the most enlightened policy. In his decisions we can everywhere trace the happy use of that marvellous system of doctrines which Justinian collected with so much care, and which stands unrivalled in the world for its general equity, and nice adaptation to the necessities of mankind; a system, which was gradually matured by the labors of jurists and prætors during centuries, in which Rome was the mistress of the world, and which had the singular advantage of being the combined result of experience and general reasoning and judicial interpretation, aided very little by imperial rescripts, and rarely marred by imperial interference. Let those, who now doubt the importance of the study of the civil law by common lawyers, read diligently the opinions of Mr Chancellor Kent, and they will find all the objections raised by indolence and ignorance and prejudice practically refuted, and the civil law triumphantly sustained. They will perceive the vivid lights, which it casts on the path of juridical science, and they will be instructed and cheered in the pursuit, though they may not hope to move in the brilliant career of such a judge with equal footsteps.

It required such a man, with such a mind, at once liberal, comprehensive, exact, and methodical; always reverencing authorities and bound by decisions, true to the spirit, yet more true to the letter of the law, pursuing principles with a severe and scrupulous logic, yet blending with them the most persuasive equity; it required such a man, with such a mind, to unfold the doctrines of chancery in our country and to settle them upon immoveable foundations. Without doubt, his learned predecessors had done much to systematize and amend the practice of the court. But it cannot be disguised, that the general state of the profession was not favorable to a very exact and well regulated practice. There were, comparatively speaking, few lawyers in the country, who had devoted themselves to Courts of Equity. In general the ablest men found the courts of common law the most lucrative, as well as most attractive for the display of their talents. They contented themselves with occasional attendance at the chancery bar, and placed their solid fame in the popular forum, where the public felt a constant interest, and where the great business of the country was done. In many of the states, no Court of Chancery existed. In others, it was a mixed jurisdiction, exercised by courts of common law, and in those, where it was administered by a distinct judicature, there is great reason to fear that the practice was very poor, and the principles of decision built upon a notional equity, resting very much in discretion, and hardly limited by any fixed rules. In short, the doctrines of the courts depended much less upon the settled analogies of the system, than upon the character of the particular judge. If he possessed a large and liberal mind, he stretched them to a most unwarrantable extent; if a cautious and cold one, the system fainted and expired under his curatorship. This description was applicable, perhaps, without any material exceptions, to the equity jurisprudence of our country, and New York comes in probable for a full share of it. At least there are in the volumes of the Reports abundant proofs that neither the practice nor principles of the Chancery of that state had, previous to the time of Mr Chancellor Kent, assumed a steady and well defined shape. We see, for instance, that points of practice are often most elaborately reasoned out by this learned Chancellor in various opinions, as if the case stood de novo before him, and he was called upon for the first time to apply the English practice to our own. This could hardly have occurred, if there had been a constant, settled channel, in which it had previously flowed.—N. A. Rev. 181.

MR BROUGHAM.

The January number of the New Monthly Magazine, commences a series of 'Sketches of the English Bar,' with a portrait of Mr Brougham—a man whom, (it is said) no title of yesterday can elevate, and who will be happy if the new position in which his title places him, and the new circumstances with which it causes him to be surrounded, do not so alter the man as to make Brougham the lord inferior to Brougham the commoner.

The writer gives an interesting view of the struggles and impetuous exertions of Mr Brougham in the earlier periods of his life, and in reply to the question whether pure philanthrophy or personal ambition had the greater share in urging him on to various and numerous toils, admits that Mr Brougham, like most other men, acted from mixed motives, and gives him 'credit for an honest anxiety to serve the people, combined with an ardent desire to elevate himself.' We copy the annexed paragraph descriptive of his personal appearance and manner, and shall introduce two other extracts of a different character in another paper.—Courier.

'If, gentlest and most indulgent reader, you had chanced any morning during term to have walked into the Court of King's Bench, you would probably have perceived near to one of the extremities of the King's counsel seat, a barrister with his brief before him at which he now and then cast a rapid glance, as if a thought had suddenly struck him respecting some point of which he wished to make himself sure; and then he would appear to relapse again into eager rather than profound reflection. There was no deep quietude in his repose—his position was changed frequently, and the nervous twitchings of his nose and upper lip seemed almost to indicate the emotion caused by the forcible suppression of impetuous thought. His face was destitute of all pretension to beauty of feature or elegance of expression; the forehead rather broad, but not lofty; the nose long, and slightly curved upwards; the upper lip long, and the mouth close and firm: his complexion of a hardy paleness, and the visage strongly marked with lines of thought: the eyebrow dark and full, overshadowing an eye, which in repose seemed small and incapable of much expression, but in moments of excitement—and they were neither rare nor moderate—flashing forth with such fierce energy as I have not seen equalled in any other man. On the whole, his expression was that of a studious man, and a deep and vivid thinker; and this was Mr Brougham, as you would presently discover, when some stranger in the crowd, as occurred every moment, asked, 'Which is he?' I have never heard a speaker more likely to enchain the attention: there was a serious earnestness in his manner, without any of that heavy gravity which sometimes make seriousness tedious; his voice was clear, his enunciation distinct, beyond that of any other man in court, and a continued flow and impressiveness in his language gave an interest even to odinary detail, of which in the hands of others, they would have been utterly incapable. He was not loud, yet so clear, distinct, and forcible in his utterance that not a word was lost; even his under tones, his 'talking aside,' when he was addressing the judges or a jury, fell with palpable distinctness upon the ear: but the distinguishing characteristic of all he said was its earnest clearness; there was no unevenness, no hesitation, no hurry of words, no difficulty of expression. He seemed as if he spoke from an earnest conviction in his own mind that he was right; and even when he was quite wrong, as in points of law he very often was, he discoursed so much with the air of a man who was quite certain about the matter, that the unlearned in the law were astonished when they heard the Judges pronounce that Mr Brougham's legal positions were altogether untenable. It was, however, in the management of facts before an intelligent jury, that his abilities as an advocate shone conspicuously forth. His extensive knowledge of mankind, and of the affairs of life, furnished him with a continued store of observation and illustration, while his matchless facility and force of language made every circumstance which he touched upon tell with ten times its ordinary weight. His powers of eulogy, and his still greater powers of sarcasm, made his commentaries upon evidence singularly effective, and if he could have condescended to the management of juries his assistance would have been invaluable to suitors. But this management, this adapting of himself to the prejudice or ignorance of the people he had to deal with, and thus cajoling them out of a verdict, was an art which his impetuous and commanding temper could not submit to learn. His address to the jury was a lecture upon the case or the evidence: he spoke as one having authority, and whose business it was to teach his auditory, by the strongest appeals to their reason, the way in which they should view the case that was before them. His energy always rose with the importance of the circumtances upon which he commented, and gradually proceeded from the vigorous, yet subdued, earnestness with which he dwelt upon simple and ordinary facts, to the very highest strain of eloquent fervor, as his topics became more exciting and important. Then it was that he was accustomed to hurl forth his tremendons weapons of sarcasm and invective—and standing in the attitude of St Paul in the Cartoon, with his arms stretched forth, heaving forward, as it were upon the devoted object of his attack the vast volumes of his wrath, he proved himself by far the greatest forensic orator of his time; and in that particular department of oratory, the philippic, he has probably not been surpassed by any lawyer since Cicero. Many English lawyers have been noted for their powers of acrimonious abuse, among whom Sir Edward Coke holds a dishonorable pre-eminence; but in the lofty strain of vehement indignation, the subject of our sketch stands unrivalled. It is to be remarked, however, that in the perhaps less manly, but not less persuasive power of the orator, which addresses itself to the kind feelings and gentler sympathies of the human heart, Mr Brougham was found wanting. To paint the hideous wrong of tyranny and oppression—to exalt the glory of resisting them—to scourge meanness and cruelty—to overwhelm ignorance and presumption with sarcastic scorn, were tasks congenial to Mr Brougham's powers. The excellence of knowledge—the nobleness of freedom—the stern grandeur of fixed resolution, all these were things which he spoke of as a man who felt them; but the softness of pity—the subduing power of gentleness and goodness—the fervency of affection, and the tenderness of love, either found no sympathy with him, or were not thought fit to be made use of in the exercise of his art—

'Impiger, iracandus, inexorabile, acer,'

He seemed to desire to be borne along the torrent of his indignation, and never stopped for a moment to watch by the fountains of human tears.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

BAIL.

1. A sheriff will be discharged from an attachment for not bringing in the body, where special bail has been put in, but the bail piece has been lost in its transmission to the clerk's office. The People vs. Shoemaker, 2 Wend. 253.

2. In a suit on recognisance of bail, where the defendant in the original action is in confinement as an imprisoned debtor in another state, the proceedings will be stayed, and time to surrender him after his liberation from confinement will be given. The People vs. New York C. P., 2 Wend. 263.

BAILMENT.

Forwarding merchants, with whom property is deposited, and who are instructed to forward the same, are discharged from their liability, on showing that they used ordinary diligence in sending on the property by responsible persons. Brown vs. Denison, 2 Wend. 593.

BANKS AND BANKING.

1. In an action by the receivers of a bank, appointed under the act to prevent fraudulent bankruptcies, &c, to recover the amount of a note discounted at the bank, falling due after the appointment of the receivers, bank notes of the same bank of which the defendant became the holder, previous to his note falling due, cannot be set off against the demand of the plaintiffs, although, on the day his note falls due, the defendant makes a tender of the same in payment of his note. Haxtun vs. Bishop, 3 Wend. 13.

2. Receivers are trustees not for the bank, but for the creditors of the bank. Their appointment, and the possession of a note by them, is a transfer or assignment of the note for the benefit of all the creditors; consequently, bank notes holden by a debtor of the bank, whose note has not fallen due, cannot be set off against a note thus transferred before maturity. Even had the note of the debtor been due when transferred, and payment had not been made or tendered before the transfer, a set off would not have been allowed. Ib.

3. An assignment of its property by a bank, after it has stopped payment, to persons other than officers or stockholders, in trust to apply the proceeds to the payment of all the creditors of the bank, in equal proportions, is a valid instrument, and not void under the provisions of the act to prevent fraudulent bankruptcies; and bank notes of the same bank, purchased by the debtor after such assignment, cannot be set off in an action against him. Ib.

4. An action on a promissory note indorsed in blank, belonging to a bank, may be sued by receivers or assignees, in their proper names, as indorsees, without specifying their character as receivers or assignees. Ib.

5. In a proceeding against a bank by the attorney-general under the 'act to prevent fraudulent bankruptcies by incorporated companies, and to facilitate proceedings against them,' if, in the bill filed by way of information, facts and circumstances are stated, verified by affidavit expressing belief in the truth of those facts, and they are of such a character as to raise a fair presumption that the bank proceeded against is insolvent, and are not contradicted or explained by the bank, on a motion for the appointment of a receiver after due notice, the fact of insolvency will be considered as proved within the meaning of the act. Bank of Columbia vs. Attorney-General, 3 Wend. 588.

6. The act prohibiting the carrying on of banking business by individuals and incorporated companies unless specially authorized by law, does not preclude individuals or corporations, if otherwise authorized, from lending their funds upon promissory notes by way of discount or otherwise: the evil intended to be guarded against is the keeping of an office of deposit for the purpose of carrying on banking business. The People vs. Brewster, 4 Wend. 498.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

1. A promise to accept a bill thereafter to be drawn, specifying the amount and time of payment, so as to leave no reasonable doubt as to the identity of the bill intended to be accepted, is, if shown to a third person, who on the faith of such promise, takes the bill for a valuable consideration, in point of law, an acceptance, binding the person who makes the promise. Parker vs. Greele, 2 Wend. 545.

2. A promise in these words, 'I have no objections to accepting for you at three and four months for $2500, on the terms you propose,' contained in a letter, is an absolute and not a conditional engagement; and such a promise authorizes a draft for the whole sum at four months, the longest period specified. Ib.

3. A demand of payment within three or four weeks after the transfer of a note, overdue when transferred, and notice of non-payment within two or three months after such demand, it seems, is sufficient to charge the indorser, where, from the facts of the case, it is manifest that an immediate demand and notice was not contemplated. Van Hoesen vs. Van Alstyne, 3 Wend. 75.

4. The sufficiency of notice of non-payment to an indorser, when the facts are conceded, is a question of law to be decided by the court and not by the jury. Ib.

5. An action brought against the maker of a promissory note on the third day of grace is prematurely brought and advantage may be taken of the error on the trial by nonsuiting the plaintiff. Osborn vs. Moncure, 3 Wend. 170.

6. The maker has the whole of the third day of grace in which to make payment, though it seems that notice to the indorser on the third day of grace, after demand and default of payment by the maker, would be good. Ib.

7. A protest of a bill of exchange by a huissier (an officer of a tribunal of commerce in France, authorized by the commercial code of that country to make protests,) will not be received in evidence, without proof of the code. Chanoine vs. Fowler, 3 Wend. 173.

8. The commercial code of France being written law, cannot be proved by the production of a printed book admitted to be conformable to the official edition of the code, published by the government. Ib.

9. It seems that the same faith and credit would not be given to the protests of an officer unknown to the law merchant, that is given to the acts of a notary public, although the acts of such officer are in strict conformity to the laws of the country in which he resides, and such laws are duly proved; evidence beyond the production of the bill and protest would be required to show the authenticity of the act. Ib.

10. Notice of the non-acceptance of a bill of exchange cannot be given by a stranger; it must be by a party to it, or by one who, on the bill being returned to him, would have a right of action upon it. Ib.

11. Where information of the dishonor of a bill of exchange is sent to an agent who is not a party to the bill either actually or nominally, for the purpose of collection, with a request to give notice to the drawers, and he omits to give such notice until the next day after receiving such information, the drawers are discharged; being a mere agent, he should have given immediate notice. Sewall vs. Russell, 3 Wend. 276.

12. Where the existence and amount, and loss or destruction of promissory notes is shown, and it does not appear affirmatively that the notes were negotiable, the plaintiff is entitled to recover on the lost notes. McNair vs. Gilbert, 3 Wend. 344.

13. Notice to an indorser of the non-payment of a note sent to the place where he resided at the time of the discount of the note, is sufficient to charge him, although between that time and the maturity of the note he has changed his place of abode. Bank of Utica vs. Phillips, 3 Wend. 408.

14. Inquiry as to the residence of an indorser is not necessary, where the holder has reason to believe that he knows his place of abode. Ib.

15. Indorsers of a note made in the name of a firm by a member thereof, without the assent of his co-partner, and passed by him for his individual debt, are not liable for its payment. Williams vs. Walbridge, 3 Wend. 415.

16. The burden of proof lies with the holder to show that the several members of a firm assented to a note, in the name of a firm, where such note is taken for the private debt of one of the partners. Ib.

17. The defence that the note of a firm has been given by one partner for his individual debt, without the assent of his copartner, is admissible under the general issue. Ib.

18. The maker of such note is a competent witness to prove the defence. Ib.

19. The drawers of a note cannot object that it was negotiated contrary to its terms, where they themselves put it into circulation. Wardell vs. Hughes, 3 Wend. 418.

20. Where in a notice of non-payment dated on the day that a draft falls due, it is stated that the draft was protested on the evening before, for non-payment, and that the holders look to the indorser for payment, it is right and proper to submit the question to a jury, whether or not the defendant has been misled. A draft falling due on Sunday may be demanded on the preceding day. Ontario Bank vs. Petrie, 3 Wend. 456.

21. In an action against the drawers of a bill of exchange, dishonored by the drawees, but accepted by third persons supra protest for the honor of the drawers, payment must be demanded of the drawees, and notice of non-payment given. Scofield vs. Bayard, 3 Wend. 488.

22. Where a bill was payable in London, but by mistake was sent from Birmingham, where the holders resided, to Liverpool, to be presented for payment, and the mistake was discovered and attempted to be cured by sending the bill to London, where it did not arrive until two days after its maturity, but would have arrived in season but for the oversight or negligence of the clerks of the post office in Liverpool, it was held that such mistake or negligence was not a sufficient excuse for not presenting the bill on the day it fell due. Ib.

23. It seems, that where there is an impossibility to present the bill on the day it falls due, owing to unavoidable accidents, and the holder is not in fault for the delay, a subsequent presentment will be good. Ib.

24. Where an indorser resided in one town, within two and a half miles of a post office, and carried on business in another town where there also was a post office at the distance of four and a half miles from his residence, and he received letters and kept a postage account at the latter office, it was held that notice of protest of a note might be sent to either place. Bank of Geneva vs. Howlett, 4 Wend. 328.

25. It is not indispensable that notice should be sent to the office nearest to the residence of the party, nor even to the town in which he resides; it is sufficient if it be sent to the office to which he usually resorts for his letters. Ib.

26. A mistake in the name of the post office to which a notice of protest is directed, does not render the notice inoperative, where it appears that the post office is as well known by one name as the other; a notice directed to Geddesburgh, when it should have been Geddes, was accordingly holden good. Ib.

27. Notice of protest, if sent by mail, must be sent to the post office nearest to the defendant, if there be more than one post office in the town in which he resides; or to the post office most convenient to him, or where he resorts for his letters. Cuhler vs. Nellis, 4 Wend. 398.

28. The holder of negotiable paper seeking to charge indorsers, is bound to make inquiries as to the proper office to which notice must be sent. Ib.

29. A promissory note made by one of two partners, in the name of the firm, is admissible, it seems, in evidence in an action against both partners under a count on the note, although there be no averment of partnership in the declaration. Mack vs. Spencer, 4 Wend. 411.

30. At all events, it is proper evidence under the count for money lent. Ib.

31. The holder of a dishonored note is excused from giving notice of non-payment to the indorser on the fourth of July. Cuyler vs. Stevens, 4 Wend. 566.

32. Notice of non-payment need not be in writing; a verbal notice is sufficient. Ib.

33. A note payable to A or B cannot be declared on as a promissory note within the statute. Walrad vs. Gould, 4 Wend. 575.

34. If, however, it purports on its face to be for value received, the setting forth of the note, according to its terms, is a sufficient statement of consideration to entitle the plaintiff to recover as on a contract.

35. Such note may be given in evidence under the money counts.

---

BILL OF PARTICULARS.

1. Under a bill of particulars claiming to recover as for money paid, evidence that the plaintiff has paid a debt of the defendant, for which he was responsible, by the conveyance of land accepted in satisfaction of the debt, is admissible. Bonney vs. Seely, 2 Wend. 481.

2. Time in a bill of particulars is material and it was accordingly held that evidence of work done in 1820, was not admissible under a bill specifying items of work for which a recovery was claimed, to which was attached the date of 24th April, 1821. Quin vs. Astor, 2 Wend. 577.

3. Evidence of money paid, offered by a plaintiff, to rebut a claim set up by a defendant, is admissible, although no charge of money is contained in a bill of particulars delivered by the plaintiff. Brown vs. Denison, 2 Wend. 593.

4. A variance between a bill of particulars and the evidence produced, will not be regarded, unless the bill was calculated to mislead. McNair vs. Gilbert, 3 Wend. 343.

---

BOND.

1. A bond executed by nine persons as obligors upon certain terms and conditions, and subsequently delivered by five of the obligors, without the knowledge or consent of the remaining four, upon terms and conditions different from those originally stipulated, is not obligatory upon the latter. Lovett vs. Adams, 4 Wend. 380.

2. A bond given by a treasurer of a county that he 'shall well, truly, and faithfully execute and perform the duties of treasurer of said county according to law,' is good, although not in the form prescibed by statute. Supervisors of Allegany vs. Van Campen, 3 Wend. 48.

3. A fraudulent representation made by the obligee to the obligor of a bond, as an inducement to the latter becoming bound, is no defence at law to an action on the bond. Stevens vs. Judson, 4 Wend. 471.

---

BOND AND WARRANT.

A bond and warrant of attorney executed by a defendant in close custody, is void. Evans vs. Begleys, 2 Wend. 243.

CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE.

The statute of champerty and maintenance cannot be alleged in bar of a recovery on a bond, executed by a step-son of one lessor of the plaintiff in an action of ejectment to another, to indemnify him against the costs of such suit, where it appears that the obligee refused to permit his name to be used without such indemnity. Campbell vs. Jones, 4 Wend. 306.

CHANCERY.

1. An answer in chancery, responsive to and fully denying a material allegation in a bill, will prevail, unless it be disproved by more than one witness. Stafford vs. Bryan, 3 Wend. 532.

2. The re-examination of a witness in chancery rests in discretion, and though granted under peculiar circumstances, is against the ordinary practice of that court. Beach vs. Fulton Bank, 3 Wend. 573.

3. A general denial of fraud in an answer to a bill of discovery is not enough, where, in addition to a general charge of a fraudulent concealment of property by a defendant, there is a specific charge that such property is held by others in secret trust or by colorable title for the benefit of the defendant; the specific charge must be responded to, or the answer will be held insufficient. Petit vs. Candler, 3 Wend. 618.

4. A conveyance of an estate will not be decreed in chancery, where the proof of the equitable title varies from that set up in the bill; thus, where a state of facts was alleged in a bill creating a resulting trust, and the proof showed a subsequent agreement to convey, it was held, that the party was not entitled to relief. Forsyth vs. Clark, 3 Wend. 637.

5. The appropriation of the joint funds of a copartnership by one of the members of a firm, to the purchase of real estate conveyed to such partner in his own name, will not create a resulting trust in favor of his co-partner, unless the funds were so appropriated in pursuance of an agreement between the parties at the time of the purchase. Ib.

6. Where the contracting parties, after a contract for the purchase of an estate and the payment of the consideration money, but before the execution of a deed, conspire together to defraud the creditors of the vendee, it seems that a court of chancery, on a bill filed by a creditor, would deem the equitable title vested in the vendee, and would not permit the statute of frauds to be interposed as a bar to the setting up of such title. Ib.

7. Where the property of a defendant, sold under execution, brings a sum equal to, or greater than the amount of the judgment the plaintiff in such judgment can no longer be considered a judgment creditor of such defendant, entitled to the equitable interference of a court of chancery, to set aside a fraudulent settlement of accounts between the defendant and a third person. Ib.

8. To enable a court of chancery to set aside as fraudulent a settlement between a defendant in a judgment and a third person, and to order an account, &c, such settlement must be directly charged to have been fraudulent; and all the creditors in such case should be made parties, or an offer be made in the bill for them to come in. Ib.

9. An answer in chancery, although responsive to a bill, if impeached in material parts by the proofs in the cause, is, like all other evidence, entitled to only diminished credit. Ib.

COMMON CARRIERS.

1. The owners of a steam boat carrying not only passengers, but light freight and parcels for hire, are common carriers, and answerable for all goods shipped on board their vessel, unless lost by inevitable accident or the enemies of the country; and an action for the loss of a packet of bank bills delivered to the captain for carriage, will lie against them. Allen vs. Sewall, 2 Wend. 327.

2. An arrangement between the owners of steam boats and their captains, allowing the avails of carrying bank bills as a privilege to the latter, does not discharge the owners, unless the shipper contracts with the captain himself, knowing that he receives the goods on his own account, as part of his privilege, and not in his character of agent for the owners. Ib.

3. Instructions to the captain of a vessel employed in the carrying business, not to carry a specific article, i. e. money, does not excuse the owners, unless notice of such instructions is brought home to the shipper. Ib.

4. Bank bills are goods within the meaning of the statute incorporating a company, and declaring the members thereof individually liable, as carriers at common law, for the transportation of all goods, wares, and merchandise delivered to their agents. Ib.

5. Where a carrier is told that a packet containing money delivered to him is a very valuable one, though he is not informed that it contains money, there is no ground for an imputation of fraud or concealment. Ib.

6. There needs no particular agreement for hire, to render a common carrier liable, because, where there is none, the carrier may have a quantum meruit for it. Ib.

7. In an action against six, as proprietors of a steam boat, in which they were charged as common carriers for the loss of property put on board for transportation and the gravamen was stated to have arisen from a breach of duty, it was held, that a plea in abatement that there were fiftyfour other proprietors, who were jointly liable, was bad, and judgment of respondeas ouster was awarded. Bank of Orange vs. Brown, 3 Wend. 158.

8. An action solely upon the custom, is an action of tort, in which all or any number of the owners of a vessel, coach, or any kind of conveyance used by common carriers, may be sued, and on a verdict against all or a part only of those against whom the action is brought, judgment may be rendered. Ib.

9. The plaintiff has his choice of remedies, either to bring assumpsit or case; but when one or the other form of action is adopted, it will be governed by its own rules. If the plaintiff states the custom, and also relies on an undertaking, general or special, the action, though it may be said to be ex delicto quasi ex contractu, is in reality founded on the contract, and will be treated as such. Ib.

CONDITION.

Where there is a condition of re-entry reserved in a lease for non-payment of rent, the reversioner is not entitled to re-enter without showing a compliance with the requirements of the common law, such as a demand, &c, or that by statute he is entitled to re-enter, for the want of sufficient property on the premises countervailing the rent. Jackson vs. Kipp, 3 Wend. 230.

CONSIDERATION.

The partial failure of the consideration of a note may be given in evidence to reduce the amount of the plaintiff's recovery. Spalding vs. Vandercook, 2 Wend. 431.

CONSPIRACY.

1. The crime of conspiracy to effect an unlawful act is perfect when the agreement to do the act is concluded; no overt act is necessary to be shown. The People vs. Mather, 4 Wend. 229.

2. All who accede to a conspiracy after its formation, and while it is being executed, become conspirators. Ib.

3. When a new party, with a full knowledge of the facts, concurs in the plans of the conspirators as originally formed, and comes in and aids in the execution of them, he is from that moment a fellow conspirator; his concurrence, without particular proof of an agreement to concur, is conclusive against him. He commits the offence whenever he agrees to become a party to the transaction, or does any act in furtherance of the original design. Ib.

4. The fact of conspiring need not be proved; if parties concur in doing the act, although they were not previously acquainted with each other, it is a conspiracy. Ib.

5. If the agreement be entered into in any one county, and the conspirators go into another county to execute their plans of mischief, and there commit an overt act, they may be punished in the latter county without any evidence of an expressed renewal of the agreement; such overt act of any one of the conspirators, in furtherance of the common design, is considered in law a renewal or rather continuance of the original agreement by all the conspirators. Ib.

6. The venue may be laid in the county where the agreement was entered into, or where an overt act was done by any of the conspirators in furtherance of their common design. Ib.

7. A conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor is not merged in the misdemeanor, the result of the conspiracy when committed; where the crime perpetrated is of a higher grade of offence than a misdemeanor, the misdemeanor is merged in the crime. Ib.

8. In an indictment for a conspiracy, it is not necessary to set forth the overt acts relied on as evidence of the defendant's guilt, where a legal offence is charged, e. g. a conspiracy to assault and false imprison a citizen. The unlawful agreement is sufficient to convict. It is usual but not necessary, after stating the conspiracy, to allege that in pursuance of it certain acts were done. Ib.

9. An indictment for conspiracy, charging the defendant to have conspired with divers person to the jurors unknown, is good, notwithstanding the co-conspirators are known to the jury, and their names might have been set forth. Ib.

CONSOLIDATION OF ACTIONS.

1. A consolidation rule will be granted where several actions are pending between the same parties brought at the same time, the causes of action in which may be comprised in the same declaration. Brewster vs. Stewart, 3 Wend. 441

2. A defence on the merits need not be set up to entitle a defendant to the benefit of the rule. Ib.

---

CONSTRUCTION OF WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS.

1. Whether an instrument shall be considered a lease, or only, an agreement for a lease, depends on the intention of the parties to be collected from the whole instrument; the law will rather do violence to the words, than break through the intent of the parties, by construing it a lease, when the intent is manifestly otherwise. Bulkley vs. Delacroix, 2 Wend. 433.

2. An instrument respecting the letting of premises, though containing words of present demise, but in which was inserted an agreement by the owner to make alterations and improvements, and by the other party to take a lease when the premises should be so altered and improved, and the term was stipulated to commence from the day that the premises should be altered and improved in the manner agreed on, was accordingly held not to be a lease, but an agreement for a lease. Ib.

3. And where, under such an agreement, alterations and improvements were made, but of a different character from those stipulated, it was held that the party with whom the contract was made, was not entitled to demand the possession of the premises, though willing to waive the exact compliance with the contract. Ib.

4. If the reservation in a grant and the covenant of the grantee taken together leave no rational doubt of the intent of the parties, then such intent must govern in the construction of the grant; as where a grantor reserves the right of a stream of water running through lands conveyed, and the grantee covenants not to erect any water works on the stream, the water, as well as the land, is conveyed, except the right of using water power upon the premises, which is reserved to the grantor. Until the exercise of the right, however, the exception is inoperative, and the whole premises vest in the grantee, who may assert his right against any one but the grantor or his assignee. Provost vs. Calder, 2 Wend. 517.

5. Where two tracts of land were laid out in a parallelogram form, each being 8 miles long and 6 miles wide, containing together 67,438 acres, and distinguished as townships No. 3 and No. 4, and a deed was subsequently executed by the proprietor of those townships conveying two tracts of land described as townships No. 3 and No. 4, 'to be six miles square, and containing 23,040 acres each, and no more, it was held that the deed should be so construed as to carry into effect the manifest intention of the parties, that the township should be resurveyed and a correction made of the boundaries so as to reduce each township to six miles square and to the contents specified in the deed. Moore vs. Jackson, 4 Wend. 58.

6. The grantees in such case, it was also held, had a right of election to locate their grant in any part of the two townships as surveyed at the date of the deed, the only restriction upon them being to locate in a square form. Ib.

7. Where demised premises were described in an indenture of lease by the number of the lot, and also by metes and bounds, and the metes and bounds applied to a different lot from that described by its number, and the tenant entered into possession of the lot as described by its number, and continued such possession for 36 years, it was held that the practical location was evidence of a mistake in the latter part of the description, and that the lease was good and operative. Lush vs. Druse, 4 Wend. 313.

8. And where in such lease the premises demised were described as extending from a given line so far as to include one hundred acres, and the lot taken possession of contained but eighty acres, it was held that the quantity being part of the description which might be rejected, the lessee took only what was contained in the lot described by the number, and whether it contained more or less than 100 acres, was not inquirable into in an action of covenant for the rent. Ib.

9. A bond by a physician that he would not locate himself and practise in his profession within his prescribed limits, and in case that he should so locate or practice, that he would pay the obligor a certain sum for each and every month that he should so practise, is forfeited if he practise within, although he resides without the prescribed limits; and his so doing may be well assigned as a breach of the bond. Smith vs. Smith, 4 Wend. 468.

10. Where a grant is made to individuals for the use of a church which at the time of the grant is not incorporated as such, the persons to whom the grant is made stand seized to the use; and when the church afterwards acquires a legal capacity to take and hold real estate, the statute executes the possession to the use and the estate vests. Dutch Church of Schenectady vs. Veeder, 4 Wend. 494.

11. To support a release, granted in 1716, of the rent and reversion of demised premises to individuals for the benefit and support of a church, a previous conveyance conferring a less estate will be presumed. Ib.

12. The support of the gospel is a sufficient consideration to render a release valid. Ib.

13. In a suit by a religious corporation founded on a conveyance, it is not necessary to aver a capacity in the corporation to take. Ib.

14. Although the quantity of interest, or the kind or nature of the estate intended to be granted is not specified in a conveyance, an estate for years will be deemed to be granted, if from the whole instrument taken together, it is manifest that such was the intent of the parties. Barney vs. Keith, 4 Wend. 502.

15. The legal effect of a covenant to sell certain lands, is, that the covenantor shall by deed convey to the covenantee; and, in averring performance, the covenantor is bound to set forth the nature of the conveyance executed by him. Thomas vs. Van Ness, 4 Wend. 549.

---

CONTRACT.

1. Agreements are independent, where, on the one hand, an article of merchandise is sold and agreed to be delivered on demand, and, on the other, payment is deferred until five months after the date of the contract. An action in such case may be maintained for the non-delivery of the article, although not demanded until after the time stipulated for the payment of the money; and performance on the part of the plaintiff need not be averred. Dox vs. Dey, 4 Wend. 356.

2. The non-payment of the whole consideration is no excuse for the non-performance of a contract, where a part is received, unless it clearly appears that the payment of the whole consideration was a condition precedent. Ib.

3. Where a party received from another a number of hogs to fatten on shares, and when they were fattened gave notice to the owner and required him to attend to the division of the hogs within three or four days and take away his share and on the owner refusing to attend for that purpose, made a division himself, and turned the owner's share loose into the street, it was held, that the party was guilty of a violation of duty in turning the hogs into the street, and liable to damages. Sheldon vs. Skinner, 4 Wend. 525.

4. It seems, that it was the duty of the party receiving the hogs to have made a tender of the share belonging to the owner at the yard of the owner, being the place where he received them. Ib.

5. But if the party, under the circumstances of the case, after the division, was discharged from his liability under his contract, he was notwithstanding bound to take care of the property assigned to the owner, though the keeping of it in such case would have been at the risk and expense of the owner. Ib.

6. The property being turned into the street being prima facie evidence of its destruction, and the parties being considered as tenants in common, it was held the owner was entitled to maintain trover against his co-tenant. Ib.

7. Where drovers are sued for the price of cattle entrusted to them to be taken to market and sold, a jury are warranted in allowing the highest sum according to the evidence, the defendants neglecting to show the prices for which the cattle actually sold. Clark vs. Miller, 4 Wend. 628.

8. Where a director of a moneyed institution renders extra services for the company, and during a period of eight years that he continues a director after rendering such services, presents no account and makes no claim for compensation, and there is no express contract on the part of the company to pay for such services, a contract to pay will not be implied. Utica Insurance Company vs. Bloodgood, 4 Wend. 652.

---

CORPORATION.

1. A grant of lands from the sovereign authority of the state to individuals, to be possessed and enjoyed by them in a corporate character, in itself confers a capacity to take and hold in a corporate character. North Hempstead vs. Hempstead, 2 Wend. 109.

2. Towns, under the laws of New York, are considered corporations for certain purposes, and the authority conferred on them to make regulations respecting their common lands, of itself, is sufficient to create a capacity in them to take and hold common lands. Ib.

3. A charter issued in 1644, by the Dutch governor of the then province of New Netherlands, to R. F. and five others, their heirs, executors, administrators, successors, or associates, or any they should join in association with them, conveying a territory comprehending the bounds of the original town of Hempstead, giving authority to erect a body politic, and to nominate magistrates, ratified and confirmed by the English government in 1685, by a grant to six individuals in behalf of themselves and their associates, the freeholders and inhabitants of the town of Hempstead, constituted the town of Hempstead a corporation, and the territory granted became the property of the freeholders and inhabitants in their corporate capacity, but did not belong to any or either of them in their individual capacity, nor were the corporators tenants in common of the property granted. Ib.

4. Where a corporation, whose jurisdiction extends over a tract of country comprising within its bounds lands and other property, held in its corporate character, is divided into two distinct and separate communities, each community is entitled to hold in severalty the public property which falls within its limits. Ib.

5. A corporation may be proved by an exemplification of the act of incorporation and acts of user under it. Utica Insurance Company vs. Cadwell, 3 Wend. 296.

LIABILITY OF ONE CO-TENANT TO THE OTHER FOR REPAIRS.

The ancient writ of 'reparatione facienda' would lie in many cases: and one of the cases was, where there were tenants in common, or joint-tenants, of a house, &c, which is fallen into decay, and one is willing to repair it, but the others are not: In this case the party to repair the same might have this writ against the others.* The words 'one is willing to repair and the other not,' have in a modern case very properly been considered to imply, that the defendant must have notice of the plaintiff's intention to repair; and that it must appear that he has refused, on request, to contribute his proportion.†

In the case just referred to it was also considered by the Court, that it was unnecessary to rely on the above expression implying notice, and that the consequences of a contrary opinion would be conclusive as to the obligation of giving the defendant notice. The Court said, 'If one tenant could, in the case supposed, maintain such an action, without any previous refusal by his co-tenant to contribute, the latter might for the same cause maintain the like action against him. In other words the defendant would have suffered the same injury as the plaintiff, and would have an equal right to recover damages. If the two tenants tacitly agree, or permit the house or its apurtenances to go into decay, neither can complain of the other until after a request and refusal join in making the repairs. From the form of the writ in the Register‡ it seems that the plaintiff, before bringing the action, had repaired the house, and was to recover the defendant's proportion of the expense of those repairs. The writ concludes—in ipsius dispendium non modicum et gravamen. It is clear that, until he has made the repairs, he cannot, in any form of action, recover anything more than for his loss, as of rent, &c, while the house remains in decay. For if he should recover the sum necessary to make the repairs, there would be no certainty that he would apply the money to that purpose.'

The above case was cited as good authority in Mumford vs. Brown, in New York;§ and the reason, the Court said, upon which the above positions as to the necessity of notice and refusal were founded, was that until notice and refusal, both parties are equally in fault, one having as much reason to complain as the other.

The action on the case has in modern times been substituted for the old writ of reparatione facienda;* thus one claiming a privilege in a well and pump situate in the land of another, (each being bound to contribute his proportional part of the repairs) may maintain the former action against him whose land the well is in, after a request and demand as above stated.†

In a case in the State of New York, one tenant attempted to compel his co-tenant to contribute for repairs by an action of assumpsit, for money paid and work done in repairing certain premises, of which the parties were tenants in common. On error to the Supreme Court,‡ the Court said, the plaintiff in error is not liable on the count for money paid, because it was without his assent, and because he had not been requested to make the repairs. But whether assumpsit would be the proper remedy, even in that case, is offered as a quere by the learned reporter.§

In Loring vs. Bacon,‖ it appeared that defendant owned the upper and the plaintiff the lower story of a house. The plaintiff repaired the roof, and after requesting the defendant to join in the repairs, then sued to recover the defendant's alleged proportion. The Court held that the plaintiff could not recover, for the very obvious reason, that the parties could not be deemed tenants in common, as they owned and occupied in severality. The principle was, however, recognised in this case, that tenants in common may be compelled to repair by the writ de reparatione facienda.

It has been doubted, in Massachusetts, whether the doctrine of contribution in such cases applies to mills; and it has been so far equitable modified by statute in that State, that if one part owner of a mill repairs against the consent of his partners, he must look to the profits for his indemnity.¶ Mr Kent says, 'The rule does not apply to fences enclosing wood or arable lands;' but in Mumford vs. Brown, before cited, the Court seemed to admit, that one co-tenant of a lot of land might have been compelled to contribute for a new board fence which was a substantial benefit, provided he had been properly noticed and requested.—Law Intel.

* F. N. B. 127, 5 Jac. Law Dict. 482. And if a man have a house adjoining to my house, and he suffers his house to lie in decay, to the annoyance of my house, I may have a writ against him to repair his house. New Nat. Brev. 281.

† Doane v. Badger, 12 Mass. Rep. 65.

‡ Page 153.

§ 6 Cowen, 475.

* Doane v. Badger, supra. † Ibid.

† Mumford v. Brown, 6 Cowen, 475.

§ An action of indebitatus assumpsit, as well as account, will lie by one tenant in common against his co-tenant who has received more than his share of the profits of the property owned in common. Bridgham v. Eveleth, 9 Mass. Rep. 538. Jones v. Haraden, Ib. 540. Sargent v. Parsons, 12 Ibid. 149. But vid. Wheeler v. Raymond, 8 Cowen, 311, where the Court say—'The question then is, whether one tenant in common can maintain assumpsit against his co-tenant, for his proportion of the rents. That such an action could not be sustained, was the reason of providing by statute (1R. L. 90, s. 2.) for the action of account.' (Wheeler v. Horne, Willes 208.)

‖ 4 Mass. Rep. 575. If one suffer his separate property to go to decay to the injury of another, a writ may be obtained to compel him to repair it; and after an injury sustained, an action on the case lies. But this is different from the case before the Court.—Ibid.

¶ Carver v. Miller, 4 Ms. R. 559. 4 Kent's Com. 366.

 4 Kent's Com. 366.

ENGLISH CASES.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER—NOV.

Begbi vs. Levi.

This was an action brought by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the acceptor. It was tried by the Chief Baron in the Sittings after Easter Term, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff. A rule to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside was obtained in the last Term, on the ground that the bill was dated on Sunday, and consequently should be presumed to be drawn and accepted on that day. Cause having been shown.

Mr Baron Garrow, in delivering judgment this day, observed that the objection to the legality of the bill in question was founded on Statute 29 Charles II., which enacted 'That no tradesman, artificer, or workman, should exercise any trade or work of ordinary calling (works of necessity excepted) on Sundays.' It had been contended, on behalf of the defendant, that by this Statute a contract entered into on Sunday was void; but there was no evidence to show that this bill had been accepted on a Sunday. It appeared on the face of it to have been drawn on a Sunday; but what proof is there that it was founded on a contract? It only requests of the defendant to pay the amount three months after date. It might be an application to his friendship to lend so much money. However, the defendant was not bound by it until he accepted it, on the day on which it was purported to be drawn. Indeed, the usual way was to leave a bill for a day with the person who was requested to accept it, and call for it the day after, so that the presumption is in favor of its not having been accepted the same day. However, even if it had been proved to have been accepted on Sunday, that circumstance would not invalidate it, for it had been decided in the case of Dorbs v. Williams, 3 Barnewell and Cresswell, in Drury v. Delafontaine, 1 Taunton, and in several other cases, that the sale of goods on Sunday, not in one's ordinary occupation, was not illegal. The Statute did not apply to all work done on Sundays; the object of it was to prohibit persons from following their ordinary occupations. It was decided, in the case of the King v. Whitmarsh, that a contract of hire, made with a servant on Sunday, was not void. Under all these circumstances, his Lordship thought that the acceptance of the bill came within 'works of necessity,' which were excepted by the Statute, and that the rule to enter a nonsuit should be discharged.

The rule was accordingly discharged.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH—NOV.

Phillips vs. Headland.

This was an action on a policy of insurance, tried before Mr Justice Bayley at Lancaster, in which a verdict was returned for the plaintiff. The policy was effected on a ship bound from Liverpool to Sierra Leone, and valued at 4,000*l.* The Captain had on board a mate who had been once a voyage to Sierra Leone, and, relying upon his knowledge of the harbor, when he arrived at that place, which was about three hours after nightfall, instead of waiting until the morning for a pilot—there being established pilots at that port—he proceeded at once to enter. He went in with a fair wind and plenty of sea-room, but struck on a bank in the centre of the harbor, and was lost. Evidence was called to show that it would be more prudent to go in than remain outside, if the Captain knew the harbor, but that, otherwise, it was usual to anchor outside. Two witnesses were decidedly of opinion that a ship arriving after dark ought to anchor outside. The Learned Judge left it to the Jury to say first, whether it would be more prudent to go in at night than to remain until morning; and, secondly, whether they thought that the Captain had acted bona fide under the conscientious belief that he was doing that which under the circumstances, was the most advisable. The Jury, without answering either, gave a verdict for the plaintiff generally.

Mr Evans now contended that the verdict was neither in accordance with the Judge's charge nor the weight of evidence.

Mr Justice Bayley—I certainly thought I should have come to a different conclusion.

Mr Evans—I flatter myself that there are few people who would not be inclined to come to a different conclusion.

Mr Evans—Juries are seldom favorable to underwriters, and, in this instance, they without hesitation found for the plaintiff.

Lord Tenterden—Take a rule to show cause.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1831.

MATHEWS ON PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE.

The object of the above work, as stated by the author, is to investigate and explain the doctrine of Presumption and Presumptive Evidence in their application to Titles, and to show how far defects in titles arising from the want of direct evidence may be supplied by established presumptions, or by those which are afforded by the particular circumstances of the case. The American Edition of the work is accompanied with notes and references to American cases by Benjamin Rand, Esq.

The author remarks that Presumptions are of two kinds:—presumptions of law and presumptions of fact. Presumptions of law are suppositions or opinions previously formed on questions of frequent occurrence, being found, from experience, to be generally accordant with truth, and remain of force until repelled by contrary evidence. Presumptions of fact are conclusions drawn from particular circumstances.

Presumptions of law rest on one or the other of the following grounds:—the laws of nature—the first principles of justice—the nature and general incidents of property—the innate principles of self-interest—the dictates of prudence or discretion—the policy of the law—and the motive or intention determining particular actions. Examples of the several kinds enumerated are adduced and the particular cases which they effect pointed out in Chap. 2.

1. Semel furibundus semper furibundus præsumitur, is a maxim or supposition of law, grounded on the essential nature of insanity, and the constant experience that by far the greater number thus afflicted never recover the right use of their mental faculties. (The burden of proof lies on him who alleges insanity. Jackson Ex. dem. Cadwell v. King, 4 Cow. 207. Stevens and wife v. Varcleve, 4 Wash. 262.)

2. The presumption that a child born in wedlock is legitimate, results from the principal of natural justice. The innocence of the parties is presumed till guilt is proved.—(Bowles v. Brigham, 2 Murf. 442.)

The legal presumption, in this case, is less strict now than formerly. The rule is the same—but a greater variety of circumstances are allowed by modern courts to be given in proof to rebut the presumption than were consistent with the rule laid down by Coke. No evidence was admissible to prove the issue a bastard, if the husband were within the jurisdiction of the King of England, except in the case of impossibility of procreation—as of the husband not having attained the age of puberty, &c. Now any cause which prevents the intercourse of the parties may be shown to meet this legal intendment.

Other presumptions of law founded on the principles of natural justice are such as the following—that in all cases of alleged wrong, whether the offence imputed consist in acts of fraudulent dealing or of open injury—in the breach of a moral precept or of a positive law—the party charged has the supposition of innocence in his favor. And this principle is permitted to have influence in a civil point of view. Dishonesty is not to be presumed—nor malice. Every act is to be taken to be done in good faith till the contrary appears.

A charge on an act of immorality or disobedience to the law must be supported by direct evidence. Circumstances showing a probability are, in such cases, not enough; the fact must be proved. This proof, however need not be express—but it may be derived from inferences, which are the necessary consequences from the acts done.

3. Presumptions from the nature and general incidents of property. They are two kinds. 1. That possession of property carries with it the right of beneficial enjoyment; and 2. that the ownership of real estate comprises a title to all usual appendant rights and privileges. As to personal property of a moveable nature, the general rule is, that possession constitutes the criterion of title.

5. Presumptions founded in the dictates of prudence and discretion. When regular means are once established for the attainment of particular purposes, those means, it is natural to expect, will be resorted to, when the purposes in question are to be effected—and so when acts which are commonly done only with a view to particular ends are performed—it is presumed that they proceeded from an intention to accomplish those ends. Thus the solemnities required by law to give validity to the ordinary instruments of assurance, as signing, sealing, delivery, &c, are, in the absence of proof of the omission, presumed, &c. Where a will consists of several sheets and the witnesses see only the last sheet signed, the law presumes all the sheets to have been in the room where the witnesses were assembled, till the contrary appears.

Interlineations of deeds which would vitiate them if made subsequently to the execution, will be presumed to have preceded the sealing and delivery. (Bishop v. Chambre, 1 Mood. and Walk. 116. Heffelfinger v. Shutz, 16 Sargeant and Rawl. 44. Erasures of the names of subscribing witnesses is presumed to have been done before execution. 5 Har. and Johns. 41. So with any other erasure. 1 Peters C. C. R. 364. But see Cumberland Bank v. Hall, 1 Hals. 215.)

6. Presumptions originating in the policy of the law. The instances to which the author refers under this head are—the presumption in favor of cross remainders where land is divided between two persons as tenants in common in tail—and the contrary when between more than two—and the presumption that money borrowed by a husband and wife, on security of the wife's estate, is appropriated exclusively by the husband. This last results from the nature of the marital right. As the money is under the husband's power, it is understood to be applied to his use. But this supposition may be controlled, and will yield to circumstances.

The following cases are collected by the American Editor on the subjects of the applications of payments and the presumptions arising therefrom. Baker v. Stackpole, 9 Cowen, 420. Niagara Bank v. Rosevelt, 9 Cowen, 409. Mayor of Alexandria v. Potter, 4 Cranch, 317. United States v. et al. 7 Cranch, 572. Field v. Holland et al, 6 Cranch, 8. Taylor v. Sandiford, 7 Wheat. 13. United States v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. 750. McGill v. Bank of U. S., 12 Wheat. 511. Remer v. Higginson et, 1 Mason, 323. Bank of North America v. Meredith, 2 Wash. C. C. R. 47. Man v. Marsh, 2 Caine R. 994. Roberts v. Gamic, 3 C. R. 14. Braxton v. Southerland, 1 Wash. 128. Bacon v. Brown, 1 Bibb, 334. Smith v. Seaver, 1 M'Cord, 368. Guinn v. Whitaker, 1 Har. and Johns. 354. Banett v. Lewis, 2 Pick. 123. Brewer v. Knapp, 1 Pick. 332. Boston Hat Factory v. Messenger, 2 Pick. 223. Hilton v. Burleigh, 2 N. H. R. 196.

In Chap. IV. the subject of Presumptions with respect to beneficial ownership is discussed. First where a purchase made by one person is completed in the name of another, and secondly, where an Estate paid for by two or more is conveyed to them as joint Tenants.

It is stated as the result of all the cases, that whether the Estate be, freehold, copyhold, or leasehold; and whether the conveyance be taken in the names of the Purchaser and others jointly, or in the name of others, without that of the purchaser—whether in one name or several—whether jointly or successive;—the trust or beneficial ownership appertains to the man who advances the purchase-money. A similar rule holds in regard to personal property. The doctrine on this subject is analogous to that of resulting uses at Common Law.

This doctrine or principle is, however, merely an intendment of law and is always controlled by the expressed meaning of the parties. This presumption may be met in various ways. It can never operate to subvert the policy of the law. Parol evidence is admissible to show a different intention between the parties. Although it is a general principle that parol evidence shall not be received to contradict a written instrument; yet, where the law raises a presumption which is against the apparent purpose of the written instrument, parol evidence is held admissible to repel that presumption. It is adduced not to contradict or vary, but to give effect to and sustain the apparent and literal import of the deed.

This presumption may be rebutted by circumstances, out of which a conflicting presumption of a higher nature arises. It is thus where such a relation exists between the person who advances the purchase money, and him in whose name the purchase is completed, as to impose a natural or moral obligation on the one to provide for the other. In such case the purchase is presumed to have been for the nominee's benefit, and to discharge such obligation. Such obligations exist between parents and children—husbands and wives, &c. Presumptions, arising from these sources may, however, be met by evidence of a contrary intention. It is said as between parent and child, parol evidence, that the child was to take merely as trustee, is not sufficient. There must be some written document signed by the party, or some other act equally conclusive; and these must be contemporaneous with, or prior to the completion of the purchase.

Possession by the Parent and receipt of rents has been held as evidence of intention to retain the equitable interest. But this rule does not hold where the purchase is in the name of an infant and the father keeps possession during the infancy, such possession being referrible to his right as guardian.

To be continued.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

LIBRARY OF EDUCATION. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN,

The Library of Education, Vol. I. —Containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education.' By John Locke, and a 'Treatise of Education,' by John Milton, with an Appendix, containing Locke's Memoranda on Study. Edited by Wm. Russell, late editor of the Journal of Education.

Extract from the Preface.

'The present volume is intended to form one of a series of standard treatises on the subject of Education. The work now commenced will, it is hoped, form a useful source of information to parents and teachers; furnishing to the latter a sort of professional library, to which individuals may resort for assistance in the labor of instruction, and offering to the former an aid to the formation of just and extensive views of the whole scope of education, as well as a preparation for cooperating with instruction, in their exertions for the mental advancement of the young.' Jan. 1.

WHITMAN'S LETTERS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, 'Two Letters to Rev. Moses Stuart,' on Religious Liberty, occasioned by his Letter to Rev. Wm. E. Channing. By Bernard Whitman. Jan. 1.

SIXTY MAPS of the various countries of the Globe, from the Epitome of Universal Geography. For sale at GRAY & BOWEN'S, 141 Washington Street. Price 50 cents, bound. Jan. 1.

PARLEY'S ASIA. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, Peter Parley's Tales about Asia, with a Map and numerous Engravings. This is designed as a fourth volume in a series of Geographical and Historical Tales for Children. Tales of America, Europe, and Africa, have already been published. Tales of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, Tales of the Sea, and Tales of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, will complete the series. These three last are in a state of forwardness.

GRAY & BOWEN, have just published, TALES OF TRAVELS West of the Mississippi, with a Map and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. This volume is the first of a series which is intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—
Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.
Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.
Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.
Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.
Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.
Peter Parley's Geography for Children. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, an APPENDIX to the American Almanac, for the year 1831, being the latter part of the fiftyfifth, and the beginning of the fiftysixth year of the Independence of the United States.

Extract from the Preliminary Observations on the Astronomical Department of the American Almanac.

The Appendix is intended to answer all the essential purposes of a Nautical Almanac, and the insertion therein of the distances of the Moon from the Planets, and of the proportional logarithm of the difference between the distances, it is hoped, will be found an improvement on any Almanac hitherto published. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLII. for December, 1830.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Classes of American Society.—1. A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, first delivered Oct. 6, before the Charlestown Lyceum, and published at their request. By Edw. Everett. 2. Mr Tuckerman's Second Semiannual Report of the Fourth Year of his Services as a Minister at Large in Boston.

II. The Jews.—The History of the Jews, from the Earliest Period to the Present time. By Rev. H. H. Milman.

III. Wheaton's Travels.—A Journal of a Residence during several months in London; including Excursions through various Parts of England; and a short Tour in France and Scotland, in the Years 1823 and 1824. By Nathaniel S. Wheaton, A. M.

IV. English Unitarian Methodists. An Account of the Rise and Progress of the Unitarian Doctrine, in the Societies at Rochdale, Newchurch in Rosendale, and other Places, formerly in Connexion with the late Rev. Joseph Cooke. In Ten Letters to a Friend. By John Ashworth.

V. Life of Mohammed.—The Life of Mohammed; Founder of the Religion of Islam, and of the Empire of the Saracens. By the Rev. George Bush, A. M

VI. Anderson's Tour in Greece.—Observations upon the Peloponnesus and Greek Islands, made in 1829. By Rufus Anderson, one of the Secretaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Jan. 22.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The North American Review, No. LXX. for January, 1831.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Statuary—Del' arte di vedere nelle belle arte del desegno, secondo i Principii di Sulzer e di Mengs.

II. Bank of the United States—Report of the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred so much of the Message of the President, as relates to the Bank of the United States.

III. Anatomy—Address to the Community on the Necessity of legalizing the Study of Anatomy. By order of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

IV. Clarence—A Tale of our own Times. By the Author of Redwood.

V. Hieroglyphics—Essay on the Hieroglyphic System of M. Champollion, Jr, and on the advantages which it offers to Sacred Criticism. By J. G. H. Greppo, Vicar General of Belley. Translated from the French, by Isaac Stuart, with Notes and Illustrations.

VI. American System—1. Report from the Committee on Commerce to whom was referred so much of the President's Message, as relates to the Commerce of the United States with Foreign Nations, &c. 2. A Review of Mr Cambreleng's Report from the Committee of Commerce. By Mephistopheles. 3. Exposition and Protest reported by the Special Committee of the House of Representatives on the Tariff. 4. Mr McDuffie's Speech in the House of Representatives on the Bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures for the more faithful Collection of the Revenue.

VII. Grahame's History of the United States—The History of the Rise and Progress of the United States of N. America till the British Revolution in 1688. By James Grahame, Esq.

VIII. Memoirs of Madame De Genlis—Memoires Inedits de Madame la Comtesse de Genlis sur le dixhuitieme siecle et a Revolution Francoise, depuis 1756, jusqu' a nos jours.

IX. Phillips' Manual of Political Economy, with particular reference to the Institutions, Resources and Condition of the United States. By Willard Phillips.

X. History of the Jews—History of the Jews from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Rev. H. H. Milman. Jan. 22.

GRAY AND BOWEN, have just received, No. 1, of SURGICAL ANATOMY OF THE ARTERIES, with plates and illustrations. By Nathan R. Smith, M. D. Professor of Surgery in the University of Maryland. January 1.

MALTE-BRUN SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY.—This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK, The Malte-Brun School Geography, illustrated by numerous original engravings, and an Atlas of 19 Maps, Charts, and Tables. By S. Griswold Goodrich. Jan. 1.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES. GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

Nos. 13 and 14, North American Series.

These numbers contain articles on Motion of Fluids—Iron Brestramers—Caoutchouc—Liverpool and Manchester Railway—Weight and Pressure in Ships of War—Steam Canal Navigation—Improved Electrical Apparatus—Stephenson's Locomotive Engine—On Flying—Mariner's Life Grapple—Marine Steam Engine—Perpetual Motion, &c, &c; with very numerous engravings. Subscriptions received as above. Feb. 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVI.

CONTENTS.

Art. 1. Mill's Phenomena of Mind. 2. Tytler's and Scott's Histories of Scotland. 3. Memoirs, Correspondence, and Papers of Thomas Jefferson. 4. Niebuhr's Geography of Herodotus. 5. Galt's Southennan. 6. Floods in Morayshire. 7. Troades of Euripides. 8. The Belgian Insurrection, and De Potter's Trial. 9. Alexander's Travels. 10. London Bridge. 11. Hydrophobia. 12. Mr Brougham and Local Judicatories. 13. Novels and Travels in Turkey. 14. The Three Days of Paris. 15. Brasse's Sophocles. 16. Geometry without Axioms. 17. Revolution of 1830. List of Books, Index, &c. Jan. 22.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

WORKING MEN'S PARTY. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, delivered before the Charlestown Lyceum, October 6, 1830. By Edward Everett.

EVENTS IN PARIS, during the 26, 27, 28, and 29th of July, 1830. By several eye witnesses. Translated from the fourth Paris edition. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1831. NO. XXXIII.

ON THE LIABILITY

OF MONEY, BANK BILLS AND STOCK TO BE SEIZED AND SOLD UPON EXECUTION.

There is no question, that moveable and tangible personal property, such as corn, jewels, garments, household goods, &c, (if not expressly exempted by statute) may be seized and sold upon execution, by the Sheriff.* But the question whether money, bank bills and stock in incorporated companies may at common law be thus seized and sold, has been considerably discussed.

Lord Mansfield said that there were some old cases in which it had been held, that the Sheriff could not take money in execution, even though found in the defendant's scrutoire; and that a quaint reason was given for it, viz., that money could not be sold.† But it is evident, that he did not think this a sound reason, and the result of the motion in that case would seem pretty strongly to sanction the right of the officer to take money upon an execution. This has, however, been otherwise ruled in the King's Bench, in later cases, and carried so far, that the Court would not allow the Sheriff to apply surplus money raised on a sale of property under an execution to the satisfaction of another execution in his hands, against the same defendant, although no other property was to be found.‡ In the case however of King vs. Webber,§ it was ruled that a Sheriff might take ready money by a levari facias; and in this respect there was no difference between a levari facias and a fieri facias; and in Dalton's Sheriff, p. 145, it is laid down expressly, that money may be taken by virtue of a fieri facias. The Supreme Court of the United States, upon a careful examination of the authorities, have adopted the same doctrine; and they say, that they could perceive no reason why an execution should not be levied on money; that the one given in the books, that money could not be sold, was not a good one; that the reason of a sale is, that money only will satisfy an execution, and if anything else be taken it must be no good reason for refusing to take the very article, to produce which is the sole object of the execution.‖ The Supreme Court of New York have also expressly decided, that money or bank bills may be taken in execution; and have fully concurred in the doctrine advanced in the case last cited.* In another case, the court said, that on looking again at the cases, they could find nothing to induce them to doubt of the soundness of the above decision.†

When personal chattels are attached, another creditor who would make a second attachment, must do it by the same officer who made the first; because he has possession of the chattels, and the creditor therefore knows to whom to deliver his writ.‡ But where property is of so intangible a nature as shares in the stock of a corporation, there can be no change of possession. And as it is uncertain whether they are under attachment or not, the sale of them upon execution, is not justifiable at common law.§ Thus, in an action brought against a sheriff in the state of New York, it appeared that the sheriff had sold among other property one share in the Bank of Columbia and three shares in the Hudson Library: Per Kent C. J., 'The bank and library shares were levied on by mistake, for these were mere choses in action, and not the subject of a levy and sale by a fi. fa. any more than bonds and notes.'‖

But though a rule made by the sheriff, like the one in the above case, be irregular and unjustifiable, yet if certificates of the shares are given to the purchaser, the case is more analogous to the sale of common chattels. And, according to the construction of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, the delivery of the certificate would be like the delivery of the chattel, and the transfer may be considered complete.¶

In Connecticut, it seems that shares in a turnpike company form an exception to the rule, that shares in the stock of corporations are not liable to a levy and sale by the sheriff; and this decision would equally apply to a canal company, it being founded upon the supposition, that the company have an incorporeal right or easement in the land upon which the road is constructed. But in Massachusetts in the case of Howe vs. Starkweather,†† Parker, C. J., who gave the opinion of the court, expressly says,—'shares in a turnpike, or other incorporated company, are not chattels. They have more resemblance to choses in action, being merely evidence of property: the sale of them upon execution not being justifiable at common law.'

It has been held in Pensylvania, that a turnpike road cannot be levied on by an execution issued upon a judgment obtained even against the company. The plaintiff in error in this case, having obtained judgment against the president, managers, and company of the New Alexandria and Pittsburg turnpike road issued a fieri facias, and levied on 'all the right, title, interest, and claim of the defendants, of, in, and to ten miles of the said road,' &c.; and the question was whether property of this kind was subject to a levy by virtue of a fieri facias.* Tilghman, C. J. in delivering the opinion observed,—'It has been decided, that every kind of interest in land, legal or equitable, is subject to an execution in this state. But it does not appear, that the turnpike company had any estate of any kind, in the land over which this road runs. They were incorporated by the legislature for a special purpose, in which the public were much interested. They were permitted to enter on the land, and make a road, under certain regulations, and when the road was finished and approved by the governor, to take certain tolls. But there is nothing in the incorporating act, which authorizes the company to transfer their right to other persons; and such transfer would certainly be inconsistent with the whole design, and object of the law. It was presumed, that the right would remain in this corporation, and the act contains a complete system providing redress in cases of delinquency, and calculated to protect the public from the consequences of such delinquency. The inconvenience would be excessive, if the right of the company could be cut up into an indefinite number of small parts, and vested in individuals. The defendants had no tangible interest,—nothing which could be delivered by the sheriff to a purchaser under the execution. There was no rent, or profit, of any kind, issuing out of land,—nothing but a right to receive toll, for horses, carriages, &c, passing over the land, which would be more or less, according to the number of passengers, and that would much depend on the condition in which the road should be kept. Every kind of right, or license granted by the act of assembly, was confined to the company. They alone were confided in. They alone were looked to for a faithful performance of the important duties incumbent on them. But it may be said to be extremely hard that a corporation should be permitted to contract debts, and possess the means of paying them, and yet their creditors should have no power of coercion. And certainly such a state of things is both hard and unjust. But it does not follow that the proper remedy is by execution. Experience every day pointing out defects in our law, which can be remedied only by the legislative power. And the defect which now appears is well worthy of, and will no doubt receive the attention of our legislature. It may probably be thought adviseable to provide some mode of sequestration, by which the profits arising from roads, may be se-

---

* Handy v. Dobbin, 12 Johns. Rep. 220. Holmes v. Nuncaster, Ibid. 395. Bogart v. Perry, in error, 17 Johns. Rep. 351.

† Armistead v. Philpot, Doug. Rep. 231.

‡ Fieldhouse v. Croft, 4 East, 510. Knight v. Criddle 9 East, 43.

§ 2 Shower, 166.

‖ Turner v. Fendall, 1 Cranch Rep. 117. But the court considered in this case, that the creditor had not such a legal property in the specific pieces of money levied for him and in the hands of the Sheriff, as to authorize that officer to take those pieces on execution, as the goods and chattels of such creditor. The money they held, became liable to such execution, the instant it was paid into the hands of the creditor; and it then became the duty of the sheriff to seize it. C. J. Marshall observed,—'It appears unreasonable that the law should direct a payment under such circumstances. If the money shall be seized the instant of its being received by the creditor, then it seems a vain and useless ceremony which might well be dispensed with.'

* Handy v. Dobbin, 12 Johns. 220.—Vid. also Williams v. Rodgers, 5 Johns. Rep. 167.

† Holmes v. Nuncaster, 12 Johns. Rep. 395.

‡ Denny v. Hamilton, 16 Mass. Rep. 402. Personal property is bound by the execution from the time it is delivered into the hands of the sheriff.—Cresson v. Stout, 17 Johns. Rep. 116. Farrington v. Sinclair, 15 Johns. Rep. Newell v. Sibley, 1 Southard's Rep. 381.

§ Howe v. Starkweather, 17 Mass. Rep. 240. Denny v. Hamilton, 16 Mass. Rep. 402. Wildman v. Wildman, 9 Ves. 97.

‖ Denton v. Livingston, 9 Johns. Rep. 96. and vid. Com. Dig. Tit. Execution, c. 4. In Louisiana, the creditors of a stockholder cannot sell his share in the property of a corporation.—Williamson v. Smoot, 7 Martin's Rep. 31.

¶ Howe v. Starkweather, 17 Mass. Rep. 240. But even in that case, unless by the return of the officer, it appears that the requisition of the statute respecting the levy upon, and sale of shares of debtors in incorporated companies has been complied with, the corporation may not be justified in giving certificates to the purchaser. Ibid.

 Swift's Digest, and 2 Conn. Rep. 567.

†† Howe v. Starkweather, 17 Mass. Rep. 243.

* Ammant v. President, &c, of New Alexandria and Pittsburg Turnpike Road, 13 S. & Rawle, 210.

cured to the creditors of the respective companies. But in providing this remedy, the public interest will not be neglected. Care will be taken, that so much of the tolls as is necessary, shall in the first place be applied to the repair of the road, and only the net profits subject to the payment of debts. A Court of Chancery would do something of this kind, but our courts possess no such power. All that we can do, is to levy on the property, and either sell it, or deliver it to the creditor, in case the rents and profits will pay the debt in seven years. But this kind of proceeding is altogether unsuitable, in a case like the present, and therefore, I am of opinion that the Court of Common Pleas was right in quashing the proceedings. If a turnpike company has a right to land, or other property, not on the road, there is no reason why it should not be subject to an execution. But, in the present instance, the levy, though made in part, on a lot of land contiguous to the road, had so blended the different subjects, that it was difficult to separate them, and therefore the court was justified in quashing the whole proceedings. I am of opinion, that the judgment should be affirmed.'

It being clear that shares in incorporated companies are not at common law liable to execution, they have been expressly made so in Massachusetts, and in some other states, by statute. The statute in these cases generally directs the mode of attachment on mesne process, the course to be pursued when they are attached, and when they are sold on execution. But under such provisions, where the charter or a general act of the legislature, requires that no stockholder who is indebted to a bank, shall make a transfer of his stock, until his debt is discharged, the judgment creditor cannot levy. Or, perhaps it might be more proper, to say, that if the judgment creditor does levy, the lien of the bank will be preserved; and this lien will extend to notes drawn before and falling due after the levy. So much respect is in fact paid to this lien given by statute, that a bank is not bound to appropriate part of the debtor's shares to pay their demand, and transfer the balance to the judgment creditor, even though the stock is sufficient to pay it and leave a balance.* In the case just referred to it was observed by the court—'It is long settled and not disputed that a lien is a good bar to an action of trover; the bank had a lien and were justified in refusing to permit a transfer of the stock until the lien was discharged.'

By the act of 1796, establishing the Third Massachusetts Turnpike Corporation, it was provided, that the shares therein 'may be attached, and may be sold on execution in the same manner as is or may by law be provided for the sale of personal property by execution'—a copy of the execution and of the officer's return being left with the clerk of the corporation within ten days after the sale. It was afterwards decided, that the general act of 1804, directing the mode of attaching and selling by execution shares of debtors in incorporated companies, repealed the provision for the same objects contained in the act of incorporation.†

There is great difficulty, it is said, in getting a transfer made to a creditor of a stockholder, at the Bank of England; for by law such transfer must be entered and the entry signed by the person making the transfer, or his authorised attorney. And in the act providing, that the court of chancery or exchequer may order a transfer by the secretary of the bank, there are only three cases mentioned, absence of trustee, bankruptcy, and lunacy.

It may gratify the curiosity of some of our readers to know the provisions and practice in relation to the seizure and sale of shares upon execution in the great national banks of Scotland.

It is declared in the charter of the Bank of Scotland that the shares may be transmitted by adjudication, or other legal conveyance, in favor of one person allenarly, who, in like manner, shall succeed to be a partner in his predecessor's place; so that the aforesaid sums of subscription may neither be taken out of the stock, nor parcelled among more persons by legal diligence in any sort, to the diminishing or disturbing of the stock of the said company and good order thereof.' It is also provided 'that on bankruptcy or forfeiture, the governor and directors may order the bankrupt or forfeited person's share to be sold by public roup, after such intimation, as are prescribed for the sale bankrupt lands. (1 Bell's Com. 66.) Doubts having been entertained respecting the proper diligence for attaching the stock, the Bank took this course to try it.—Fairholme, on his bankruptcy, was due 3000*l.* to the Royal Bank; and they adjudged his bank stock, with a view to sell it for the payment of this debt: But it was questioned whether this was a title to secure that purchasers would think eligible? The Bank, therefore, called on the cautioner for Fairholme to pay up the debt; and he suspended insisting on the benefit of the stock. The Bank stated, that they could make no transfer, but, 1. On a conveyance from the proprietor; or 2. In favor of an executor on production of his confirmed testament; and that no instance of a transfer on adjudication had occurred. The Court held the adjudication to be a good title, on which the Bank could transfer. The judgment, therefore ordered the cautioner to pay, upon the Bank conveying to him the bank shares which belonged to Fairholme, with such diligence as they have used for effecting the same, with warrandice from fact and deed; and found, that, in consequence thereof, the Bank was bound to receive the purchaser, or his assignee, in Fairholme's place, with regard to the said shares, in the same manner as they are in use to do in other sales or transactions of their stock. (14 Feb. 1770, Bank of Scotland contra Fairholme, Hamilt. 46; cited in Bell's Com. 66, in notis.)

The Royal Bank of Scotland was by a charter of erection, in pursuance of 5 Geo. 1. c. 20, established; the stock was declared moveable and descendible to executors, but, at the same time, not liable to arrestment or attachment. And by a by-law no proprietor can transfer but in the presence of a court of Directors, who may stop the transfer till he find the surety for what he owes the Bank. The creditors of the stockholder of this Bank may, by personal diligence, force a sale; even should the words of the charter passed in fulfilment of the statute prevent direct attachment. (Ibid.)—Law Intel.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

COSTS.

1. Executors are entitled to costs when the recovery against them in the Supreme Court is less than $50. Cuylers vs. Kniffin, 2 Wend. 243.

2. In an action of assault and battery, where one of several defendants has a verdict, he is not entitled to have his costs set off against the recovery against the other defendants. The People vs. Steuben, C. P. 2 Wend. 247.

3. Where an affidavit in opposition to a motion is evidently spun out to increase the costs, the court will direct a deduction to be made in the taxation. Legg vs. Kinney, 2 Wend. 255.

4. An attorney's fee on trial or on argument may be charged, although the attorney does not in fact attend. Wilson vs. White, 2 Wend. 265.

5. Where a motion is suspended by consent, brief and fee are not taxable. Ib.

6. Where a declaration contained ten counts, two for malicious prosecution and eight in slander, and there was no proof in support of the two first counts, the court directed that in the taxation no allowance should be made for those counts, and that but four of the counts in slander should be taxed. So they directed that witnesses' fees should be taxed for but ten witnesse, where forty in fact attended, in support of the plaintiff's general character. Irwin vs. Deyo, 2 Wend. 285.

7. Where proceedings in a cause are set aside on payment of costs, the party is not bound to pay the costs, unless a taxed bill is presented. Southerland vs. Sheffield, 2 Wend. 293.

8. A plaintiff who sues the maker of a note and a guarantor of the same is entitled to full costs in each suit. Meech vs. Churchill, 2 Wend. 630.

9. Costs of motion will not be allowed, though the party prevails, where the affidavits on which the motion is founded are loaded with irrelevant matter. Pitcher vs. Clark, 2 Wend. 631.

10. Where the pleading is at common law, in actions other than replevin, and issues are found for both parties, the party prevailing upon the whole record recovers his costs, without any deduction for the issues found against him. So, in cases of double pleading under the statute, where the defendant has pleaded several pleas, some of which have been found for him, but the plaintiff prevails on the whole record, the plaintiff recovers his full costs, unless the judge certifies that there was probable cause for pleading those pleas; in which case, the plaintiff does not recover the costs of the issues found against him, nor does the defendant recover costs for those issues. Wright vs. Williams, 2 Wend. 632.

11. Where a plaintiff pays costs to a defendant for not proceeding to trial at a circuit court pursuant to notice, he cannot afterwards charge the defendant with the plaintiff's costs of that circuit, though he subsequently obtains a verdict. Linacre vs. Lush, 3 Wend. 305.

12. Where money is paid into court after issue joined, and the plaintiff proceeds in the suit, but fails to establish his demand beyond the amount paid in, the defendant is entitled to the costs of the defence incurred subsequent to the payment of the money into court, but not to the costs previously accrued. Aikins vs. Colton, 3 Wend. 326.

13. In an action of false imprisonment against four defendants, where one of them is, on the trial of the cause, acquitted by verdict, he is entitled to recover costs against the plaintiff, although he

---

* Sewall v. Lancaster Bank, 17 S. & Rawle 285. It had been before settled in Pennsylvania, that the word 'Indebted' extended to notes given to the bank which had not fallen due. Rogers v. Huntingdon Bank, 2 S. and Rawle 77. Grunt v. Mechanic's Bank, 15 Ib. 140.

† Howe v. Starkweather, 17 Mass. Rep. 240. The same general act respecting the sale, &c, of shares in corporations provides also for the sale, &c, of an equity of redemption. And it has been held, that an officer who had sold an equity of redemption on execution was bound to pay over the surplus money arising from the sale, to another officer having an execution against the same debtor. Denny v. Hamilton, 16 Mass. Rep. 402.

joined in pleading with one of the other defendants against whom a verdict is rendered. Griswold vs. Sedgwick, 3 Wend. 326.

14. So judgment having been rendered on demurrer in favor of the defendant who was acquitted at the trial of another against whom a verdict was found on the plea of not guilty, the plea put in by them going to the whole declaration having been adjudged good, it was held that such two defendants were entitled to their full costs of the trial as well as of the demurrer; a single bill of costs, however, being allowed to both such defendants. Ib.

15. In an action of slander or title the plaintiff is entitled to full costs, though the recovery be less than $50. Goodrich vs. Stewart, 3 Wend. 439.

---

COVENANT.

1. In an action of covenant for rent by the landord, the defendant cannot set off damages that ıe may be entitled to recover against the landlord ›n covenants contained in the same indenture ›n which the action is brought. Tuttle vs. Tompkins, 2 Wend. 407.

2. The execution of a lease, and the possession of the defendant, is evidence sufficient prima facie to charge a defendant in an action of covenant as assignee for the non-payment of rent; but the defendant is at liberty to prove that he is not assignee, as by showing that the estate created by the lease declared on ceased before his entry. Williams vs. Woodard, 2 Wend. 487.

3. In an action of covenant, seeking to charge the defendant as assignee, with the payment of rent, evidence of the death of the lessee, who had only a life estate, previous to the entry of the defendant, is admissible under a plea denying that the defendant held by assignment. Ib.

4. Where a covenant is contained in a lease, that on the payment of a specified sum of money, the lessor will convey an estate in fee simple to the lessee, and there is no obligation on the lessee to pay, payment of the money will not be presumed; it must be shown directly and affirmatively, and then the party must seek his remedy in chancery, not being entitled to set up such fact in bar of an action for rent. Ib.

5. A transfer of an estate, to which a privilege granted by lease is appurtenant, is sufficient evidence to charge a person acquiring the principal estate with rent as assignee of the interest conveyed by the lease. Provost vs. Calder, 2 Wend. 517.

6. In an action of covenant against the assignee of a term, though an eviction of three eighths of the estate has taken place, the defendant is not entitled to ask for an apportionment of rent, under a general plea denying his holding as assignee. Lansing vs. Van Alstyne, 2 Wend. 561.

7. To entitle a defendant in such case to ask for an apportionment on account of an eviction of part, he must plead the facts specially, and not in bar of the whole action. Ib.

8. On an issue tendered by a defendant denying his holding as assignee, the plaintiff holds the affirmative, and must prove the averment in his declaration that the premises came to the defendant by assignment. Ib.

9. Covenants are independent where there is a covenant to convey by a day certain on the one part, and such day precedes the time of payment, the consideration of the act to be performed stipulated in the covenant on the other side; and in such case in an action by the party covenanting, it is not necessary to aver performance on his part. Goodwin vs. Holbrook, 4 Wend. 377.

10. Where, in a contract for the payment of a sum of money in salt, the party contracting to make the payment agreed to pack the salt in barrels in the usual way of packing salt, and the contract specified that the barrels were to be furnished and delivered at the place of manufacture by the party to whom the payment was to be made: it was held, that to entitle a party to sustain his action for the non-delivery of the salt, he was bound to aver that he had furnished the barrels, or had waived the performance of that part of the contract by which the manufacturer was bound to pack the salt in barrels. Ib.

11. If an estate for years be granted by an indenture of lease, the words, 'grant and demise,' import covenants of warranty and for quiet enjoyment, and such covenants may be stated in the declaration, although not contained in the lease in express terms. Barney vs. Keith, 4 Wend. 502.

---

DEBT.

Where, in an action of debt, two several sums are demanded as due and owing in two separate counts, e. g. $600 each, the declaration should in the commencement demand the aggregate amount, the first count should demand $600, parcel, &c, and the second count should be for $100, the residue, &c. The People vs. Van Eps, 4 Wend. 387.

---

DECLARATION.

1. In an action for not conveying a lot of land, which the covenantor had agreed to convey, when and as soon as the covenantee paid a certain note, offer of payment and a demand of a deed must be averred. Ignorance of the covenantee of the residence of the covenantor, previous to a conveyance of the lot to another, is no excuse for not making such tender and demand. Sage vs. Ranney, 2 Wend. 542.

2. In declaring on a note as the indorsee of a firm, it is not necessary to set forth the names of the members of the firm. Cochran vs. Scott, 3 Wend. 229.

3. A declaration is bad for misjoinder of counts, where, in an action of assumpsit against an administrator, a count of insimul computassent with the defendant, as administrator, of and concerning moneys from the defendant as administrator, to the plaintiff, before that time due and owing, is joined to counts on promises made by the intestate. Reynolds vs. Reynolds, 3 Wend. 244.

4. Had the accounting been stated to have been with the defendant, as administrator of and concerning money due and owing to the plaintiff, by the intestate in his life time, there would have been no mis-joinder. Ib.

5. In declaring in assumpsit for the breach of a contract, it is not necessary to set forth the payment of a part of the consideration, admitted by the contract to have been received. Dox vs. Dey, 3 Wend. 356.

6. Nor where the contract is to deliver on demand, is it necessary to allege the precise day of the demand; the day not being material. Ib.

7. A contract in the alternative, to transport fifteen or twenty tons of marble from one place to another, must be stated, in the declaration according to the terms of it. If stated as an absolute contract for the transportation of twenty tons, and not fifteen or twenty tons, the variance will be fatal. Stone vs. Knowlton, 3 Wend. 374.

8. So, to allege a consideration for the promise in addition to the true considerations moving thereto, not supported by the proof, will be cause of nonsuit. Ib.

9. Where a party bound himself to pay a sum certain as the consideration of lands to be conveyed to him, by discharging two mortgages, incumbrances upon the land, and paying the balance to the vendor, it was held, that a breach was ill assigned which alleged generally the non-payment of the mortgages and of the balance to the vendor, without averring the mortgages to be due, or that the vendee had the right to pay them, or that the vendor had sustained injury by the non-payment, there being nothing on the face of the declaration by which it could be ascertained that there was a balance beyond the mortgages. Thomas vs. Van Ness, 4 Wend. 549.

10. It is not always sufficient to aver performance in the words of the contract; the intent of the contract must be shown to have been performed, and where the words do not clearly and unequivocally express, in terms, that which in judgment of law they import, their legal import constitutes the contract that must be averred to have been done. Ib.

11. Where it is necessary on the part of the plaintiff to aver performance, it must be set forth with such certainty as to enable the court to judge whether the intent of the covenant has been fulfilled. Ib.

12. Where a breach gives no data to regulate the assessment of damages, it is not well assigned, though it negative the words of the condition of a bond. The People vs. Russell, 4 Wend. 570.

13. A defendant cannot, however, avail himself of such defective breach, under a demurrer to his plea, if there be another breach in the declaration well assigned. Ib.

14. Where, in a declaration against a sheriff for money collected on an execution, it is stated that the direction was to levy a certain sum, without specifying interest, and by the execution it appears that he was directed to levy the amount with interest, the variance is not material. Crane vs. Dygert, 4 Wend. 675.

---

DEED.

1. Any person affected by a deed, may at any time question its validity, and show that it was not in fact duly executed or delivered, although it has been proved in the usual form by a subscribing witness, and recorded. Jackson vs. Perkins, 2 Wend. 308.

2. The delivery of a deed is usually proved by the fact of the grantee having the deed in his possession, or by other circumstances tending to the same conclusion. Ib.

3. Proof of the due execution of a deed, and of its having been recorded, is perhaps prima facie evidence of its delivery; but a grantee is not concluded by such proof, and is a competent witness to prove that the deed never was delivered to him. Ib.

4. A certificate of the proof of a deed that the witness 'testified that he saw the within grantor sign the same,' without adding that the witness stated that he knew the person who executed the deed, is not sufficient to entitle the deed to be read in evidence. Jackson vs. Osborn, 2 Wend. 555.

5. Where an erasure or interlineation appears in a material part of a deed, of which no notice is taken at the time of the execution, it is a suspicious circumstance which requires some explanation on the part of the party producing it, and it is the province of the jury to determine whether or not the explanation given is satisfactory. Ib.

6. Where a deed of a tract of land to three grantees recites a will devising the same land to one of the grantees during widowhood, and the remainder in fee to the others; declares its object to be to carry into effect the intention of the testator; and then grants the premises to the three persons in fee, 'Habendum to them, their heirs and assigns, in the manner mentioned in the said will,' the habendum is not inconsistent with and will control the premises. Bird vs. Ireland, 3 Wend. 99.

7. Although the testator, at the time of the making of the will, had no legal estate in the premises, the grantees in the deed, and those claiming under them, are estopped from setting up any title inconsistent with that conveyed thereby. Ib.

8. Where a mother conveyed a house and lot to two sons in fee, and took back an instrument in writing of the same date, executed by one of the grantees under seal, declaring the intention of the parties to be, that the grantor should hold and enjoy the property, and receive the rents and profits thereof during her natural life, and covenanting to abide by such agreement, it was held, that the deed and the instrument were parts of the same contract, and that the grantor had an estate for life in the premises. Watson vs. McKenny, 3 Wend. 233.

9. The deed, being founded on a pecuniary consideration, might take effect in futuro; and the defeasance being a part of the deed, and not a distinct instrument, the deed was valid and effectual as a covenant to stand seised to uses. Ib.

10. The instrument also might operate by way of exception or reservation in favor of the grantor. Ib.

11. Where a party owns land adjoining one side of a stream, and also owns the bed of the stream, and conveys to another owning land adjoining the stream on the other side thereof, the land under water to the middle of the stream, reserving to himself the right to butt a dam on both sides or shores of the stream as he shall think necessary, the parties are entitled to an equal participation in the use of the water, notwithstanding the reservation. Case vs. Haight, 3 Wend. 632.

12. The reservation in such case has not the effect of an exception, it being indispensable to a good exception, that the thing excepted should be part of the thing granted, and not of any other thing; the reservation, however, is operative as an implied covenant or by way of estoppel, securing the right provided for in the reservation. Ib.

13. A title subsequently acquired by a person who has quit-claimed his interest in lands, in which, at the time of the quit-claim, he had no title, does not enure to the benefit of the grantee. Jackson vs. Peek, 4 Wend. 300.

14. A bona fide purchaser from a fraudulent grantee, or a grantee with notice, is, under certain circumstances, protected; but a purchaser under a power purchases at his peril: if there be no subsisting power or authority to sell, no title is acquired. Jackson vs. Anderson, 4 Wend. 474.

15. Whether a sheriff's deed of lands is void on account of adverse possession at the time of the sale? Quære. Ib.

16. The return to the grantor or destruction of a deed of lands will not revest the grantor with the title; a title to lands can be transferred only by deed. Ib

17. A variance in the description of premises sold, between the certificate of sale and the sheriff's deed, does not affect the title. Jackson vs. Page, 4 Wend. 585.

18. The omission to record a deed, does not prejudice the right of the grantee or those claiming under him as against a subsequent grantee with notice. Ib.

19. A deed from residuary legatees to an executor to whom an estate was devised, with power to sell, though regarded with jealousy in a court of equity, will be enforced at law. Jackson vs. Potter, 4 Wend. 172.

---

DEMAND.

1. In an action on a bank note payable on demand generally, and not at a particular place, a demand of payment is not necessary before the commencement of a suit. Haxtun vs. Bishop, 3 Wend. 13.

2. Nor is a demand necessary on a note payable on demand at a particular place; but if, in such case, the defendant shows that he was ready at the place to make payment, and brings the money into court, he discharges himself from interest and costs. Ib.

---

DEMURRER.

A demurrer to a declaration containing several counts will not be sustained if either count be good. Cochran vs. Scott, 3 Wend. 229.

---

DEVISE.

1. It seems, that under the New York statute of wills, a devise would be good, notwithstanding an actual disseizin; the power being given to dispose, by will, of any property, right, or interest, in real estate, whether the same is a vested freehold in possession of the testator, or a mere descended hereditament or interest therein, in respect to which the testator had only a right of entry, or a mere right of action. Varick vs. Jackson, 2 Wend. 166.

2. A mere adverse possession does not affect the validity of a devise. The common opinion has been, that such was the effect of a technical or actual disseizin, although the doctrine upon which that opinion was founded is now doubted in the English courts. Varick vs. Jackson, 2 Wend. 166.

3. The statute against champerty does not apply to devises, nor to judicial sales or assignments under the insolvent acts. Ib.

4. Where, in a grant of a tract of land, the grantor reserves to himself and his heirs the sole and exclusive right of a stream of water running through the same, and prohibits the grantee from erecting any hydraulic works on the stream, reserving the right to himself, and such grantor subsequently demises the privilege of erecting a dam and using the water to a lessee, reserving an annual rent, and afterwards makes his will and devises all the privilege retained of the water of the stream, such devise is good, and will pass the rent, the whole estate of the devisor in the premises being given by the will. Provost vs. Calder, 2 Wend. 517.

5. A limitation over contained in a devise in the following words, 'I give, devise, and bequeath unto my six sons, viz. F. &c, all my real and personal estate, share and share alike, whatsoever and wheresoever, to hold them, their heirs and assigns, and if any of the above six should happen to die without heirs, then his or their share shall fall to the survivors of the above named sons, share and share alike,' is good and effectual, by way of executory devise to vest in the surviving brothers the share of one of the devisees on his dying without issue. Jackson vs. Christman, 4 Wend. 277.

6. Where real estate is devised to executors, with power to sell the same and distribute the proceeds, if the executors die without conveying, the estate descends to the heirs at law, and a conveyance from them is good to pass the estate. Jackson vs. Potter, 4 Wend. 672.

7. If a conveyance from the executors is not shown, the presumption, is that they never did convey. Ib.

---

DISCONTINUANCE.

Where the defendants were minors and obtained merchandise on credit, and when sued, interposed the plea of infancy, the plaintiffs were permitted to discontinue without costs. Van Buren vs. Fort, 4 Wend. 209.

---

DISSEIZIN.

1. There can be no disseizin in fact, except by the wrongful entry of a person claiming the freehold, and an actual ouster or expulsion of the true owner, or by some act tantamount thereto; such as a common law conveyance, with livery of seizin, by a person actually seized of an estate of freehold in the premises, or some one, lawfully in possession, representing the freeholder, or by a common recovery, in which there is a judgment for the freehold, and an actual delivery of seizin by the execution, or by levying a fine, which is an acknowledgment of a feoffment of record. Varick vs. Jackson, 2 Wend. 166.

2. The holding over of a tenant for life, after the determination of his estate, though he claims the fee, is not a disseizin of the rightful owner. Ib.

---

DOWER.

1. A writ of dower unde nihil habet lies only against the tenant of the freehold. Hurd vs. Grant, 3 Wend. 340.

2. Where the demandant failed in showing that the defendant was such tenant, and where it proved on the part of the defendant that another was tenant of the freehold, the court refused to set aside a non-suit. Ib.

3. Admeasurers of dower, in ascertaining the part to be assigned to the widow, are not authorized to make any deduction in consequence of any conveyance of land made by the husband to the wife during marriage. Hyde vs. Hyde, 4 Wend. 630.

---

EJECTMENT.

1. A defendant in an action of ejectment is entitled to avail himself of an outstanding title, against the lessors of the plaintiff, although he is in possession without color or claim of title; his possession is good against all the world except the legal owner, and by showing the title in another, he destroys the plaintiff's right to recover. By Oliver, senator. Schauber vs. Jackson, 2 Wend. 14.

2. A defendant cannot controvert a plaintiff's title by showing a title in some third person, where he entered by the permission of the plaintiff, or as an intruder upon the possession of the plaintiff, without such permission, and without claim of title, or where the plaintiff claims under a judgment and execution against the defendant. In these cases he is estopped from setting up an outstanding title. By Stebbins, senator. Ib.

3. Where a person intrudes, without claim of right, upon the actual possession of another, there is reason in compelling him to restore the possession before he be permitted to show title in a third person. But the reason does not apply in a case of that constructive possession which the law implies as following title; and a defendant entering, declaring that he takes the lands as a mere possessor, acknowledging his ignorance of the owner, and expressing a desire to discover him, for the purpose of purchasing, is not precluded from showing the title out of the lessors of the plaintiff, notwithstanding he may be unable to trace it to himself. By Stebbins, senator. Ib.

4. Where a grantee, under a conveyance from a tenant by the courtesy of a house and lot, goes into possession of the lot and of an alley adjoining the same, which had been used for thirty years by the owners of the lot as appurtenant thereto, continues in possession of himself nine years and then acquires title to the alley from a third person, he cannot set up such title as adverse in an action of ejectment brought by the heir to recover the premises as the inheritance of his mother, the action being brought within twenty years after the termination of the life estate. Jackson vs. Mancius, 2 Wend. 357.

5. A release by one of two lessors of the plaintiff is no bar to a recovery in an action of ejectment, such release affecting only the quantum of interest. A release by a sole lessor is a bar here, though held otherwise in England. Jackson vs. McClaskey, 2 Wend. 541.

6. In ejectment, where the grantor of a small lot of land remained in the possession of the premises conveyed for twentyseven years, and no entry or act of ownership on the part of the grantee was shown, it was held that such possession was not adverse; that nothing but a clear unequivocal and notorious disclaimer of the title of the grantee could render the possession, however long continued, adverse. It was further held that the defendant was not entitled to notice to quit; that the relation of landlord and tenant did not subsist between the grantor and those claiming under the grantee, the more especially as the nature and situation of the property repelled the presumption of a hiring of the premises by the grantor. Jackson vs. Burton, 2 Wend. 341.

7. A conveyance in fee having been shown from the original proprietor of a tract of land, the grantees will be presumed to have entered into possession; and whoever is in possession will be presumed to hold for them, and in subordination to their title, until the contrary appears. So ruled, in a case where the claim to recover was made under a conveyance executed fiftyfive years before suit brought. Doe vs. Butler, 3 Wend. 149.

8. A demise in a declaration of ejectment laid from a man who was dead at the commencement of the suit, may be objected to at the trial, and is cause of non-suit. A lessor must be capable of making a demise, not only at the time alleged in the declaration, but also when the suit is commenced. Ib.

9. Where a joint demise is laid in the names of several lessors, it must be proved as laid; and unless it be shown that the lessors had such an interest as would enable them to join in a demise, the plaintiff will be nonsuited. Ib.

10. Where a person entered into the possession of land belonging to his father-in-law, who promised to give the land to him and his wife, and subsequently by will devised the same to the wife, it was held, in an action of ejectment brought by the heirs of the wife, that a possession of thirtysix years' continuance under a conveyance from the husband was not adverse, that a conveyance to the husband from the ancestor could not be presumed. Jackson vs. French, 3 Wend. 337.

11. Where a jury would not be warranted by the evidence in an action under the statute for waste, to find a verdict for the plaintiff, a judge is not authorised, in an action of ejectment founded on an alleged forfeiture for waste, to instruct a jury that the acts complained of simply because done without the permission of the landlord, work a forfeiture of the tenant's right: he should submit the question to the jury to determine whether the acts done were in fact prejudicial to the plaintiff's interest. Jackson vs. Tibbits, 3 Wend. 341.

12. It seems, that if waste be committed in a dwelling house, part of the property demised, only such parts of the dwelling house are forfeited as the waste is committed in. Ib.

13. A rule to appear and plead in ejectment will be ordered where the service of the declaration is on the wife of the defendant on the premises. Jackson vs. Salisbury, 3 Wend. 430.

14. A tenant for one year holding over, is a tenant from year to year, and entitled to notice to quit before an ejectment can be brought against him. Jackson vs. Salmon, 4 Wend. 327.

15. A person coming in under such tenant, stands in the same relation to the landlord, and is also entitled to notice to quit. Ib.

16. An equitable lien or mortgage cannot be set up at law as a legal estate to defeat a recovery in an action of ejectment. Jackson vs. Parkhurst, 4 Wend. 369.

17. Notice to quit is not necessary from a purchaser at a sale, by virtue of a surrogate's order for the payment of debts, to a person in possession under a conveyance from the heirs of the testator or intestate. Jackson vs. Robinson, 4 Wend. 436.

18. An offer to purchase land by a party having the title, does not impair or affect his right; such offer, however, by a party, bars the defence of adverse possession. Jackson vs. Britton, 4 Wend. 507.

19. Aliens authorized by statute to hold lands, but inhibited from leasing or demising the same, are not precluded from making a demise for the purpose of bringing an ejectment. Ib.

20. A plaintiff in ejectment is entitled to recover upon the parol acknowledgment of the tenant that the plaintiff is the owner of the premises; the tenant having no title himself. Jackson vs. Denison, 4 Wend. 558.

ERROR.

1. Where a judgment is pronounced in the Supreme Court on pleadings brought up from an inferior court, and the party against whom the judgment is, asks and obtains leave to amend his pleadings, which he accordingly does, and issue is joined, and a trial had on such amended pleadings, the party amending is estopped from afterwards alleging error in the judgment pronounced on the original pleadings. Campbell vs. Stakes, 2 Wend. 137.

2. Error cannot be alleged in the Court for the Correction of Errors, for that in a cause where there were two issues joined, the jury had passed upon only one of them, if it appears that the question has not been brought before the Supreme Court, on a motion in arrest of judgment, or otherwise. Ib.

3. The Court for the Correction of Errors is strictly an appellate court for the re-examination and correction of erroneous decisions actually made by other tribunals, upon questions distinctly presented to the court below, and none other will be considered. Ib.

4. There are also cases which have been passed upon by the court below, which will not be revived by the Court of Errors but in the exercise of a discretion; as where the court of Errors is asked to reverse or modify the decision upon some new point not raised in the court below. It would seem that a decree of the chancellor will not be reversed for the purpose of giving the appellant a remedy which he did not ask for in the Court of Chancery; but a judgment of a court of law will not be sustained merely because the plaintiff in error has neglected to urge every valid objection which might have been insisted on by way of argument in the court below. Ib.

5. Where, in a record of a judgment of the Supreme Court of New York, reversing a judgment of the Common Pleas, restitution was awarded upon a bare suggestion that the prevailing party in the court below had obtained satisfaction of the judgment pronounced in his favor, whereby the losing party had lost a certain sum, the Court of Errors refused to consider the point, as the question had not been submitted to or passed upon by the Supreme Court. Safford vs. Stevens, 2 Wend. 158.

6. The practice of applying to the Supreme Court on affidavit for leave to make a suggestion on the record in such case, to lay the foundation of a judgment for restitution, approved. Ib.

7. It is error in a court of common pleas to refuse to decide questions of law pertinent to a case on trial, upon which a decision is asked by one of the parties. Van Hoesen vs. Van Alstyne, 3 Wend. 75.

8. Where a court of common pleas refuses to exercise a discretion vested in them by law, under the impression that they possess not the power which they are called upon to exercise, and in consequence a judgment is erroneously obtained, such judgment will be reversed for error. Beach vs. Chamberlain, 3 Wend. 366.

9. Where a party to a writ of error dies after joinder in error, a judgment in error will be directed to be entered nunc pro tunc as of a time previous to the death. Bemus vs. Beekman, 3 Wend. 667.

10. On reversal in the Court for the Correction of Errors of a judgment of the Supreme Court of New York, rendered on a judgment removed into that Court from the common pleas, such judgment is given as ought to have been given in the Supreme Court. Close vs. Stuart, 4 Wend. 95.

11. An appeal from an order of the chancellor refusing a re-hearing of a motion for instructions to a master as to the examination of a witness, will not be entertained. Williamson, Appellant, 4 Wend. 170.

12. An appeal does not lie from an order of the chancellor directing the sale of property, the subject of contest between the parties litigant, and ordering the money to be brought into court to abide the final order to be made upon the rights of the parties; such order relating only to the preservation of the property, and not affecting the merits of the cause. Chapman, Appellant, 4 Wend. 173.

13. Where there was a defective verdict in a case; where the damages found by the jury exceeded the damages claimed in the declaration: where the judgment was entered for only the damages and costs in an action of debt; and where the judgment was general instead of special, exempting the body of the defendant from imprisonment after a confession of a plea of an insolvent discharge, the Court for the Correction of Errors dismissed a writ of error with costs, on the ground that the party might have obtained relief in the court below had he there sought it. Houghton vs. Starr, 4 Wend. 175.

14. It was shown in this case, after the entry of the judgment, and before the suing out of the writ of error, that the defendant below applied to the Supreme Court to set aside the proceedings of the plaintiff for irregularity; but it was not shown that he had asked for a correction of the specific errors relied on for a reversal of the judgment. Ib.

15. A cause will not be heard on writ of error, unless the bill of exceptions, if there be one, is entered on the record. Anon. 4 Wend. 193.

16. A writ of error coram vobis will be quashed, where the names of the parties in the judgment sought to be reversed are not truly stated. Brown vs. Davenport, 4 Wend. 205.

17. Where there is error in a record of an inferior court, which the party obtains leave to cure by an order or rule of such court, but neglects to amend his record conformably to such rule, the judgment will be reversed, notwithstanding the rule. Waldron vs. Green, 4 Wend. 409.

18. A judgment will not be reversed for a technical error in entering it. Wilson vs. Gale, 4 Wend. 623.

---

ESCAPE.

1. A bond for the limits, given by a defendant who had been charged in execution, and to whom the plaintiff had previously given permission to go at large, beyond the jail liberties, does not revive the judgment, so that an action can be maintained against the sheriff for an escape. Poucher vs. Holley, 3 Wend. 184.

2. Although it was not the intention of the plaintiff to discharge the debt, a voluntary discharge by a creditor of his debtor from the limits, discharges the judgment and the debt. Ib.

---

EVIDENCE.

1. In an action by the assignee of an insolvent debtor, in which the plaintiff declares as assignee for a cause of action existing prior to the assignment, the plaintiff must prove, on the trial, the character in which he sues, although no other plea than the general issue is interposed. Best vs. Strong. 2 Wend. 319.

2. The memoranda of a deceased notary of the demand and notice of non-payment of a promissory note, are prima facie evidence of the fact. Butler vs. Wright, 2 Wend. 369.

3. Where the payment of money is a condition precedent to the performance of a covenant to convey land a waiver of the condition cannot be given in evidence in support of a declaration for breach of the covenant averring performance. Baldwin vs. Munn, 2 Wend. 399.

4. The written laws of foreign states must be proved by an exemplification, and cannot be proved by the printed statute books of such state. Packard vs. Hill, 2 Wend. 411.

5. Where an indorsement in part satisfaction of a judgment is made on an execution, being the proceeds of property sold, which sale is subsequently set aside, the plaintiff in the execution may show the facts of the case, notwithstanding the return of the officer, and the indorsement will be held a nullity. Dubois vs. Dubois, 2 Wend. 416.

6. Evidence of usury is admissible under the general issue in assumpsit. Fulton Bank vs. Stafford, 2 Wend. 483.

7. After a lapse of ten years, a written memorandum, made at the time of transaction, respecting notice of protest of a note, may be read in evidence, as a link in the chain of testimony. Hart vs. Wilson, 2 Wend. 513.

8. Evidence varying the terms of a written submission, is inadmissible. So also evidence of mistakes in an award by arbitrators, cannot be shown in a court of law. Efner vs. Shaw, 2 Wend. 567.

9. An intrument under seal, to which is affixed the name of a subscribing witness, can be proved only by such witness, unless it appear that his attendance cannot be procured. Henry vs. Bishop, 2 Wend. 575.

10. A person present at the execution of the instrument, who not then, but subsequently affixes his name as a witness, is not a subscribing witness within the reason of the rule and his testimony cannot be received, it appearing there were witnesses who did subscribe their names at the time of the execution. Ib.

11. An award of the Onondaga commissioners, respecting lands situate in that county at the time of the award, may be exemplified by the clerk of that county, although subsequently included in the county of Cayuga. Jackson vs. Tibbits, 2 Wend. 592.

12. A record, verdict, or judgment, is not conclusive when offered as evidence to prove an issue of fact, and not brought forward by plea as an estoppel. The jury in such case may find against the facts so proved, if the other evidence in the case will warrant their so doing. Jackson vs. Wood, 3 Wend. 27.

13. To make a record evidence to conclude any matter, it should appear from the record itself that that matter was in issue; and evidence cannot be admitted that under such a record any particular matter came in question. Ib.

---

The following specimen of cross-examination, by a celebrated Old Bailey lawyer, may amuse our readers. The case was one of no particular interest:—Jour. of Law.

Mr C. PHILLIPS—You say, Mr Clifford, that you are a conveyancer and surveyor?—Yes, I do, Sir.

Pray, now, Mr Conveyancer and Surveyor, will you, upon your oath, tell me the number of jails you have been in during the course of your life?—(Hesitating)—I don't wish to answer that question.

Come, Sir, it is a very plain question, answer it.—(Hesitating)—No, I shall not; I didn't come here to talk about myself—(a laugh.)

Well, perhaps you'll tell us how long you spent over the way; I mean in Newgate?—I am not bound to answer that question.

Mr C. PHILLIPS—Oh! but I say you are; for it is the only means the jury can have of knowing whether you are a person worthy of credit on your oath.

Mr Baron GARROW observed that it had, unhappily sometimes occurred that persons found themselves the inmates of a prison rather in consequence of the crimes of others than any fault of their own. This might be the case with the witness, and, if so, he need not object to answer the question put to him.

Clifford—I don't wish to answer questions like this, my Lord.

Mr Baron GARROW—You are not obliged to do so, if you do not choose.

Mr C. PHILLIPS—My Lord, I will shape my question in a different manner. Now, Mr Conveyancer, on your oath, were you ever in Newgate for debt?

Clifford—Am I to answer, my Lord?

Mr Baron GARROW—Certainly; the question is a proper one.

Clifford—I never was in Newgate for debt.

Mr C. PHILLIPS—Now, having said you were not there for debt, I would ask you if you were ever there at all?—I will not answer you unless pressed to do so by the learned Judge.

Mr Baron GARROW observed that a person might have been tried for a crime, and acquitted in consequence of his innocence being manifest to the jury. That would, however, be a case of misfortune and not of guilt, and he therefore could see no reason why a person so circumstanced should object for a moment to acknowledge the fact.

Clifford—My Lord, I submit that by law I am not bound to answer the question.

Mr Baron GARROW—No one can be asked to criminate himself, but you might tell whether you had ever been in Newgate without disclosing the cause that led you there.

Clifford—I would rather not answer at all, my Lord.

Mr Baron GARROW—Your hesitation will produce a more unfavorable impression than your admission, if the fact be as is suspected, possibly could.

---

BARTLETTIANA.—Joe Bartlett, as he was familiarly called in the eastern part of New England, was a great wag in his day, and as well known in that quarter for his wit and humor as his facetious predecessor Joe Miller. When practising the law in the State of New Hampshire, Joe had a large dog, that constantly attended him in Court, to the no small annoyance of his brother lawyers. His canine student, one day interrupting the Court by his yelping, the Judge addressed Bartlett somewhat sarcastically, as follows.

'Well, Mr Bartlett, do you mean to bring that dog up to the bar?'

'No may it please your honor,' said Bartlett, with a profound bow, 'I intend him for the bench.'

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1831.

MATHEWS ON PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE.

Continued from page 255.

If the child be an infant, and the Parent continue his possession after the minority ceases; or if the child be an adult when the purchase is made, and the Father takes possession and acts as owner from the first, the legal presumption as to the Equitable interest may be varied. In some cases, such possession after minority has terminated, has been held to be evidence of a trust. In others, the contrary doctrine is maintained.

In the case of Murlus v. Franklin, (1 Swans. 17,) it is laid down generally by Lord Eldon, that possession, taken by a Father at the time of the purchase in his son's name, showed the Father's intention to purchase for his own use. This doctrine, however, Mr Mathews thinks questionable, and that the reasons assigned for it are not conclusive.

Presumptions in favor of an advancement where the purchase is made in the name of the child and parent are not now considered so strong as formerly. In 2 Atk. 477—480, Lord Hardwick said such purchases did not answer the purpose of advancements, ever in the case of an infant. Although the reasons assigned for such decision is not considered satisfactory, it is admitted that the conveniency is strongly in favor of holding purchases in the name of adult children to be trusts. The tendency of the contrary doctrine being to discourage parents from entrusting their sons.

The same rules on the subject of advancements apply generally to purchases in the name of a wife. When such purchases are determined to be advancements, the father or husband can make no disposition of the property to the destruction or in derogation of the child's or wife's right. He cannot devise, mortgage or sell. The better opinion seems to be that purchases in the names of a wife or child may be avoided by creditors. And this principle applies as well to trusts raised by presumption as by express declaration.

On the same principle, where partnership property has been applied by one of the partners to purchase an estate, the estate is considered as partnership property and will be liable to the joint debts.

But where such purchase is made when the father or husband is not in debt, the title of the child or wife will prevail.

Chap. V. is upon presumption of performance and presumed satisfaction of family provisions—in cases of Personal and Real Property.

Chap. VI. treats of the presumed satisfaction of Debts by Legacies or Portions.

The general rule is stated to be that a legacy to a creditor in amount equal to, or greater than, the debt, and equally beneficial in other respects, shall, if no contrary intention appear, be presumed to be given in satisfaction of the debt.

This doctrine has been questioned. And Courts are now much inclined to make exceptions in its application. Any difference in value or kind, or other circumstance which makes the legacy less beneficial than the demand, is held sufficient to take the case out of the rule. So if a different purpose can be collected from the will or the circumstances of the testator. The rule does not apply in cases where the debt arises upon negotiable paper of the Testator, as it cannot be known to whom the debt may be owing at his death.

Where the Legacy is less than the debt, this principle cannot apply, even pro tanto. (Owings v. Owings, 4 Har. & Gill. 491.) Nor in case of a balance on an unsettled account, due the legatee. No intention of the kind can be presumed on the part of the testator in such cases. And it is the the same in the case of debts created after the execution of the Will.

Parol evidence may be admitted to show the Testator's intention and support or contradict this legal implication.

Chapter VII. relates to the subject of presumed satisfaction of portions by legacies or second portions.

Courts are not inclined to favor double portions. The law does not presume that the Father intended to give more to one child than to the others. Thus when a parent after making a settlement, securing portions to his children, gives by will other sums, such legacies are considered, without opposing circumstances, as going in satisfaction in whole or in part. It is the same in case of second settlements similar to the first. And legacies or advancements thus made, go in part as well as whole satisfaction.

As a general rule, slight variations between the original portions and subsequent provisions furnish no decisive inference against a presumed satisfaction.

Where an intention appears that the provision shall be accumulative, such presumption does not exist. Nor does it where the second provision is made on a different consideration. Extrinsic evidence is here as in other cases admitted to rebut the presumptive satisfaction. Parol declarations by the parent may be given in proof.

Chap. VIII. Presumed Ademption of Legacies, &c.

Where a gift is made by a parent to a child by a legacy, it is taken as the amount of the provision intended to be made for the child. (Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. ch. 258—Cogdalls Exr. v. his widow, 3 Dessaus, 368.)

When a parent or one in loco parentis, having made a pecuniary provision for a child by will, advances portions in marriage, or sums of money for preferment in business, such sums or portions, if equal or greater than the gift by will, are presumed to be an ademption of the legacy. This doctrine was opposed in 1 Bro. C. C. 426, 7—1 Ves. Jr, 109.

The circumstances of the Testator ratifying and confirming his will by a codicil, does not preclude such presumption of satisfaction. Such words amount simply to a new publication. Dissimilarity between the subjects of the legacy and advancement will prevent the application of the rule.

Where a consideration distinct from the duty of the parent forms the inducement to advancing a portion, such as the child's relinquishing an independent claim on the Father, it will not prejudice his claim to a previous legacy. Nor is it by a gift of money for a particular object—as to buy furniture, &c.

A general legacy, additional to another given in the same will expressly as a portion, will not be revoked by a future provision on marriage.

This prima facie ademption may be rebutted by the apparent intention of the Testator as drawn from a subsequent codicil.

Extrinsic evidence is admitted to repel this legal presumption, such as written documents, letters, memoranda in Books of account, or other private papers—or parol declarations. Such evidence may be introduced also to fortify the legal presumption.

Chap. IX. Presumption in cases of double Legacies.

There are two classes of cases of this kind. 1. Where both legacies are given by the same instrument. 2. Where they are given in different instruments. Whether in the same or different instruments a specific article, as a particular piece of furniture, the gift is of necessity construed single.

When double legacies or annuities of the same amount are given in the same will, the legatee is entitled to but one legacy or annuity.

But if the legacy be of an unequal amount though given in the same instrument, the presumption is in favor of their being accumulative.

Where the two legacies are not contained in the same instrument, but one is given by will, the other by codicil or by distinct codicils, the legatee is prima facie entitled to both, and it is of no importance whether the amount be the same or not. But where a meaning different is ascertained this presumption must yield to it. So if any additional or different motive exists as an inducement to the last legacy.

Where a testator bequeaths to a legatee a certain legaey and after makes a codicil, and recites the fact of his having before given such legacy, gives another of larger amount, in terms, which indicate an intention only to add so much to the former bequest as that is exceeded by the latter, the legatee is not entitled to both. A bequest to two Trustees for the benefit of an Infant will not be considered additional to an equivalent bequest to one trustee only for the same purpose; it not being regarded as probable that the party could intend to create two distinct trusts, under such circumstances.

Parol declarations of testator's intention to give only one legacy where the legal presumption opposes such construction, are not to be admitted. But when the legal inference is in favor of their being accumulative, declarations showing an intention to make double provision will be allowed.

A change of the circumstances of the Testator is admissible to show the intention as to the bequest. ( A general bequest of a sum of money to a creditor equal to or exceeding the debt due, though it stand in an unliquidated account is a satisfaction, if it appear either from the will, or by evidence aliunde, to be so intended. Parol evidence to show the intent was held not to be objectionable, as going to vary or contradict the will; but to be consistent with it. Williams v. Crary, 8 Cowen 246.

To be continued.

---

Lord Pitmilly, of the Court of Sessions, in Scotland, has retired from the bench; we have not yet heard to whom his Justiciary gown is to be given. The resignation or decease of another Judge will reduce the Court of Session to the number of Judges which the late Judicature Act has fixed it shall in future consist of.—Caledonian Mercury.

---

CONUNDRUM.—A member of the bar, the other day, handed us the following Conundrum, which we publish for the amusement of the fraternity. Why is a man possessed of an estate of inheritance, like a rogue just nabbed by a constable? Because he is actually seized, (seised.)

GIRL'S OWN BOOK.
This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

LIBRARY OF EDUCATION.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN,

The Library of Education, Vol. I. —Containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education.' By John Locke, and a 'Treatise of Education,' by John Milton, with an Appendix, containing Locke's Memoranda on Study. Edited by Wm. Russell, late editor of the Journal of Education.

Extract from the Preface.

'The present volume is intended to form one of a series of standard treatises on the subject of Education. The work now commenced will, it is hoped, form a useful source of information to parents and teachers; furnishing to the latter a sort of professional library, to which individuals may resort for assistance in the labor of instruction, and offering to the former an aid to the formation of just and extensive views of the whole scope of education, as well as a preparation for cooperating with instruction, in their exertions for the mental advancement of the young.' Jan. 1.

WHITMAN'S LETTERS.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, 'Two Letters to Rev. Moses Stuart,' on Religious Liberty, occasioned by his Letter to Rev. Wm. E. Channing. By Bernard Whitman. Jan. 1.

SIXTY MAPS of the various countries of the Globe, from the Epitome of Universal Geography. For sale at GRAY & BOWEN's, 141 Washington Street. Price 50 cents, bound. Jan. 1.

PARLEY'S ASIA.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, Peter Parley's Tales about Asia, with a Map and numerous Engravings. This is designed as a fourth volume in a series of Geographical and Historical Tales for Children. Tales of America, Europe, and Africa, have already been published. Tales of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, Tales of the Sea, and Tales of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, will complete the series. These three last are in a state of forwardness.

GRAY & BOWEN, have just published, TALES OF TRAVELS West of the Mississippi, with a Map and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. This volume is the first of a series which is intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—
Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.
Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.
Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.
Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.
Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.
Peter Parley's Geography for Children. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED,
by GRAY & BOWEN, an APPENDIX to the American Almanac, for the year 1831, being the latter part of the fiftyfifth, and the beginning of the fiftysixth year of the Independence of the United States.

Extract from the Preliminary Observations on the Astronomical Department of the American Almanac.

The Appendix is intended to answer all the essential purposes of a Nautical Almanac, and the insertion therein of the distances of the Moon from the Planets, and of the proportional logarithm of the difference between the distances, it is hoped, will be found an improvement on any Almanac hitherto published. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLII. for December, 1830.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Classes of American Society.—1. A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, first delivered Oct. 6, before the Charlestown Lyceum, and published at their request. By Edw. Everett. 2. Mr Tuckerman's Second Semiannual Report of the Fourth Year of his Services as a Minister at Large in Boston.

II. The Jews.—The History of the Jews, from the Earliest Period to the Present time. By Rev. H. H. Milman.

III. Wheaton's Travels.—A Journal of a Residence during several months in London; including Excursions through various Parts of England; and a short Tour in France and Scotland, in the Years 1823 and 1824. By Nathaniel S. Wheaton, A. M.

IV. English Unitarian Methodists. An Account of the Rise and Progress of the Unitarian Doctrine, in the Societies at Rochdale, Newchurch in Rosendale, and other Places, formerly in Connexion with the late Rev. Joseph Cooke. In Ten Letters to a Friend. By John Ashworth.

V. Life of Mohammed.—The Life of Mohammed; Founder of the Religion of Islam, and of the Empire of the Saracens. By the Rev. George Bush, A. M.

VI. Anderson's Tour in Greece.—Observations upon the Peloponnesus and Greek Islands, made in 1829. By Rufus Anderson, one of the Secretaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Jan. 22.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The North American Review, No. LXX. for January, 1831.

CONTENTS.

Art. I. Statuary—Del' arte di vedere nelle belle arte del desegno, secondo i Principii di Sulzer e di Mengs.

II. Bank of the United States—Report of the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred so much of the Message of the President, as relates to the Bank of the United States.

III. Anatomy—Address to the Community on the Necessity of legalizing the Study of Anatomy. By order of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

IV. Clarence—A Tale of our own Times. By the Author of Redwood.

V. Hieroglyphics—Essay on the Hieroglyphic System of M. Champollion, Jr, and on the advantages which it offers to Sacred Criticism. By J. G. H. Greppo, Vicar General of Belley. Translated from the French, by Isaac Stuart, with Notes and Illustrations.

VI. American System—1. Report from the Committee on Commerce to whom was referred so much of the President's Message, as relates to the Commerce of the United States with Foreign Nations, &c. 2. A Review of Mr Cambreleng's Report from the Committee of Commerce. By Mephistopheles. 3. Exposition and Protest reported by the Special Committee of the House of Representatives on the Tariff. 4. Mr McDuffie's Speech in the House of Representatives on the Bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures for the more faithful Collection of the Revenue.

VII. Grahame's History of the United States—The History of the Rise and Progress of the United States of N. America till the British Revolution in 1688. By James Grahame, Esq.

VIII. Memoirs of Madame De Genlis—Memoires Inedits de Madame la Comtesse de Genlis sur le dixhuitieme siecle et a Revolution Francoise, depuis 1756, jusqu' a nos jours.

IX. Phillips' Manual of Political Economy, with particular reference to the Institutions, Resources and Condition of the United States. By Willard Phillips.

X. History of the Jews—History of the Jews from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Rev. H. H. Milman. Jan. 22.

GRAY AND BOWEN,
have just received, No. 1, of SURGICAL ANATOMY OF THE ARTERIES, with plates and illustrations. By Nathan R. Smith, M. D. Professor of Surgery in the University of Maryland. January 1.

MALTE-BRUN SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY.—This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK, The Malte-Brun School Geography, illustrated by numerous original engravings, and an Atlas of 19 Maps, Charts, and Tables. By S. Griswold Goodrich. Jan. 1.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES.
GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.
Nos. 13 and 14, North American Series.

These numbers contain articles on Motion of Fluids—Iron Brestramers—Caoutchouc—Liverpool and Manchester Railway—Weight and Pressure in Ships of War—Steam Canal Navigation—Improved Electrical Apparatus—Stephenson's Locomotive Engine—On Flying—Mariner's Life Grapple—Marine Steam Engine—Perpetual Motion, &c, &c; with very numerous engravings.
Subscriptions received as above. Feb. 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVI.

CONTENTS.

Art. 1. Mill's Phenomena of Mind. 2. Tytler's and Scott's Histories of Scotland. 3. Memoirs, Correspondence, and Papers of Thomas Jefferson. 4. Niebuhr's Geography of Herodotus. 5. Galt's Southennan. 6. Floods in Morayshire. 7. Troades of Euripides. 8. The Belgian Insurrection, and De Potter's Trial. 9. Alexander's Travels. 10. London Bridge. 11. Hydrophobia. 12. Mr Brougham and Local Judicatories. 13. Novels and Travels in Turkey. 14. The Three Days of Paris. 15. Brasse's Sophocles. 16. Geometry without Axioms. 17. Revolution of 1830. List of Books, Index, &c. Jan. 22.

AMERICAN ALMANAC,
Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

WORKING MEN'S PARTY.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, delivered before the Charlestown Lyceum, October 6, 1830. By Edward Everett.

EVENTS IN PARIS,
during the 26, 27, 28, and 29th of July, 1830. By several eye witnesses. Translated from the fourth Paris edition. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS.
This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

THE JURISPRUDENT
IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.
BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1831. NO. XXXIV.

LORD MANSFIELD.

The name of Murray, which must be familiar to every one in the least acquainted with the history of Scotland, is generally admitted to be among the most ancient of that country. Tradition derives it from the Moravii, a warlike people of Germany, of whom a colony is said to have settled at a very early period in that part of the kingdom since known by the appellation of Murrayshire. But without going so far back for its origin, or resting its antiquity on equivocal testimony, it can be proved by authentic records, that Friskinus de Moravia, who is usually looked upon as the immediate founder of the family of Murray, was a wealthy and powerful noble of Scotland, so far back as the beginning of the twelfth century. By a royal charter, dated 1284, Sir William de Moravia, or Murray, one of the lineal representatives of Friskinus, was confirmed in the possession of the estates of Tullibardine, which he had obtained in consequence of a marriage with the daughter of Malise, seneschal of Strathern. In the reign of James VI. Sir John Murray, twelfth baron of Tullibardine, was raised to the peerage by letters patent dated April 25, 1604; and in little more than two years afterwards (July 10, 1606), was created Earl of Tullibardine. This title is now annexed to the dukedom of Athol. The peerage of Scotland also counts among its titles those of Dunmore, Stormont, and Elibank, all belonging to the name of Murray, and all deriving their origin from the same source.

Sir Andrew Murray of Argonsk, who was a younger son of Sir William Murray, eighth baron of Tullibardine, may be considered the founder of the Stormont branch of the family. By his second wife, Lady Janet Graham, daughter of the Earl of Montrose, he had three sons, of whom the second, David, during the reign of James VI. was successively appointed to the offices of master of the horse, captain of the guard, and comptroller of the royal revenue. Being in attendance on the king at the time when his life was threatened with imminent danger by Earl Gowrie's conspiracy, he had an opportunity of doing good service to his majesty, by contributing to provide for the safety of his person, and particularly by quelling the insurrection that broke out in the town of Perth, soon after the intelligence of Gowrie's death became public. The activity and zeal displayed by him on this occasion procured him a considerable share of the earl's possessions, which became forfeit to the crown in consequence of his treason. The king conferred on him the barony of Ruthven, and the abbacy of Scone, which last having a short time before been erected into a temporal lordship for the family of Gowrie, empowered the new possessor to assume the title of Lord Scone. The ancient abbey and the adjoining royal palace of Scone, from time immemorial the crowning place of the kings of Scotland, have been so entirely destroyed by the religious fanatics of the reformation, that the exact site on which they stood is now uncertain; though it is generally supposed that the present castle is built nearly on the same spot, a beautiful and romantic situation on the banks of the Tay, about a mile and a half to the north of Perth. This edifice was begun by Earl Gowrie and finished by his successor, Sir David Murray, whose memory is perpetuated there by a fine marble monument erected over his tomb in the adjoining church, representing him as large as life, in a kneeling posture, and in complete armor. By letters patent, dated August 16, 1621, he was created Viscount Stormont. The lineal succession to this title has since met with no interruption. The fifth viscount married the only daughter of David Scot of Scotstarvet, who was the heir male of the family of Buccleugh, and by her he had fourteen children. Of these the fourth, William, has given more lasting celebrity to the name of Murray than had been conferred on it by the valor and the wisdom of the many illustrious warriors and statesmen whose deeds had previously rendered it so honorably conspicuous in the annals of their country. His life will form the subject of the following pages.

The Honorable William Murray, at present better known by the title of Lord Mansfield, was born on the second of March, 1704, in the palace or castle of Scone. A mistake in the entry of his name in the books of Christ Church College, Oxford, for some time gave credit to the supposition that the town of Bath could claim the honor of giving him birth. But this can be contradicted on his own authority. The circumstance was one day mentioned to him by Sir William Blackstone; and he then accounted for the error by presuming either that the document transcribed into the college books must have been so illegibly written as to cause the word Perth to be mistaken for Bath, or that the broad Scotch pronunciation of the bearer, if he was referred to for an explanation of it, might have given rise to a similar confusion of the two names.

The country of his birth had no share in the cultivation of his genius; as he was removed to England when not more than three years of age, and there received the whole of his education. Some portion of his early youth was passed at the grammar school of Litchfield; and it is a remarkable fact, that at a later period, when he filled the station of chief justice of England, there were no less than seven judges on the bench, besides himself, who had been partly educated at the same seminary: namely, lord chancellor Nothington; Sir Thomas Clarke, master of the rolls; Willes, chief justice of the common pleas; chief baron Parker; Sir John Wilmot, then a puisne judge of the king's bench, and afterwards chief justice of the common pleas; Judge Noel; and Sir Richard Lloyd, a baron of the exchequer. The celebrity of the school was afterwards still further increased by the fame of Johnson and Garrick, who were both brought up there. Young Murray did not remain sufficiently long at Litchfield to obtain in it more than the rudiments of classical learning, being admitted a king's scholar at Westminster at the age of fourteen. Fortunately the school had never been in a more flourishing condition than at the period when he entered it. The number of the boys amounted to five hundred; and besides the advantage of having for their daily instructors two such eminent scholars as Doctors Friend and Nickoll, they were examined at elections by Bishop Atterbury, who attended in his capacity of dean of Westminster, Bishop Smalridge, as dean of Christ Church, and Bentley, as master of Trinity College, Cambridge. 'As iron sharpeneth iron,' says a distinguished schoolfellow of Murray, 'so these three, by their wit and learning and liberal conversation, whetted and sharpened one another.' The learned rivalry of such men could hardly fail to excite a corresponding emulation among the young scholars who were in the habit of witnessing it; and in the constant competition of talent to which this excitement must have given an additional stimulus, none shone more conspicuous than Murray. It is particularly recorded of him that his superiority was more manifest in the declamations, than in any of the other exercises prescribed by the regulations of the school; a fact not to be overlooked in the history of one who afterwards, as an orator, equalled if not excelled such competitors as it falls to the lot of few nations or ages to possess. His proficiency in classical attainments was almost equally great; insomuch that at the election in May, 1723, when he had been five years a member of the school, he stood first on the list of candidates for Oxford, where he accordingly entered as king's scholar in the following June.

During his residence at Christ Church, Murray did not disappoint the expectations which had been formed at Westminster with respect to his success in the university. Here he was of course less controlled than he had been at school in the direction of his studies; and the bent of his taste as well as of his ambition led him to devote a considerable portion of his time to that of oratory. As he spared no pains to attain excellence in his favorite pursuit, he not only took care to exercise himself frequently in composition (the surest method of forming a ready speaker,) but he was not deterred by the apparent drudgery of the task, from following a plan recommended by all the most eminent professors of the art, and one which gives those who adopt it the double advantage of familiarizing themselves at the same time with the practice of composition and the language of classical literature; namely, that of translating the masterpieces of ancient oratory, and then retranslating the version into the original tongue. He has often been heard to declare that while at Christ Church he put this method in practice with most of the orations of Cicero. These circumstances are important in a double point of view; both inasmuch as they are a proof of the assiduity and industry of the individual, and as they tend (so far at least as one very eminent instance can do so) to discredit the very common, but not the less very fallacious doctrine, according to which eloquence is considered as a natural gift, incapable of being cultivated or improved to any considerable extent by study and practice. This is a notion particularly likely to find favor with such as do not distinguish mere fluency of speech, or the capability of stringing words together with rapidity and facility (than which there scarcely exists a more mean and unenviable faculty, nor one more frequently allied with very small talent,) from real eloquence, the noblest effort of human intellect.

That Murray, even at this early period, had reflected much and deeply on the principles of the art in which he was thus earnestly endeavoring to perfect himself, is sufficiently proved by the fragment of a Latin discourse written by him while at the university. It is a critical examination of the speech of Demosthenes for the crown; and is very evidently the work of one accustomed to calculate by what means a particular effect is most likely to be produced on the passions or the understandings of a mixed assembly of people. The artful mode in which the orator contrives in the outset to secure the favorable attention of his auditory, calls forth the admiration of the young critic; and he beautifully compares the insinuating eloquence of Demosthenes, insensibly assuaging the passions aroused by his rival's peroration, to a silent shower of dew gently falling on a parched herbage. 'Quis flexanimam Demosthenis potentiam digne explicaverit, quæ submisso placidoque principio in animos ominium, velut in accensos agros taciturno roris imbre leniter influentes, incendium quod reliquerit Æschines extinguit, populique furorem placat?' The rising energy of the speaker, and the effect produced by it on his hearers, is commented on with great judgment as well as beauty of language. But what he especially applauds, is the dexterity of Demosthenes in keeping himself as it were concealed, and exciting the feelings it is his object to awaken, without appearing to make any effort for that purpose. It is particular worthy of notice that the eloquence of Murray himself was afterwards chiefly remarkable for that consummate perfection of art which conceals all appearance of art, and excites no suspicion of design. He tells us of Demosthenes, 'Omnem artificii suspicionem tollit, et in narrationibus non advocati studium sed testis fidem, in argumentis non rei excusationem sed judicis auctoritatem habet.' This eulogium is equally applicable to himself, and is indeed in substance nothing but what has been said of him by a great master, that his statement of a case was alone worth an argument.

Though oratory was undoubtedly the favorite study of Murray, he was by no means inattentive to the other branches of learning cultivated in the university. The discourse just mentioned would be an ample proof, were there no others, of his classical scholarship, and especially of his complete mastery over the language in which it is written. He also distinguished himself, though in a less degree, by his attempts at poetry; and it is probably in allusion to his success in these two pursuits, as well as in the study of classical literature, that the portrait of him painted for Christ Church, by Martin, (1776) represents him with a volume of Cicero in his hand, and a bust of Homer placed on the table before him. A copy of Latin verses has been preserved, written by him after he had taken his bachelor's degree. They certainly do not exhibit any extraordinary degree of poetical merit; but they are at least equal to the common average of academic exercises, and show their author to have been familiar with the practice of Latin versification. The subject is the death of George the First; and the prize which had been proposed for the best composition on that occasion was awarded to Murray. Pitt, then a gentleman commoner of Trinity, was one of the disappointed competitors; and this was in all probability the first instance of the rivalry between these two celebrated men, who were afterwards for many years the leaders of two contending parties in a much more brilliant and more arduous species of strife.

In April, 1724, Murray had become a member of Lincoln's Inn, and in Michaelmas term, 1730, having previously graduated as Master of Arts (24th of June, 1730) and passed a short time on the continent, he was called to the bar. In what manner he had qualified himself for the duties of the profession he was now about to enter upon, we have but very imperfect means even of conjecturing. This is the more to be regretted, as a full account of his initiation into the science of which he afterwards became so able an expounder, would derive a peculiar interest from the circumstance of his having, unlike the majority, depended almost entirely on his own resources for instruction; since it is known that, although he no doubt readily availed himself of the occasional advice and assistance of such of his seniors as chance gave him access to, he never professedly became the pupil of any particular practitioner. During his noviciate, he was in the habit of attending a debating society, the discussions of which were exclusively confined to legal subjects; and his arguments were prepared with so much care as to be frequently serviceable to him in after-life, not only when at the bar, but when he presided in the court of king's bench. This is almost all that can be stated with positive certainty of his early studies. However, in the absence of information as to the course of reading he himself adopted which might possibly be thought to want in authority quite as much weight as it would have in point of example, we are fortunately supplied by his own hand with advice as to some part of the course his maturer experience recommended for others to follow. It is by no means improbable, that the very plan by which he himself had been guided in his reading was in substance and in all essential particulars, the same he afterwards proposed as the most eligible. If so, it comes to us doubly recommended.

The first preparation suggested for the study of the law is a general course of historical reading; and two letters of Murray's on the subject of foreign, and particularly French history, written at the request of the Duke of Portland, afford very good evidence that he himself abided so far by the directions he afterwards laid down. This necessary information being obtained, the legal student is recommended to gain a general insight into the science of ethics, which, as Murray justly observes, is the foundation of all law. From ethics the next step is to the law of nations, which he correctly describes as being partly founded on the law of nature, and partly positive. When this foundation is laid, it will be time, he says, to look into systems of positive law; and he mentions it as a thing of course that the Roman laws will be the first to claim attention. It will afterwards be necessary to obtain a general idea of the feudal system, for which purpose Craig de Feudis is proposed as 'an admirable book for matter and method.' 'Dip occasionally,' he concludes, 'into the Corpus Juris Feudalis, while you are reading Gianonne's history of Naples, one of the ablest and most instructive books that ever was written. These writers are not sufficient to give you a thorough knowledge of the subjects they treat of; but they will give you general notions, general leading principles, and lay the best foundation that can be laid for the study of any municipal law, such as the law of England, Scotland, France, &c.'

Some objections may perhaps be made to the details with which the outline of this comprehensive plan of study has been filled up. The list of authors recommended might no doubt be both amended and enlarged with advantage. As for instance, in the case of ethics, for which the only works mentioned are Xenophon's Memorabilia, Cicero De Officiis, and Wollaston's Religion of Nature, with Aristotle's Treatise, for occasional reference; and still further in that of civil law, which comprises merely Gravina and the Institutes of Justinian, with the short commentary of Vinnius; the Digest to be consulted only from time to time. But the substance of the plan itself appears to us unexceptionable. It may probably be urged that such a course of purely preparatory study would demand a space of time which might be more advantageously devoted to a direct and immediate pursuit of the object in view, namely a knowledge of the English law. But this objection is upon the whole more spacious than solid; and is indeed founded on a principle which we conceive to be altogether erroneous. The task which the student has to accomplish is admitted on all hands to be an arduous one; the goal is distant, and it is therefore commonly presumed that he who soonest starts forward on the road has a much better prospect of reaching it than those who delay their departure in making preparations for the journey. This notion does not prevail nor is it ever acted upon in the real business of life. If a real voyage be contemplated, instead of the figurative one to which we have just compared the study of the law, no one thinks of grudging either the time or the trouble bestowed in making provision to encounter the length and the difficulties of it; because common foresight and every-day experience abundantly prove that it is only by taking such necessary precautions, it can be performed with safety or expedition. The length of time, and the degree of care given to the task of making preparation are apportioned to the length and the difficulties of the proposed expedition. We see no valid reason why the mind should not in like manner be forearmed against the difficulties of a toilsome and arduous course of study; nor why the time and the trouble bestowed in so preparing it should be considered mis-spent. Indeed we are acquainted with no more striking exemplification of the very just though apparently paradoxical adages, that the most direct way may turn out to be the longest in the end, and most haste prove worst speed, than the precipitation with which it is too common to plunge at once, and without previous preparation, into the intricacies of the study of the law.

The advantage to be derived from imbuing the mind with a sufficient store of principles, before we proceed to load the memory with the rules which have been deduced from them, has never to our knowledge been denied in theory, however little it may be attended to in practice. There is, however, one peculiar benefit attendant on this method, which we believe has not sufficiently often been adverted to; though for confirmation of it we may confidently appeal to all who have called the faculties of their minds into active exercise, with reference to any subject whatever. This is the extreme facility with which any particular rule, which has been obtained as the conclusion and result of a train of reasoning, is preserved in the recollection, or, if forgotten for a moment, is recalled at pleasure; and on the other hand, the extreme difficulty of retaining in the memory a mass of isolated and unconnected facts, which we have originally taken for granted, and which having as it were no hold upon the brain, we have no means of recovering when they have once escaped. Nor in enumerating the advantages of a plan of study like that recommended by Murray, should the facilities it affords in acquiring as well as retaining knowledge be left out of the calculation. The different gradations from one subject to another, are placed, so to speak, in a descending direction. The student gains a lofty eminence in the first instance, and his whole after progress is made with the ease of a traveller journeying down hill. If the study of the law were always entered upon in this manner, we should not so commonly hear of its revolting abstruseness, nor should we be able to quote so many examples as are now to be found, of men neither deficient in talent nor in perseverance, who have pursued it with reluctance, or quitted it in disgust.

Perhaps no one who ever abandoned the profession of the law has had stronger temptations to assign as his motive, than those which assailed Murray. Accomplished, devoted to literature, and, so far as academical distinction can confer celebrity, not without some portion of literary fame, it must have required a severe exertion of self-command to refrain from following the example of the numerous aspirants to renown, who have been seduced from the bar by the prospect of acquiring more speedy honors and emolument in the world of letters. The character of literary men as a class, and their station in society, had never been higher than at that very period. The time was still fresh in the memory of his contemporaries, when Addison and Prior had found their literary celebrity a passport to offices of state. Pope had raised himself to independence, and indeed to affluence, solely by the exertion of his talents. The eagerness with which his acquaintance was courted, and the deference shown to him in the highest classes of society, were owing entirely to his success as an author. These, and many other instances of a similar kind, were no doubt, a strong inducement to those who felt the consciousness of genius, to venture in the same track. The manners of that time, too, made the eminent authors particularly easy of access; and every one might be a witness to the respect invariably paid to them in the public places of resort, where they were wont to congregate. Those places of resort were moreover almost all in the quarter of the town occupied by the members of the legal profession, who then lived in the very heart and focus of the literary world. The neighborhood of the inns of court was the chosen head quarters of men of letters, and also, indeed, of men of fashion, who were almost universally anxious to cultivate their society. Steele dates all the papers of his Tatler, that have reference to literary discussion, from either Wills' coffee-house or the Grecian; the former being frequented by such as interested themselves chiefly in poetry and the lighter departments of the belles lettres, the latter, by those whose conversation turned principally on subjects of classic learning. Wills' (as well as Button's, which in Murray's time was still more frequented) was in Russell-street, Covent-garden, within a few minutes' walk of Lincoln's-inn; the Grecian was and still remains at the very gate of the Temple. Our readers will probably not require to be reminded, that Dick's and Serle's, and several other coffee-houses of the same character, formed a cluster about the inns of court; nor that the well-known shop of Bernard Lintott the bookseller, which was the constant morning lounge of literary men, was situated between the Temple-gates, in Fleet-street. We are not certain whether old Jacob Tonson, Dryden's publisher, still remained at the Judge's Head in Chancery-lane, or whether he had then vacated this shop in favor of the Shakspeare's Head, over against Catherine-street in the Strand. At all events, the head-quarters of literature may be said to have had Temple-bar for their nucleus. In Lincoln's-inn Fields, too, stood the theatre; and a theatre was then a place of amusement of a far higher character than it has been of late years. In short, a lawyer of that day was surrounded by such temptations as have induced many, whose tastes and habits gave them any inclination towards literary pursuits, to forsake their profession altogether, and many more to follow it so languidly, as to find themselves eventually shut out from all prospects of its highest dignities and rewards.

That Murray withstood these allurements as well as those of the fashionable society, to which his birth gave him access, or at least made them subservient to his more serious pursuits, is a convincing proof that he possessed the energy and determination of character, without which nothing great can be achieved. That he was ambitious is of itself small praise; for to conceive lofty projects and indulge in brilliant anticipations of fame, is the constant occupation of many an idler, who wants the resolution to make any effectual attempt towards realizing his visions of future greatness: but that he had perseverance steadily to pursue the object of his ambition shows, not only his strength of mind, but his consciousness of ability to attain the eminence he aspired to reach; than which (whatever particular instances may be adduced as exceptions to the rule) it may safely be affirmed there is, in general, no more certain indication of genius.

However, after giving to Murray the credit which is justly his due for remaining constant to his profession, in the midst of these inducements to desert it, we must not omit to remark, that he was not subjected to that sort of trial, which of all others has had the greatest influence in cooling the ardor of aspirants to legal honors, and in many instances has caused them prematurely to abandon a profession, that might eventually have raised them to wealth and eminence, as great as their most sanguine hopes could have anticipated. He had not to contend with neglect, nor to struggle against the mortification and the discouragement of unmerited obscurity. In respect, indeed, of an early opportunity of displaying his acquirements, he may be said to have been unusually fortunate. Within a year and a half after his call to the bar, we find him engaged with the solicitor-general, Talbot, in an appeal case of importance before the House of Lords; and only few days afterwards he appeared in the same place, as counsel for the Marquis of Annandale. In the year following he was retained in three appeals; and his success in this, the most lucrative department of a barrister's practice, was so great, that in the years 1739 and 1740, he was counsel in no less than thifty; a much larger number than are usually set down for hearing in the course of two consecutive sessions of parliament. Previous to this (in 1737) he had received from the corporation of Edinburgh the freedom of the city in a gold box, for the zeal and ability he had displayed as their advocate, before both houses of parliament. The occasion of his being engaged on their behalf was the proposal of a bill for disqualifying the provost and fining the corporation, on account of their remissness in quelling the Porteous riots; their inactivity being imputed to motives of disaffection to the reigning monarch. Perhaps the connexion of a part of Murray's family with the jacobite party might be one reason why he was singled out for their defender.

It is to be presumed, that he was indebted for his first introduction to the bar of the House of Lords to the influence of his family connexions. These were probably of less service to him in the Court of Chancery, where he was a constant attendant; but the reputation for abilities, both as an orator and a lawyer, which he shortly acquired, in consequence of the talent displayed by his arguments in cases of appeal, could not fail to procure him clients elsewhere. It is not always that the names of counsel engaged are given at all in Atkyn's Reports, and when this does happen, the seniors only on whom the arguing of the cases devolved are mentioned; besides which, as the work is very properly confined to causes of importance, it contains no allusion to such business as may be supposed to have brought a rising young barrister most frequently before the court. We have, therefore, no clue towards forming anything like a correct estimate of the amount of Murray's practice during this period; but there is every reason to believe that it went on progressively increasing in Westminster-hall with as much rapidity as in the House of Lords. It has been said, indeed, that he remained, for a long time after his call to the bar, entirely unnoticed; and that he never knew the difference between having no practice at all and one that produced him three thousand a year. That this account is incorrect may easily be proved, by a reference to the Lords' journals: and another story on which it is partly founded seems to lay very little better claim to credibility. According to this tale, in the well known case of Cibber v. Sloper, tried (5th December, 1738) before Sir W. Lee, chief justice of the King's Bench, the senior counsel employed on behalf of the defendant being suddenly seized with a fit in court, the conduct of the defence devolved entirely upon Murray, who was retained as junior on the same side; and the court consenting to adjourn for an hour, in order to give him time for preparation, at the expiration of that time he delivered a speech, which had such an effect on the jury, as speedily to bring the young, and till that time unknown orator, an enormous influx of clients. Now it is to be remarked, in the first place, that two accounts of the trial, published at the time, make no mention of any incident of this kind; though it would have been one not likely to be omitted in books made up for the sole purpose of gratifying the curiostity of the public, and containing the most minute detail of everything connected with the proceedings. Even had Sergeant Eyre, the leader, been disabled from proceeding with the defence, there were three other counsel on the same side, independent of Murray, and two of them, Noel and Lloyd, were his seniors; so that it is not probable the duty would have devolved on him. But the fact is, that the sergeant's speech is reported at considerable length, and bears not the slightest mark of his having been stopped short, or even interrupted for a moment by an attack of illness, or any other cause. Murray, it is true, was afterwards heard by the court, but this privilege was probably conceded to him, from a consciousness of his ability as a speaker, which had long been no secret, either to his own profession or the public.

To be concluded.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

EVIDENCE.

14. An estoppel cannot be created by parol evidence helping out a record; to constitute an estoppel by a former judgment, the precise point which is to create the estoppel must have been put in issue and decided, and that it was so put in issue and decided can appear by the record alone. Jackson vs. Wood, 3 Wend. 27.

15. The lessors of the plaintiff, in an action of ejectment, are not barred from their action, by the production of a record of a verdict and judgment in a suit against the lessors and others as heirs and devisees, in which they pleaded riens per descent, and on the trial of which issue the question was whether the premises claimed in the action of ejectment and other lands held by the lessors and their co-defendants in that suit came to such defendants by descent or devise, and were assets in their hands to pay the debts of their ancestor, although the jury on the issue of riens per descent found against the defendants, it not appearing from the record that the fact in issue in the action of ejectment was in issue and decided in the former suit. Ib.

16. If a verdict in a former suit will stand, on the assumption that the issue therein was found in favor of the title set up in the second suit, such verdict and the judgment thereon are not conclusive. Ib.

17. Nor does it help a defendant in an action of ejectment, that the title set up by the lessor was in dispute in the former action, if such title came in question only collaterally, and if it does not appear that the verdict is necessarily based upon the finding that the lessor had no title. That the jury found against the lessor must appear affirmatively, and not rest in inference. Ib.

18. Proof of hand-writing of the indorser of a note, going no farther than that the witness believed it to be the hand-writing of the indorser, founded upon the facts of having seen him write his name two months before the trial, and also having seen him write five years before the trial, stating at the same time that he would not have been able to have testified to the hand-writing from the fact alone of having seen him write five years ago, and expressing doubts as to a part of the signature, would scarcely be sufficient to uphold a verdict, if the question as to its sufficiency had been properly submitted to a jury. Utica Ins. Co. vs. Badger, 3 Wend. 102.

19. Where a judge upon such evidence, in an action by the indorsees of a promissory note, charged the jury that the plaintiffs were entitled to a verdict, instead of leaving it to them, under proper instructions, to say whether the indorsement was or was not the hand-writing of the party, a new trial was granted. Ib.

20. A witness, on his examination, may recur to a written memorandum, to refresh his memory as to facts to which he is called to testify. Holladay vs. Marsh, 3 Wend. 142.

21. Where deeds of lands embrace premises lying in two counties, and are recorded in only one of them, and it is proved that the originals are lost, exemplifications of the records of the deeds, are competent evidence to prove the contents of such deeds, in an action of ejectment for the recovery of the premises conveyed, situate in the county where the deeds are not recorded. Jackson vs. Rice, 3 Wend. 180.

22. The bare fact of two persons holding different parcels of what was once an undivided tract of land, deriving title from the same source constitutes no privity of estate, so that the testimony of a deceased witness on the trial of an action of ejectment against one, for the premises in his possession can be given in evidence in an action of ejectment against the other for the premises possessed by him, although both actions be by the same claimant. Jackson vs. Crissey. 3 Wend. 251.

23. A discharge under the act abolishing imprisonment for debt in certain cases, may be given in evidence under the plea of a general issue; and a variance between the discharge pleaded and that produced on the trial, will not prevent the party from offering the discharge in evidence. Bradley vs. Field, 3 Wend. 272.

24. Reasonable notice must be given to produce books or papers before the time when the case may be tried. What shall be deemed reasonable notice depends upon the circumstances of the case. Whether secondary evidence shall be admitted depends upon the discretion of the judge. Utica Ins. Co. vs. Cadwell, 3 Wend. 296.

25. The privilege of not disclosing a communication made by a client to counsel, is confined to counsel and to an interpreter, though it seems the rule might perhaps be extended to the clerks of counsel. Jackson vs. French, 3 Wend. 337.

26. But a person in no way connected with the counsel, present at a communication made to him by a client, is bound to testify. Ib.

27. A promissory note for the payment of money, void in law, so that a suit cannot be maintained upon it, may be used nevertheless as evidence of an acknowledgment of indebtedness to take a cause out of the statute of limitations. Utica Ins Co. vs. Kip, 3 Wend. 369.

28. The defendant has a right to avail himself of the testimony of special bail, by substituting and justifying new bail. Leggett vs. Boyd, 3 Wend. 376.

29. A will upwards of 40 years' standing after the death of the testator, it being clearly proved that the land devised by it had, ever since the death of the testator, been held under and according to its provisions, was admitted in evidence as an ancient deed, without proof of its execution, although one of the subscribing witnesses was shown to be alive and within the jurisdiction of the court, and notwithstanding that the attestation did not state that the witnesses subscribed their names in the presence of the testator. Jackson vs. Christman, 4 Wend. 277.

30. The omission to state the fact that the witnesses subscribed their names in the presence of the testator does not conclude the jury from finding that the will was so subscribed, if warranted by the circumstances to find in favor of its due execution. Ib.

31. Where a bond signed by several obligors came collaterally in question, and the name of one of the obligors and one of the witnesses was the same, and the judge at the trial admitted the bond to be read in evidence, upon proof of the hand writing of the other witness who was shown to be dead, without requiring the absence of the other witness to be accounted for, it was held that the judge erred; that in the absence of proof, he was not authorized to say from the identity of the name that the obligor and witness were the same person; and it seems that though the fact had appeared he would have been a competent witness in the cause, it being between other persons. Ib.

32. The admissions of a party under a misapprehension of his legal rights and liabilities, do not affect his interests. Morse vs. Hitchcock, 4 Wend. 292.

33. Although seizin be alleged in a declaration of covenant on a lease for rent, the plaintiff is not bound to prove it; nor to show the defendant in possession, where it is in evidence that he claimed to be the assignee of the lease and actually paid rent. Lush vs. Druse, 4 Wend. 313.

34. Proof of the hand-writing of subscribing witnesses to a sealed instrument who are shown to be dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, is good evidence of the execution of the instrument without proof of the signatures of the parties. Ib.

35. The declaration of the plaintiffs in an execution attempted to be shown dormant, are not admissible in evidence in an action against the sheriff for a false return of a second execution, where it is not shown that they had indemnified the sheriff. Benjamin vs. Smith, 4 Wend. 332.

36. Parol evidence is not admissible to show the land intended to be granted by a deed, where the premises are described as being all the land purchased by the grantor of A B, and where, without such description, the deed is incapable of location; the deed to the grantor in such case must be produced. Jackson vs. Parkhurst, 4 Wend. 369.

37. The admissions or declarations of an agent, relative to the settlement of an account, made seventeen months after the pretended settlement, when there is no proof of a settlement in fact, are not admissible in evidence against his principal. Thallhimer vs. Brinckerhoff, 4 Wend. 394.

38. The acts and declarations of the agent at the time of the transaction are binding upon the principal, but what he says at another and subsequent period, are not evidence against the principal: his declarations are received not as admissions, but as a part of the res gesta. Ib.

39. An exemplification of letters of administration from the surrogate's office is good evidence, without accounting for the non-production of the original letters. Jackson vs. Robinson, 4 Wend. 436.

40. The declarations or admissions of a party showing title out of himself or in the lessor of the plaintiff, in an action of ejectment, are inadmissible in evidence to divest him of his legal estate, where there is no proof of a tenancy by the party in support of which the declarations can be applied, or where there is no title shown in the party in whose favor the admissions are made, independent of such declarations. Jackson vs. Anderson, 4 Wend. 474.

41. Where premises demised by a lease were described by distances from a given corner, and were bounded on one side by a lot described as of a particular number, and a diagram of the demised premises described an obtuse angle, leaving a gore between the angle and the lot specified as a boundary, it was held that parol evidence was admissible to show the intent of the parties to cover as well the gore as the premises included within the distances, although there were not natural or artificial objects to control or regulate the courses and distances. Jackson vs. Britton, 4 Wend. 507

42. One of two attorneys executing a deed may prove the execution of it by himself, but not by his co-attorney where there is a subscribing witness to the deed. Ib.

43. Recitals, in a power of attorney executed thirtysix years before the trial of the heirship of the constituents in such power, together with slight parol proof of such heirship, is prima facie sufficient to entitle a party claiming under a conveyance by virtue of such power, to recover in an action of ejectment. Jackson vs. Russell, 4 Wend. 543.

44. The testimony of a witness proving that on search made in a surrogate's office for a will, which according to the laws relating to ancient wills, ought there to have been deposited, that such will could not be found, is equivalent to the testimony of the surrogate himself, although the witness is not a clerk in the office, the search being made under the direction of the surrogate. The certificate of the surrogate is not the only competent evidence in such cases. Ib.

45. After such preliminary proof, an exemplification of the will from the surrogate's office is competent evidence. Ib.

46. A warrant, under which a false imprisonment takes place, produced on the trial by a plaintiff, is evidence of the facts contained in it until gainsayed by proof on his part. Scott vs. White, 4 Wend. 255.

47. The declarations of a third person, referred to by a party, are not evidence against such party, unless strictly within the subject matter in relation to which the reference is made. Duval vs. Covenhoven, 4 Wend. 561.

48. A promissory note, void on the ground of being discounted by an incorporated company not authorized to carry on banking business, is nevertheless competent evidence, it seems, in support of the money counts. The Utica Insurance Company vs. Bloodgood, 4 Wend. 652.

49. A stipulation not to plead the statute of limitations in a prosecution for any balance that may be due on a note particularly described, may be used in support of the money counts, though the note be adjudged illegal and void. Ib.

---

EXECUTION.

1. To constitute a levy under an execution, the officer should enter upon the premises where the goods of the defendant are, and take actual possession of them. The goods should be brought within his view, and subjected to his control; and it seems that an inventory should be taken of them. He should assert his title to them by virtue of the execution, and his acts should be public, open, and unequivocal, and nothing should be done by him to cast concealment over the transaction. It seems, that the acts of the sheriff, as to the asserting of his rights and the divesting of the possession of the defendant, should be of such a character as would subject him to an action as a trespasser but for the protection of the execution. Beekman vs. Lansing, 3 Wend. 446.

2. In an action of debt on a bond conditioned for the payment of an annuity, after judgment, it is not necessary to have a scire facias to warrant an execution for subsequent arrears. An execution may be sued out without a scire facias, but it seems, it would be well to specify in the direction, particularly, the arrears claimed. Wood vs. Wood. 3 Wend. 454.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

1. It is the duty of trustees and guardians to keep the money belonging to the trust estate properly invested. Depeyster vs. Clarkson, 2 Wend. 77.

2. If they neglect to make investments, they are chargeable with the interest of the unemployed funds, commencing six months after the receipt of the moneys. Ib.

3. A trustee is not permitted to put the income of an estate into his own pocket, to be accounted for at the termination of the trust, and in the meantime appropriate the capitals to the payment of the annual expenses of the trust. The interest or income should first be applied and exhausted in the support of the cestuis que trust, if infants and to answer the other exigencies of the trust before the principal is encroached upon. Ib.

4. Where annual disbursements are required, and they are equal to the whole income of an estate, and the trustee is charged with interest on the income used by him and not invested, he will have to pay the interest as it falls due; but if the disbursements or investments that he makes are less than the income, then he will not be required to pay the interest which he may owe as it falls due, but it will be carried into the disbursement fund, which bears no interest. This rule, therefore, does not allow compound interest. Ib.

5. Where, for a period of 20 years, a large balance, amounting on an average to a sum exceeding $5000, was annually left in the hands of executors and guardians, who after the first seven years made no investments whatever of the moneys remaining on hand, but the same were used by one of the executors as his own, against whom a bill to account was filed, the following directions were given to the master in stating the account, and the decree of the chancellor containing such directions, on appeal to the Court of Errors, was affirmed, viz. The master ' is directed so to state the account as that the defendant shall be charged with interest on the annual balances and on two certain bonds, one given by the defendant, and the other by one S. H. (for which the defendant had become responsible,) and also on all moneys received by him during each year, from the end of six months after the day of the receipt thereof to the end of the year, deducting therefrom, except as hereinafter mentioned, the interest on all payments, of what nature or kind soever, from the respective dates thereof to the end of the year; and that the interest which shall appear at the end of every year during the period of such account, to be due from the defendant, be applied towards satisfying, in the first instance, as far as the same shall extend, and before resorting to the principal, any payments, including expenditures and investments thereafter made by the defendant, to or on account of the complainants, or their estate, but so, nevertheless, as not in any case, to compute interest on interest; and to that end, the master is hereby directed to carry into said account the interest annually accruing on the said two bonds, on the first day of January in each year, until the principal was paid. And the said master is further directed, during the first year of the said account, commencing on the first day of January, 1803, to compute interest on the respective receipts and payments by the defendant during the year, to the end thereof, and strike the balance of such interest, and carry the same into the column of simple interest, to be added to or deducted from the interest to be computed on the yearly balance of the principal moneys, as the case may be; and such amount of interest at the end of the year 1803, shall be deemed the fund out of which payments are made during the ensuing year or years, until the same is exhausted, and so from year to year until the termination of the account, except that no interest after the year 1803 is to be credited on payments made by the defendant, until such fund of interest as aforesaid shall first have been exhausted; but as to any excess of payments, interest is to be computed thereon: and in case it shall so happen, that at the expiration of any year, the balance of interest shall be found in favor of the defendant, then the same shall be applied towards diminishing the principal moneys then due to the complainants, or the said estate. Ib.

6. Moneys arising from the sale of real property in another state, on an order of a Court of Probate there, are not assets in the hands of the executor in the state of New York, and cannot be so averred in a replication to a plea of plene administravit. Peck vs. Mead, 2 Wend. 470.

7. In an action against an administrator, a creditor is not concluded by the inventory, but may show the goods and chattels inventoried to be of a greater value than the amount specified in the same. Nor would the administrator it seems, be concluded by the inventory. Willoughby vs. McCluer, 2 Wend. 608.

8. After an administratrix has pleaded the general issue, and a plea of plene administravit præter a certain sum, and the plaintiff in the action has replied, admitting the truth of the second plea praying judgment, &c, a plea puis darrein continuance, setting forth a judgment confessed by the administratix in a suit commenced since the action in which the plea is interposed was at issue and noticed for trial, will be received and considered good. Lawrence vs. Bush. 3 Wend. 305.

9. An administrator cannot retain money remaining in his hands unadministered, to apply on a contract for the sale of land to the intestate, where the contract has been annulled and cancelled by the vendors. He cannot thus benefit the heir's seeking an enforcement of the contract, at the expense of the creditors of the intestate. Harmon vs. Durham, 3 Wend. 367.

10. An executor, by virtue of his office, becomes a trustee for the devisees and creditors of the testator, when it is ascertained that the personal property of the estate is insufficient to pay the debts of the testator; and in such case he will not be permitted to sell the real estate of the testator under a judgment held by himself and to become the purchaser. Rogers and Rogers, 3 Wend. 503.

11. The lapse of 14 years between the granting of administration and an application to a surrogate for the sale of real estate, is a sufficient cause without explanation for the rejection of the application; still if the surrogate errs in entertaining the petition, his error can be corrected only on appeal. Jackson vs. Robinson, 4 Wend. 436.

---

ACTION.

Case for deceit in selling a vessel as a British vessel, she being in fact not British, or entitled to a British national character. It was held that the Plaintiff was entitled to damages to the extent of the difference of value of the vessel as sold, and her value, if her character had been known, and also to such damages as the value of repairs made in her on the faith of the representation of her British character, which had not been remunerated by her earnings or in any other way.—Sherwood vs. Sutton. 5 Mason's R. 1.

BILL OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

A bill drawn upon a partnership, but not accepted until after a dissolution of the partnership publicly announced binds only the partners, who accept it, and not the other partners, who have not consented thereto.—Tombeckbee Bank vs. Darnell, Ib. 56.

An agent, to whom a negotiable note has been indorsed by his principal for the benefit if the latter, and who has no interest in the note, cannot sue as indorsee upon the note. No person can sue as indorsee, unless he be the owner of the note, or has some legal or equitable interest therein.—Thacher vs. Winslow, Ib. 58.

Assuming that a foreign Bill of Exchange, payable at sight ought to be presented, within a reasonable time, that time must be judged of with reference to the usage among merchants, as to delays in the negotiation and transmission of such bills.—Wallace vs. Agry, Ib. 118.

Where a partnership is carried on by a firm in the name of one partner only, and he indorses notes in his own name, the firm is not bound thereby, unless the notes were received or discounted as notes binding the firm, upon the representation of the partner giving the same to that effect, and were made for the common benefit and business of the firm.—United States Bank vs. Binney Ib. 176.

Where a note is made payable at a particular place and the indorser resides there; if the holder remits it to his agent at such place for payment and it is dishonored; the agent is not bound to give notice of the dishonor to the indorser; but his duty is to give notice to his principal, who may then give notice to the indorser, and if given in due time after the principal has received the notice, the indorser is bound.—U. S. Bank vs Goddard, Ib. 366.

If due notice is given by a holder to his immediate indorser of the dishonor of a note, and the latter gives due notice to a prior indorser, the holder may secure against the latter, although he has never given him any notice, for due notice given by any party on the bill, is notice to charge in favor of all subsequent parties.—Ibid.

COMMERCE.

An open boat is not a ship or vessel within the purview of the statutes of 1820, ch. 122—and 1823, ch. 150—which prohibit commercial intercourse from the British Colonies.

It seems that notwithstanding these statutes open British boats may visit the United States, if not destined for trade.

British ship or vessel excluded from our ports by those statutes are such as are owned by British subjects, having a British domicil and sailing under the British flag, and not ships or vessels owned by British subjects, domiciled in the United States.—United States vs. an open Boat, 120.

Under the Act of 15th March, 1820, ch. 122, prohibiting commercial intercourse from the British Colonies in British ships, British owned vessels are included in the prohibition, although not registered or navigated according to the British navigation and Registry acts.

But open boats without decks, are not included in the prohibition.

The forfeiture under the act, attaches to the cargo on board at the time the vessel enters or attempts to enter our ports, and not to any cargo subsequently taken on board, though on board at the time of the seizure.—Ibid, 232.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1831.

MATHEWS ON PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE.

Continued from page 263.

Chap. X. Of the Exclusion of Executors from the Residuary Estate.

The appointment of an Executor amounts, in law, to a gift to the person of the undisposed surplus of the Testator's personal Estate, after payment of his debts. In equity this rule is modified and it is made a question of intention. The Executor holds unless there is a strong presumption of intention, to the contrary.

The first class of cases of such presumption against the Executor is when expressions are used in making the appointment, or directions relating to it are given, which go to show that the Executor was named only with a view to discharge the duties of the office, as where he is designated as trustee, or 'Executor in trust.' So where the Estate is given to the Executor as such, for specified purposes. It is thus where the testator makes use of expressions which indicate an intention to impose on office merely for the performance of certain necessary duties—as, that his will may be well executed he nominates and appoints, &c. So when words of request are used to the Executor to accept the office—or that he would take the trouble &c; anything, indeed, which goes to show that a burden and not a benefit was intended.

The case is still stronger where a legacy is given for his care and trouble. A provision for the Executor's indemnity against losses, expenses of journeys—of remitting legacies, &c—are evidence of intent to impose a charge merely.

Where the appoint is confined to certain districts or the performance of certain particular duties—the same presumptions exist.

Another circumstance from which such presumptions arise, is the fact of the Executors being nominated on account of their occupation, or the station which they hold in society; as where 'partnership was appointed to the trust';—the 'American ambassador, or such persons as should hold that office at the time of the testator's death.'

Another class of cases of such presumptions is where the testator has manifested an intention to give the Estate wholly away to others. As where the residuary Estate is given to one who dies before the Testator, although the object of the Testator cannot be carried into effect, the circumstance shews that he did not intend to give it to the Executor. So where the legacies are given to any object which being against public policy, or for some other good reason, the law will not enforce.

And it is the same where the Executor declares his purpose to dispose of the residue by a subsequent instrument; or prepares or begins a codicil for that purpose.

And it has been held that the same principle prevails where a gift of the residue is partially erased or become illegible, or partially cancelled by the Legatee's name being struck out by pencil or otherwise. A will directing the personal Estate to go according to law gives no interest to the Executor.

Another class of cases is where there is an appointment of one Executor and an express legacy given to him.

The presumption of law is that it was meant that he should take what was expressly given and no more. Another ground is that the legacy amounts to a gift by way of compensation for the services.

And it is laid down generally that whenever there is not an obvious incongruity between the gift of a particular legacy and an intention to bestow the whole residue, the Executor may insist on his legal title.

Parol declarations are also here admitted to repel these legal presumptions by which the Executor is excluded from a beneficial interest in the residuary Estate. It is confined however to cases strictly of presumptions. And it may also be adduced to fortify the presumption.

But such evidence is not admissible to show the testator's intention to impose a bare office of trust. (Mann vs. Executors of Mann, 1. John. ch. 231. Beckenbridge vs. Duncan, 2 Marsh. 51. Shelton vs. Shelton, 1 Wash. 53 Rino's Ex'rs vs. Davis, H. and M. 4. 283)

PRESUMPTIONS OF FACTS.

Chap XI. On the Presumptions of Instruments of assurance.

To give effect to quiet and long possessions and to affirm titles which rest chiefly upon this circumstance, Courts presume the existence of necessary instruments to clothe the possessor with the title. Such presumption is made, in some cases, without any specific evidence of the existence of such title: and, in others, upon evidence of their having once existed, although they are not to be found.

There are many cases to which the statute of limitation does not apply: and to extend the beneficial operation of this Statute, Courts of law and equity have established certain rules founded on analogies to its principles, to meet such omitted cases. Thus a peaceable enjoyment of real Estate for 20 years is prima facie Evidence of ownership. (A general usage, like that of depositing lumber on the banks of a river, not accompanied by a claim of title or an intention of occupying the land to the exclusion of the owner's right cannot furnish any legal presumption of a grant. Bethune vs. Turner, 1. Greenl. R. 109.

A Possession for 20 years of one of two tenants in common, accompanied by an exclusive appropriation of the rents and profits affords presumption of conveyance.

(Homes vs. Howard, 2 Har. and M'H. 60. *Lloyd vs. Gordon, Ib.*254—260. Allen vs. Hall, 1 M'Cord 131. Coleman vs. Hutchinson, 3 Bibb, 209. Johnson vs. Howard, 1 Har. and M. 210. Thomas vs. Mather, 4 Bibb, 412. Jackson vs. Whitbeck, 6 Cowen, 632. McClung vs. Ross, 5 Wheat, 116—124. Clap vs. Bromagham, 9 Cowen, 530. Jackson vs. Tibbets, 9 Cowen, 241.

This possession must have been however an adverse possession.

Records which are essential to the stability of such titles may be presumed in some cases.

T he actual ouster of one tenant in common, in order to form this ground of title, will be presumed as readily as a rightful conveyance.

( Ricard vs. Williams, 7 Wheat. 59. Johnsons vs. Howard, 1. Har. and McHenry, 281. Lloyd vs. Gordon, 2 Har. and Mc'H. 254. Bromeghan et al vs. Clap, 5 Cowen, 295. 3. Ib. 530. Jackson vs. Johnson, 5 Ib. 74. Hermes vs. Howard, 2 H. and M. 60. Jackson vs. Tibbets, 9 Cowen, 241. Allen vs. Hall, 1 M'Cord, 131. Coleman vs. Hutchinson, 3 Bibb, 209. Thomas vs. McPier, 4 Bibb, 412. Jackson vs. Whitbeck, 8 Cow. 632. McClung vs. Ross, 5 Wheat. 116—124. Frederick vs. Grays, 10 Serg. and Rawle, 182.)

There are other cases where auxiliary evidence is introduced to strengthen the inference arising from time. In these cases such evidence and the lapse of time mutually assist each other.

The lapse of time furnishes a ground for admitting the secondary evidence; it being a rule that without good cause for supposing the existence of instruments alleged to be lost, collateral proof of their contents shall not be received. Upon this principle, an ancient copy of a deed or will; an old attested copy; the rough draft of a release; an old abstract which appears to have been used by professional persons; a recital of the supposed deed, in an old writing, as being then extant; or a memorandum or a recital of it in a Court of Justice as having been produced in a former action; will be admitted as proof of the prior existence and the contents of the instruments, when the subsequent enjoyment has been consistent with it.

In the absence of such proof parol evidence is admissible, especially where there is evidence of a wilful destruction of the instrument by the adverse party.

The Bill or Books of account of a deceased soliciter containing charges for preparing such an instrument, &c, may be relied upon.

The fact of a robbery or fire having taken place where the original document was probably kept, or other accidents which might have destroyed it, may be introduced.

But proof must, in all these cases, be first given that search and inquiry have been made, without effect, to find the Instrument and that it cannot be found. Otherwise there would be no end to the introduction of forgeries.

Chap. XII. Presumed Coveyances of outstanding legal Estates.

Chap. XIII. Presumed Surrender of Terms.

Chap. XIV. Presumptions of acts and solemnities in Support of Assurances and Rights.

Deeds of 30 years standing are admitted in evidence without proof of their execution. So of a will, although the Testator has not been dead 30 years, and some of the subscribing witnesses are still living. In the case of the deed, possession must have accompanied it.

Where a precedent or subsequent condition is necessary to vest or prevent the devesting an interest, long undisputed possession is prima facie evidence of the act having been performed. Where a proviso goes to defeat the mortgagee's estate and to revest the property in the mortgagor, if the debt has been satisfied, but it cannot be ascertained precisely when, whether before or after the day appointed in the proviso, the law will presume it to have been done at the specified time.

Chap. XV. Presumptive Evidence in matters of Pedigree &c.

The object of this chapter is to particularize the species of proof which are regarded as effectual with regard to marriages, heirship, deaths, &c.

Recitals in ancient deeds, if consistent with the apparent state of a title, are one species of presumptive evidence of the facts which they relate. Such recitals have been held to be good presumptive evidence of pedigree, where no adverse title by inheritance has been set up under the same ancestor even though the land conveyed by the deeds is itself the subject of controversy. (Little vs. Palister, 3 Greenleaf 200. See Jackson vs. Cooley, 8 John. R. 128. Stokes vs. Dawes, 4 Mason 268.) Memoranda in ancient Family Bibles—old Pedigrees, and similar family Records are good evidence. An old cancelled will was, in one case, used to prove the fact of seniority between two of the Testator's sons. Inscriptions upon tomb stones and engravings on rings are also admitted as evidence. Memoranda of a deceased medical attendant on his charge Book, for attendance on a woman, and also of the payment of the charge, has been used as presumptive evidence as to the day of a birth. Declarations by deceased relatives, as to particular events in their families, or its members—or its state and circumstances may, if better evidence cannot be procured, be resorted to. So of a man who has married into a family. But it is otherwise of servants and acquaintance or neighbors.

Such declarations must be above all suspension as to interest. They can have but little or no weight, if made after disputes have arisen in families, on the subject to which they relate.

As to marriage evidence of cohabitation; acknowledgment of the marriage by the Parties; reception of them as man and wife by their friends and relations, and common reputation, is admissible. (1 Har. and Mc'H. Cheseldine vs. Brewer, 152. Allen vs. Hall, 2 Nott, and Mc'Cord, 114. Hammich vs. Brownson, 5 Day 290. Purcell vs. Purcell, 4 Hen. and M. 507. Newbury Port vs. Boothbay, 9 Mass. 414. Selts vs. Foster, 1 Taylor 121. Whitehead vs. Clinch. 2 Hay. 3. Fenton vs. Reid, 4 John. 52. Jackson vs. Claw, 18 Johns, 346. Forney vs. Hallacher, 8 Serg. and Rawle, 159.)

So evidence of their having eloped for the purpose of getting married and returning as married; of their children being registered as the offspring of the father and mother. Such presumptive evidence may be regarded as conclusive after the death of the parties.

It is supposed that a purchaser would not be bound to accept a title whose validity depended on such presumptive evidence of a marriage

There are but few cases in the Books on the subjects of presumptions in relation to the death of persons long unheard from. After 20 years absence, without being heard of such presumption was in one case admitted. (7 Ves. 590) in another case 14 years was held sufficient to authorize the Executor to collect the deceased effects, (6 Ves. 605) another case is found (5 Ves. 468) where such presumption was admitted after sixteen years.

In this case a purchase would not be bound to take a title which depended on such evidence.

Chap XVI. Of Presumed Grants of Portions of Titles, of Advowsons, Faculties, Rents, Commons, Markets, Tolls, Lights, Ways, and Water Courses.

Chap. XVII. Of Presumed dedication of Rights of Road to the Public.

It is not yet entirely settled whether time is necessary to create the presumption of the dedication of a Road to the public. (Where the owner of land had, on making a new road over his property, giv his consent thereto on condition of its not being used by coal carts, held that there might be a partial dedication of a highway to the public; but, if by law, there could not be a restriction to a public way the grant would amount only to a license, revocable, and that, after notice, aperson using it with coal carts would be a trespasser. Marquis of Stafford vs. Boyney 7 B. & C. 257. Galatin vs. Gardner, 7 Johns. R. 106.

In every instance where the question has come up before the Court distinctly, time has been considered an important feature in the case.

It may be, says the author, considered as settled, that whenever a public right of way in a road or street is claimed on the ground of a presumptive dedication, it is essential, in order to establish such presumption that the owner of the soil has for some considerable period submitted to the general usage. What this length of time must be, is not yet ascertained. In some cases 6 and in others 8 years have been held sufficient. Two or three years have been held not enough. Unmolested enjoyment for 20 years, with the knowledge of the owner, is held to be conclusive of dedication.

This presumption may be rebutted by showing that the public user began during the existence of a lease, &c, or the legal inability of the proprietor of the soil.

The putting up of a gate, bar or chain, or any other like significant act, manifesting intention to confine the use of the road to particular individuals, will negative the public right, and the gate, &c, need not be constantly shut. It is enough if it be done occasionally

Chap. XVIII. Presumptive Bar to Equities of Redemption.

It is now held that 20 years possession by a mortgagee without account or acknowledgment of an existing right to redeem forms a presumptive Bar to the Equity of the Mortgager. There must be 20 years possession after the forfeiture at law.

The commencing of a suit simply, within the 20 years, will not preserve the Equity. Parol acknowledgment by a mortgagee, within 20 years, has been held sufficient to preserve the Equity. These admissions must, however, be full, express and unequivocal.

Chap. XIX. Presumed satisfaction of mortgage debts,—Judgments, Warrants to confess Judgments, Decrees, Statutes, Recognizances and Bonds.

Chap XX. Presumed satisfaction of annuities—Portions, Legacies, Liens for purchase money, and other demands not within the Statute of Limitations.

Chap. XXI. Presumed dereliction of the right to have fraudulent Purchases, Purchases by Trustees—and Purchases of Reversions, set aside in Equity.

Chap. XXII. Presumed waiver of rights of appropriation, of resumption, or forfeiture, presumption and Election; of rights under Executory Trusts, Devises in Equity, agreements to purchase, and covenants for renewal; of the responsibility of Executors, administrators and Trustees;—of the liability of purchasers to see the application of the purchase money, and of other miscellaneous Rights and Equities.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIII. for March, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Moral Education. 1. The Library of Education, edited by Wm. Russell, vol. 1; containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education, by John Locke,' and 'A Treatise on Education, by John Milton.'

2. Account of the Edinburgh Sessional School, and the other Parochial Institutions for Education, established in that city in 1812; with Strictures on Education in general. By John Wood, Esq.

II. Prison Discipline 1. Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

2. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

III. Collection of Psalms and Hymns. A Collection of Psalms of Hymns for Christian Worship.

IV. Meaning of Αἰων. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays on several words relating to Future Punishment.

V. Works of the Rev. Robert Hall. The Works of the Rev. Robert Hall, A. M. Minister of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, England. First complete edition, with a brief Memoir of the author.

VI. Stuart and Whitman. 1. A Letter to William E. Channing, D. D. on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Moses Stuart, Professor of Sacred Literature in the Theological Seminary, Andover.

2. Two Letters to the Rev. Moses Stuart, on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College, February 3, 1831. March 19.

POPULAR JOURNAL OF MUSIC. THE HARMONICON, a Monthly Journal of Music—No. I. just received by GRAY & BOWEN. Each monthly number will contain—

I. An Original Biography of some distinguished Composer or Performer. II. Interesting Correspondence, or Original Dissertations, on Subjects connected with the Science. III. Detailed Accounts of the Opera, Concerts, and other Musical Performances of the past month. IV. Copious Extracts from the Foreign Musical Journals, giving the reader the latest information of the Progress of the art, and its Professors throughout Europe. V. Liberal and unbiassed Accounts of all Musical Works as they appear. VI. Six or seven pieces of Music, Vocal and Instrumental, English and Foreign, selected with care, and printed with a beauty and accuracy that may safely challenge competition.

Musical Families and Societies, subscribing to the Harmonicon, will be furnished monthly with (in addition to the literary contents of each number), on an average, Six Entire Pieces of Vocal and Instrumental Music, at a price not exceeding the common charge for a single piece, when printed in the usual way. March 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVII. for January.

CONTENTS.

Art I. Popular Defensive Force. II. Lesson's History of Man. III. Hannibal's Passage of the Alps. IV. Webster's American Dictionary. V. India and China Trade. VI. Character of George IV. VII. Scotch Parliamentary Reform. VIII. Heiress of Bruges. IX. Maxwell. X. Belgian Revolution. XI. J. P. Cobbett's Italy. XII. Bruce's Travels. XIII. Machine-Breaking. XIV. Tennyson's Poems. XV. Basil Barrington and Friends. XVI. The Wellington Administration. XVII. European Revolution; List of Books, &c. March 19.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

No. 15, North American Series.

This number contains articles on Screw Cutting; Locomotive Carriages; finding Velocity of Ships at sea; New Metallic Alloy for pivot Watches; Reflections on the Decline of Science in England; Improved marine Steam Engine Boiler; Claxton's Air Pump; Almanacks for 1831, &c, &c, with a great number of engravings.

Subscriptions received as above at $3 75 per annum. March 19.

GRAY AND BOWEN, have just received, No. 1, of SURGICAL ANATOMY OF THE ARTERIES, with plates and illustrations. By Nathan R. Smith, M. D. Professor of Surgery in the University of Maryland. January 1.

SPLENDID BIBLE. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

WHITMAN'S LETTERS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, 'Two Letters to Rev. Moses Stuart,' on Religious Liberty, occasioned by his Letter to Rev. Wm. E. Channing. By Bernard Whitman. Second edition. March 19.

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

PARLEY'S ASIA. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, Peter Parley's Tales about Asia, with a Map and numerous Engravings. This is designed as a fourth volume in a series of Geographical and Historical Tales for Children. Tales of America, Europe, and Africa, have already been published. Tales of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, Tales of the Sea, and Tales of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, will complete the series. These three last are in a state of forwardness.

GRAY & BOWEN, have just published, TALES OF TRAVELS West of the Mississippi, with a Map and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. This volume is the first of a series which is intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, an APPENDIX to the American Almanac, for the year 1831, being the latter part of the fiftyfifth, and the beginning of the fiftysixth year of the Independence of the United States.

Extract from the Preliminary Observations on the Astronomical Department of the American Almanac.

The Appendix is intended to answer all the essential purposes of a Nautical Almanac, and the insertion therein of the distances of the Moon from the Planets, and of the proportional logarithm of the difference between the distances, it is hoped, will be found an improvement on any Almanac hitherto published. Jan. 1.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES. GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

WORKING MEN'S PARTY. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, delivered before the Charlestown Lyceum, October 6, 1830. By Edward Everett. Second Edition.

EVENTS IN PARIS, during the 26, 27, 28, and 29th of July, 1830. By several eye witnesses. Translated from the fourth Paris edition. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

LIBRARY OF EDUCATION. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN,

The Library of Education, Vol. I.—Containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education.' By John Locke, and a 'Treatise of Education,' by John Milton, with an Appendix, containing Locke's Memoranda on Study. Edited by Wm. Russell, late editor of the Journal of Education.

Extract from the Preface.

'The present volume is intended to form one of a series of standard treatises on the subject of Education. The work now commenced will, it is hoped, form a useful source of information to parents and teachers; furnishing to the latter a sort of professional library, to which individuals may resort for assistance in the labor of instruction, and offering to the former an aid to the formation of just and extensive views of the whole scope of education, as well as a preparation for cooperating with instruction, in their exertions for the mental advancement of the young.' Jan. 1.

NEWSPAPER AND PERIODICAL AGENCY. EICHBAUN & NORVELL, Booksellers, Nashville, Tennessee, have, in addition to their regular business, established a GENERAL AGENCY for the procuring of subscribers to, and the collecting of debts due to Newspapers and Periodicals throughout the United States. To this business great attention will be paid, and the instructions of Publishers strictly attended to. The city in which they are established contains a population of six thousand inhabitants, and as the citizens have ever shown a disposition to encourage meritorious publications, with the aid of Agents, the publishers of Newspapers, Magazines, &c, might obtain a respectable number of subscribers. Refer to GRAY and BOWEN, Booksellers, Boston. March 19.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1831. NO. XXXV.

LORD MANSFIELD.

Continued.

In short, there seems every reason to believe that the whole history of Sergeant Eyre's sudden malady, and Murray's almost equally sudden emersion from obscurity into celebrity, owes its origin to that same appetite for the extraordinary, by which so many facts of much greater importance are almost daily confused and distorted. There is no reason, however, to doubt that Murray's reputation was diffused much more widely than it had been before, in consequence of the part he bore in this trial. Any cause in which the son of Colley Cibber might be concerned, was not likely to fail in catching the attention of the public. His wife, too, (the sister of Thomas Arne the composer) who was the cause of the action, had long been a favorite actress, and the whole town had been occupied, some time before, with the notable dispute between her and Mrs Clive, as to whom should perform the part of Polly Peachum in the Beggar's Opera;* so that all the history of her intrigues was sure to prove an attractive subject, in an age when a depraved taste for such scandalous and indecent details as were gone into at the trial, was, to say the least, quite as prevalent as in our own time. Indeed, no better proof can be given of the general curiosity excited by this case, and of the extent to which the account of the trial, and of the events that led to it, was circulated, than the fact of one pamphlet on the subject having reached a sixth edition. In a legal point of view the case still possesses some interest, inasmuch as it affords an instance of a practice now deservedly exploded in actions for criminal conversation: the jury having been directed to find for the plaintiff, notwithstanding the most direct and unequivocal evidence of collusion on his part. The amount of the verdict was ten pounds.

In support of the account which represents Murray as having been entirely unknown and unemployed till the trial of Cibber v. Sloper, a letter of Pope's is adduced, supposed to have been written in answer to one wherein the young lawyer had good-humoredly complained of his want of business on circuit. There is not, however the slightest evidence to show that the letter in question was addressed to Murray; and indeed if Warburton's arrangement of his friend's papers be correct (which there is surely no reason to doubt) it is quite clear this must have been written to a totally different person, since it is classed among others dated 1718, a time when Murray was not fourteen years of age. Besides, nothing can be more improbable than that one fragment, and one only of their correspondence should have been inserted in the collection of the Poet's works.

The poems of Pope contain several testimonies of his attachment to Murray. In the fourth book of the Dunciad, which was added to the original work in 1742, he very happily introduces an allusion to his friend's celebrity, at the same time that he vents a bitter and well-merited satire upon the exclusive attention paid in our public schools to mere verbal learning, and especially to Latin versification. A pedant makes his complaint before the throne of dulness, that Westminster-hall and the House of Commons should cause all this species of lore so speedily to be forgotten, even by those who were once the greatest proficients in it.

'We ply the memory, we load the brain,
Bind rebel wit, and double chain on chain:
Confine the thought to exercise the breath,
And keep them in the pale of words till death.
Whate'er the talents, or howe'er designed,
We hang one jingling padlock on the mind:
A poet the first day he dips his quill;
And what the last?—a very poet still.
Pity! the charm works only in our wall,
Lost, too soon lost, in yonder house or hall.
There truant Wyndham every muse gave o'er,
There Talbot sank, and was a wit no more!
How sweet an Ovid, Murray, was our boast!
How many Martials were in Pulteney lost!'

Of his imitations of Horace, the sixth epistle published in 1737, is addressed to Murray, and contains, among other passages relating to him, the following lines:—

'Graced as thou art with all the power of words,
So known, so honored in the House of Lords.*
Conspicuous scene! Another yet is nigh,
More silent far, where kings and poets lie;
Where Murray (long enough his country's pride)
Shall be no more than Tully or than Hyde!

Several anecdotes are recorded of the intimacy of these two illustrious friends, from which it appears that their feelings towards each other were almost as those of a father and son. For instance, an acquaintance of Murray's happening one day to enter his chambers abruptly, perceived him practising the gestures of an orator before a glass while the poet sat at his side, to give his opinion of their effect. Another story gives a still better example of the familiarity of their intercourse. It is well known that Pope entertained some jealousy of the reputation Dr Friend had acquired for his Latin epitaphs; which feeling, indeed, at one time vented itself in the epigram:—

'Friend, for your epitaphs I'm grieved,
Where still so much is said;
One half will never be believed,
The other never read.'

He was occasionally seized with a desire of emulating, as well as ridiculing the doctor. Towards the decline of his life, he was often in the habit of spending his winter evenings in the library of Murray's house, in Lincoln's Inn-fields; and when the professional duties of the latter obliged him to leave his guest alone, he would employ himself in penning compositions of the same kind. These Murray, on his return never failed to throw into the fire, saying, that the finest of English poets, and the one who had most embellished his own language, ought to write in no other.

No intimacy could surely be closer, than one which authorised such friendly liberties as this. To the latest period of Pope's life the same cordial intercourse met with no interruption. A few days before his death he was carried from Twickenham, at his own desire, to dine with Murray, in London. This was the last social interview between them. The only other guests invited were Bolingbroke and Warburton. By Pope's will, Murray was appointed one of his executors, and a trifling bequest (a marble bust of Homer, by Bernini, and another of Sir Isaac Newton, by Guelfi,) was left to him, as a memento of his friendship. Murray was also in possession of a portrait of Betterton the actor, drawn by Pope himself, who occasionally amused himself with attempts at painting.

Before Murray had acquired that high character at the bar which secured him the possession of a large income, he was a suitor for the hand of Lady Elizabeth Finch, one of the daughters of the Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham. The want of adequate fortune was, however, at that time, considered by the lady's family an impediment to their union; and he had some reason to fear that a more wealthy rival might supplant him. This is pointedly alluded to by Pope, in some lines of the epistle quoted above.

'From morn to night, at senate, rolls, and hall,
Plead much, read more, dine late, or not at all.
But wherefore all his labor, all this strife?
For fame, for riches, for a noble wife?
Shall one whose native learning, birth conspired
To form, not to admire, but be admired,
Sigh, while his Chloe, blind to wit and worth,
Weds the rich dulness of some son of earth?'

In the Ode to Venus, also, which was published the same year (1737), the same topic is touched upon.

'Mother too fierce of dear desires,
Turn, turn, to willing hearts your wanton fires;
To number five direct your doves,
Then spread round Murray all your blooming loves:
Noble and young, who strikes the heart
With every sprightly, every decent part;
Equal the injured to defend,
To charm the mistress, or to fix the friend;
He, with a hundred arts refined,
Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind;
To him each rival shall submit,
Make but his riches equal to his wit.'

* This is alluded to in Fielding's play, 'The Historical Register for 1736,' where Theophilus Cibber, under the name of Pistol, and his father by that of Ground-Ivy, are held up to the ridicule of the audience.

'Thus to the public deign we to appeal;
Behold how humbly the great Pistol kneels.
Say then, O Town, is it your royal wil,
That my great consort represent the part
Of Polly Peachum, in the Beggar's Opera?'

Speaking of the rival Pollys, Medley says, 'they were damned at my first rehearsal, for which reason I have cut them out; and to tell you the truth, I think the town has honored 'em enough with taking of 'em for a whole month; tho' faith, I believe it was owing to their having nothing else to talk of.' By the way the plan of Sheridan's Critic, with the idea of the wise Lord Burleigh shaking his head, &c, is taken entirely from the play, or rather farce, of Fielding. We have heard that Sheridan, when taxed with appropriating some ideas from another quarter, and convertingthem to the use of Sir Fretful Plagiary, was in the habit of taking additional credit to himself for making the knight act so much in character.

* A specimen of bathos hardly surpassed by Colley Cibber's well known parody on it:—

'Persuasion tips his tongue whene'er he talks:
And he has chambers in the King's Bench Walks.'

It is not probable that these encomiums, however well-merited, had any influence in overcoming the objections of the lady's family. Her own portion, as one of six daughters, being of course a small one, it is to be supposed that before her parents yielded their assent to the match, Murray was in the receipt of an adequate, if not a very large, professional income. The marriage took place in November, 1738, the month previous to the trial of Cibber v. Sloper, which may have had the effect of greatly increasing the number of his clients and the amount of his professional gains, but certainly was not the first occasion of his obtaining either.

This alliance exercised a very material influence over Murray's future career. After the resignation of Sir Robert Walpole, in February, 1741, among the different appointments which took place on the formation of the new ministry, was that of the Earl of Winchelsea to the post of First Lord of the Admiralty. His promotion to this office is sufficient evidence of his credit with the party then in power; and he had not long to wait for an opportunity of exerting it successfully in behalf of his son-in-law. In the course of the following year, the solicitor-general, Sir John Strange, resigned; and the vacant place was immediately filled by Murray. This appointment gave him a new sphere for the exercise of his talents. With the prudence and caution which were distinguishing features of his character, he had hitherto withstood the solicitations of his friends to embark in politics, and had constantly refused to become a candidate for a seat in parliament: alleging, as his reason, that while he continued to enjoy the patronage of all parties, he could gain nothing by attaching himself to one, a maxim he had probably learned from Pope, who originally had it from Addison. Having once, however, taken the decisive step of accepting office, he had no longer any motive for refraining to enter the house of Commons; nor indeed could he have avoided doing so, had he been inclined. Accordingly, on the 22d of November, 1742 (parliament having assembled on the sixteenth day of the same month), he was returned for Boroughbridge. This borough being one over which the Duke of Newcastle possessed considerable influence, it was probably as an avowed adherent of the Pelham party, that Murray first launched himself into the political world. Among the Tories, the Jacobites, and the discontented Whigs, who had coalesced in opposition to the measures of Sir Robert Walpole, this party may be said to have steered in some sort a middle course. That, at least, such was their policy at that period, and for some time afterwards, is plainly shown, by the Duke's favorite project of uniting these conflicting interests; which project himself and his brother effected, on the resignation of Lord Granville (1774), by the formation of the broad-bottomed administration. Such principles as these were exactly suited to Murray, who was always averse from extreme or violent measures of any kind; and of whose political conduct throughout a long and honorable career, moderation and consistency were the distinguishing characteristics.

The former quality he displayed in an eminent degree on the occasion of the trial of the rebel lords in 1746, and (much to the credit of the times be it said) he displayed it in common with every other person concerned in the prosecution. Not even the shameless and unnatural attempt of the octogenarian Lord Lovat, to save his own life by the sacrifice of his son's, could tempt the solicitor-general to express the indignation it must have excited in his breast. He studiously confined himself to a plain statement of the facts, and exposition of the evidence, which he summed up, and commented upon in a manner that showed him to be a consummate master of his profession. His different speeches on these trials are fully and, as we learn from contemporary authority, accurately reported in the state trials. They are probably the only specimens from which a tolerable idea may be formed of his forensic eloquence; though, of course, from the nature of the duty he was called on to perform, the idea must be a very imperfect one. Towards the conclusion of the proceedings, he was warmly complimented both by the attorney-general and Lord Talbot, for the ability he had displayed. Lord Talbot, in particular, said of him that his eminent talents had never appeared to such advantage as on that day, when his candor and humanity lent an additional grace to his eloquence; and he concluded by expressing his hope that he might, at a future period, find the talents of the solicitor-general adding lustre to the highest civil employment in the kingdom. From such a character as Lord Lovat, praise could be of little value, except inasmuch as being the praise of a man condemned to death, towards him who had principally contributed to procure his conviction, it must have been candid and impartial. He said he had the honor to be Mr Murray's relation, though it was possible he might not know it; that his cousin's eloquence would have been of great service to him, had it been exerted in his behalf; but that although he was the principal sufferer by it, he could not refrain from listening to it with pleasure; declared he considered him an honor to his country; and hoped his Scottish origin and connexions might not prove a bar to the preferment he so well deserved.

There was some reason for the apprehension intimated by Lord Lovat, that the country and the political principles of Murray's relations might stand in the way of his advancement. His family, though not openly committed in the cause of the Pretender, was generally supposed to have preserved its hereditary attachment to the house of Stuart; and his elder brother, indeed, had been, ever since the death of Queen Anne, in the service of the exiled prince, from whom he had received the title of Earl of Dunbar. Murray's elevation to office under the English government had caused some suspicion to prevail among the adherents of the Pretender abroad, that this titular Earl of Dunbar was disaffected to their common cause; and on the other hand, with equal injustice, whispers had been industriously circulated among the political opponents of the solicitor-general, that he was secretly attached to the Jacobite principles avowed by his brother. Subsequently, it was even imputed to him, that his temperate and dispassionate conduct towards the rebel Lords, when they were brought to trial, was attributable to his prepossession in favor of the cause for which they suffered: a charge equally applicable to every person concerned in the prosecution, since the behaviour of every individual among them was marked by the strictest decorum and moderation; and equally destitute of foundation with regard to all, as had they chosen to indulge in invective or vituperation against the prisoners, they would only have lowered their own characters as men and gentlemen, without thereby in the least strenghening the evidence. If it were not that no accusation is too grossly or palpably ridiculous for political rancor to countenance against the objects of its animosity, we should suppose Murray's enemies would have been anxious to avoid any allusion to his conduct on this occasion; as it is very certain no servant of the crown exerted himself with more zeal, or with so much effect, as he, throughout the whole of the trials.

After the death of the Prince of Wales in March, 1751, the adversaries of Murray's party endeavored to further certain political purposes of their own, by bringing forward, in a more tangible shape, the rumors that had been indistinctly noised abroad concerning his disaffection to the reigning family. The opposition, now deprived of their chief, were reduced almost entirely to silence in parliament; but though, for the time, the very existence of two separate parties seemed equivocal, individuals belonging to both were no less keenly alive to their own interests at that period than at most others. The great object with every one who aspired to power, was to secure to himself or his allies, some place about the person of the young prince (afterwards George III.), it being conjectured (and very reasonably so, as subsequently appeared in the instance of Lord Bute) that those who could ingratiate themselves with the heir apparent, would have a very good chance of obtaining a share in the government when he became king. Accordingly, there was as much of intriguing to procure the management of the future sovereign, as ever there had been of fighting among the Greeks and Trojans to secure the body of Patroclus. Now it happened, that Andrew Stone, the Duke of Newcastle's secretary, was one of the prince's governors; and another was Johnson, Bishop of Gloucester. Both had been contemporaries of Murray at Westminster, and the intimacy of the three had continued ever since; insomuch that Johnson owed his rise from the place of second master of the school to a seat on the bench of bishops, entirely to the interest of Stone and Murray. It may easily, therefore, be conceived with what satisfaction the intriguers seized on an opportunity of bringing forward an accusation which implicated the three at once, and charged them with the common sin of Jacobitism.

Early in February 1753, Lord Ravensworth came suddenly to town, and gave Mr Pelham to understand that he had a charge of this nature to prefer. The information was by no means graciously received. Indeed the minister appeared very little disposed to proceed to an inquiry. But as the whole affair had been communicated to several of the opposition, he could not avoid an investigation; and it was decided, that Lord Ravensworth should communicate his intelligence to the privy council. It is not our intention to enter into the details of the proceedings. They are given with great minuteness in Horace Walpole's Memoirs, and may be found in a more condensed form, among the other gossipings of Bubb Doddington's Diary, to which works we must refer our readers for more ample information on the subject. Suffice it to mention here, that after a long and tedious sifting of the matter, it appeared there was no better foundation for the charge, than some loose words casually dropped by one Fawcett, an attorney at Newcastle, in a conversation at table; which intimated that, upwards of twenty years previously, he had known Murray, Johnson, and Stone to visit a notorious Jacobite named Vernon, and that at his table they were in the habit of pledging the Pretender's health. Even this evidence, little as it went to prove, was prevaricated upon, and explained away, and partially retracted by Fawcett himself, when summoned before the council; and the fact alleged was distinctly and solemnly denied by each of the parties accused. Upon this the charge was at length altogether dismissed; and an attempt set on foot by Lord Ravensworth and the Duke of Bedford to revive the subject, in the shape of a parliamentary inquiry, proved abortive.

To be continued.

ON THE LAW RELATING TO

MASTERS OF SHIPS AND COMMON CARRIERS.

In conformity with the intention expressed in a former essay on the law of Principal and Agent, it is proposed in some degree to complete the outline then presented, by now considering the law relating to Masters of Ships and Common Carriers.

Of those employed as Commercial Agents, few have more various duties to perform, or without express authority, subject their Principals to greater responsibility, than Masters of Ships. While the ostensible and apparently sole object of their appointment is the navigation of the vessels committed to their charge, they are occasionally required to act the part of merchants, and from necessity constituted the legal representatives, not only of the owners of the ship, but sometimes also, of the proprietors of the cargo.

Successfully, or even safely, to execute their trust, various and somewhat dissimilar qualifications are requisite. Nautical skill must be combined with mercantile information. A theoretical and practical knowledge of the art of navigation, is essential to conduct the vessel in safety to its destined port—but even in relation to the navigation of the ship, this knowledge forms but part of the qualifications necessary. Commanding those 'whose home is on the deep,' and whose habits, uninfluenced by the charms and the charities of domestic life, render them insubordinate and audacious, there is required of the Master firmness and decision to preserve authority, and enforce discipline, yet so regulated by good sense and moderation, as to prevent authority and discipline from degenerating into tyranny and cruelty. Exposed at times to the attacks of enemies and pirates, courage is necessary to protect the property confided to his care. Storms and tempests are the incidents of his voyage, and to escape disastrous results from encountering them, he must possess presence of mind in time of danger. His courage and self possession should, as has been said by a celebrated French Jurist, (Emerigon,) 'be able to dissipate fear, to calm disturbed minds, and inspire confidence in the breasts of the most timid. He should have the talent to command, and enforce obedience to his orders. When the vicissitudes of the voyage require of him to act the part of a merchant, he should possess business qualifications, and be conversant with the forms and course of trades.

But it is not in relation to those and other requisites for his office, that we are now to inquire. It is his character as an Agent—his authority to bind those by whom the ship is owned, to act for the proprietors of the cargo, and especially his liability in common with the owners of the ship, for injuries or losses resulting from his negligence or misconduct, or for which as Carriers the law makes both the Masters and Carriers responsible, which it is proposed to consider.

The authority of the Master to bind the owners is seldom expressly given. It is implied from his appointment, which holds him forth to the world as worthy of trust and confidence. According to the principle stated in a former essay, they are answerable for all his acts, for the performance of which an authority may be presumed from his situation and character, although he contravenes his private instructions. All his lawful contracts, therefore, relative to the usual employment of the ship, are obligatory upon his employers, whether they are the absolute owners of the vessel or only the charterers, provided in the latter case, the charterer has the exclusive possession and navigation of the ship. (St. Abt. 23, note.)

Where the ship is a general one, that is, not chartered, but employed to carry the goods of a number of persons not connected with each other, the Master when aboard has authority to make contracts relative to the freight. He cannot, however, bind his owners by an agreement to carry goods free of freight, as such an arrangement would obviously not be within the scope of his authority. The master may also, when the vessel is in a foreign port, where the owners have no Agent, charter her by virtue of his general authority. (2 W. C. C. R. 149.) But if the owners themselves have contracted for the employment of their ship, the Master cannot by the implied authority of his character, alter such contract, or substitute another for it. (11 Mass. R. 99.) Yet so far is he the Agent of the owner, from the mere relation of Master and owner, that where a ship while abroad, was sold by the owners at home, the purchaser was held liable for supplies subsequently furnished upon a contract with the Master, though neither the Master nor the person furnishing the supplies, knew of the sale of the vessel, and consequent change of ownership. (6 Mass. R. 422.

The power of the Master is not confined to making engagements relative to the employment of the ship; he may bind the owners by contracts respecting the means of employing and navigating her. To him is usually confided the hiring of the seamen, and the purchasing of the requisite supplies for the voyage. The usage, and his character as Master, furnish presumptive evidence of his being authorized to contract for such purposes, even at the place where the owner resides, and of course much stronger proof of his authority when the ship is abroad. To bind the owners, however, by such contracts, the supplies must appear to be reasonable, or it must be shown, that the money advanced for the purchase of them was wanting. There must also be nothing in the circumstances of the transaction, to repel the presumption, that the Master acted under the authority of the owners.

In the contracts thus made by the Master, the owners are rendered liable; but he is also personally bound to those with whom he contracts, unless by the terms of the contract it is expressly otherwise provided, or unless the circumstances show that credit was given to the owners alone. The Master's authority is not confined to contracts personally obligatory upon the owners. He may in certain cases create a lien upon the ship and even hypothecate or pledge the whole, or sell part of the cargo, though owned by strangers.

The most staunch and well found ship may be disabled by gales and tempests; the best planned and most lawful voyage be interrupted by the violence of belligerants, the cupidity of privateersmen, or the unjust and arbitrary acts or edicts of foreign princes. From these and similar causes, the ship and cargo are sometimes, at an intermediate port, where the owners have no authorized Agent, placed in situations of embarrassment and peril; to release them, and prevent the voyage from being broken up, often requires the exercise of an extraordinary authority in behalf of the owners, which as the necessity for it is rarely anticipated, is seldom expressly given. This authority, where there is no other authorized Agent, the law has vested in the captain. It exists, however, only in cases of necessity, and is to be exercised as a last resource.

Thus, where funds are wanted in a foreign country, though it may be even at the port of destination, (3 Johns. R. 352,) to repair the ship, to purchase provisions, or for any other purpose necessary to complete the enterprise, in which the vessel is engaged, whether the necessity has arisen from extraordinary dangers, or in the ordinary course of events, the Master may, if he cannot obtain it otherwise, borrow money at maritime interest on bottomry, and pledge the ship and freight for the repayment at the end of the voyage. The terms bottomry and maritime interest, are familiar to most merchants, but it may not be improper to state their legal acceptation. A bottomry bond is a security, by which the ship and freight are pledged by way of mortgage, for a loan or advance to the Master or owner. It is called bottomry, the bottom or keel being figuratively used to denote the whole vessel. The lender generally speaking, takes upon himself the risk of the safe arrival of the vessel. If it is lost, he loses his right to repayment, but in consideration of the risk which he thus incurs, the law allows him to stipulate for, and receive a greater rate of interest, than would otherwise be legal. This is called maritime interest, varying as to its rate, according to the contract of the parties. A respondentia bond is, where the loan is upon a pledge of merchandise, the condition of repayment being the safe arrival of the goods pledged; the amount loaned, both principal and interest, being at the risk of the lender during the voyage, who is, therefore, also allowed to receive maritime interest.

To return to the authority of the Master to raise money on bottomry at maritime interest. When he does so, as the loan was not on the personal credit of the owner, the owner is not personally responsible. The lender, if the ship arrive safe must resort to the specific security of the vessel and freight, or to the Master upon his personal engagement as the obligor of the bond.

The authority thus given to the Master, to pledge the ship and freight, is intended to promote the interests of the owners, but as being exercised abroad, it may be perverted and abused, the law has endeavored to guard against such results, and as far as practicable to protect the owner from fraud and collusion, and from the injuries which might follow from an improvident exercise of this power by the Master. For this purpose various safeguards have been established. It has been determined that the Master cannot borrow on bottomry, where the advances are not necessary for repairs or supplies, or for effectuating the objects of the voyage, or the safety and security of the ship—nor where the Master has other funds which he might use—nor where he can borrow on the credit of his owner—nor where the consignees of the owner have funds in their hands.

In these cases, the necessity, which is the ground of the authority to borrow, does not exist, and the authority, therefore, is not conferred.

Neither is the Master authorized to hypothecate the ship for advances previously made, nor for the debts of his owner. (2 Wash. C. C. R. 145.) It follows of course, that he cannot do so to advance his own private interest—nor can he do it for the benefit of the cargo. (9 Johns. R. 29.)

To be concluded next week.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

1. Where an offender arrested under a warrant indorsed in pursuance of the act 'for the better apprehending of felons and other offenders,' was taken into the county where the magistrate resided who issued the warrant, he not being a justice of the county where the offence was committed, it was held, that an action for false imprisonment was properly brought, the officer having neglected to comply with the requirements of the statute. Green vs. Rumsey, 2 Wend. 611.

2. False imprisonment will lie against an officer and a complainant in a criminal prosecution, where they combine and extort money from a party accused, by operating upon his fears, although the party be in the custody of the officer, under a valid warrant issued upon a charge of felony. Holley vs Mix, 3 Wend. 350.

3. In an action for false imprisonment against two, where several damages are given, the plaintiff may cure the irregularity by entering a nolle prosequi against one, and taking judgment against the other. Ib.

4. A misnomer of the person, in process on which an arrest is made, subjects the actors to an action for false imprisonment. Scott vs. Ely, 4 Wend. 555.

FORFEITURE OF ESTATE.

1. Since the statute allowing the wife and her heirs to enter into lands belonging to her, aliened by the husband, after the decease of the husband, it seems that a feoffment by the husband of the wife's estate does not work a forfeiture of his life estate. Jackson vs. Mancius, 2 Wend. 357.

2. If a forfeiture of a life estate accrues by the disseizin of the tenant for life, the reversioner is not bound to enter until the natural termination of the life estate. Ib.

FORMER RECOVERY.

Where an erroneous judgment is recovered, and the amount thereof collected, and such judgment is subsequently reversed for defect of form merely, and restitution and costs of reversal awarded to the defendant in the original judgment, such defendant cannot plead the payment made by him on the erroneous judgment in bar to a second suit for the original causes of action. Close vs. Stuart, 4 Wend. 95.

FRAUD.

1. Actual fraud in the conveyance of property may be shown by a creditor although his debt accrued subsequently to the conveyance sought to be avoided. Wadsworth vs. Havens, 3 Wend. 411.

2. So a purchaser for a valuable consideration has a right to avoid a precedent fraudulent conveyance. Ib.

3. Where a nephew, a simple, ignorant young man, was induced by his uncle, to accept a conveyance of land worth not exceeding $240, in satisfaction of a claim of at least $500, it was held, on an appeal from chancery, that from the nature of the transaction, the inadequacy of the consideration, the relative character, capacity, and connexion of the parties, fraud and imposition might well be presumed: and a decree directing the payment of the original claim by the uncle, and a re-conveyance of the land by the nephew, was affirmed. Hall vs. Perkins, 3 Wend. 626.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

A promise by one person to indemnify another for becoming a guarantor for a third, is not within the statute of frauds; such promise need not be in writing, and the assumption of the responsibility is a sufficient consideration for the promise. Chapin vs. Merrill, 4 Wend. 657.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

1. A voluntary conveyance is a deed without any valuable consideration. If anything valuable passes between the parties, it is a purchase; and it was accordingly holden that a bond executed by a son to his parent for $500, with interest annually, if demanded, was a valuable consideration, and would sustain a conveyance of land as a purchase; the securing to the grantor an annuity or rent equal to the legal interest of the bond, being deemed sufficient, even though it had been the intention or expectation of the parties that the principle of the bond should not be exacted. Jackson vs. Peek, 4 Wend. 300.

2. In the case of a voluntary conveyance, as much as in any other case, the question is as to actual fraud, which must be passed upon and decided by a jury. Ib.

3. A trifling accruing indebtedness or a declaration by a grantor at the time of the making of a settlement upon his children that he owed some money, where he retained under his control property amply sufficient to meet such demands, is not sufficient to avoid a conveyance. Ib.

4. Where on the trial of a cause, a party seeking to avoid a conveyance admits that there is no actual fraud in the transaction, the court will not look into the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence, to determine whether the transaction be in fact fraudulent or not, although a verdict be taken and a case made, subject to the opinion of the court. Ib.

FRAUDULENT JUDGMENT.

1. The taking of a judgment for a larger amount than is actually due, for the purpose of defeating another creditor, subjects the plaintiff to the penalty given by the statute of frauds, although a part of the debt covered by the judgment be actually due. Wilder vs. Fondey, 4 Wend. 100.

2. The motives of a plaintiff in entering judgment upon a bond and warrant where he has no security besides the judgment cannot be questioned; but where he has other security, and takes the only fund against which other creditors can proceed, his motives may be submitted to the consideration of a jury. Ib.

3. The statute of fraud reaches fraudulent executions as well as fraudulent judgments. An execution for the full amount of a bona fide judgment where the whole or a part of the judgment is satisfied, is within the operation of the statute. Ib.

4. A bond and warrant may be taken, and judgment entered thereon to cover future advances, but if an execution issues upon such judgment for more than is actually due, it is fraudulent if intentionally done; and whether issued intentionally or by mistake, for the amount directed to be levied, is a proper question for a jury. But to entitle a party to give proof upon such point, he must distinctly state the evidence he wishes to offer, unconnected with the question of the validity of the judgment. Ib.

GRANT.

A grant by the sovereign authority of the state of New York to A B and five others, as patentees, for and on behalf of themselves and their associates, the freeholders and inhabitants of the town of Hempstead, is a valid grant, being made an individuals by name, as trustees for the freeholders and inhabitants. North Hempstead vs. Hempstead, 2 Wend. 109.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

1. There can be no guardianship in socage of lands, granted by the state of New York since the 4th of July, 1776, the act concerning tenures declaring that all lands held under the authority of that state, shall be and remain allodial and not feudal. Combs vs. Jackson, 2 Wend. 153.

2. At the common law, where there was no guardian in socage, the father was guardian by nature to his heir apparent, until he arrived to the age of 21; this guardianship gave a control of the person only, and not of the estate, real or personal, of the infant. Ib.

3. Under the New York statute of descents, all the children are heirs apparent of the father, and he is entitled, as guardian by nature, to the guardianship of their persons until they attain the age of 21, or marry, except where lands, granted before the revolution, descend to the children from their maternal relations, in which case, as the lands cannot go to him, if they be socage lands he will be guardian in socage, and may take the rents and profits thereof for the use of his children, until they attain the age of 14, and until another guardian be appointed. Ib.

4. A guardian by nature has no control over the real or personal estate of his infant children. Ib.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

1. Where a bond is given by a husband to secure a separate maintenance to his wife, on an agreement between them to live separate and apart, and they separate, and the wife subsequently returns for the purpose of resuming her duties and privileges as a married woman, and is received by her husband as his wife, the previous agreement to live separate from each other is at an end, and the bond which was given for the separate maintenance falls with the agreement. Shelthar vs. Gregory, 2 Wend. 422.

2. The subsequent abandonment of the husband by the wife does not revive the bond or the legal liability of the husband to afford her a separate maintenance. Ib.

INCORPORATED COMPANIES.

1. The members of an incorporated company made by statute individually liable as carriers at common law, are responsible to the same extent and in the same manner as if there were no act of incorporation. Allens vs. Sewall, 2 Wend. 327.

2. A suit brought against them for the loss of a packet entrusted to their agent, should be against ll the co-partners, as the action is quasi ex con-actu; but the non-joinder of all cannot be taken dvantage of on the trial, but must be pleaded in batement. Ib.

INDICTMENT.

Where there are two counts in an indictment or a misdemeanor, one good and the other bad, nd the defendant is convicted, the indictment ill not be quashed on demurrer, or the judgment rrested or reversed for that cause. Kane vs. The People, 3 Wend. 363.

INFANT.

1. Where an infant took a mare on hire, and rove her with such violence, and treated her so ruelly otherwise, that she died; it was held, that hough case would not lie, trespass might be main-ined against him. Campbell vs. Stakes, 2 Wend. 37.

2. If an infant who has a horse on hire, does ny wilful and positive act, amounting to an elec-on, on his part, to disaffirm the contract of hiring, he owner is entitled to the immediate possession. Ib.

3. If the infant wilfully and intentionally injure e animal, an action of trespass lies against him r the tort. Ib.

4. Infancy, with an averment that the injury ppened through the unskilfulness, want of know-dge, discretion, and judgment of the defendant, uld be a good bar to an action of trespass ought for killing a horse let to hire, by violent ving and cruel treatment. Ib.

5. Infancy is admitted by a replication of a new mise to a plea of infancy, and need not be wed by the defendant. Goodsell vs. Myers, 3 end. 479.

6. The ratification of an infant's contract should a promise to a party in interest or his agent, or least an explicit admission of an existing liabil-from which a promise may be implied. Ib.

7. The ratification should be equivalent to a r contract. Ib.

8. The note of an infant is voidable not void, may be affirmed after the infant comes of age. eld in a case where the action was on a *negoti-*e note. Ib.

9. An express promise need not be proved to er an infant liable for necessaries; but where e sought to be charged otherwise than for ssaries, an express promise must be shown. rs. Ballou, 4 Wend. 40 3.

0. An infant is liable to his step-father for upport; a husband not being bound to sup-his wife's child by a former marriage. Ib.

INJUNCTION.

here there is an unlawful diversion of a m of a water from the mills and hydraulic s of a party, it is a proper case for the allow-of a preliminary injunction, as the injury, if ted in, might be irreparable. Case vs. t, 4 Wend. 632.

INSOLVENT.

An insolvent discharge, after a verdict and judgment, in an action of trespass, does otect a defendant from imprisonment. Hod-Chace, 2 Wend. 248.

A plea puis darrein continuance of a dis-charge under the act abolishing imprisonment for debt in certain cases, is not a waiver of a plea in bar before put in; and the plaintiff cannot con-fess the plea and take judgment, but must pro-ceed, and try the former issues. Rayner vs. Dy-ett, 2 Wend. 300.

3. An insolvent discharge, obtained in the state of New York cannot be pleaded in bar of a suit brought in a court of that state, on a contract made in another state subsequent to the passage of the act under which the discharge is obtained, between parties not inhabitants of the state of New York at the time of the contract although previous to the presenting the petition for the discharge, they become such inhabitants. Witt vs. Follet, 2 Wend. 457.

4. An action cannot be maintained against the maker of a promissory note payable to bearer, by a person to whom the same has been transferred, where the maker has obtained a discharge from all his debts as an insolvent debtor, previous to the transfer; although after the discharge, but before the transfer, the maker makes a new promise to the payee to pay the debt, and such new promise is set up by way of replication to the plea of dis-charge. Depuy vs. Swart, 3 Wend. 135.

5. An insolvent's discharge under the act ex-onerating a debtor from the payment of his debts, discharges the debt for which a note has given; the note becomes functus officio, loses its negotia-ble qualities, and a person to whom it is transferred after such discharge acquires no right to maintain an action upon it. Ib.

6. A promise to pay a debt discharged under such insolvent law, is a new contract. A suit on such contract can be brought only in the name of the person with whom the contract is made: and a note, the evidence of the original debt, has no connexion with such suit, other than as furnishing a consideration for the new promise. Ib.

7. In declaring in an action brought after such new contract, the plaintiff may set forth the origi-nal cause of action, and in his replication aver the new promise. Ib.

8. The moral obligation resting upon a debtor who has obtained an insolvent's discharge, is a good consideration for a subsequent promise to pay a debt. McNair vs. Gilbert, 3 Wend. 344.

9. An action cannot be maintained by the as-signee of a note payable to bearer, directly on the note, where the negotiability of such note has been destroyed by an insolvent discharge granted to the maker. More vs. Viele, 4 Wend. 420.

10. Nor can such assignee avail himself of a new promise subsequent to that discharge, unless it be made to him personally, to his agent, or to a third person to pay the assignee. Ib.

11. A discharge of an insolvent debtor, void as to its effect in relieving the defendant from the payment of his debts, is equally inoperative to pro-tect him from the imprisonment of his person. Witt vs. Follett, 4 Wend. 501.

12. A foreigner who has resided in the state of New York, and transacted business as a com-mission merchant for seven years, and then re-turns home taking with him his effects, and un-certain whether he will return or not, loses his character of an inhabitant; so that, though he returns to that state after a sojourning of only three weeks in his native land, he is not entitled to be discharged as an insolvent debtor, if, after his return, he engages in no business, and his residence, after his return, is merely of a tempo-rary nature. In the matter of John M. Wrigley, 4 Wend. 602.

INSURANCE.

1. Where a vessel, warranted not to be em-ployed in an illicit trade, is condemned by an Ad-miralty Court, acting as a Municipal Court to carry into effect navigation laws, for a violation of such laws, to support the allegation of a breach of such warranty, it is incumbent on the insurers to prove the existence of the laws alleged to be violated, as courts cannot judicially notice the mu-nicipal laws of foreign countries, but require them to be proved like other facts. By Walworth, Ch. Ocean Ins. Co. vs. Francis, 2 Wend. 64.

2. The facts of seizure and condemnation are not enough to support the allegation of a breach of warranty; the law under which the same took place must be produced and proved. By Spencer, senator. Ib.

3. Where a vessel is warranted as being Brit-ish, general evidence of her national character is prima facie sufficient, until doubts are raised by proof on the other side. By Walworth, Chan-cellor. Ib.

4. The insurer, when he sets up the breach of a condition as a defence, must prove the breach, or at least rebut the general presumption, by proof on his part. By Spencer, senator. Ib.

5. Whatever may be the law upon the question, how far a citizen or subject is bound, by the legis-lative or executive acts of the government to which he belongs, it seems, he is not bound by the judicial acts of a tribunal, merely because he is a subject of the government under which that tribu-nal is organized. By Walworth, Ch. Ib.

6. How far and in what cases a citizen is bound to look to his own government only for re-dress for injuries committed by the judicial, legis-lative, or executive departments of his own coun-try within the scope of their authority, quære. The question whether the assured can recover for an act done under the authority of his own state, does not arise, where from the sentence of the court, it does not appear that the seizure and condemnation were, by virtue of such authority, for a violation of a municipal law of the govern-ment to which the party belonged. Without proof of the existence of such law, and that the condemnation was for a violation thereof, the whole must be considered illegal and unauthor-ized. By Spencer, senator. Ib.

7. Where underwriters make no objection to the sufficiency of proof of interest, put their refu-sal to pay on the ground that they are not liable for the loss, it is a waiver of preliminary proof of interest. Ib

8. Testimony that a voyage was fair and law-ful, and that the vessel was not engaged in any illicit trade, is evidence of fact not of law. Ib.

9. The neglect of a supercargo to put in a claim to a vessel captured for an alleged violation of navigation law does affect the claim of the assured for a total loss. Ib.

10. Where a policy of insurance was effected upon goods and merchandise laden or to be laden on board a ship for and during the term of six calendar months, without reference to any partic-ular voyage, the risk to commence from and im mediately following the loading of the goods on board the vessel, it was held, that a trading voyage was evidently contemplated by the parties: that the policy was to be construed in the same manner as if a trading voyage had been expressed, with liberty to touch and trade at such ports and places on the globe as the insured should choose, subject to the accustomed and usual mode of transacting business at the several places visited by the vessel; and that however often the goods might be changed the policy would attach. Coggeshall vs. American Ins. Co. 3 Wend. 283.

11. If goods, while in the transportation from the shore to a ship engaged in a trading voyage, are lost, the insurer is liable, if the means employed for such transportation are according to the known course of trade and established usage of the place where the goods are thus attempted to be laden on board the vessel. Ib.

12. It seems that it is not an established point, in this country, that the insurer would be discharged by the insured taking the goods in his own lighter for the purpose of landing them, if the goods should be lost. Ib.

13. Underwriters may contract so as to incur risks antecedent to the date of the policy. Ib.

---

SHIPS AND SHIPPING.

Under the 10th section of the act of 1825, ch. 67 (276,) the forcing a mariner on shore must be done, not only without a justifiable cause, but also maliciously to justify a conviction. If done under a mistaken sense of duty it is not a case for conviction.

'Maliciously,' in the statute, means with a wilful disregard of right and duty, or doing the act against a man's own conviction of duty.—U. States vs. Ruggles. 5 Mason, 192.

A master of a ship has authority to confine his seamen in a common gaol, in a foreign port, for offences and misconduct, in extreme cases, and where the proper correction or punishment cannot be effectual on ship board. Ib. 192.

The crew of a ship who have signed shipping articles for a voyage under a particular master, without any clause providing for a change of master, are not discharged from the articles, by the dismissal of the master by reason of sickness, or any other reasonable cause, and the appointment of a new master, but they are bound to obey the new master.

If in such a case they combine together to refuse to do duty on board and to refuse obedience to the new master, that is an endeavor to make a revolt within the meaning of the crimes, in the act of 1790. ch. 9. (36) §12.—United States vs. Haines, H. 272.

---

GEORGIA AND THE CHEROKEES.

The Supreme Court of the United States terminated its annual session yesterday.

Among the decisions pronounced previous to the adjournment, was one upon the application, on the part of the Cherokee nation, for an injunction to stay certain proceedings of the State of Georgia. The decision of the Court was an unequivocal denial of the injunction.

The opinion of the Court was read by Chief Justice Marshall, and is therefore presumed to be from his luminous mind and pen. We have not been able to obtain it for publication, anxiously as we desired to do so. We heard it read however, and shall venture so far to report the grounds of it, as to state, that the Court disclaim jurisdiction of the case, on the ground that the Cherokee nation is not a foreign nation, in the sense of the Constitution. These Indian nations, it is the opinion of a majority of the Court, are not sovereigns, independent of the sovereignty of the United States, but domestic dependent nations, in a state of 'pupilage' to the United States, or in a relation corresponding to that which wards have to their guardians. The Supreme Court, therefore, cannot take cognizance of cases to which it is sought to make them parties as nations. With respect to the rights of the Cherokees, however, as individuals, to the lands guarantied to them, it was pretty distinctly intimated, in the opinion of the Court, that there is a mode by which they may be brought before the Supreme Court for adjudication.

The Opinion went on to say, that, if the objection to entertaining jurisdiction in this case were not fatal to the application, there were other grounds on which an application for the interference of this Court in the case would encounter grave objections. If jurisdiction was exercised in the case, it must be on the ground that the Cherokees are a foreign nation; and the relations between foreign Powers and the States are placed in the charge of a different branch of the Government. For this Court to undertake to arbitrate such questions, would be to assume a political power not intended to be vested in it.—If it were true, as argued, that the Cherokee Nation is oppressed by the State of Georgia, &c, &c, it belonged not to this Court (the Opinion concluded,) but to other tribunals, to assert their rights and redress their wrongs.

Mr Justice Baldwin delivered a very long separate opinion, agreeing entirely in the conclusion to which the majority of the Court had arrived, but not concurring in the views taken in the Opinion which had been read.

Mr Justice Johnson also delivered a separate opinion on the question.

Our own opinion on the subject is of little consequence; but the reasoning of the Court upon the Constitutional provisions bearing upon the case appeared to us to be conclusive.

The Baltimore Republican says—'The Court were divided on the question. The Chief Justice and Justices Johnson, McLean and Baldwin, against Justices Thompson and Story.'—Nat. Int. 12th inst.

---

THE SUPREME COURT.

Extract of a letter to the Editors of the United States Gazette, dated WASHINGTON, MARCH 10, 1831.

The session of the Supreme Court will terminate next week. It has been one of unusual interest, as many great questions of constitutional and general law have been presented and decided in the cases which have been disposed of; others of equal interest remain for decision.

The very important case of the Charlestown Bridge v. The Warren Bridge is now before the Court. It has been ably argued by Mr WARREN DUTTON, Mr WIRT, and Mr JONES; and Mr WEBSTER will close the argument tomorrow. Mr DUTTON, of Boston, has appeared for the first time in this Court, and he has fully justified the high reputation he holds in his own State. His opening address was lucid, learned, and eloquent. His manner is impressive, logical, and comprehensive, and his classical illustrations those of an accomplished scholar.

You are aware that this case is one of great interest in Massachusetts. It is brought before this Court under no circumstances to create jealousy of its interference with the decision of the State Court or the powers of the Legislature. It presents a question of property, and this appeal is almost sanctioned by the recommendation of the late Chief Justice Parker, of the Supreme Court of that State. The closing remarks of Mr DUTTON were listened to with profound attention, and I am particularly enabled to send them to you in almost his own words:

'After a contest of more than seven years with popular prejudice and passion, after struggling through that worse than Serbonian bog, judicial legislation, beset with difficulties and involved in darkness, it is a source of unmingled satisfaction to me to find myself at last standing on solid ground, and in the gladsome light of jurisprudence. That I have an oppportunity to submit this act, establishing the Warren Bridge Corporation, to the consideration of a tribunal, which the profound wisdom of the framers of our Constitution has provided for the ultimate determination of all controversies of this sort; a tribunal separated by distance, and elevated by the dignity of its office far above and beyond those excitements, interests, and passions, which sometimes vex and agitate particular communities; a tribunal that, looking with an eye of pure intelligence upon the law and constitution, pronounces its judgment unbiassed and unawed, solely in obedience to their dictates.'

---

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1831.

---

CASES IN THE GENERAL COURT OF VA.

NOVEMBER, 1830.

A correspondent has obligingly furnished us with notes of the principal decisions of the General Court of Virginia, at the November term, 1830: Present, Justices Stuart, Brockenbrough, Johnston, Smith, Allen, Daniel, Semple, Upshur, Field, May, and Lomax; as reported in the Richard Enquirer, of November 26th, from which the following abstracts are made.—Jurist.

A party being indicted and convicted under 1 R. C. p. 428, c. 3, s. 30, for carying four slaves named H. S. P. and Hyat, the property of E. D. and one named G. the property of L. J. D. out of Virginia, without the consent of said owners, and with the design of depriving them of their said slaves; a writ of error was petitioned for, on the ground that at the Examining Court, the defendant was, as appeared by the record, examined for so carrying away four slaves, named H. S. P. and Harriet, and one slave named G. belonging to such owners respectively. The petition was rejected by the Court unanimously. Thomas vs. The Commonwealth.

A justice of a County Court, who leaves the state, with the intention of settling in another state but after staying nine months in such other state, without, however, having any established residence there, returns to Virginia, thereby loses his office of a justice of the County Court. Powston vs. The Justices of Accomach. See also Chevs. The Justices of Spottsylvania.

A writ of error will not be granted to reverse a judgment against the defendant, in an indictment for nuisance, by raising a milldam so as to overflow a highway, because the indictment does not allege distinctly and specifically where the mill is situated, and what particular piece of road was over flowed. Stephen vs. Commonwealth.

[It was objected that it did not appear, from the indictment, except by inference, that the mill was in the county where the trial was had; it is to be presumed, therefore, that the road overflowed was alleged to be in the county.]

On an indictment for passing counterfeit money, evidence that at or about the time when the offence is alleged to have been committed, the defendant passed other counterfeit money is admissible to prove the scienter. Martin vs. The Commonwealth.

It being proved that the defendant in such an indictment had confederated with another person for the purpose of passing counterfeit money, evidence that counterfeit bills were passed by such other person similar to those alleged to have been passed by the defendant is admissible. Ib.

It is not indispensable that the notes alleged in such an indictment to be counterfeit should be proved to be such by the testimony of the officers of the bank by which the bills purport to have been issued; this fact may be proved by other witnesses. Ib.

Where some of the jurors left their box after the jury was empannelled, but before any evidence was given, but it appeared that they could not have communicated with any person during their absence from the box, the proceedings will not be set aside on this account. Ib.

[A part of the judges considered the circumstances of the jury's separating before or after any evidence was given, to be material: others did not consider this distinction entitled to so much weight, but all concurred in not setting aside the verdict, because from the particular circumstances, it was evidently not possible that the jurors could have been tampered with during their absence.] Ib.

In an indictment for counterfeiting bank notes, being proved that the defendant had such notes in his possession, and also implements for counterfeiting them, the jury were instructed that this was prima facie evidence that he counterfeited them. Spencer vs. Commonwealth.

The possession of such bank notes and apparatus, is prima facie evidence that the notes were counterfeited at the place where they were first found in possession of a person. By a majority of the court, Johnston, Semple, May, and Lomax, dissenting. Ib.

See United States vs. Britton, 2 Mason, 470.

[Two of the dissenting judges, May and Semple, were of opinion that the possession of the notes, and apparatus, though not prima facie evidence of the possessor's counterfeiting them, were such evidence of his aiding in so doing.

But another question arose in this case, which strikes us as of some importance. The two judges who named understood the bill of exceptions to state that the judge who presided at the trial instructed the jury that the facts above stated were prima facie evidence of the facts inferred. This would, they thought, be an instruction as to the weight of evidence, and they were, therefore, of opinion that the verdict ought to have been set aside. But Mr Justice Story, in Britton's case, cited above, considers the inference as to the fact of forging in such case, to be an established presumption of law, and if it be so, the court was bound, if so requested, or if the question was presented, so to instruct the jury, as much as they would be to instruct them that a registry of deed is notice to all the world. The reasons given in Britton's case in favor of such a presumption, are certainly very strong. Another question suggests itself in this case, whether the court should instruct the jury that the possession of counterfeited notes, and the apparatus for counterfeiting them, is prima facie evidence, or, in other words, ground of legal presumption, that the possessor was the counterfeiter; for, whether he should appear to have been so or not, seems to depend on the circumstances of the particular case. We are not aware that it has been made the subject of legal presumption. To instruct the jury that a fact is proved, is to instruct them on the weight of testimony; but to instruct them that if such a fact is, in their opinion, proved, then the law raises such or such a presumption is strictly within the province of the court. The question in such case, and that a legal one, is, whether the law does raise any such presumption? The doctrine laid down by Mr Chief Justice Tilghman on this subject, in Stower v. Lessee of Whitman, 6 Bin. 419, to this effect, seems to us to be correct. We make no distinction between what is called a presumption of law, and a presumption of fact; considering them to be the same.

Under the insolvent laws of Virginia, if a debtor presents a schedule of his property, and offers to take the oath prescribed by the statute as a condition of his discharge from imprisonment, the justices, before whom he offers to take the oath, (being the proper magistrates) are bound to administer it, though they may have reason to think he swears falsely. [As all the debtor's property, whether included in the schedule or not, passes, by assignment by law to the sheriff, for the benefit of the creditors, their right to the proceeds is not affected by the schedule and oath, though if the debtor conceals or abstracts any part, it may be more difficult to prove it to be his.] Harrison vs. Emerson & als. Justices of the Peace.

---

ADMIRALTY COURT.

(Before Sir C. Robinson, attended by two Trinity Masters.)

The City of Edinburgh—Salvage.

Dr Adams, for the salvors, in this case, stated that the City of Edinburgh steam-vessel, left Leith on the 12th of January last, but meeting with rough weather, the Captain, Richard Fraser, put into Hamburg harbor, where he remained for several hours. The weather improving, however, he again proceeded on his voyage for London, but shortly after he had left the port, a heavy sea struck the vessel astern, stove the boat, and did other damage, so that shortly afterwards both engines were disabled, and the captain ran for Blakeney harbor for shelter. Before, however, she arrived off the harbor, on the 13th, she lost her best bower anchor and cable. In trying to get into the port without a pilot, the vessel was going in a direction which would have grounded her, had not one of the salvors, William Baynes, warned her off by waving his jacket. The steamer then stood out, and the salvors lost sight of her in a shower of snow. At night they saw her again, and discovered that her Union Jack was reversed (a signal of distress), an ensign was in her mizen rigging and lights were hung out for assistance. The weather, however, was so severe that they durst not venture out to assist her without a certain prospect of destruction. They remained, however, on the beach all night, in order to assist if she went to pieces, for at this time she was so strained that her sides could be seen through from the engine-room. On the 14th, towards night, the wind in some degree abated, and the salvors immediately put off to her. They joined her at about the same time as another boat from Wells (about five miles distant), and assisted in weighing anchor, sounded the bar in the harbor, and ultimately succeeded in getting her in. The salvors contended that she was in such a bad condition that the Captain told them at the time they boarded that he had determined on running her ashore to save what he could. He promised them that if they could succeed in getting the vessel in they should be handsomely rewarded, as the vessel and cargo were worth 33,000*l.* and there were 150 passengers on board.

The King's Advocate (with whom was Dr Phillimore), contended for the owners, that these fishermen of Blakeney were entitled to no more than the regular remuneration for pilotage, for that the signals to which they had referred were merely signals for a pilot and not of distress. That the salvors might have put off and have reached her on the 13th, as the sea was not so high as to frighten persons used to it. That the passengers took their meals at the usual times, and that many of them were playing cards throughout the night of the 13th. It was further proved in evidence that the salvors had said at the time they saw the signal, that it would not pay them to pilot her in, if they did not do so as salvors, and that they had prevented some sailors (who had volunteered) from joining her by taking away the lifeboat. The Learned Gentleman also alleged that the storm was over when the salvors came on board the vessel, and concluded by contending, that the Court ought not to award more than the remuneration which had already been offered.

Sir Christopher Robinson, in giving judgment, inquired of the Trinity Masters, who were on the bench, whether they thought that the salvors might have ventured out on the 13th and 14th, before they did, and whether it was not their duty to have made a trial?

The Trinity Masters replied, that there did not appear to have been more danger than the salvors ought to have encountered as mere pilots, and that at least they ought to have made a fair trial.

The Court then awarded the salvors the sum that had been tendered them, and decided that the owners should pay all costs.

Dr Dodson appeared for the Wells boatmen, but the Court deferred their case till a future day.

---

The appointment of Lord Winford, as Judge by the late British Ministry, is a fruitful source of comment in the papers formerly on the opposition side. The following is from a late number of the Morning Chronicle :—

A Cheap Judge.—'Tom, what are you doing?—Nothing, plase your Honor. And what are you doing, Jack!—I'm helping Tom, sir.'—Joe Miller.

——————— 'Nil sine magno
Vita labore dedit mortalieus.'—Horat.

A fifth Baron! Good lack, cries John Bull, in a stew,
Why now really, Sir Robert, what is he to do?
To do, says Sir Robert, why first he's to shake
Up the other four Barons, and keep them awake
Let me tell you, this labor alone is worth more Than five thousand per annum, five thousand times o'er
But if it should happen, that shake as he will,
All the other four Barons, are sound asleep still
Then into the bargain, he's paid to find out,
What these others four Barons are dreaming about.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIII. for March, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Moral Education. 1. The Library of Education, edited by Wm. Russell, vol. 1; containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education, by John Locke,' and 'A Treatise on Education, by John Milton.'

2. Account of the Edinburgh Sessional School, and the other Parochial Institutions for Education, established in that city in 1812; with Strictures on Education in general. By John Wood, Esq.

II. Prison Discipline 1. Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

2. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

III. Collection of Psalms and Hymns. A Collection of Psalms of Hymns for Christian Worship.

IV. Meaning of Aiwv. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays on several words relating to Future Punishment.

V. Works of the Rev. Robert Hall. The Works of the Rev. Robert Hall, A. M. Minister of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, England. First complete edition, with a brief Memoir of the author.

VI. Stuart and Whitman. 1. A Letter to William E. Channing, D. D. on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Moses Stuart, Professor of Sacred Literature in the Theological Seminary, Andover.

2. Two Letters to the Rev. Moses Stuart, on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College, February 3, 1831. March 19.

POPULAR JOURNAL OF MUSIC. THE HARMONICON, a Monthly Journal of Music—No. I. just received by GRAY & BOWEN. Each monthly number will contain—

I. An Original Biography of some distinguished Composer or Performer. II. Interesting Correspondence, or Original Dissertations, on Subjects connected with the Science. III. Detailed Accounts of the Opera, Concerts, and other Musical Performances of the past month. IV. Copious Extracts from the Foreign Musical Journals, giving the reader the latest information of the Progress of the art, and its Professors throughout Europe. V. Liberal and unbiassed Accounts of all Musical Works as they appear. VI. Six or seven pieces of Music, Vocal and Instrumental, English and Foreign, selected with care, and printed with a beauty and accuracy that may safely challenge competition.

Musical Families and Societies, subscribing to the Harmonicon, will be furnished monthly with (in addition to the literary contents of each number), on an average, Six Entire Pieces of Vocal and Instrumental Music, at a price not exceeding the common charge for a single piece, when printed in the usual way. March 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVII. for January.

CONTENTS.

Art I. Popular Defeusive Force. II. Lesson's History of Man. III. Hannibal's Passage of the Alps. IV. Webster's American Dictionary. V. India and China Trade. VI. Character of George IV. VII. Scotch Parliamentary Reform. VIII. Heiress of Bruges. IX. Maxwell. X. Belgian Revolution. XI. J. P. Cobbett's Italy. XII. Bruce's Travels. XIII. Machine-Breaking. XIV. Tennyson's Poems. XV. Basil Barrington and Friends. XVI. The Wellington Administration. XVII. European Revolution; List of Books, &c. March 19.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

No. 15, North American Series.

This number contains articles on Screw Cutting; Locomotive Carriages; finding Velocity of Ships at sea; New Metallic Alloy for pivot Watches; Reflections on the Decline of Science in England; Improved marine Steam Engine Boiler; Claxton's Air Pump; Almanacks for 1831, &c, &c, with a great number of engravings.

Subscriptions received as above at $3 75 per annum. March 19.

GRAY AND BOWEN, have just received, No. 1, of SURGICAL ANATOMY OF THE ARTERIES, with plates and illustrations. By Nathan R. Smith, M. D. Professor of Surgery in the University of Maryland. January 1.

SPLENDID BIBLE. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

WHITMAN'S LETTERS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, 'Two Letters to Rev. Moses Stuart,' on Religious Liberty, occasioned by his Letter to Rev. Wm. E. Channing. By Bernard Whitman. Second edition. March 19.

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

PARLEY'S ASIA. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, Peter Parley's Tales about Asia, with a Map and numerous Engravings. This is designed as a fourth volume in a series of Geographical and Historical Tales for Children. Tales of America, Europe, and Africa, have already been published. Tales of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, Tales of the Sea, and Tales of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, will complete the series. These three last are in a state of forwardness.

GRAY & BOWEN, have just published, TALES OF TRAVELS West of the Mississippi, with a Map and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. This volume is the first of a series which is intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, an APPENDIX to the American Almanac, for the year 1831, being the latter part of the fiftyfifth, and the beginning of the fiftysixth year of the Independence of the United States.

Extract from the Preliminary Observations on the Astronomical Department of the American Almanac.

The Appendix is intended to answer all the essential purposes of a Nautical Almanac, and the insertion therein of the distances of the Moon from the Planets, and of the proportional logarithm of the difference between the distances, it is hoped, will be found an improvement on any Almanac hitherto published. Jan. 1.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES. GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

NEWSPAPER AND PERIODICAL AGENCY. EICHBAUN & NORVELL, Booksellers, Nashville, Tennessee, have, in addition to their regular business, established a GENERAL AGENCY for the procuring of subscribers to, and the collecting of debts due to Newspapers and Periodicals throughout the United States. To this business great attention will be paid, and the instructions of Publishers strictly attended to. The city in which they are established contains a population of six thousand inhabitants, and as the citizens have ever shown a disposition to encourage meritorious publications, with the aid of Agents, the publishers of Newspapers, Magazines, &c, might obtain a respectable number of subscribers. Refer to GRAY and BOWEN, Booksellers, Boston. March 19.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

WORKING MEN'S PARTY. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, delivered before the Charlestown Lyceum, October 6, 1830. By Edward Everett. Second Edition.

EVENTS IN PARIS, during the 26, 27, 28, and 29th of July, 1830. By several eye witnesses. Translated from the fourth Paris edition. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

LIBRARY OF EDUCATION. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN,

The Library of Education, Vol. I. —Containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education.' By John Locke, and a 'Treatise of Education,' by John Milton, with an Appendix, containing Locke's Memoranda on Study. Edited by Wm. Russell, late editor of the Journal of Education.

Extract from the Preface.

'The present volume is intended to form one of a series of standard treatises on the subject of Education. The work now commenced will, it is hoped, form a useful source of information to parents and teachers; furnishing to the latter a sort of professional library, to which individuals may resort for assistance in the labor of instruction, and offering to the former an aid to the formation of just and extensive views of the whole scope of education, as well as a preparation for cooperating with instruction, in their exertions for the mental advancement of the young.' Jan. 1.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1831. NO. XXXVI.

LORD MANSFIELD.

Concluded.

Vernon, the Jacobite alluded to by Fawcett, although he followed the calling of a mercer, was a member of the ancient Derbyshire family of that name. Murray, Stone, and Johnson, had all been intimate with his son at Wesminster school, and their boyish friendship led to an acquaintance with himself, which was continued after they had left the university. For Murray, indeed, he soon conceived a warm attachment, insomuch that on the death of his only son, he considered him as his heir; and eventually left him, by his will, a property in Cheshire and Derbyshire, which was estimated at the value of more than ten thousand pounds. This was some time after Murray's marriage. The testimony of Fawcett all bore reference to an earlier period; when Murray was a young lawyer, and Stone and Johnson were both in obscurity. At that time it appears that young Vernon and his three friends used frequently to sup at his father's house in Cheapside, on which occasions there is little doubt that the old tradesman made no secret of his attachment to the Jacobite party. Whether the others ever thought fit to humor him so far as to avow a similar predilection, was the question that constituted the whole gist of the deep and serious investigation before the council. The only person who treated the affair as it deserved, was the king himself, who repeatedly declared, it was of very little importance to him what the parties accused might have said, or done, or thought, while they were little more than boys: he was quite satisfied with the assurance that they had since become his very faithful subjects and trusty servants.

Putting Murray's solemn asseveration of the falsehood of Fawcett's statement entirely aside, we think the constant drinking of the pretender's health before a mixed company, at a time when such symptoms of disaffection might, and often did, entail very awkward consequences on the persons displaying them, would have been an act quite inconsistent with the caution and the prudence of his character. Whether the improbability of the charge, coupled with his own denial of its truth, were then generally considered sufficient to disprove it altogether, we have no means of ascertaining. But his political opponents either did give it entire credence, or had their own reasons for affecting to do so; and the imputation of this political crime was, for many years afterwards, a favorite weapon with his assailants. Even so late as the time of Junius, we find it turned against him; and Horne Tooke, when he was tried in the court of king's bench, had no scruple in making free use of it. But it was in the hands of Pitt, and shortly after the investigation, that it proved most formidable. At the time the charge was made, Pitt was himself a member of the administration; and though his feelings of jealousy or personal enmity did occasionally betray themselves, even while he was enlisted under the same banner with Murray, he, of course, could not then make an habitual show of hostility against him. But on the death of Mr Pelham, (March, 1754) and his subsequent dismissal from the office of paymaster of the forces, which happened the year aftewards, (November, 1755) he was thrown into opposition, and had full opportunity of giving scope to his eloquence in repeated attacks against all the adherents of the Duke of Newcastle. Murray, as the acknowledged leader and champion of the ministerial party in the house of commons, would naturally have been singled out by him as the opponent most worthy to be coped with, and most difficult to silence; even had he not been further instigated against him by that spirit of personal rivalry which, according to Horace Walpole (and in such a case we may give full credit even to this prejudiced partizan), had materially contributed to bring about his defection from their common cause. Many examples of his attacks upon Murray, and some in which he taunted him with his supposed inclination towards Jacobitism, may be found in Walpole's Memoirs. From these it would appear that Pitt never failed to have the advantage, and that Murray invariably quailed beneath the pointed sarcasms of this great orator. The authority is, no doubt, questionable; but the account, nevertheless, wears the appearance of truth. There was a degree of timidity about the character of Murray, which was very likely to unfit him for stemming such bold and rapid torrents of invective or irony as the genius of Pitt delighted to pour forth. In closeness of argument, in happiness of illustration, in copiousness and grace of diction, the oratory of Murray was unsurpassed; and, indeed, in all the qualities which conspire to form an able debater, he is allowed to have been Pitt's superior. When measures were attacked, no one was better capable of defending them; when reasoning was the weapon employed, none handled it with such effect; but against declamatory invective his very temperament incapacitated him from contending with so much advantage. He was like an accomplished fencer, invulnerable to the thursts of a small sword, but not equally able to ward off the downright stroke of a bludgeon.

We have the testimony of every historian of Murray's time, to his ability as a parliamentary orator. In the house of commons he had no competitor but Pitt. 'They alone,' says Lord Chesterfield, 'can inflame or quiet the house; they alone are attended to in that numerous and noisy assembly, that you might hear a pin fall, while either of them is speaking.' Horace Walpole's frequent testimony to the same purpose is the more valuable, inasmuch as he gives it with evident reluctance. Unfortunately we have now no better means of estimating his skill as a debater than by the effects it produced. Pretended reports of his speeches in parliament may be found among the publications of the day; but there is none on which we can place much reliance, even as far as the arguments are concerned, much less the language, which indeed they scarcely affected to give with accuracy. It was in 1738, that the House of Commons declared it a breach of privilege to print any account of its debates; and though this had no further direct effect than that of inducing booksellers to publish them under fictitious titles (such as the debates of the kingdom of Lilliput in the Gentleman's Magazine), yet it certainly acted as a check upon reporters, who might previously have been in the habit of openly taking their notes in gallery. For the most part, therefore, a general notion of the subject of debate, with a more or less vague recollection, or perhaps a few loose memoranda of the principal topics insisted upon by the speakers, were the only materials which the professional caterers for public curiosity could command. Upon this slender ground work, or often on none at all, they were in the habit of constructing compositions, which were given out as the actual record of the proceedings of the house; though for the whole of the language, and the greater part of the ideas, they were often indebted in a much greater degree to their invention than their memory. The account of the magazine speech-maker in Jonathan Wild, is perhaps not very highly caricatured. Horace Walpole, and some few other writers of his class who have acquainted us in a summary way with the most important transactions of parliament, during their own time, have not in any case attempted more than an outline of any particular debate. The highest credit is certainly due to the industry and the skill, with which the editors of the parliamentary history have availed themselves of several important manuscript notes taken by different members, who were present at the debates; but from such imperfect and sometimes prejudiced accounts as these, we can no more form a just or adequate notion of Murray's powers as an orator, than from the mere general description of his commanding though not tall figure, his graceful gestures, his sparkling eye, and his melodious voice, we can bring before our imagination a correct picture of the man.

The well-earned celebrity of Murray both as a debater and as a statesman, raised a general expectation that he would be selected as the fittest person to succeed Mr Pelham in the cabinet. His high parliamentary reputation, however had never estranged him from his profession, to which, and to which alone he had repeatedly declared he would look for preferment. Walpole, indeed, in speaking of his claims to the office of prime minister, insinuates that he was not disinclined to advance them, but 'was always waiving what he was always courting.' No one, however, who has read this affected writer's memoirs, and been fatigued with his incessant strainings after antithesis, will require to be told that he makes little scruple of sacrificing truth, and dirtorting if not wholly mis-stating facts, whenever by so doing he can contrive to torture his language into a point. In this he strictly resembles the school of French writers, on which he had evidently modelled his style. It must, however be acknowledged that he involuntarily corrects many of his misrepresentations delivered in the form of such conceits as the one just quoted, by contradicting them in some of the few places where he condescends to express himself in plain language. Thus in a subsequent part of his memoirs, finding, no doubt, that what he was about to state, could by no ingenuity be converted into a resting place for the see-saw of an antithesis, he distinctly and simply declares the fact mentioned above (which is besides authenticated by other authority), that Murray invariably refused to go out of his profession for advancement.

He had not long to wait for opportunities of rising to the very eminence which had probably been, throughout his whole career, the object of his ambition. The chief justice of the king's bench, Sir William Lee, died within a month after Mr Pelham (8th April, 1754,) and Sir Dudley Ryder being appointed to succeed him, the vacant post of attorney-general fell to the lot of Murray. In little more than two years afterwards, (July, 1756,) the death of Sir Dudley left the place of chief justice of England open to him. The claims of Murray to succeed him in this office were incontestable; and indeed no attempt was made to deny them. But the peculiar circumstances in which the Duke of Newcastle was at that time placed, in consequence of the loss of Minorca, made him more than ever anxious to retain in the House of Commons his ablest and most powerful ally, without whose assistance he was aware it would be vain to indulge the hope of continuing at the head of the administration. Every effort was accordingly made by him to induce Murray to forego his claims at that critical period. We are assured by Horace Walpole, that he offered him (in addition to his place of attorney-general, the emoluments of which were computed at about 7000*l.* a year), the Duchy of Lancaster with a pension of 2000*l.*, and the reversion of a tellership of the exchequer for his nephew, Lord Stormont. At the beginning of October, after every attempt to procure a coalition with Pitt had failed, and as the approaching meeting of parliament was about to bring matters to a crisis, the same authority informs us, that the duke bid up as high as 7000*l.* a year in pensions, on condition that Murray would retain his seat in the house of commons for a month, a week, nay even for one day. Murray, however, was resolute in his refusal. The office of chief justice of the king's bench, with a peerage, was one he had long been aspiring to, and for which, indeed, he had foregone every opportunity of rising by means independent of his profession. His professional reputation had kept pace with his political; and the bar at that time could produce none able to compete with him. He, therefore, justly considered himself entitled as a matter of right, to an office of which no man in the kingdom was so able to discharge the duties, and which he had earned by a sufficiently long and extremely arduous course of services to government. Finding, therefore, the Duke of Newcastle selfishly resolved to neglect no means of withholding it from him, he at length gave his Grace to understand, that if his claims were disregarded, the ministry should gain nothing by his disappointment, as he would throw up the attorney-generalship, and leave them to encounter the coming storm by themselves. This intimation was decisive. The duke had now no alternative but to resign, and consequently no motive for wishing to deprive Murray of the honors he had so well merited. Accordingly on the 8th of November, 1756, he was called to the degree of sergeant, and the same evening, was sworn in as chief justice of the king's bench, at the chancellor's house in Ormond-street, the other judges, and most of the officers of the court being in attendance. Immediately afterwards the great seal was appended to a patent, creating him baron Mansfield, of Mansfield in the county of Nottingham. On the following Thursday, (Nov. 11th) he took his seat in the court of king's bench.

---

ON THE LAW RELATING TO

MASTERS OF SHIPS AND COMMON CARRIERS.

Concluded.

It is required that the necessity of the loan, if disputed, should be proved by the lender; but if the necessity exists, and he acts fairly, he is not bound to see to the proper application of the money by the master, nor affected by his dishonest appropriation of it.

It has been doubted whether the consignee of the ship or cargo, could take a bottomry bond for advances, as it afforded an opportunity for collusion and fraud. But it is now settled, that where a necessity existed for the hypothecation, where the consignee had no funds in his hands, and the fairness of the transaction is established, that the bond being given to a consignee will not affect its validity; though in such cases a court would scrutinize the circumstances of the loan with a jealous eye.

To render a bottomry by the Master valid, the money must have been advanced on the credit of the ship—if it has been lent without a bottomry, and from doubts as to the solvency of the owner or other circumstances, the lender subsequently wishes the further security of the ship, the Master cannot pledge it, though the money borrowed was necessary, and has been applied to the purposes of the voyage.

A ship bound from Philadelphia to Ostend, was obliged to put into Dover in distress, where she was refitted; and the consignees at Ostend being informed by the captain of his situation, furnished him with a credit on London, by which he raised money sufficient to pay the expenses incurred. The ship pursued her voyage to Ostend, where the consignees having accepted bills drawn by the owner beyond the amount of freight and cargo, told the captain he should not leave the port, unless he would repay the money advanced in England for repairs, or hypothecate his vessel. The captain could not repay the money, and for some time refused to hypothecate the ship, but finding expenses to accumulate, he at last consented. The consignees introduced him to another mercantile house, to whom he executed a bottomry bond, but received no money. The vessel returned to Philadelphia; but in the meantime the owner had failed, and had assigned his ship to his creditors. The foreign bond holders libelled the vessel in the admiralty of Pennsylvania; but the distinguished Judge, and accomplished scholar, who then presided in that court, (the late Francis Hopkinson, Esq. whose mantle has so happily fallen upon his son and successor,) decided that the law never designed in this manner, to give partial advantages in mercantile connexions, or secure the balance of a running account between owners and consignees. That under the circumstances, the captain had not power to hypothecate the vessel to the consignees, and that the hypothecation to the plaintiffs, who were not at all interested in the transaction, and whose names were only used to save appearances, was the same as if made to the consignees. (Hopkins. Adm. Decis. 163.) This decision was appealed from; but was unanimously confirmed by the High Court of Errors and Appeals.

It is a general rule of law, that the Master has no authority to sell the ship, and that by such a sale, no interest is vested in the purchaser; but as has been observed by Sir William Scott, (1 Rob. Adm. R. 221,) 'laws which will not admit of an equitable construction, to be applied to the inevitable misfortunes or necessities of men, cannot be laws framed for human societies.' In cases of extreme necessity, therefore, not only are exceptions to general rules established, but all rules are superseded. The Master, it is true, is appointed only to navigate the ship, and it is evidently beyond his commission to sell, yet in a case of urgent necessity and extraordinary difficulty, his sale is made in the exercise of a sound and honest discretion, and for the benefit of all concerned, would be sanctioned. But in the language of Judge Washington, the sale can only be justified in cases of extreme necessity in a foreign country, and to prevent the property from perishing. (2 Wash. C. C. R. 150.) There must be no opportunity of consulting the owner; and the Master must act with the most pure good faith. (St. Abbot. 10. Note.) To evade this prohibition to sell, or to justify their conduct, Masters of ships sometimes obtain a sentence of condemnation of their vessels as unseaworthy, and a decree of sale by some Court of Admiralty; but it is now well settled, that such a decree obtained upon the petition of the Master, and the report of surveyors, that the ship is unseaworthy, or not reparable, is not within the legitimate power or authority of such courts, and that the title of the purchaser at such sale, may be contested by the original owners of the ship, wherever it is subsequently found, and the facts upon which the decree of sale was founded be disputed by them. Accordingly, in a late case in England, (10 East. 143,) where a ship had put into Tortola, and being leaky, the Master applied for a survey, and upon the surveyor's report, she was, by the Vice Admiralty Court, decreed to be sold; the sale was declared to be invalid in a suit by the owners against the purchaser—the absolute necessity of it not being established, although it appeared to have been made bona fide, and intended at the time for the benefit of all concerned.

The Master, as such, does not represent the owner of the cargo. His duty is to keep it safely, and convey it to its destined port, and generally speaking, if he exercises any other authority over it, his conduct is unlawful. But in cases of urgent and unforeseen necessity, the character of Agent for the owners of the cargo, is by the policy of the law sometimes cast upon the Master. Were it otherwise, the property might be left without protection, or not reach the intended market. One case in which he is thus authorized to act for the owner of the cargo is, that of ransom from an enemy or pirate. If a part of the cargo is delivered, or a sum of money paid for that purpose by the Master, his act will be justified, and the owners of the ship and other goods be bound to contribute. Ransom from an enemy is prohibited to English subjects by several acts of parliament. (Abbot, 347.) The contract is made void, and the party subjected to a penalty. No such prohibition exists in our law, and an instance during the late war of the ransom of a valuable ship and cargo, captured at the Capes of the Delaware, will be recollected by many. So too, the Master may in certain cases pledge the whole of the cargo, or absolutely sell part of it, to raise money for the repairs of the ship, to enable her to proceed to the port of destination. The ground upon which this extraordinary power over the property of those whom he does not expressly represent, is vested in him, is the extreme necessity of the case, and the supposed tacit agreement of the owner of the cargo to such measures as alone will prevent the voyage in which he is equally interested with the owner of the ship, from being broken up, or unreasonably delayed. (2 W. C. C. R. 237.) The Master cannot, therefore, either sell or hypothecate the cargo, where it is apparent, that the owners of it cannot possibly be benefited by such an act. A sale of the whole cannot of course be for the advantage of the owners; and the Master, therefore, cannot sell the whole; but a sale of part may be for the owner's benefit, as thereby the Master may be enabled to carry the residue to the destined market. For the same reason, that as thereby the whole may be conveyed to its proper market, he may hypothecate the whole. The part or proportion which he may sell, to enable him to prosecute his voyage, is not fixed by law, nor could it well be. It must depend upon the necessity and circumstances of the case. The only limitation is, that the sale must not be of the whole.

The power to sell or pledge the cargo, can be exercised by the Master only at an intermediate port, and not at that of the ship's destination; because the only motive which can justify it, is to enable the ship to prosecute the voyage. Nor can the Master sell part of or hypothecate the cargo even at an intermediate port, and for the purpose of enabling the ship to perform the voyage, unless the ship and freight, and the personal credit of the owner, are not sufficient security for the sum which it is requisite to raise, nor where the owner of the ship or the Master himself has goods on board. These are to be the first used to raise money, they form the proper security for the captain to give, and should therefore first be given.

The credit of the owners of the ship, and their property, must be shown to be insufficient, and the necessity urgent, to justify the interference of the Master with the rights of the owners of the cargo. His duty is to carry it to the place of its destination, and there deliver it to the Agent of the owner. If contrary to this duty, and without a sufficient cause, he sells, or pledges it, both he and his owners may be made responsible for the loss sustained, by the proprietor of the goods. Nor will the master's acting in good faith, excuse him or the owner, or render valid the sale of the goods, as if the absolute necessity of the measure cannot be clearly made out.

The same urgent necessity, (which according to the maxim, has no law,) has been held to justify the Master, without reference to the repairs of the ship, or the prosecution of the voyage, in selling at an intermediate port, where there is no authorized Agent of the shipper, goods which were damaged, or of a perishable nature. In a case decided by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, the ship by stress of weather had been driven into a port out of her course. Part of the cargo, consisting of saltpetre, being damaged by sea water, the vessel being condemned as unseaworthy, there being no supercargo on board, nor Agent of the owners at the port, the captain sold the entire cargo. He was sued by the owners of the saltpetre, who contended, that as the article, though damaged, was not perishable, it should have been stored, and that the sale was unlawful. The expediency of the sale having been established by the verdict of the jury, the court decided, that the Master could lawfully make it on the grounds before stated. But in the same case it was ruled, that though the ship was condemned as unseaworthy, those goods which were in good condition, and not perishable, the Master had no right to sell without the order of the owner, to whom he was bound to give immediate information. (6 Binney, 262.) Under such circumstances, the Master should either tranship the goods, if he has the means of doing—if not, deposit them until instructions are received, or return them to the owner. The tranship if practicable, would generally be the most correct course. A sale, where the goods are not damaged or perishable, can scarcely be justified by any circumstances—nor will it excuse, that it was made under the order of a Court of Admiralty, upon the application of the Master, if in fact the necessity to sell did not exist.

The owners of a ship are not only liable for the contracts and engagements of the Master, while acting within the scope of his employment, but they are also in certain cases responsible for injuries done to the property of others, by his want of care or of skill in the management of his vessel. Both Master and owners are bound to all who may be affected by his acts, for his skill and the care in the navigation of his ship. Therefore, where a vessel is run down or injured by another, the owner as well as the Master of the vessel, by which the injury is done, are liable in damages to the full extent of the injury, if it proceeded from want of attention, or of nautical skill on the part of their captain, or was wilfully done by him. (1 Wash. C. C. Rep. 142.) The difficulty generally is, to discover to which party the blame is imputable. There are, however, settled nautical rules, by which in many cases it may be ascertained. Thus the vessel that has the wind free, must get out of the way of one that is close hauled—and where a vessel is entering a harbor, where others are anchored, neglect to check the course of the entering vessel, will be a fault creating responsibility for the damages which may ensue. If the collision happened without any negligence or fault, but from the violence of the wind or other physical cause, the damage must be borne where it falls. (3 Kent. Com. 184.) The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has decided, (4 Dallas, 206,) that the owner is liable for such an injury committed, while his vessel was in charge of a regular pilot, on the ground that the pilot was in the actually service of the owner of the ship. But it seems the better opinion, that the Master is not answerable, while the ship is under the direction of the pilot, for injuries done to other vessels by collision. (1 John. R. 105.) In England by an act of parliament lately passed, (6 George IVth, c. 107,) both owners and Masters are exempted from liability for injuries to others, by reason of the neglect, incapacity, or default of a licensed pilot, while the vessel is under his charge. No similar statutory provisions are known to exist in the United States.

For personal violence to his crew, or the maltreatment of his passengers, the Captain alone is answerable, and not the owners. In relation to the crew, the law, while it vests in the Master the power of enforcing discipline, by confinement or personal chastisement, when milder measures are not sufficient, punishes by damages all undue severity. As to passengers, it requires that his behaviour towards them should be decorous, and that they should receive all the accommodations stipulated for by their contract. In respect to them, to use the language of Judge Story in a recent case, (3 Mason, 245,) the duty of the Master is one of responsibility and delicacy. Their contract with him is not for mere ship room, and personal existence on board, but for reasonable food, comforts, necessaries and kindness. It is a stipulation not for toleration merely, but for respectful treatment, for that decency of demeanor which constitutes the charm of social life, for that attention which mitigates evils without reluctance, and that promptitude which administers aid to distress. In the case referred to, where the conduct of the captain had been harsh and indecorous to passengers in his ship, consisting of a family, some of the members of which were females, the learned judge upon proceedings instituted in the Admiralty, decreed 400 dollars' damages against the captain.—Journal of Law.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

EVIDENCE.

14. Where a vessel insured against the perils of the sea on a voyage from the East Indies to Holland, was greatly damaged, and put into the Isle of France, from whence advice was sent to New York to the assured, who forthwith abandoned the vessel to the underwriters there as for a total loss, given notice on the sixth day of July, and in the meantime the master had caused the vessel to be repaired, so that on the twentyeighth day of June she sailed from the Isle of France, being tight, staunch, and strong, bound to a port in Holland, where she subsequently arrived in safety, it was held, although a technical total loss had originally occurred, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover as for such loss, but could recover only for a partial loss. Dickey vs. American Insurance Company, 3 Wend. 658.

15. If a master of a vessel, in the exercise of his legitimate duties as the agents of whom it may concern, converts a total, into a partial loss before abandonment, the fact that the loss is no longer total takes away the right to abandon; and the result is the same where a total loss is converted into a partial loss by the acts of a stranger. Ib.

16. If the vessel is abandoned while the loss continues total, all the intermediate acts of the master are the acts of the underwriters; but if the property be restored before abandonment, the right to abandon is gone, and the acts of the master will be considered the acts of the assured. Ib.

17. While it is doubtful whether the assured will or will not exercise his right of abandonment, the acts of the master cannot destroy the right to abandon. Ib.

18. Where repairs are made by the underwriters or by the master as their agent, and the voyage is not lost, and the vessel arrives in safety, the assured cannot abandon. Ib.

19. It is a well settled rule of American insurance law, that if a vessel is damaged by any of the perils insured against so that the necessary repairs to restore her to her former state, and render her seaworthy will exceed three fourths of her value before the disaster, the owner is not bound to repair, but may abandon as for a total loss. This is usually called an injury to more than half her value, because one third of the expense of repairs is deducted, new for old. Ib.

20. An underwriter is not answerable for a partial loss on memorandum articles, except for general average, unless there is a total loss of the whole, of the particular species, whether the particular articles be shipped in bulk or in separate boxes or packages. Wadsworth vs. Pacific Insurance Company, 4 Wend. 33.

21. In the United States, partial loss and average are understood by commercial men to mean the same thing, and that average other than general includes every loss for which the underwriter is liable, except general average and total loss, which last includes total loss with salvage. Ib.

22. Partial loss includes both general and particular average and the latter term includes all partial losses except general average. Ib.

23. Where the exception in the memorandum clause is broad enough to include other losses besides those arising from the inherent decay of the articles specified, the insurer is entitled to exemption from every risk plainly and explicitly included within the terms of the exception. Ib.

24. An underwriter is bound to know the general course of trade in relation to the voyage and the property which he insures. Where, therefore, it appeared that it was the usual custom in the port of New York, when a vessel laden with hides was detained at quarantine, to send the cargo by lighters to a depot at Brooklyn, and in such transhipment to lade the hides on deck as well as in the hold of the lighter, it was held, that the underwriter could not for that cause object to a recovery. Ib.

25. In a case of a technical total loss of a vessel insured, if no freight pro rata itineris has been earned, or if the expense of sending on the cargo by another vessel will exceed a moiety of the freight agreed upon by the charter-party, it is a technical total loss of the freight which will authorize the assured to abandon: a technical total loss of the vessel involves a loss of the freight. The American Ins. Co. vs. Centre, 4 Wend. 45.

26. A vessel injured by a peril of the sea cannot be abandoned merely because materials to make full repairs cannot be procured at the place where she happens to be; if the vessel is not injured to a moiety of her value, it is the duty of the master to make her seaworthy and to proceed on the voyage, and the underwriter will be bound to furnish a complete indemnity for any additional expense subsequently incurred in completing the repairs. Ib.

27. In making an estimate of the probable expense of the repair of a vessel so as to ascertain whether the injury sustained will authorize an abandonment, the expense is to be estimated with reference to the costs of repairs at the port of necessity; if, however, full repairs cannot be made there, but the vessel can be repaired in part, so as to render her seaworthy, and enable her to pursue her voyage, then, to the probable expense at the port of necessity, it is proper to add the expense of the additional repairs at the place where the vessel would most probably be repaired in full. Ib.

28. The master is not authorized to sell the ship or cargo except in a case of absolute necessity, where he is not in a situation to consult with his owner, and where the preservation of the property makes it necessary for him to act as the agent of whom it may concern. Ib.

29. In England it is held that it is the duty of the master to repair the vessel, unless there be an actual total loss, or he has no means of repairing, and cannot procure any by the hypothecation of the ship or cargo: in this country it is held, the right of the master to sell is more extensive; if there be a technical total loss, and the master has reason to believe that his owner will elect to abandon, he is under no obligation to repair, but may sell the vessel, and such sale does not take away the right of abandonment, or convert a total into a partial loss. Ib.

30. A ship owner, entitled to abandon the vessel by reason of the extent of injury received by her from the perils insured against, cannot be required by a shipper of the cargo to repair for the purpose of sending on the cargo; he can only be required to send it on if another vessel can be procured. Ib.

31. It seems that where a cargo is sent on by another vessel for the benefit of the salvage on the freight, the underwriter on the freight is bound to pay the expense of the transhipment, and the owner or underwriter on the cargo is only chargeable with the extra expense beyond the amount of freight as fixed in the original charter-party. Ib.

32. Whether shippers have a right to demand a return of the goods without paying freight, where a vessel meets with a disaster on the day after sailing, and returns to her port of departure to repair. Quære. Ib.

33. Where an insurance was effected by the owners of five sixths of a cargo of specie to the extent of $90,000, upon their interest in the cargo to the extent of $30,000, and a loss happened, it was held, that they were entitled to recover the whole sum insured, and not merely five sixths thereof. The Pacific Ins. Co. vs. Catlett, 4 Wend. 75.

34. An averment in the declaration that a large quantity, viz: 30,000 Spanish milled dollars, were laden on board the vessel for the contemplated voyage, and that the plaintiffs were 'the owners of and interested in the said specie to a large amount, to wit, the amount of all the money by the said plaintiffs insured thereon,' and that the policy was made on their account and for their sole use and benefit, it was held to be supported by proof that the assured were the owners of five sixths of the $90,000 shipped on board the vessel, and that there was no variance between the proof and the averment, the averment being not of an entire interest in the whole cargo, but of an interest in the cargo to the amount insured thereon. Ib.

35. A sale of the cargo and an investment of the proceeds in other merchandise by the owner of the remaining one sixth of the cargo for the purpose of remittance, he having gone out in the vessel as supercargo, a technical loss having happened and the cargo having been left under his control by the master of the vessel at the port of necessity, does not destroy the right of the other owners who had insured their separate interest in the cargo to abandon the same to the underwriters, if, under the circumstances of the case, it would have been the duty of the master to have made the same investment for the benefit of whom it might concern. Ib.

36. On a policy of insurance entered into in behalf or on account of the owners of a cargo, no one but the owners can sustain an action upon it; where the policy is entered into for whom it may concern, the action may be sustained by any one, although he has but a special interest in the cargo, as by lien, respondentia, or otherwise. In either case, however, it must appear that the policy was made in behalf of the person claiming to recover. Ib.

37. One whose interest was not intended to be insured, cannot claim the benefit of an insurance effected by others, although, by the terms of the policy, his interest would seem to be covered. Ib.

---

INSURANCE COMPANIES.

1. An insurance company may make a valid promissory note, which will be held good until the contrary be shown. Barker vs. Mechanic Fire Insurance Company, 3 Wend. 94.

2. A note by which J. F. as president of an insurance company, promises to pay a sum certain, is not the note of the company, but of the maker alone. Ib.

3. The Utica Insurance Company have a right to invest their surplus funds in loans. But having called in a part of their capital for the express purpose of making loans in a particular way, viz. by the issuing of checks in the shape of bank notes, it was held, that loans thus made are in violation of the restraining act, and that a note taken upon such loan is void. Utica Ins. Co. vs. Cadwell, 3 Wend. 296.

4. The money lent may however be recovered under the common count, and checks drawn, received as money, and duly paid, will be considered money. The recovery, however, in such case, being on the contract as distinguished from the security, an action cannot be sustained against the borrower and his sureties, the sureties not being parties to the contract. Ib.

5. An insurance company, authorized to take and hold securities bona fide pledged to them to secure the payment of debts contracted with them, cannot loan money on the hypothecation of stock and the taking of a note as collateral security for the payment of the loan; when, by the act of their incorporation, they are prohibited from discounting notes. North River Insurance Company vs. Lawrence, 3 Wend. 482.

6. Where a power to loan money in a particular mode is given to a corporation, all other modes are necessarily excluded, and all securities other than those allowed to be taken by the act of incorporation, are void. Ib.

8. A contract for the loan of money made with an incorporated company, as well as the security taken on such loan, is void, if the power to loan money is not expressly given, or necessarily incident to the powers granted to such company by its charter. Beach vs. Fulton Bank, 3 Wend. 573.

---

INTEREST.

1. Interest cannot be charged by forwarding and commission merchants, on items of an account for freight, wharfage, and storage; they are entitled to interest only on cash advances. Trotter vs. Grant, 2 Wend. 413.

2. Instead of allowing interest to their customers on moneys received, it seems they may apply such moneys to the satisfaction of annual balances, unless otherwise directed, and allow interest only on the excess beyond the charges. Ib.

3. An account consisting of items on the part of the plaintiff, and only of credits of payments on the part of the defendants, is an unliquidated running account, which does not carry interest without an agreement either express or implied. Wood vs. Hickok, 2 Wend. 501.

4. The testimony of a witness that it is the uniform practice of grocers to charge interest on goods sold, after ninety days, unless a special agreement to the contrary is made, does not amount to proof of the usage of a particular trade, of which all dealers in that line are bound to take notice, and are presumed to be informed. Ib.

5. It seems that if the custom of a merchant to charge interest after ninety days is known by those who deal with him, or if the length of credit is stated in an account rendered at the sale, an agreement to pay interest may be implied. Ib.

6. In assessing the damages for the breach of a contract, the jury may allow interest by way of damages. Dox vs. Dey, 3 Wend. 356.

7. Interest may in all cases be collected by action of debt on judgment: and where the judgment is rendered on contract, it may be collected by directing its levy upon execution. Sayre vs. Austin, 3 Wend. 496.

8. A merchant or manufacturer whose uniform custom it is to charge interest after ninety days upon articles sold or manufactured by him is allowed to charge interest accordingly to those who are in the habit of dealing with him, they being presumed to know such custom and to acts in reference thereto. M'Allister vs. Reab, 4 Wend. 483.

---

JUDGMENT.

1. A suit cannot be maintained in New York, on a judgment obtained in a justice's court in a sister state, unless the statute organizing such court be shown; if, on the statute being proved, it appears that the subject matter of the suit was within the jurisdiction of the court, and that the proceedings were had in conformity to the statute, the judgment will be entitled to full faith and credit. Thomas vs. Robinson, 3 Wend. 267.

2. The priority to which a judgment in favor of the United States is entitled, does not extend to create a prior lien on real estate; it merely gives a right of prior payment out of the general funds of the debtor in the hands of the assignee. Forsyth vs. Clark, 3 Wend. 637.

---

JUDGMENT AND EXECUTION.

1. An execution was held to be dormant and fraudulent as to a subsequent execution, where the plaintiffs directed a stay of proceedings from March until July, and the sheriff delayed proceedings until December, in consequence of a conversation with them in August, inducing him to expect further directions before proceeding to close the execution; the second execution having come to the hands of the sheriff in October. Benjamin vs. Smith, 4 Wend. 332.

2. The interest in lands of a cestui que use may be sold by execution. Jackson vs. Walker, 4 Wend. 452.

3. It is not necessary, in the return to an execution by virtue of which lands have been sold particularly to describe the land sold; the identity of the property may be shown by parol. Ib.

4. A variance between the judgment and execution being amendable, cannot be taken advantage of on a trial for the recovery of land sold by virtue of the execution. Ib.

5. Where the heir, previous to the death of his ancestor, conveys by deed all his interest in the estate of his ancestor, and there is a judgment against the heir previous to the conveyance on which, after the descent of the property, a sale is had, the purchaser at such sale, and not the grantee under the conveyance, takes the land. Jackson vs. Bradford, 4 Wend. 619.

6. Althougha covenant of warranty would bar by by way estoppel the heir and his issue from setting up title to the estate, such estoppel does not affect the purchaser under a judgment entered previous to the conveyance creating the estoppel. Ib.

7. A sale of the property of a defendant by virtue of a judgment and execution which is satisfied, the purchaser having full knowledge of the fact, it seems, would be considered a nullity, although the defendant assented to the proceedings. Jackson vs. Anderson, 4 Wend. 474.

8. At all the events, the assent of a defendant in an execution that an agent of the plaintiff (between whom and the defendant many equities existed) might become a purchaser at a sheriff's sale, does not render valid a sale and purchase by a third person. Ib.

---

JURY.

1. A challenge to the array will not be allowed, on the ground that in the selection of grand jurors, all persons belonging to a particular fraternity or association were excluded, if those who are returned are unexceptionable, and possess the qualifications required by statute. The People vs. Jewett, 3 Wend. 314.

2. It is good cause of exception to a grand juror, that he has formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt of a party whose case probably will be presented to the consideration of the grand inquest; so also a grand juror's having evinced feelings of hostility towards such party is good cause of exception. But these exceptions must be taken before the indictment is found, and will not afterwards be heard. Ib.

3. A challenge to a juror for principal cause was sustained where the juror had said that he believed the defendant was guilty, although he testified that he had no fixed opinion upon the subject of the defendant's guilt; that he only entertained impressions derived from history and common reports, meaning thereby printed statements in papers, and reports in conversation; that he never heard witnesses to the transaction testify, nor say anything on the subject in question; if the evidence supported the circumstances he had heard, he had a fixed a belief respecting the guilt of the defendant; if these circumstances should be done away by evidence, he should not consider him guilty. The People vs. Mather, 4 Wend. 229.

4. So a juror was held properly excluded, on a challenge to the favor, who testified that he had formed, though he had not expressed an opinion that the defendant was guilty. His opinion was formed upon reports and what he had read. On the trial of a former challenge, he had heard a witness testify respecting the subject in question. His opinion was made up previous to hearing that testimony, but what the witness had stated had tendered to strengthen his opinion. He had read reports of trials, affidavits or statements under oath relating to the same subject. His opinion was made up from reading them and other matters. And the charge of the judge to the triors in this case was approved, in which he instructed them that if they believed that the juror had a fixed opinion, which it would require testimony to remove, he was disqualified, whether that opinion was founded on rumor alone or on rumor and printed statements. Ib.

5. A juror who has formed an opinion of the guilt of the accused is not competent to serve; although he declare that if the circumstances on which his opinion is founded are not supported by proof, his opinion of the guilt of the accused will be removed. Ib.

6. There is no distinction as to the grounds of the opinion formed by the juror of the guilt of the accused: whether it be founded on being an eye witness, or on hearing the testimony of those who were present at the transaction, or whether it be based on rumors, reports, and newspaper publications; in either case it is good cause of challenge. Ib.

7. When the facts on which a challenge rests are disputed, the proper course is to submit the question to triors; but if neither of the parties ask for triors to settle the issue of fact, and they submit their evidence to the judge, and take his determination thereon, they cannot afterwards object to his competence to decide that issue. The production of evidence to the judge without asking for triors will be considered as the substitution of him in the place of triors; and his decision will be treated in like manner as would the decision of triors; and therefore although the determination of the judge should be against the weight of evidence, a new trial will not be granted for that cause when the defendant is acquitted, in analogy to the principle that if on the main question in a criminal case the defendant is found not guilty, there cannot be a new trial. Ib.

8. Where an accused party waived his right to object to a juror, against whom good cause of challenge existed on his part, it was held, that the public prosecutor could not insist upon having the juror excluded, under an agreement that all should be considered as challenged by both parties. Ib.

---

ENGLISH CASES.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

De Montort vs. Saunders and Co.

This was an action on a bill of exchange, dated February, 1829, for 600*l.* drawn by Saunders and White, of the Mauritius on Saunders, Brothers and Co., of London, made payable to Rugier de la Gene, accepted by the London house, and indorsed by the payee to the plaintiff.

Mr Steers having opened the case for the plaintiff,

Mr Brougham, for the defendants, stated that a plea in abatement had been pleaded, and that it was his duty to commence in support of the affirmative of that plea. For the present the defendants did not deny their liability in the abstract, but they denied that they were liable, except along with others. In other words, they said that they had partners who were not sued as joint defendants, and that this was fatal to the action. It had been decided by Chief Justice Gibbs, in the Common Pleas, that where a partner was omitted, even although that partner should be dormant, and the holder of the bill had no reasonable grounds to suppose that there was any such partner, the action could not be supported. It was true that Lord Tenterden had subsequently overruled that case to a certain extent; for his Lordship held that, if a man held himself out to the world as carrying on business alone, and the holder of a bill on him had no reasonable ground to suppose that he had a partner; or if two or more partners carried on business under a certain firm, consisting of persons who alone were held out to the world as forming the firm, and the holder of a bill on them had no notice of any other partner, then neither he nor they could support a plea in abatement, by seting up a dormant partner. This decision had been acquiesced in; but it did not apply to this case, for by the very terms of the bill, 'Saunders, Brothers and Co.,' the plaintiff had reasonable grounds to conclude that there were other partners in the firm, and if he had chosen to put the question he would have been told who these partners were. It might be said, perhaps, that this was not a kind of defence much to be favored; but, in this case, the defendants, from some temporary embarrassments, had made an arrangement with their creditors for time, and payment by instalments, and had obtained a letter of license in the meantime, which the plaintiff did not choose to sign, and the defendants thought themselves bound in honor, and in justice to their other creditors, to set up this defence.

After evidence had been heard on each side and Mr Campbell addressed the jury for the plaintiff,

Lord Tenterden—The question for the jury was, whether the plaintiff had reasonable grounds to suppose that there was any other partner in the firm than Saunders and Brothers. It was said that the words 'and Co.' were notice, but these words alone could not be considered as notice, for it was quite common—whether proper or not was another question—to add these words 'and Co.' where there were no partners except those named. The jury had heard the letter read which had been written by the defendant to the plaintiff's solicitor, and it was for them to say, looking at that letter, the words 'and Co.' and all the circumstances of the case as it now appeared before them, whether the plaintiff had reasonable grounds to suppose that the defendants alone constituted the firm, and took the bill on their credit. If he had reasonable ground to think so, and took the bill on their credit, then, in conformity to a decision of his, which had been acquiesced in, their verdict ought to be for the plaintiff. If they thought that the plaintiff had notice, and had not given credit to the defendants alone, then they would find for the defendant.

Verdict for the plaintiff, for principal and interest—633*l.* 16*s.*

---

ROLLS COURT—JANUARY.

Gill vs. Shelly.

In this case a testatrix had left a certain fund to 'children.' It appeared that of the only children whom she could have contemplated one was legitimate and the other illegitimate. The question in the case was whether the latter should take equally with the former.

Mr Bacon contended with considerable ingenuity that unless some intimation was given in a will that illegitimate children had been intended by the testator, evidence could not be received to prove such an intention and that all property devised to 'children' should go to those alone who were legitimate, or even to one as in this case.

His Honor considered it to be a general rule that any person was at liberty to give evidence to prove that he came under a description of legatees. In this case it appeared that the testatrix must have been aware that there only existed an illegitimate and legitimate child—her intention in using the word 'children' could therefore not be doubted. She must have intended both and consequently the illegitimate child should take equally with the legitimate one.

---

COURT OF CHANCERY.

The Lord Chancellor and Sir Edward Sugden. The Court of Chancery has become a place of public amusement since Lord Brougham has presided in it. First, there is the entertainment of seeing how the Chancellor looks, which the members of the Mechanics' Institute, who consider his Lordship as belonging to themselves, enjoy daily; for these honest people drop into the Court to gaze at the Judge with much the same feeling that a girl opens a drawer and looks at her doll to gratify the complacency of possession, and to be assured of its safety. The second entertainment is derived from the scenes which are now of frequent occurrence in that once grave place. Lord Brougham carries something of the vivacity of debate into the Court, and a leading practitioner carries a considerable portion of the irritability of disappointment into it; the result is, some smart altercation, with much petulence on the one hand, and a remorseless dry sarcasm on the other.

To employ a trite but expressive phrase, Sir E. Sugden has never been 'right in his mind' since Lord Brougham ascended the Woolsack. Loss of place, together with that circumstance, seems to have utterly spoiled the learned gentleman's temper, and he bears himself as one crossed in love of office. When Mr Brougham took leave of the Bar it was remarked that Sir E. Sugden alone neglected to rise and acknowledge his parting salutes, as though he would express, 'I will not rise to you, whose rise has stopped my rising.' The spleen has not confined itself to dumb show, it has broken out in words, as spleen will do, on a very slight occasion.

While delivering a speech, Sir E. Sugden obseved that the Chancellor was writing and he stopped. The Lord Chancellor desired Sir Edward to proceed.

Sir E. Sugden replied that he could not, unless he were in possession of the attention of the Court.

His Lordship said he was giving his full attention to everything that was stated, and of that he alone was competent to judge; he was taking a note of something said by the Learned Counsel, and he should choose his own time for making his note; papers might be put before him for signature, but signing his name was merely mechanical, and did not at all withdraw his attention. If a Judge were not at liberty to do anything merely mechanical while Counsel were addressing him, the business of the Court must be suspended every time he blew his nose, or took a pinch of snuff. If one of his predecessors had given such intense attention as was expected, he would not now appear with so smiling a countenance.

Sir E. Sugden sat down.

The Lord Chancellor inquired if he had anything more to state in reply.

Sir Edward Sugden declined to say anything further.

The Chancellor's illustrations of snuff-taking and nose-blowing were, perhaps, too farcical for his place, and for the respect which a Judge should show for a member of the Bar, even when he is in error; but the conduct of Sir Edward was provokingly captious, and obviously proceeded from a settled purpose to take and make offence: It is notorious that Lord Eldon was in the habit of carrying on all the correspondence of State intrigue when presiding in the Court of Chancery, and purporting to be hearing the statements and arguments of counsel; and Mr Sugden never found any fault with the practice in those days, or stopped till his Lordship's attention should be disengaged. After barristers had been addressing the Court for hours, without making any impression on Lord Eldon's mind or ears, he would declare he must take home the papers to look into the case, without which proceeding, indeed, it was physically certain he could know nothing about it. The large full-bottomed wigs worn by the Judges would seem as if they had been devised for the protection of their organs of hearing on these occasions. Why Sir E. Sugden should, in the long time of Eldon, have been patient of scribbling, and letter-reading, and note-despatching on the Bench, and so impatient of any employment of the pen by Chancellor Brougham is only to be explained by the supposition that disappointment induces displeasure in the one instance, as expectation causes content in the other.

The Whig journals have teemed with zealous vindications of the Lord Chancellor, (for the zealous vindication of a Lord Chancellor is always a sweet and promising office, and nothing can more agreeably fill up the time of an unemployed barrister,) and fierce attacks on Sir E. Sugden, whom, according to liberal practice, they have not failed to reproach with the humbleness of his origin, or 'meanness of birth,' as it is on such occasions termed by the railers against prejudices. What the vocation of Sir E. Sugden's father had to do with the affair, is not easy to see. Lord Eldon did not come of high degree, and yet he was the very pink of temper and courtesy. If it were clear that humble birth was the cause of splenetic conduct, it would not be unreasonable to advert to a man's descent when he gives way to ill-temper, or even to call legitimacy in question when the faults of low-breeding were manifested by a person of rank or family; but the fact, that men unhonored with ancestry cannot behave themselves decently, is not yet established as a certain truth. The burliest of patriots, the great town-bull of Reformers, the bruin Radical of the day, the 'Radical' of the 'Times,' who rages and roars against the aristocracy by the hour or the column, concluded some charges against the Marchioness of C——, with a moral reflection, referring her alleged meanness of conduct to her ungentle blood! And this is liberality, aye, and consistency too! In one column it is proved that the aristocracy are all greediness, and it is asserted in another that rapacity is attributable to plebeian descent! Thus it is that the professed foes of illiberal prejudices are ready to turn those very prejudices against persons they desire to wound. Oh that people who take the name of liberal would wear it with more credit! A better name there is not in the vocabulary; in the Latin,* it implied more than the word gentleman, and it should comprehend every good quality belonging to education and accomplishment.—Monthly Commentary.

---

* I marvel that the lovers of coincidences have never remarked that liber, the book, comes from liber, the tree; as malum the fruit, and evil, came from the tree of knowledge; and that libertas, liberty, proceeds from the book which is now everywhere disseminating its spirit. There are those who would push the remark to Liber Bacchus, and make a bad point on the intoxication of knowledge.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1831.

SUPREME COURT—SUFFOLK.

MARCH TERM—1831.

Clarke vs. Paine.

PLEA IN ABATEMENT.
Indorsement of Writs.

This was sci. fa. against Paine as indorser of an original writ. The original Plaintiff was described as of New Orleans, and the sci. fa. was indorsed A. B. by 'J. E. Smith.'

It was contended that the sci. fa. was not propperly indorsed, it not being indorsed with the christian and surname of the indorser. Two questions were considered.

First, whether a sci. fa. was an original writ within the meaning of the statute.

Second, whether the indorsment as made in this case was sufficient.

1. The Court remarked that according to the English practice such a writ would not be there considered as original. But there were reasons for regarding it otherwise here. It might be contended that wherever a new party is introduced, the writ should be considered as original. Such construction would seem to be necessary to secure the rights of all parties.

2. As to the other point, the Court had no doubt that the writ was well indorsed. The object of the statute was to require such an indorsement as to leave no difficulty in identifying the person. If the indorsement was in the usual way of signing the name, or if it was so signed that a jury might find the fact of the signature, it was sufficient.

There may be cases where the party has no christian name. Such a case had occurred in the Common Pleas. The plaintiff sued, and indorsed his writ by the name of Cæsar. That was his only legal name.

The court examined the early statutes, in relation to the indorsement of writs.

The existing statute was little more than a re-enactment of the old laws, with some slight variations or additions. The Court would look to the object and design of the original acts. There object was mainly to create a liability against the attorney and to provide a remedy in case of groundless suits. The same was the object of the revised acts. The same principles are introduced, the mode only is varied.

The christian and surname are required merely to designate with more certainty the person. The surname alone might in many cases, be doubtful. The statute requires the writ to be so indorsed as to bind the indorser. It is always a question of fact whether the indorser has so signed the writ as to bind him. The case in 3 Pickering, was in point. The indorsment in this case was held sufficient. The plea adjudged bad.

---

The Horseman's Manual, or a Treatise on the Law of Warranty relating to Horses. By R. S. SURTEES.

This is a small Treatise of less than 150 pages upon a subject of considerable interest to gentlemen in, as well as out of the Profession. The law of warranty and purchase of horses, although, to a very numerous class of citizens, highly important and frequently perplexing to Judges and Lawyers, has received but little attention from bookmakers and compilers. No attempt, of which we are aware, of any merit, has been made, with the exception of the above, which has just appeared from the London Press, to collect and arrange in form the various and somewhat conflicting opinions, which are scattered through the Reports.

In no kinds of traffic are greater impositions practised than in the purchase and sale of the horse, and, although the law has sufficiently guarded the rights of the parties, in this respect, as well as others, the remedies, in practice, are frequently found inadequate and defective.

With us especially, in New England, it is rather a matter of course to pocket a loss sustained in a bargain of this kind, through misrepresentation or gross fraud, in preference to going before a court with a 'horse cause.' If a case of the kind gets there, ten to one, it will be tried by a panel of horse jockeys or by Judges, who have never had anything further to do with the animal, than to get soundly cheated in purchasing one for family use, and to be compelled to ride the circuit by the light of a 'buck eye,' upon limbs crippled by spavin and string halt; or a body worn out by 'roaring' and 'glanders.'

The little work before us appears to be well arranged and the subject judiciously discussed. It cannot fail to be a convenient and useful manual to gentlemen who deal in matters of sale and warranty themselves, or who advise others touching the same.

The following authorities or cases are cited and commented upon in the course of the work.

Adams v. Richards, 2. H. Bl. 573. Alexander v. Comber, 1. H. Bl. 20. Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Camp. 555. Bayley v. Merrel, Cro. El. 339. Baglehole v. Walters, 3 Camp. 154. Broennenburg v. Haycock, Holt, N. P. C. 630. Best v. Osborne, 1 R. and M. 290. Basset v. Collis, 2 Camp. 523. Bloxsome v. Williams, 1 Carr, N. P. 294. Bexwell v. Christie, Cowper, 395. Buchanan v. Parnshaw, 2 T. R. 745. Brown v. Staton, 2 Chitt. 353. Coltherd v. Puncheon, 2 Dowl. and Ry. 10. Chandeler v. Lopus, Cro. Jac. 4. Curtis v. Hannay, 3. Esp. 83. Caswell v. Coare, 1 Taunt. 567. Conolly v. Parsons, 3 Ves. Jr, 625. Dyer v. Hargrave, 10 Ves. 507. Dunlap v. Waugh, Peake N. P. C. 167. Drury v. Defontaine, 1 Taunton, 131. Eaves v. Dixon, 2 Taunton, 343. Elton v. Brogden, 4 Camp. 281. Ellis v. Mortimer, 1 New Rep. 257. Earle v. Patterson, Mss. Fielder v. Starkin, 1 H. Bl. 17. Fenn v. Harrison, 3 T. R. 707. Fennel v. Ridler, 8 D. and R. 204. Geddes v. Pennington, 5 Dow, 159. Garment v. Barrs, 2 Esp. 673. Howard v. Castle, 6 T. R. 642. Hands v. Burton, 9 East. 349. Helyear v. Hawke, Esp. 72. Hurgh v. Gray, Mss. Jones v. Cowley, 6 D. R. 533. Joliff v. Bendall, 1 R. and M. 136. Lewis v. Cosgrave, 2 Taunt. 2. Mellish v. Motteux, Peake N. P. C. 156. Mackenzie v. Hancock, 1 R. and M. 436. Mesnard v. Aldridge, 3 Esp. 271. Onslow v. Eames, 2 Starkie, 81. Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East. 323. Pickering v. Busk, 15 East. 45. Richardson v. Brown, 1 Bing. 349. Skrine v. Elmore, 2 Camp. 407. Shillitoe v. Claridge, 2 Chitty R. 425. Taunton v. Adams, Mss. Wallace v. Woodgate. 1 C. & P. 575.

---

PASSENGER LAW.

A new Passenger Law has been made by the Legislature of Massachusetts, which, we fear, will be vexatious to [illegible] and to individuals, if executed according to its letter. There is a dispensing power, and if this can be legally exercised before the arrival of vessels, in establishing rules or exemptions, the apprehended inconveniences may be obviated. The act, as it stands, applies to vessels coastwise, (steam boats not excepted,) as well as from foreign ports, and says no Captain shall permit an alien passenger to land till he (the Captain) shall have delivered to the Mayor and Aldermen of the city, or the Selectmen of a town, (at which place soever he may arrive,) a list of his passengers and shall forthwith together with the owner or consignee of the vessel, give bonds, to the amount of $200 for each passenger, to indemnify the State for any expense it may be put to for said passenger for three years; or these bonds may be commuted for $10 each passenger. But these bonds may be dispensed with when there shall appear to be no hazard of cost to the Commonwealth. The question arises whether each vessel or case is required to be adjudicated after arrival.

Another section says if any Captain shall land or permit any passenger to land contrary to this act, the master, owner and consignee shall each forfeit $200—one half to the informer, and the other to the State.

The object of the law is good. It is to keep out paupers. But it may cause trouble, without accomplishing what is intended—as we may be thronged with paupers, coming by land.

The act is to go into operation on the first of July, and there will be time, previous to that date, for persons concerned in the coasting and foreign trade to consider of its provisions, and whether it can be enforced without delay, detriment, expense, and trouble.—Traveller.

---

SUPERIOR COURT.

Charles H. Russell and William H. Russell vs. Samuel Swartwout, Collector of the Port or New York. This was an action brought by the plaintiffs to recover an excess of duty paid on certain Goods imported from England in October, 1830. It appears that the Goods were a new article, fabricated entirely from worsted, under the title of sealiotes. The defendant contended that under the tariffs of 1824 and '28 these goods, although made of worsted yarn were chargeable with the woollen duty—that is of 45 per cent on the minimum of $2,50 the square yard. For the plaintiffs it was contended that the duty should be charged as on worsted stuffs at the tariff of 25 per cents ad valorem. The Goods were detained from the plaintiffs until they paid the duty claimed, and they gave notice when paying it that they would sue for the sum overcharged, which amounted on this package of Goods to $102—the amount charged was above $200. The Judge charged the Jury, that if the articles were worsted stuff goods and would have been considered so before the tariff of 1824 or 1828, they should give a verdict for the plaintiffs. The goods would not came under the duty merely because they recently come into use. The Jury without leaving their seats, returned a verdict for the plaintiffs.—N. Y. Courier.

---

Imprisonment for debt.—The law, abolishing Imprisonment for Debt, as regards females, and for all sums under $10, as respects males—may be considered an experimental act. If it proves salutary, or if it causes no losses, troubles, and no impositions in the community, it will probably be extended after there has been time to ascertain the effects.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIII. for March, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Moral Education. 1. The Library of Education, edited by Wm. Russell, vol. 1; containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education, by John Locke,' and 'A Treatise on Education, by John Milton.'

2. Account of the Edinburgh Sessional School, and the other Parochial Institutions for Education, established in that city in 1812; with Strictures on Education in general. By John Wood, Esq.

II. Prison Discipline 1. Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

2. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

III. Collection of Psalms and Hymns. A Collection of Psalms of Hymns for Christian Worship.

IV. Meaning of Αἰων. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays on several words relating to Future Punishment.

V. Works of the Rev. Robert Hall. The Works of the Rev. Robert Hall, A. M. Minister of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, England. First complete edition, with a brief Memoir of the author.

VI. Stuart and Whitman. 1. A Letter to William E. Channing, D. D. on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Moses Stuart, Professor of Sacred Literature in the Theological Seminary, Andover.

2. Two Letters to the Rev. Moses Stuart, on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College, February 3, 1831. March 19.

---

POPULAR JOURNAL OF MUSIC. THE HARMONICON, a Monthly Journal of Music—No. 1. just received by GRAY & BOWEN. Each monthly number will contain—

I. An Original Biography of some distinguished Composer or Performer. II. Interesting Correspondence, or Original Dissertations, on Subjects connected with the Science. III. Detailed Accounts of the Opera, Concerts, and other Musical Performances of the past month. IV. Copious Extracts from the Foreign Musical Journals, giving the reader the latest information of the Progress of the art, and its Professors throughout Europe. V. Liberal and unbiassed Accounts of all Musical Works as they appear. VI. Six or seven pieces of Music, Vocal and Instrumental, English and Foreign, selected with care, and printed with a beauty and accuracy that may safely challenge competition.

Musical Families and Societies, subscribing to the Harmonicon, will be furnished monthly with (in addition to the literary contents of each number), on an average, Six Entire Pieces of Vocal and Instrumental Music, at a price not exceeding the common charge for a single piece, when printed in the usual way. March 19.

---

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVII. for January.

CONTENTS.

Art I. Popular Defensive Force. II. Lesson's History of Man. III. Hannibal's Passage of the Alps. IV. Webster's American Dictionary. V. India and China Trade. VI. Character of George IV. VII. Scotch Parliamentary Reform. VIII. Heiress of Bruges. IX. Maxwell. X. Belgian Revolution. XI. J. P. Cobbett's Italy. XII. Bruce's Travels. XIII. Machine-Breaking. XIV. Tennyson's Poems. XV. Basil Barrington and Friends. XVI. The Wellington Administration. XVII. European Revolution; List of Books, &c. March 19.

---

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

No. 15, North American Series.

This number contains articles on Screw Cutting; Locomotive Carriages; finding Velocity of Ships at sea; New Metallic Alloy for pivot Watches; Reflections on the Decline of Science in England; Improved marine Steam Engine Boiler; Claxton's Air Pump; Almanacks for 1831, &c, &c, with a great number of engravings.

Subscriptions received as above at $3 75 per annum. March 19.

---

GRAY AND BOWEN, have just received, No. 1, of SURGICAL ANATOMY OF THE ARTERIES, with plates and illustrations. By Nathan R. Smith, M. D. Professor of Surgery in the University of Maryland. January 1.

---

SPLENDID BIBLE. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

---

WHITMAN'S LETTERS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, 'Two Letters to Rev. Moses Stuart,' on Religious Liberty, occasioned by his Letter to Rev. Wm. E. Channing. By Bernard Whitman. Second edition. March 19.

---

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

---

PARLEY'S ASIA. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, Peter Parley's Tales about Asia, with a Map and numerous Engravings. This is designed as a fourth volume in a series of Geographical and Historical Tales for Children. Tales of America, Europe, and Africa, have already been published. Tales of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, Tales of the Sea, and Tales of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, will complete the series. These three last are in a state of forwardness.

GRAY & BOWEN, have just published, TALES OF TRAVELS West of the Mississippi, with a Map and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. This volume is the first of a series which is intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.
Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.
Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.
Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.
Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.
Peter Parley's Geography for Children. Jan. 1.

---

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, an APPENDIX to the American Almanac, for the year 1831, being the latter part of the fiftyfifth, and the beginning of the fiftysixth year of the Independence of the United States.

Extract from the Preliminary Observations on the Astronomical Department of the American Almanac.

The Appendix is intended to answer all the essential purposes of a Nautical Almanac, and the insertion therein of the distances of the Moon from the Planets, and of the proportional logarithm of the difference between the distances, it is hoped, will be found an improvement on any Almanac hitherto published. Jan. 1.

---

HINTON'S UNITED STATES. GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

---

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The North American Review, No. LXXI. for April, 1831.

---

NEWSPAPER AND PERIODICAL AGENCY. EICHBAUN & NORVELL, Booksellers, Nashville, Tennessee, have, in addition to their regular business, established a GENERAL AGENCY for the procuring of subscribers to, and the collecting of debts due to Newspapers and Periodicals throughout the United States. To this business great attention will be paid, and the instructions of Publishers strictly attended to. The city in which they are established contains a population of six thousand inhabitants, and as the citizens have ever shown a disposition to encourage meritorious publications, with the aid of Agents, the publishers of Newspapers, Magazines, &c, might obtain a respectable number of subscribers. Refer to GRAY and BOWEN, Booksellers, Boston. March 19.

---

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

---

WORKING MEN'S PARTY. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington Street, A Lecture on the Working Men's Party, delivered before the Charlestown Lyceum, October 6, 1830. By Edward Everett. Second Edition.

---

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

---

GIRL'S OWN BOOK. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

---

LIBRARY OF EDUCATION. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN,

The Library of Education, Vol. I.—Containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education.' By John Locke, and a 'Treatise of Education,' by John Milton, with an Appendix, containing Locke's Memoranda on Study. Edited by Wm. Russell, late editor of the Journal of Education.

Extract from the Preface.

'The present volume is intended to form one of a series of standard treatises on the subject of Education. The work now commenced will, it is hoped, form a useful source of information to parents and teachers; furnishing to the latter a sort of professional library, to which individuals may resort for assistance in the labor of instruction, and offering to the former an aid to the formation of just and extensive views of the whole scope of education, as well as a preparation for cooperating with instruction, in their exertions for the mental advancement of the young.' Jan. 1.

---

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1831. NO. XXXVII.

SPENCE AND BURKE ON CIVIL LAW.

An Inquiry into the Origin of the Laws and Political Institutions of Modern Europe, particularly those of England. By George Spence, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, 8vo. 1826.

A Historical Essay on the above Laws and the Government of Rome, designed as an Introduction to the Study of the Civil Law. By Edmund Plunkett Burke, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. The second edition, revised, 8vo. 1830.

The press of contributions on subjects of more general interest than civil law, has hitherto prevented us from fulfilling our intention of touching upon it more fully; and the same circumstance must, we fear, be our excuse for introducing to our readers the two works, whose titles stand at the head of this article, with little more than a short account of their contents. We are, however, in some degree reconciled to the necessity which compels us to notice them thus briefly, by the persuasion that, as both of them have been for some time before the public, they are in all probability already in the hands of those who are aware of the general importance of the matters on which they treat, or of their close connexion with the history of our own legislation and jurisprudence.

Having been engaged some years since, Mr Spence tells us, in a translation of the Code Napoleon, 'he was induced in consequence to look attentively into the civil law of the Romans, where he found that a great proportion of the doctrines of the common law of England, even many of those which are purely artificial, were to be found 'in the Institutes, the Pandects, the Code and the Novels. This induced him to study the civil and criminal code of the Romans with some minuteness, and to compare the political and judicial institutions of modern Europe, and of our own country in particular, with those of ancient Rome, in order to discover to what extent the former might be traced from the latter, their venerable and classical originals.' In pursuance of the plan traced out by him for this inquiry, he has divided his work into two parts. The first contains a general sketch of the colonial policy of the Romans, and of the government, military as well as civil, of their provinces. The second, comprising three books, is devoted, 1. to a popular summary of the Roman law; 2. an account of the institutions of the Germans; and 3. a view of the principal modifications introduced into those institutions in consequence of the subsequent connexion of the German nations with the Empire. As the author has apologised in his preface for the defects of method which he is aware to be found in his book, we shall not enter into any criticism of this mode of dividing the subject. We shall content ourselves with informing our readers that the execution of what may properly be called the last part, (namely the second and third books of the second part, which form considerably more than half of the work,) is decidedly inferior to the remainder. We are far from wishing to convey an impression that in this as well as in the first portion, Mr Spence has not displayed a degree of research and industry really surprising in a gentleman so extensively engaged, as he is well-known to be, in the active and practical duties of his profession. But the obstacles to be encountered in the discussion of all that belongs to the legislation and the civil polity of the middle ages, have been stumbling blocks to so many even of the most acute and laborious antiquarians, that our author may well console himself for having been betrayed into occasional inaccuracies in this department of his work. Indeed it is one so beset with difficulty, that nothing short of the undivided energy of a penetrating intellect, assisted by a large store of a peculiarly and almost revoltingly abstruse species of learning, can have any chance of unravelling its intricacies. It is not once in a century that the qualities of acute discrimination, copious knowledge, unwearied patience, and assiduous application are united in one man, as they confessedly are in the first legal antiquarian of our times, Savigny; and perhaps the whole catalogue of eminent specimens of literary research, can produce nothing superior to his history of the Roman law during the middle ages. This work, Mr Spence, as he himself informs us (p. 212,) and as may easily be gathered from text, has had no opportunity of consulting. Could he have foreseen that a translation of it was so shortly to appear in our own language, we are of opinion that he would have suspended the publication of his inquiries until he had perused it, and that, having perused it he would have been convinced of the uselessness of attempting to glean any thing from a subject so completely exhausted by the labors of the father of the present historical school. If we are right in this opinion, or if Mr Spence will accept our advice in this matter, he will not fail to suppress this portion of his book in a subsequent edition, and publish the remaining part (up to p. 214,) entirely by itself, with such alterations and amendments as his own reading and reflection will doubtless have suggested to him. The public will thus be in possession of a work much wanted by those who are beginning the study of the civil law in this country; namely a brief and concise manual in English, of its leading doctrines, together with such general information as to its history, as is necessary for a correct knowledge of the system these doctrines compose.

Mr Spence's present plan has of course restricted his historical disquisitions respecting the civil law of the Romans within a very short space. This subject is treated at greater length in the work which stands second at the head of this article, and of which we now proceed to give a brief account.

Mr Burke's essay comprises seven chapters, in which he successively treats, first, of the constitution of Rome previous to the establishment of the empire; second, of the Roman legislation during the same period; third, of Pontifical law; fourth, of Prætorian law; fifth, of the jurisconsults and their influence; sixth, of the constitution under the emperors; seventh, of the imperial jurisprudence. This classification which so far as we know is original, appears to possess very considerable advantages over that which has been most usually adopted in the histories of the Roman law with which we are acquainted, namely a chronological arrangement (or nearly so) of the different subjects. Indeed we are so far partial to the method adopted in the work before us that we are by no means sure we could not wish it to be carried still further, and to see the first chapter united with the sixth, as well as the second with the seventh; so as to exhibit, in one unbroken view, the entire history of the constitution, and, in another, that of the jurisprudence and legislation, without regard to the marked difference usually supposed to exist between everything that relates to law and government under the republic and under the empire; which difference, by the way, as the author has found occasion to show, is in many respects imaginary. This change would be very easily effected, as it would require little more than an alteration of titles and divisions; which we ought not to refrain from observing, is a sufficient proof that the apparent want of unity exists more in form than in spirit.

One very essential advantage which the author has obtained by preferring an analytical to a chronological arrangement, is the opportunity of introducing reflections and observations, which, whatever their intrinsic merit, might often appear little better than ill-timed interruptions, had he given his work the form of a continuous register or catalogue of facts. In short, he has been enabled to aim at a higher mark than that of the mere chronicler, and has thus succeeded in producing a work which may be read as well for pleasure as for instruction—a species of praise we heartily wish it was oftener in our power to bestow. As we have said so much, we think it but justice to ourselves as well as to the author to support our opinion by one or two quotations which, however, must be of a length better suited to our limits than our inclination. The chapter on Pontifical Law opens with this passage:—

'Of all the numerous privileges which the original constitution of Rome has reserved to the patricians, there was not one more important than the exclusive right of being eligible to the offices of the priesthood. Among a people ignorant and unenlightened as were the founders of the state, religion and government are ever so closely connected, that the care of both necessarily devolves on the same persons. The men, who are too ignorant to comprehend, or too indocile to obey, the most salutary laws enforced by beings of their own nature, will cheerfully and reverently submit to any restraint, however rigorous or unjust, which they believe to be imposed by a supernatural power; and the history of every uncultivated people will prove that, whatever may be the nominal form of their government, almost the whole of the real authority is exercised by the priesthood. This, however, is an evil which the progress of civilization, and of knowledge gradually counteract; and the share which the officers of religion bear by right of their office, in the government of a nation, may generally be taken as an estimate of the degree of perfection that government has attained. The Gauls and the Britons have been ruled by their Druids; they were unlettered savages. Europe has submitted to the will of a pontiff; but it was in an age of darkness and ignorance. One of the first efforts produced by the revival of knowledge was a struggle to throw off the temporal yoke of ecclesiastical authority; and modern policy has effected no greater improvement than an entire separation of civil from religious government.

'This was a point to which the Romans never completely arrived. The degree of political importance attached to the office of sovereign pontiff may be partly appreciated from the fact, that the emperors continued to retain it for themselves, long after they had forsworn the religion to which it belonged. It is worthy of remark, however, that, notwithstanding their influence and their power, the priesthood of ancient Rome never claimed an exemption from the laws which governed the rest of the commuuity. The pontiffs were subject, like other citizens, to the notice of the censors; and in some cases could not refuse to obey even a summons from the tribunes. Cicero himself was a member of the college of augurs; but his quality of priest availed him nothing against the votes of the people, when they decreed his banishment. And this is far from being a solitary instance. For a body of men to enjoy the protection and the benefits of a country's laws, without submitting to their control, was an anomaly in government, reserved for the people of darker ages.' p. 111.

On the subject of the change of the government from a republic to an empire, we extract the following passage:—

'The revolution, however, that was thus effected in the constitutions was not so violent or so abrupt as the transition from a republic to an absolute government might naturally be imagined. The fate of Julius Cæsar was a warning to his successor that, however indifferent the citizens might be regarding the spirit of the old constitution, they would not easily tolerate an open violation of its forms. Accordingly, the outward semblance of the republican government was preserved, even to the minutest particulars. The power of Augustus was not inherent in his title of emperor, which had been frequently bestowed on the republican generals; which was often conferred as a military dignity, even after the change of the government; and which, as Taylor justly observes, would rather remind the citizens of the success of their arms, than the loss of their liberty. It was by uniting in his own person the offices of consul, of censor, of prætor, of sovereign pontiff, in short, of every considerable magistrature in the state, that he became the absolute master of Rome. There was no sudden creation of new charges, or abolition of established customs. Could the shades of Cato or of Brutus have been recalled from the tomb, they might have indulged the idea that their fondest wishes had been fulfilled; that their country had regained its freedom. They would have beheld the consuls preceded by their lictors; they would have witnessed the meeting of the senate; they would even have seen the comitia convened, and the tribunes of the people present at their debates. This pageantry could scarcely deceive the more enlightened citizens: but those who were clear-sighted enough to pierce the flimsy veil thrown over the nakedness of despotism, wanted the courage to tear it off; while the many, who seldom look farther than the surface, were deluded by the specious mockery, and mistook the shadow for the substance of their former liberty.' p. 203.

A part of the concluding paragraph of the work, relative to the adoption of the civil law among the modern nations of Europe, is all that we can afford space to insert:

'It was as a collection of written reason, the most flattering appellation a body of law can receive, that the civil law of Rome forced its way into the favor of the very small portion of the community which, at the time of this discovery, was competent to understand the language in which it was written, or to appreciate its merits. The regulations that had maintained the order and harmony of society in Rome, were found to be equally capable of producing the same effects in France, Germany, or in modern Italy; and their intrinsic value was enhanced by their practical utility. It is not true, therefore, that motives of personal interest, or of party spirit, led to their adoption by the different governments of Europe. The nation among whom they had originated was no more: neither the majesty of her name, nor the terror of her arms, could longer inspire veneration, or enforce submission; yet her laws were respected and obeyed. Even now, ages after the downfal of the Roman empire, after every trace of its dominion has been obliterated, its jurisprudence still retains an authority, which will endure so long as the blessings of order and civilization shall continue to be held dear.

'Our admiration of the dazzling achievements performed by this once mighty people, can never fail to be alloyed by the reflection, that the effects of such achievements, transitory as they are, can be purchased only at an immense expense of human crime, and human misery; but their civil wisdom, which is immortal, has conferred inestimable benefits on mankind, and the chief existing monument of it, their jurisprudence, is unquestionably the most honorable, as well as the most lasting record of their former greatness.' p. 297.—Law Magazine.

LIABILITY

OF OWNERS AND MASTERS OF VESSELS FOR THE LOST PROPERTY OF PASSENGERS.

The following case, in relation to the above subject, which came before the Supreme Court of Louisiana, is taken from the New Orleans Commercial Intelligencer.

H. R. Denis for the absent heirs of Malpica, &c., Appellee, vs Captain M'Kown, and the owner of the ship Belle, appelants.

Appeal from the Parish Court of the Parish and City of New Orleans.

J. Porter delivered the opinion of the Court.

This action is instituted to recover from Mc Kown, Captain, and Curell, Owner of the Ship Belle, the sum of $7378, which the petition alleges, the deceased, a passenger in the vessel aforesaid, brought on board of her on a voyage from Vera Cruz to Habana, and which it further alleges, the defendants refuse to deliver, though requested to do so.

The proceedings against the captain, appear to have proceeded no further than to bring him into Court: against the owner, they have been carried on to final judgment. The latter, in his answer, acknowledges the ownership of the vessel, and the voyage, but alleges, that during its progress a mutiny broke out on board, and that the passengers taking the control of the ship compelled the Captain to land them on the Spanish Main. It avers, the defendant is not responsible for the money and effects of the passengers who died, because they were taken possession of by the friends of the deceased, or by the mutinous passengers; and it further affirms that if the property did not come into the hands of the captain, officers or crew of the vessel, the defendant is not responsible.

The Court below, after hearing a great deal of contradictory testimony, gave judgment against the defendant for $6862, from which judgment he appealed.

Without noticing the evidence in detail, its discrepances, and the reasons which induce us to come to the conclusion we are about to state, we think it establishes—That the deceased, Malpica, came on board the ship Belle at Vera Cruz as a passenger to the Havana, and brought on board with him a sum of money equal in amount to that for which the inferior Court gave judgment, that no freight was paid for it, nor any notice that it formed part of his effects, communicated to the Captain. That after the vessel was out some days, Malpica died; that an inventory was made of his effects and property, in which the money was included; that the captain assisted at the counting of the money, but refused to sign the inventory; that he took possession of the trunk, and placed the money in the care of another passenger who did not take it with him when he debarked on the Spanish Main; that there was no mutiny on board, nor any act of the passengers which prevented the captain discharging all obligations imposed on him by law as commander of the vessel in relation to property situated as this was, and finally, that the evidence furnishes a strong presumption the captain converted the money to his own use.

On these facts the plaintiff contends the owner is responsible for the acts of the Master; and he has especially relied, in support of this position, on the commercial laws of Spain, the places where the voyage commenced and was to terminate, being in countries governed by these laws.

The defendant resists the application of the laws of Spain to the case on two grounds: First, that the laws of the place where the ship is owned must determine the responsibility of the defendants: Second, that there is no evidence on record of the laws of Vera Cruz and Havana, and consequently the Court must presume it to be the same as our own.

And as to the first point, we are of opinion, that the law of the place of the contract and not that of the owner's residence must be the rule by which his obligations are to be ascertained. The lex loci contractoris governs all agreements, unless expressly excluded, or the performance is to be in another country where different regulations prevail. What we do by another, we do by ourselves, and we are unable to distinguish between the responsibility created by the owners sending his agent to contract in another country, and that produced by going there and contracting himself.

The second offers rather more difficulty. The general rule certainly is, that courts cannot notice the laws of a foreign state, unless they be proved like other facts.

But when countries have once belonged to the same government, and the same rules prevailed in both, it is not understood by us that the separation of these countries renders the laws in existence at the time they divide, foreign to each other. The act of political separation does not destroy the knowledge possessed in both that they were subject to the same law, and what that law was. Any change made in it after the countries became independent of each other; any statute passed in either would certainly come under the general rule, because it was at no time common to both; but laws which were, stand on quite a different footing.

The rule, like every other in regard to evidence, is founded on good sense. Courts require proof of the laws of another country, because they do not judicially possess the means of knowing them; but, when they do possess judicial knowledge of them, there seems to be no object in requiring evidence of that which is already known. We have looked into the jurisprudence on this head, and we do not discover that the different States in the Union require proof; the common law prevails in each: or that it has ever been deemed necessary to establish, by testimony, that the same system governs in England. It is true they require proof of British statutes which never were in force within their own State, but that is on the distinction already alluded to. It is a matter of history, that certain countries formed part of the same kingdom, or government, of which courts of justice take notice, without evidence; and if it be a fact that the countries separated were at one time under the same government, proof of the law at the time of separation is vain and of no use: for the Court knows its own law, which was the law of both.

We therefore think the laws of Spain may be referred to, and considered in the decision of the cause, although they have not been proved as facts.

By one of the laws of the Indies, it is made the duty of a master of a vessel, in case any of the passengers die during the voyage, to make an inventory of their property, and deliver it at the port of destination. Jacobson, in his Sea Laws, without referring to any special legislation as authority, declares it to be the duty of the Captain to do so. It would seem to us, to necessarily result from the duties which masters of vessels have to perform, and its importance cannot be doubted.

The valuable effects with which men frequently travel, and the unprotected state of their property on board a ship after their death, render it necessary that some one should be responsible for its safe keeping.

Numerous frauds would otherwise follow. On no one can this duty be so properly imposed, as the captain of the ship, whose situation and authority enable him effectually to discharge it. The present instance presents a case where this duty has been totally neglected. The master either converted the money to his own use, or permitted others to do it, without taking any measures to prevent them, and in either hypothesis his responsibility is the same. Curia Philip. lib. 3, cap. 11, No. 13. Jackson's Sea Laws, 133.

Our attention has been most turned to that part of the defence which claims immunity for the captain in consequence of the passenger bringing the money on board without giving notice of it. We have endeavored, but fruitlessly, to satisfy ourselves whether the master and owner are responsible for money or precious objects placed among the baggage of a passenger, and of which no particular declaration is made. The consulado del mare and the laws of Ursby, both treat of the effects of this concealment or a claim for average, if the objects have been thrown overboard; but they are silent as to the responsibility of the captain in other cases. A law of the Partidas, renders the owners responsible for everything which is brought on board, with the knowledge of the master, but whether the delivery of a trunk or parcel, without a declaration of its contents, would produce responsibility in the case supposed, the law is silent. It is probable it would. No exception is made, and even where the traveller is received through friendship, by carriers on land and water, or keepers of inns, this law makes them responsible for his effects, unless they receive them with an express declaration that the traveller must be take care of his own property. Peters' Rep. vol. 1, Appendix, pages 20. and 52. Consulat de la Mer. par Boucher, vol. 2, p. 451, Nos. 856 and 860. Part. 5, titl. 8, line 26.

But whether the master would have been responsible, in case the money had been lost before the death of the owner, need not be inquired into; on that event taking place, the knowledge of the property being on board was brought home to him.—He became by law the guardian of it, and was his duty to take it into his possession and deliver it to the representatives of the deceased. We find nothing in the law, and we see no good reason why on the death of a passenger, the captain should be discharged from all responsibility in relation to his effects, because he was not made acquainted with their kind and value, previous to the proprietor's decease.

The responsibility incurred by the master in this case, of which we have no doubt, settles the question as to the owners. The general principle on this matter, is so well established as to be familiar. The proprietor of the vessel is answerable for all acts of the master within the scope of his employment, even for his losses. Abbot on Shipping, 9. (Ed. 1829.) 3 Kent's Comm. 162. Curia. Phil. lib. 3, Cap. 12, verbo Damos, No. 29. 6 John. 160. 11th ibid. 107. 17 ibid. 1.

Counsel have endeavored to limit the responsibility of the defendant to the value of the vessel and freight earned. Such a limitation does exist in several countries, and it is wise perhaps, that it should; but the general law is otherwise, and the very passage of special statutes limiting the responsibility, acknowledges the previous rule to be otherwise. No such statutory provision is shown to exist in the country where the contract was made, and we cannot supply it.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the judgment of the Parish Court be affirmed with costs.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

1. A landlord cannot in New York distrain either on or off of the demised premises, where the term has expired, and the tenant has abandoned or yielded up the possession to the landlord. Williams vs. Terboss, 2 Wend. 148.

2. The seventh action of the act to amend the act concerning distresses, (Statutes, vol. 5, b. 178,) is only an extension of the remedy given by the thirteenth section of the original act. Ib.

3. The effect of the several provisions of the two statutes is to give the landlord a right to distrain either on or off of the demised premises, at any time within six months after the expiration of the lease, where the interest of the landlord and the possession of the tenant both continue; provided the distress, if made off of the premises be made within thirty days after the goods are removed, or within thirty days after the rent becomes due when the goods are removed before the rent becomes due. But the landlord is in no case authorized to distrain goods carried off of the premises, where he would not have been allowed to distrain the same if the tenant had permitted them to remain. Ib.

4. The assignment by the assignee of a term for years of his interest, by way of mortgage for the security of a debt, does not divest him of his estate, and destroy the relation of landlord and tenant between him and his tenant, if the debt, for which the term was mortgaged be paid or satisfied previous to the accruing of the rent. Evertsen vs. Sawyer, 2 Wend. 507.

5. Nor does the sale of such an interest by virtue of a judgment and execution, destroy such relation previously to the purchaser's obtaining possession; if, however, the tenant to the defendant in the execution disclaims the title of his landlord by attorning to the purchaser, though such attornment is void by statute as divesting the landlord of his possession, yet the disclaimer may be set up as a bar to the landlord's right to recover rent accruing after the time that the right of redemption has expired. Ib.

6. In an action on the case by a tenant against his landlord, for destraining for a greater sum than is due for rent, where the tenant, to regain possession of his goods, gives a negotiable note, with sureties, for the sum claimed, if entitled to recover at all, the tenant is not entitled to recover, as damages, the difference between the rent due and the sum distrained for, if the note is not actually paid, and remains in the hands of the landlord, Lewis vs. Lozee, 3 Wend .79.

7. A negotiable note with sureties, taken by a landlord from his tenant, after a distress for the amount claimed as rent, payable in sixty days, under an agreement to relinquish the distress, and not to re-enter or distrain within sixty days, is a collateral security only, and not a payment or satisfaction of the rent; it appearing affirmatively that the note has not been paid or negotiated by the landlord. Ib.

8. Where a tenant took a lease of a village lot for 21 years, and covenanted to pay all taxes, charges and impositions, which should be imposed upon the demised premises: and during the term, the premises were subjected to an assessment for pitching and paving a street, under an act incorporating the village and authorizing such an assessment, passed subsequent to the date of the demise; it was held, that by the terms of the covenant, the tenant was liable to pay the assessment, although the expenditure was for a permament benefit extending beyond the term. Bleecker vs. Ballou, 3 Wend. 263.

9. Where a sheriff received an execution, and went with it in his pocket to the house of the defendant, but took no inventory and did no act to enforce the execution for eleven months afterwards, not even apprising the defendant of the fact, it was held that no such levy had been made as would debar the landlord of the house occupied by the defendant from claiming the rent due to him, although it accrued subsequent to the pretended levy. Beekman vs. Lansing, 3 Wend. 446.

10. Where it is a condition in a lease of personal property that the lessee shall keep it upon particular premises, and not remove it therefrom, a removal of such property by the lessee operates as a forfeiture of the term, and divests his title so, that no interest in the property removed remains in him that can be sold by execution. Otis vs. Wood, 3 Wend. 498.

11. If property thus circumstanced is levied on and sold under an execution against the lessee, the lessor is entitled to maintain an action of trover against the officer. Ib.

12. Where rent in kind is payable by the terms of a lease at such place in a market town as the lessor shall appoint, if no appointment is made, it is the duty of the lessee, to seek the lessor to ascertain the place of payment and there to deliver his rent. If the landlord could not be found, a delivery at any place in the market town it seems would be sufficient. Lush vs. Druse, 4 Wend. 313.

13. The price of wheat in a market town on a given day, obtained from the books of dealers in that article, is prima facie evidence of its value. Ib.

14. A landlord is entitled to interest on rents payable in wheat if the wheat be not delivered on the stipulated day. Ib.

15. Where a party after executing leases of portions of his farm to several tenants, granted the whole farm with the reversion of the demised premises to a tenant in fee, reserving an annual rent, and after such grant, entered upon the demised premises and distrained the goods of the original tenants, for rent accrued subsequent to the grant of the whole estate, it was held, that such entry and distress amounted to an eviction of the principal tenant, and worked a suspension of the rent. Lewis vs Payn, 4 Wend. 423.

16. Where a tenant is thus evicted, the presumption of law is, that he continues out of possession; such presumption may, however be rebutted by proof that he was subsequently restored to the possession. Ib.

17. Where the lessee enters wrongfully into part of the demised premises, the tenant is discharged from the payment of the whole rent, till he be restored to the whole possession. Ib.

18. Riens in arrere is the general issue to an avowry for rent; and under it an eviction may be shown. Ib.

19. A tenant cannot set off damage sustained by the breach of his landlord's agreement to finish or repair a house, against a demand for rent. Allen vs. Pell, 4 Wend. 505.

20. A tenant for years forfeits his term by a refusal in pais to pay rent, by denying the title of his landlord, and by accepting title from a hostile source. Jackson vs. Vincent, 4 Wend. 633.

---

LEGISLATURE, Member of.

A member of the legislature may be arrested after his return home, although fourteen days after the adjournment of the legislature have not expired, Corey vs. Russell, 4 Wend. 204.

---

LIBEL.

1. A publication by the editors of a newspaper affecting the character of a candidate for public office is not a privileged communication, relieving the publishers from the necessity of proving the truth of the charges made, to shelter themselves from damages, and casting the onus probandi upon the party slandered of showing actual malice or a knowledge of the falsity of the charge. Editors may publish what they please in relation to the character and qualifications of candidates for office, but they are responsible for the truth of the publication. King vs. Root, 4 Wend. 113.

2. The belief of the defendants in the truth of the charges contained in the publication does not destroy the presumption of malice. Malice need not be proved, but will be implied if the charge be false; and in determining the question of justification, the motives of the defendant will not be taken into consideration. Ib.

3. Malice, said to be the gist of the action in suits for libel or verbal slander, does not mean malice, or ill-will, towards the individuals affected, in the ordinary sense of the term. In ordinary cases of slander, the term maliciously means intentionally and wrongfully, without any legal ground of excuse. Malice is an implication of law from the false and injurious nature of the charge, and differs from actual malice or ill-will towards the individual, frequently given in evidence to enhance the damages. Ib.

4. In ordinary cases of slander or libel, it is not necessary to allege in the declaration that the words were spoken or the publication made maliciously; it is sufficient to aver that it was done falsely and injuriously. Ib.

5. Privileged communications are prima facie excusable, from the cause or occasion of the speaking or writing; but even in the case of such communications an action will lie if the party making the communication knows the charge to be false, and adopts that mode of gratifying his ill-will or malice. In such case, however actual malice must be shown, and the question will be submitted to a jury: in ordinary slander, the question of malice is never submitted to a jury, except as to the amount of damages. Ib.

6. If a plaintiff has been injured in his character or feelings by an unauthorized publication it is the duty of a jury to award him a full compensation in damages, without reference to any particular ill-will entertained against him by the defendant. Ill-will or malice will enhance the damages, but need not be shown to entitle a plaintiff to a recovery. Ib.

7. The truth of the publication may be pleaded in bar of the action, but if the defence thus set up be not supported by proof, the defendant will not be allowed to allege that the charge was made under a mistake, and to support such allegation by evidence; such proof will be received as tending to reduce the damages by rebutting the presumption of malice, where the general issue only is interposed, but not where a justification has been set up. Ib.

8. Evidence of the general character of a plaintiff may in all cases be given by a defendant in action of slander or for libel to lessen damages, even where a justification has been attempted. So on the other hand, the plaintiff is at liberty to give evidence of actual malice and vindictive motives on the part of the defendant, to enhance the damages. The defendant however, in such case, may rebut all presumption of actual malice by showing the facts and circumstances which induced him to believe the charge to be true when made, although it afterwards turns out to be false. Ib.

9. Evidence of the opinions of others as to the truth of the charges made is inadmissible, if, in the publication, the defendants state what they publish as facts within their own knowledge, without reference to the opinions of others. Ib.

10. In an action for a libel the defendant cannot either in bar of the action, or in mitigation of damages, given in evidence other libels published of him by the plaintiff, not distinctly relating to the same subject. Beardsley vs. Maynard, 4 Wend. 336.

11. If the publication alleged to be libellous was in answer or reply to a previous publication by the plaintiff it seems that such previous publication would be received in evidence of mitigation of damages; but a criminatory retort in which no relation to or perceptible connexion between the subject-matter of the publications could be discovered, would not be considered an answer. Ib.

12. The publication of a libel by the plaintiff against the defendant three days previous to the publication of the defendant's libel against the plaintiff, will not be received in evidence in palliation of the offence on the ground of provocation. Ib.

13. It is not allowable to ask a witness how he understood the libel. Had the question been how others understood it, or how it was generally understood, it seems it would have been proper. Ib.

---

LIEN.

1. An artisan has a lien upon the article manufactured by him until he is paid for his labor, or parts with the possession pursuant to the terms of his agreement; so held in the case of a brick-maker, who manufactured a quantity of brick, on a brick-yard furnished by another, together with wood and all other necessaries to carry on the work; and who agreed to pay him $1,75 for every 1000 bricks made and shipped on the return of the vessel in which the same were carried to market. Moore vs. Hitchcock, 4 Wend. 292.

2. Where in such case the bricks were sold as the property of the employer under an execution against him, it was held that an action of trover lay by the brick-maker against the purchaser, who removed the same; the purchaser being, however allowed to show the estate of the accounts between the employer and the brick-maker, and the latter being permitted to recover only the amount of his lien upon the brick taken by the purchaser, and not the amount of his lien upon the whole quantity manufactured by him, or according to the state of the accounts between him and his employer. Ib.

---

LIMITATION.

1. Where a party has omitted to plead the statute of limitations, the court will not suffer him to amend by adding that plea. The action for mesne profits forms no exception to the rule. Jackson vs. Varick, 2 Wend. 294.

2. Where the maker of a note against which the statute of limitation had run, on its being presented to him for payment, said that the note had been paid in services performed for the payee; that the services were not done to apply on the note, but there was a running account between him and the payee, and he intended the amount should be set off against the note or against the payee, and agreed to produce his account, but at a subsequent day; it was held, that those declarations did not amount to an admission of a subsisting indebtedness, without which a promise could not be implied. Bradley vs. Field, 3 Wend. 272.

3. The acknowledgment of a defendant to take a case out of the operation of the statute of limitations, must be an unequivocal and positive recognition of a subsisting claim in favor of the plaintiff; it must be an admission of a previous subsisting debt which he is liable and willing to pay; and must not be accompanied by circumstances repelling the presumption of a promise to pay the debt. Purdy vs. Austin, 3 Wend. 187.

4. Where a defendant, on an account being presented to him after looking at it, threw it down in a passion, and said, 'I owe him (the plaintiff) no such money,' or asked 'I owe him so much money as that? Why did he not present the bill himself?' and added that he never had a bill from him that he would not settle with any one but him, that he did not owe him anything, or anything worth mentioning; that he had paid him a great deal of money, a horse, and the use of a house, and appeared much surprised, and signified that he had paid the plaintiff all his work amounted to, (the account being for work alleged to be done;) it was held, that the declarations of the defendant, instead of amounting to a recognition of a subsisting demand, were a denial of the claim of the plaintiff. Ib.

5. A plaintiff cannot avail himself of a capias issued to save the statute of limitations, although the same was regularly returned, entered on a continuance roll and the continuances carried down to the time of the issuing of the process on which the defendant was arrested, unless he shows that the process on which the arrest was made is a continuation of the process originally issued, as that it is an alias or pluries, &c. The continuation of the suit must be proved, and will not be presumed. Souden vs. Van Rensselaer, 3 Wend. 472.

6. Where a plea of non assumpsit infra sex annos was put in, instead of a plea of actio non accrevit infra, &c, and the plaintiffs replied a new promise, and gave evidence in support of the replication on the trial of the cause, the issue though informal, was held not to be immaterial, and that the defect was cured by the verdict. Ib.

7. A debt, barred by the statute of limitations in the life time of the testator, is presumed to be paid by him, and is therefore not a legal demand or a just debt. An executor has no right to retain for such a demand due to him personally, notwithstanding a provision in the will for the payment of all just debts, and that even in a case of parent and child. Rogers vs. Rogers, 3 Wend. 503.

8. An acknowledgment which is to have the effect of taking a stale demand out of the operation of the statute of limitations, ought to be clear and explicit in relation to the subject or demand to which it refers. Stafford vs. Brian, 3 Wend. 532.

9. If effect can be given to the declaration or admissions which may be proved to have been made by a defendant, without referring them to to the demand upon which the suit is brought, they will not be considered as referring to such demand, and as evidence of a new promise to pay it; and especially will they not be so considered where the defendant, in answer to a bill of discovery, denies under oath that he has ever acknowledged or promised to pay the demand. Ib.

10. The statute of limitations cannot be set up in bar to a recovery in ejectment against the grandchildren of a person dying seized, against whom there was no adverse possession, where, at the decease of the grandfather, the mother of the lessors, through whom the estate descended to them, was under coveture, against whom the statute had not began to run, and the action was brought within ten years after the decease of their father, the tenant by the courtesy. Moore vs. Jackson, 4 Wend. 58.

---

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

A sum apecified in the condition of a bond, as the measure of damages to be paid by a party failing in the performance of his agreement, will be considered as liquidated damages, and not as a penalty. Smith vs. Smith, 4 Wend. 468.

---

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

1. In an action for a malicious prosecution, the jury ought to be instructed by the judge as to the law involved in the question of probable cause, i. e. what constitutes a legal excuse for the defendant; and whether the facts relied on in the defence, on the supposition of their being found true by the jury, made out a probable cause. Masten vs. Deyo, 2 Wend. 424.

2. Where the circumstances relied on as evidence of probable cause, are admitted by the pleadings, it belongs to the court to pronounce upon them; and where they are clearly established by uncontroverted testimony, or by the concession of the parties, and fully establish a probable cause, the court may refuse to submit the cause to the jury, and may order the plaintiff to be nonsuited. Ib.

3. If, however, the facts are controverted, if conflicting testimony is to be weighed, or the credibility of witnesses to be passed upon, the evidence must go to the jury, but still under the instruction of the judge as to the law of the case. Ib.

4. In an action for a malicious prosecution, the recovery in a court of competent jurisdiction in favor of the plaintiff in the suit complained of as malicious, is not conclusive evidence of probable cause. It seems, that the allegation that the plaintiff in such suit, with a knowledge that he had no cause of action and that the defendant had a full defence, caused the defendant to be detained as a prisoner until judgment could be obtained against him, for the purpose of preventing a defence and hindering him from procuring the necessary evidence to substantiate his defence, would countervail the effect of the admission of such recovery; at all events, evidence of the want of probable cause rebuts the inference of the existence of probable cause, arising from the fact of a recovery in the suit complained of as malicious. Burt vs. Place, 4 Wend. 591.

5. The rule requiring the plaintiff to show that the suit complained of as malicious was decided in his favor, is complied with by showing a judgment, in his favor in the Common Pleas, on an appeal from a justice's judgment, although such latter judgment was in favor, of his adversary. Ib.

6. Evidence of the proof adduced, on the trial of the suit complained of as malicious, is inadmissible for the purpose of showing probable cause, where the defendant himself was not the witness; the party is bound to produce the witnesses, and is not permitted to prove what they testified to. Ib.

---

ADMIRALTY.

The admiralty has jurisdiction over petitory as well as possessory suits, to reinstate owners of ships, who have been wrongfully displaced from their possession. Schooner Tilton, 5 Mason R. 465.

The admiralty has jurisdiction in case of a wrecked ship to decree a sale upon application of the master. Ib. 465.

The sale by an Admiralty Court of a wrecked ship upon the application of the master and a survey made, is within its jurisdiction, but is not conclusive upon the owner or upon third persons. Ib.

---

ALIEN.

When an alien sues in the Circuit Court, the defendant must be described as a citizen of some particular state. Stating him to be a citizen of the United States is not sufficient. Picquet vs. Swan, Ib. 35.

---

CIRCUIT COURT.

Where a party defendant is a citizen of the United States and a resident in a foreign country, not having any inhabitancy in any State in the Union, the Circuit Court of the United States have no power to maintain jurisdiction over him in a suit brought by an alien against him although he has property within the district, which may be attached. Picquet vs. Swan, Ib. 35.

The State courts have jurisdiction of offences committed on arms of the sea, creeks, havens, basins, and bays, within the ebb and flow of the tide, when these flows are within the body of the County; and in such cases the Circuit Court of the United States has no jurisdiction under the statute. U. S. vs. Grush, Ib. 290.

---

CITIZENSHIP.

To constitute a person a citizen of a state so as to sue in a court of the United States he must have a domicil in such state.

If he removes into a state animomanendi, that is sufficient whatever may be his motive for removal. But a mere temporary change of place, without any intention of permanent residence, constitutes no change of domicil. Case vs. Clark, Ib. 70.

---

COUNTY.

Where an arm of the sea, or creek, haven, basin or bay is so narrow that a person standing one shore can reasonably discern, and distinctly see, by the naked eye, what is doing on the opposite shore, the waters are within the body of the county.

In such case, it seems, that the Admiralty and Common Law Courts, have concurrent jurisdiction. U. S. vs. Grush, Ib. 290.

---

CONTRACT.

Where a contract is made between citizens of the same state, and the deft. is afterwards discharged under the insolvent act of such state from imprisonment, and his person is exempted from future imprisonment thereon; still, if the contract itself is not discharged, a general judgment will be entered against him upon a suit brought in another state, according to the lex fori. Titus vs. Hobart, 378.

---

DISSEIZN.

Where a party is disseized he cannot convey by a quitclaim deed his title to the premises of which he is disseized. Wakefield vs. Rose, Ib. 16.

DUTIES.

Under the tariff act of 22d of May, 1824, ch. 136, bombazines, being goods of which wool is a component material are liable to pay a duty of 30 per cent. United States vs. Clark, Ib. 30.

By the act of congress of 1799, ch. 128, Consignees are authorised to enter goods and give bonds for the duties. In such case the United States have no remedy over against the owner of the goods for whom the consignee acts as agent or trustee, if the duties are not paid. Knox vs. Devens, Ib. 380.

If a surety for a consignee or a custom house bond pay the debt, he has no remedy against the owner for the amount, if the latter did not request the surety to sign the bond; but the remedy for the surety is against the consignee only. Knox vs. Devens, Ib. 380.

If a collector of customs cancels a bond for duties, without receiving payment of the amount of duties, in connivance with the debtor, the cancellation is void, and the bond may still be declared open as a subsisting deed; for the cancellation is in such case, a flagrant violation of duty. Johnson and Error vs. United States, Ib. 465.

A collector of the customs is not at liberty to receive anything but money of the United States or foreign gold or silver coin made current in payment of duties; if he receives a check on a bank in payment, it is at his own peril, and if the check is not paid, the bond is not discharged; a fortiori, it is not discharged by the receipt of a memorandum check. Ibid.

The receipt of a collector acknowledging payment is prima facie evidence but not conclusive of the fact of payment. Ib.

A collector like other public officers, cannot bind the United States by any act beyond or contrary to, the authority given him by the Laws. Ib.

Quære, whether a collector is not to all intents, functus officio, as soon as a removal takes place by the appointment of another person in his stead. Ib.

ESTATE.

A liberty granted in a deed 'to dig a canal through the grantor's land' does not include as incident, the proprietory interest in the soil, when dug up and removed. Lyman vs. Arnold, Ib. 195.

FISHERY.

A lease of 500 years of certain land covered with a pond of water conveys as incident the water and fish therein. Smith vs. Millen, Ib. 191.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

By the statute of Rhode Island respecting conveyances of real estate, no deed of the wife's estate by the husband and wife, conveys any title but that of the husband, unless the same deed be duly acknowledged by the wife, before a magistrate, in the manner prescribed by the statute. Manchester vs. Hough, Ib. 67.

By the customary and ancient law of Rhode Island, a feme covert may pass her estate by deed, in which her husband is joined, which is duly executed and acknowledged. Ib.

INSANITY.

Where a person is insane at the time he commits a murder, he is not punishable as a murderer, although such insanity be remotely occasioned by undue indulgence in spirituous liquors. But it is otherwise, if he be at the time intoxicated and his insanity be directly caused by the immediate influence of such liquors. United States vs. Drew, Ib. 28.

ENGLISH.

ARCHES COURT — JANUARY.

(Before Sir J. Nicholl.)

In the matter of the Earl of Rochfort.

The COURT gave judgment in this case this morning. The Earl of Rochfort, it appeared, made a will in the month of April, 1824, by which he entailed all his real estates to the Duke of Hamilton, in male entail, and appointed the Duke of Hamilton, residuary legatee. It specified, however, that, if the personal effects were not sufficent to satisfy the mortgages, legacies and debts which had been contracted, then the real estate should be subject to the payment thereof. He appointed D. C. Killderbee, Mr Spencer Killderbee, his son, and Mr Wearn, his solicitor, as executors and trustees. In the year 1826 he executed two codicils—one in February and one in May. The Court, however, did not see that these two codicils made any material alteration in what had been stated by the will. The present codicil, however, which had been propounded, intended to make material alterations in the disposition of the real property. It is unexecuted, but it is drawn up with the intention of disposing of the estate of Easton differently from the way in which it was disposed of by the will—namely, to Mr Spencer Killderbee and his male issue, and, in default of male issue, to his daughters. It further gave all the furniture, plates, &c, as heir-looms with the estate; and also exonerates the Easton estate from any charge by debts, mortgages, and legacies. That codicil was dated merely 'Sept. 1830,' and not signed or more particularly dated. On the 3d September the Earl died, and it now became the Court to inquire what would be the effect of this codicil. It was quite clear that it would have no effect on the real estate, and no effect on the disposition of the copyhold estate, to be derived by the probate of this Court being granted upon it, the probate of this Court not being necessary to give effect to the disposal of real and copyhold estates; in fact, the copyhold property was not mentioned in it. The Court would, therefore, be extremely unwilling to take any step that would have even a collateral effect in the distribution of it, as such only could be the effect of the probate of this Court granted to that codicil. This instrument was supported by the evidence of Mr Wearm, the Earl's solicitor, who deposed that he was told by the Earl, in June, 1830, that he wished him to make an alteration in his will in favor of Mr Spencer Killderbee, for whom he had always expressed great friendship and affection. This was an intention that he had expressed three years before. On the latter occasion Mr Wearn told him that the sooner it was done the better. The Earl replied that he was going to London, and would do it immediately on his return. He said that he intended to give the estate of Easton to Mr S. Killderbee. It was not, however, till the 30th of August, when he had been ill some time, that he gave explicit directions and instructions to Mr Wearn to make this codicil. He repeatedly ejaculted 'Poor Spencer, poor Spencer!' After having received some loose instructions then, Mr Wearn afterwards attended the Earl several times, but found him dosing, and could not disturb him. The Earl told him that the estate was to go to Mr S. Killderbee, tied in the same manner as in the will, which was in entail male, whereas the Earl wished the present codicil to give to female in default of male issue. To explain this inconsistency, Mr Wearn afterwards consulted him, and understood him to assent, by nodding his head, to its going to female issue. Mr Wearn attended him on the day before his death, and read over the codicil to him, but he had not proceeded far when he saw the Earl was not capable of attending. Mr W. and another person attempted to rouse him, and he set up in the bed, and seemed determined to attend, but before it could be read he fell down quite exhausted, and expired on the next day, without having been able to sign or hear it read. The Court concluded with stating, that as the codicil related only to real property and heir-looms, over the disposition of which the probate of Court would have no effect, he (Sir J. Nichol) could not, although it was very unfortunate for Mr Spencer Killderbee, grant probate of this instrument, unless more satisfactory evidence of distinct intention could be produced.

Dr LUSHINGTON applied to the Court to order the costs to be paid out of the estate.

The Court granted this application.

---

The following specimen of Professional poetry is copied from a London Magazine.

CANONS OF DESCENT.

Versified from Blackstone's Commentaries, by an Apprentice of the Law.

CANON I.

Estates go to the issue (item)
Of him last seised in infinitum;
Like cow tails, downward straight they tend,
But never, lineally, ascend;

CANON II.

This gives that preference to males,
At which a lady justly rails;

CANON III.

Of two males in the same degree,
The eldest, only, heir shall be;
With females we this order break,
And let them altogether take:

CANON IV.

When one his worldly strife hath ended,
Those who are lineally descended
From him as to his claims and riches,
Shall stand precisely in his breeches;

CANON V.

When lineal descendants fail,
Collaterals the land may nail;
So that they be (and that a bore is)
De sanguine progenitoris:

CANON VI.

The heir collateral, d' ye see,
Next kinsman of whole blood must be;

CANON VII.

And of collaterals, the male
Stocks are preferred to female,
Unless the land come from the woman,
And then her heirs shall yield to no man.

---

In the Court of Exchequer yesterday morning the Chief Baron announced his intention of retiring from public life. It may therefore be presumed (as an Evening paper remarks) that the arrangement by which it was intended, on this resignation, to restore Lord Lyndhurst to legal office as Chief Baron, will now be completed.—Sun.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1831.

JUDGE THACHER'S ADDRESS.

We intended earlier to have recommended to our readers the interesting address of Judge Thacher to the Suffolk Bar. The subject of it is the connexion between the moral and the professional character. We give a short Extract below and shall, if possible, recur to it again.

'We belong, gentlemen, to a profession, whose duty it is to keep with vestal purity, and in a perpetual flame, this divine science. For numbers, we compose no small portion of the state. Go through the cities and villages of our country: what place is so barren, what village so small, in which is not found its lawyer, as well as its pastor? We mingle with the people in all their concerns, at home and abroad, in public and private, in the field and on the exchange. The influence of the profession is not confined to the administration of justice; it is felt in all the concerns of life and government. You see lawyers in every legislative assembly, among the first to originate, to counsel, and to effect measures of interest to the state. They are active members of every corporation, whether municipal, literary, commercial or humane. Nothing human is foreign to their pursuits. Holding in their hands the shield of the law, they are the protectors of innocence, the avengers of wrong, the expounders of right. Though generally poor themselves, they number the rich among their clients. The mariner pursues his adventurous course upon the ocean more cheerfully and securely, because he finds among the profession the seaman's friend. Even the miserable criminal arraigned for his crimes, wants not an advocate, who will boldly, and eloquently too, defend his rights, when all the good and just of society seem to be estranged from him. So that, I may add, by their universal knowledge, their professional skill, and their active character, they have a sway over the minds of men, which constitutes moral power in an eminent degree.

'The aggregate weight and influence of our society must depend on the individual characters of its members. No individual of any profession is an object of greater reverence than the lawyer, who to profound learning and exalted moral qualities, adds that most rare gift of heaven, eloquence. While all, therefore, may well be proud of an alliance to such a profession, each should strive by his personal virtues, to render himself and the society worthy of general confidence. Of all communities, that of bad men is least likely to be permanent; for they carry in their head and members the elements of division and decay. But the alliance of learning and virtue is the strong arm of the state. And therefore, in our professional pursuits, the study of justice is ever to be blended with the love and practice of mercy:—since mercy is the foundation of all charitable dealing, and judgment of all just conduct. And if the members of our profession, so numerous, so diffused, and with such powers of influence, will prove themselves true to virtue and to good government, they will compose a phalanx which no Roman legion could penetrate or divide.

'Amidst the divisions which successively agitate the state, on subjects of religion, manners, and government, it is your duty not to be indifferent spectators, but to share in them, that the conflicting parties may not lose the example of your wisdom and moderation. If every one, in his station, will do his duty faithfully, as a good citizen, things will go on well in the Republic. Your pursuits qualify you to investigate truth, and your opinions deliberately formed on any subject, will have great influence upon other classes of the community. You spend days and months in the investigation of controverted titles to real estate, and on disputed cases of small value. And all your powers of body and mind are often brought into intense exertion, to maintain the good cause of your clients. Ought it not sometimes, in the vacation at least, to occur to us, that we have titles of infinitely higher interest to investigate for ourselves?

'The late Samuel Dexter, whose powers of investigation were not inferior to any master of reasoning in ancient or modern times, whose noble form so indelible rests on our memory, whose deep toned voice and powerful eloquence still vibrate within these walls—and none who heard or knew him can ever forget him;—that great lawyer directed his attention in mature life, to the evidences for Christianity. And I well remember his declaration, that his inquiry had resulted in the belief, that its truth admitted a clear demonstration, and that the religion was divine.'

---

CONTENTS of the Law Magazine and Quarterly Review of Jurisprudence, No. XI., for January, 1831.

ART. I.—Lord Brougham's Local Court Bill—with full Particulars relating to the inferior Courts of Scotland, and the Continental Court of Conciliation.

I. The Speech delivered in the House of Peers, December 2nd, 1830, by Henry Baron Brougham and Vaux, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, upon the Introduction of his Bill to reform the existing Legal Abuses of the Country. 8vo. London, 1830.

2. A Bill, intituled An Act for establishing Courts of Local Jurisdiction. Ordered to be printed, Dec. 2, 1830.

ART. II.—Legal Reform in France.

Lettres sur la Cour de Chancellerie d' Angleterre et sur Quelques Points de la Jurisprudence Anglaise, &c. Par C. P. Cooper, Avocat Anglais: avec une Introduction par M. P. Royer-Collard, Avocat á la Cour Royale de Paris, Professeur á la Faculté de Droit. Paris: Strasbourg: Londres: Bruxelles. 1830.

ART. III.—The Life of Lord Mansfield (concluded.)

ART. IV.—Medical Jurisprudence.—No. V. Case of Mr St John Long.

ART. V.—Remedies against the Hundred.

ART. VI.—The Execution of Powers of Sale by the Survivors of several Donees.

ART. VII.—Mercantile Law.—No. IX. The Contract of Sale—continued; And herein of Stoppage in Transitu.

ART. VIII.—The Necessity of Transitive Laws (Lois Transitoires) in England.

Juridical Letters; addressed to the Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, in reference to the present Crisis of Law Reform: Letters II. III. By Eunomus. London: Paris. 1830.

ART. IX.—The present State of the Laws relating to Tithes; with Remarks on the Archbishop of Canterbury's Commutation Bill.

A treatise on the Law of Tithes. By William Eagle, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law. In two volumes, 8vo. London, 1830.

ART. X.—State of the Registry Question.

1. Notes respecting Registration and the Extrinsic Formalities of Conveyancing. By C. Cooper, Esq. Part 1. London, 1831.

2. Observations on the Second Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the Law of Real Property. By Francis Mewburn, Gent. London, 1831.

3. A Popular View of the Law of Real Property, with an Application of its Principles to the Important Measure of a General Register; showing what Changes in the System a Register is calculated to produce. By W. Hays, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. London, 1831.

4. Speech of John Campbell, Esq. M. P. on Thursday, Dec. 16th, 1830, on moving for leave to bring in the General Registry Bill. London, 8vo. 1831.

5. A Bill for establishing a General Registry for all Deeds and Instruments affecting Real Property in England and Wales. Ordered to be printed 21st Dec. 1830.

Digest of Cases.

Common Law.
Equity.
Bankruptcy.
Privy Council.
List of Cases.
Abstract of Public General Statutes.
Account of the various Ministerial Offices attached to the French Courts.

---

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

An Index to all the Reported Cases, Statutes, General Orders, in or relating to the Principles, Pleading, and Practice of Equity and Bankruptcy in the several Courts of Equity in England and Ireland, the Privy Council, and the House of Lords, from the earliest period down to the year 1831. By Edward Chitty, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law. 2 Vols. Royal 8vo.

A Treatise on the Principles and Practice of the Action of Ejectment and the resulting Action for Mesne Profits. The third Edition, with considerable Additions. By John Adams, Sergeant at Law. Royal 8vo.

A concise and comprehensive Form of a Lease for Farms, with Covenants, adapted particularly to most Soils in the County of Norfolk, and may be found useful in other parts of the Kingdom, with various Observations thereon; addressed to Agriculturists in general. By a Norfolk Land owner. 12mo.

Epitome of the Practice in the Court of Exchequer on the Plea Side; including the new Rules of Court of Michaelmas Term, 1830, and Extracts from the Act, 1st Wm. 4. c. 70, for the better Administration of Justice, &c, with Practical Forms and Precedents of Bills of Cost. By an Attorney of the Court. 8vo.

The Constable's Assistant, being a Compendium of the Duties and Powers of Constables, and other Peace Officers; chiefly as they relate to the apprehending of Offenders, and the laying of Informations before Magistrates. Fourth Edition, with Additions.

A Letter to the Right Hon. Lord Tenterden, on the Bill for establishing Courts of Local Jurisdiction. By William Raines, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn.

Sir E. B. Sugden's Acts; to which are added the new Act relating to Executors, so much of the 'Act for the better Administration of Justice' as relates to Ejectments. and the entailed Estates Bill, with Notes and an Index by S. Atkinson, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars. April 9.

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIII. for March, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Moral Education. 1. The Library of Education, edited by Wm. Russell, vol. 1; containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education, by John Locke,' and 'A Treatise on Education, by John Milton.'

2. Account of the Edinburgh Sessional School, and the other Parochial Institutions for Education, established in that city in 1812; with Strictures on Education in general. By John Wood, Esq.

II. Prison Discipline 1. Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

2. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

III. Collection of Psalms and Hymns. A Collection of Psalms of Hymns for Christian Worship.

IV. Meaning of Αἰων. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays on several words relating to Future Punishment.

V. Works of the Rev. Robert Hall. The Works of the Rev. Robert Hall, A. M. Minister of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, England. First complete edition, with a brief Memoir of the author.

VI. Stuart and Whitman. 1. A Letter to William E. Channing, D. D. on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Moses Stuart, Professor of Sacred Literature in the Theological Seminary, Andover.

2. Two Letters to the Rev. Moses Stuart, on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College, February 3, 1831. March 19.

NEWSPAPER AND PERIODICAL AGENCY. EICHBAUN & NORVELL, Booksellers, Nashville, Tennessee, have, in addition to their regular business, established a GENERAL AGENCY for the procuring of subscribers to, and the collecting of debts due to Newspapers and Periodicals throughout the United States. To this business great attention will be paid, and the instructions of Publishers strictly attended to. The city in which they are established contains a population of six thousand inhabitants, and as the citizens have ever shown a disposition to encourage meritorious publications, with the aid of Agents, the publishers of Newspapers, Magazines, &c, might obtain a respectable number of subscribers. Refer to GRAY and BOWEN, Booksellers, Boston. March 19.

POPULAR JOURNAL OF MUSIC. THE HARMONICON, a Monthly Journal of Music—No. 1. just received by GRAY & BOWEN. Each monthly number will contain—

I. An Original Biography of some distinguished Composer or Performer. II. Interesting Correspondence, or Original Dissertations, on Subjects connected with the Science. III. Detailed Accounts of the Opera, Concerts, and other Musical Performances of the past month. IV. Copious Extracts from the Foreign Musical Journals, giving the reader the latest information of the Progress of the art, and its Professors throughout Europe. V. Liberal and unbiassed Accounts of all Musical Works as they appear. VI. Six or seven pieces of Music, Vocal and Instrumental, English and Foreign, selected with care, and printed with a beauty and accuracy that may safely challenge competition.

Musical Families and Societies, subscribing to the Harmonicon, will be furnished monthly with (in addition to the literary contents of each number), on an average, Six Entire Pieces of Vocal and Instrumental Music, at a price not exceeding the common charge for a single piece, when printed in the usual way. March 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVII. for January.

CONTENTS.

Art I. Popular Defensive Force. II. Lesson's History of Man. III. Hannibal's Passage of the Alps. IV. Webster's American Dictionary. V. India and China Trade. VI. Character of George IV. VII. Scotch Parliamentary Reform. VIII. Heiress of Bruges. IX. Maxwell. X. Belgian Revolution. XI. J. P. Cobbett's Italy. XII. Bruce's Travels. XIII. Machine-Breaking. XIV. Tennyson's Poems. XV. Basil Barrington and Friends. XVI. The Wellington Administration. XVII. European Revolution; List of Books, &c. March 19.

SPLENDID BIBLE. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES. GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Language.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII. Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

No. 15, North American Series.

This number contains articles on Screw Cutting; Locomotive Carriages; finding Velocity of Ships at sea; New Metallic Alloy for pivot Watches; Reflections on the Decline of Science in England; Improved marine Steam Engine Boiler; Claxton's Air Pump; Almanacks for 1831, &c, &c, with a great number of engravings.

Subscriptions received as above at $3 75 per annum. March 19.

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1831. NO. XXXVIII.

LORD MANSFIELD.

Continued.

On the same day that Lord Mansfield presided, for the first time, in the court of King's Bench, the Duke of Newcastle resigned his office of prime minister; and in the following week (Nov. 19th), Lord Hardwicke gave up the great seal. The same political motives which had induced him to quit the woolsack, were, of course, sufficient to prevent Lord Mansfield, who had been his colleague in the cabinet, from becoming his successor; and he accordingly declined accepting the vacant place, though repeatedly and earnestly pressed upon him. The seals were shortly afterwards put in commission; Sir John Willes, the chief justice of the Common Pleas, Sir John Eardley Wilmot, a puisne judge of the King's Bench, and Sir Sidney Stafford Smyth, third baron of the Exchequer, being appointed to execute the legal functions of the chancellor. The administration, however, under which these arrangements took place, was not of long duration. The king's personal feelings of dislike against Pitt gave every advantage to the opponents of the minister, in their endeavors to oust him from his office; and they had not to wait later than the spring of the ensuing year before their efforts were successful. Pitt was displaced in the beginning of April, and for about eleven weeks there was actually no administration, this time being employed in fruitless attempts to unite the conflicting interests, passions, and pretensions, of the adherents of Fox and the Duke of Newcastle. The endeavor miscarried, notwithstanding the Duke's readiness to almost any concession for the purpose of effecting such a coalition, and the advantage he derived from the assistance of his friend, Lord Mansfield, in the course of the negotiation. The chancellorship of the exchequer had been given up by Mr Legge, on the resignation of Pitt; and the forms of that office not admitting the absence of a chief, it had been entrusted (9th April), till the new ministry should be formed, to the Chief Justice of the King's Bench, as it had been to Chief Justice Lee on the death of Mr Pelham, and to Chief Justice Pratt on the dismission of Aislabie, in the time of George the First. This appointment gave Lord Mansfield frequent access to the king, by whom he was confidentially consulted on the subject of the different ministerial arrangements then in contemplation. The difficulties that stood in the way of the formation of a cabinet, were, as it is well known, finally adjusted by a junction between Pitt and the Duke of Newcastle, the latter being appointed to the Treasury, and the former becoming secretary of state. The seals of the exchequer were then given up by Lord Mansfield, that Legge might be re-instated in the post he had quit.

The new ministry kissed hands on the 29th of June, and on the day following the chancery commissioners resigned in favor of Lord Mansfield's former school-fellow, Sir Robert Henley, who had succeeded him as Attorney-General. He took the seals, with the title of Lord Keeper, which he retained till the accession of George the Third, when after the customary resignation, they were re-delivered to him as Lord Chancellor, and he was created Earl of Northington. More difficulties had been experienced by the Duke of Newcastle and his colleague, in filling this office, than any other at their disposal. It had first been offered to Lord Hardwicke, who declined it, on account of his advanced age. It was then once more tendered to Lord Mansfield: but he saw sufficient reason, in the apparently unsettled state of the ministry, to justify his refusal; and Sir Thomas Clarke, the Master of the Rolls, was also prudent enough to resist the temptation of quitting his own secure place for the sake of so precarious an elevation. Chief Justice Willes would not accept it without a peerage, which the ministry refused to give him; and the unambitious Sir John Wilmot would take it on no condition whatever. In short, the offer was not made to Sir Robert Henley till it had been the round of half the judges of the kingdom. This promotion enabled Pitt to insist on the appointment of his friend Pratt (afterwards Lord Camden) to the attorney-generalship. Charles Yorke kept his place as solicitor.

The Duke of Newcastle had been the more anxious to overcome Lord Mansfield's objections against accepting the post of Chancellor, that he knew by experience how able a coadjutor he would prove as one of the administration. Finding himself, foiled in this object, and not being able to reconcile himself to the loss of his service, he had recourse to the dangerous and unconstitutional expedient, which has of late years been resorted to in the case of Lord Ellenborough, but which it is to be hoped will never again be attempted, of enrolling the Chief Justice of the King's Bench among the members of the cabinet. With the exception, however, of a short period during the year 1765, when he was nominated as one of the council of regency, Lord Mansfield ceased to be an active member as early as 1763. He then refused to sit with the Duke of Bedford; and, though subsequently consulted by ministers on occasions when they required his assistance, he never afterwards resumed his place in the cabinet.

In the Court of King's Bench it was his lot to preside a much longer period than any other judge, either before or since, has sat in any English court of Justice. In the course of nearly thirty-two years that he remained there, several changes took place among his colleagues. When he first took his seat, the puisne justice in the King's Bench were Sir Thomas Denison, Sir Michael Foster, and Sir John Wilmot; though the last, from the time he was named as one of the commissioners of the great seal, was rarely present in his own court till his resignation of that office. Sir Michael Foster died on the 7th of Nov. 1763, after an illness which had disabled him from attending to his duties for more than two terms previous, and on the 24th of the following January, his place was filled by the elevation of Sir Joseph Yates to the Bench. On the 14th of February, 1765, Sir Thomas Denison resigned, and the vacant post was occupied on the first day of the ensuing Easter term by Sir Richard Aston, who had been Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland. On the resignation of Lord Northington, Sir John Wilmot became chief justice of the Common Pleas (21st of August, 1766) in the room of Lord Camden who was appointed to the chancellorship. Sergeant Hewitt, being created a judge of the King's Bench before the end of the long vacation, took his seat in court on the first day of Michaelmas term; and about a year afterwards, when he was promoted, with the title of Lord Lifford, to the Chancellorship of Ireland, the solicitor general, Edward Willes, who was the second son of the former chief justice of the Common Pleas, was made a puisne judge in his stead. He took his seat on the 27th of January, 1768. In the vacation between Hilary and Easter terms, 1770, Sir Joseph Yates was transferred to the Common Pleas in the place of Mr Justice Clive, who had resigned. He was succeeded in the King's Bench by Sir William Blackstone, who afterwards, on the death of his former predecessor, (7th June, 1770) removed to the Common Pleas. During the same month, the vacancy thus created in the King's Bench was filled by Sir William Henry Ashurst. On the 14th of January, 1777, Mr Justice Willes died, and Sir Nash Grose was appointed to his place on the 9th of the following month. The death of Sir Richard Aston took place on the 1st of March, 1778, and on the first day of the next Easter term, the vacant seat was taken by Sir Edward Buller. All these changes occurred while Lord Mansfield occupied the station of Chief Justice of the Court. That his opinions on the many hundreds of legal points, that came under the notice of himself and his colleagues during this long period, were almost without a single exception adopted or coincided with by a set of judges, than who no period of our legal history can boast of more able or more upright men, is a fact which of itself forms a splendid eulogium on his learning, his genius, and his integrity.

We are told by Sir James Burrow, that while he continued to report the decisions of the court, which was from the time of Lord Mansfield's first taking his seat there, to the end of Hilary Term, 1772, (12 Geo. 3.) and even up to the date of their publication, (1776,) there was no instance of a final difference of opinion among the judges in any case, except in the celebrated literary property cause, Miller v. Taylor, and the equally well-known one of Perryn v. Blake. With the exception, too, of these cases, no judgment given during that time was reversed either in the Exchequer Chamber or in the House of Lords; and even in these the decisions of the court of King's Bench were not overruled without much doubt and diversity of opinion among the other judges. During the same period, not a single bill of exceptions had ever been tendered; and, although the average number of causes annually disposed of was upwards of eight hundred, it had never happened in the course of a year that so many as thirty came before the court a second time, in the form of special cases, or by motions for new triall

'And yet,' says Burrow, 'notwithstanding this immensity of business, it is notorious, that in consequence of method and a few rules which have been laid down to prevent delay, (even where the parties themselves would willingly consent to it,) nothing now hangs in court. Upon the last day of the very last term, if we exclude such motions of the term as by the desire of the parties went over of course as peremptories, there was not a single matter of any kind that remained undetermined, excepting one relating to the proprietary lordship of Maryland, which was professedly postponed on account of the present situation of America. One might speak to the same effect concerning the last day of any former term, for some years backwards.'

The efficiency and despatch with which the whole business of the court was conducted was due in a great degree to several improvements in practice introduced by Lord Mansfield. Before his time, whenever a special case or special verdict had been agreed upon, it had been usually left to be drawn up and settled at the leisure of the parties, without the interference of the court; a custom which often occasioned considerable delay before the case could be set down for argument, since frequent disputes arose as to trifling matters of fact, which could only be decided by repeated attendances before a judge, and in some instances, only by a new trial. Lord Mansfield remedied this evil, by causing the special case or verdict to be drawn up before the jury was discharged, so that doubts as to matters of fact could be satisfactorily decided by a reference to them, and any other disputed points could be settled on the spot by the judge. It was then signed in court by the counsel on either side, after which, of course, no further contest could take place on the subject. When a cause was set down for argument, the parties could not only calculate with certainty on a speedy judgment, but they had no power, even were they so disposed, to procrastinate the decision. The former custom of permitting counsel or their clients to put off the hearing by consent, was no longer allowed by Lord Mansfield. No delay could be procured, except applied for before-hand by motion, and on showing by affidavit good cause for postponement. Again, it had formerly been usual to hear at different intervals, two, three, or even four successive arguments on every case of importance, before judgment was given. Lord Mansfield seldom allowed more than one; and instead of postponing the decisions, he always, except in cases of difficulty, made it a point to give judgment immediately. In the very first case reported by Burrow, (Raynard v. Chace,) which was argued the day after he first took his seat on the Bench, the counsel and their clients, who expected as a matter of course, that there would be at least a second, and perhaps a third hearing, before the judges would undertake to pronounce their decision, were surprised to hear from the new Chief Justice, that the court, having no doubts on the subject in dispute, considered itself bound as well to spare the parties the cost and delay of further discussion, as to terminate the suspense of others who might be interested in the decision of the question, and would accordingly give judgment at once.

Those who are conversant with the routine of the courts, will have no difficulty in conceiving how much these alterations, and others of the same tendency, must have done towards facilitating and expediting the administration of justice. It is obvious, however, that mere rules of practice can never be of themselves sufficient to effect this object; and, indeed, that their efficacy must always depend on the learning and the energy of those who sit on the bench. That energy was not wanting, is sufficiently attested by the amount of business annually disposed of. To prove that there was legal knowledge in abundance, it would be enough, one would think, simply to state the fact, that out of the multitude of judgments given by the court of King's Bench, not only during the period mentioned by Burrow, but during the whole course of Lord Mansfield's chief-justiceship, two only were reversed by the House of Lords. Even putting this out of the question, we confess ourselves quite unable to conceive how any one familiar with his reported decisions can countenance the notion that he was deficient in professional learning. Nevertheless, as such an imputation has been brought against him from more than one quarter, it is incumbent on us to inquire, not what foundation there is for the charge, (for this we candidly acknowledge our inability to ascertain), but what causes may have contributed to give it birth.

In the first place, then, it is highly probable that the brilliancy of his genius, together with the extent and the variety of his acquirements, may have obscured and thrown into the shade whatever of mere learning he possessed. That this has frequently happened, it would be easy to prove by a number of examples. A very great majority of the admirers of Bacon, for instance, are not at all aware of his celebrity as a practical lawyer; and those who are, in enumerating his titles to fame, seldom think it worth while to dwell much on his legal knowledge, because this, and, indeed, mere knowledge of any sort, being within the reach of a very ordinary intellect, the fact of his having possessed it could add nothing to a reputation such as his. The same may have been the case, though in a less degree, with regard to Mansfield; and his panegyrists having constantly expatiated rather on the qualifications which distinguished him from most of his contemporaries at the bar or on the bench, than on the single one which he possessed in common with perhaps the majority of them, his detractors have been enabled, without much fear of contradiction, to assume, that in this very qualification he was deficient.

'It is with genius,' says Pope, 'as with a fine fashion: all those are displeased at it who are not able to follow it.' This apothegm, there can be no doubt, has something of the fault of most smart sayings, namely, that it is not altogether true. But partially so, it assuredly is; for whenever any individual outstrips his competitors in toilsome ascent up the steep of Fame, there will always be many among them who, in despair of being able to raise themselves up to his level, will console themselves by endeavoring to pull him down to their own. And the general reluctance, which prevails among a large class of mankind to acknowledge a superiority of any sort in their fellows, is augmented in a rapidly increasing ratio when superiority is aimed at in more than one particular. Even a single claim to excellence is rarely admitted without cavilling and dispute; but he that puts in several must look to have them contested without end. If such a man be a lawyer, he will still further have to contend against the popular notion almost universally prevalent in this country, and warranted, it is to be feared, by too many examples, that a thorough lawyer cannot by possibility be anything else: of which proposition the converse being necessarily implied, it follows, as an unavoidable consequence, that he who makes good his title to any other species of excellence is assumed to be no lawyer at all.

Another circumstance which, in the eyes of many, was likely to lend some countenance to this opinion with respect to Lord Mansfield, was, that he was entirely above the solemn pedantry and affectation of learning, which often pass current for learning itself. We have heard it related of a barrister not many years since deceased, who by means partly of this species of affectation, and partly of other even more unworthy artifices, had contrived to insinuate himself into a tolerably large practice, that when this desired end was once attained, he often, in familiar conversation with his friends, was wont exultingly to exclaim, 'Thank God! I can now afford to dispense with humbug.' Lord Mansfield chose to dispense with it all his life. The respect and admiration he always felt and professed for the general wisdom and beauty of our jurisprudence, did not prevent him from making light of some of the blemishes that disfigure it. The science of pleading, for instance, he valued, because he could understand its spirit; but for the solemn fooleries which lessen its utility and detract from its dignity (excrescences which mere men of routine think themselves bound to admire, simply because they cannot perceive them to be excrescences and nothing more), he seldom scrupled to avow his contempt. A mind like his could distinguish the chaff from the grain; and he never attempted to impose either on himself or on others, by considering both as of the same value. He was equally above the silly attempts made by many to enhance the dignity of legal science, or the merit of those who have distinguished themselves among its professors, by overrating the difficulties that attend the acquirement of it. He used to say that the number of books it was necessary for a student to make himself familiar with, was commonly very much exaggerated, and that many were read merely for the sake of acquiring knowledge which it was not absolutely essential to possess, but of which it might be hurtful to a lawyer's general reputation that he should be supposed ignorant. It was a mistake, he observed, to think that the increase of legal works added to the necessary amount of reading, since several of the older treatises were entirely superseded by others of more modern date; as for example in the case of Finch's Law, and Wood's Institutes, which had formerly been put into the hands of every beginner, but which no one thought of studying after the appearance of Blackstone's Commentaries. Of Coke he always spoke disparagingly; and to speak in any other terms of admiration of an author whose fame has been in a great degree acquired by his immense fund of learning, no matter how confusedly entangled together, is, we all know, a great crime in the opinion of those who can rest their pretensions to celebrity on no other foundation; besides which, as the sneers such persons are constantly wont to vent against enlarged views of legal science, have generally no other motive than their own inability to conceive or to comprehend any enlarged notions at all, so they in general think fit to assume that mere erudition can be held cheap only by men who possess little or none of it themselves. Were it worth while to enter upon a formal refutation of this very common fallacy, we might dwell much on the incontestable fact that the most learned men are by no means universally the most forward to make parade of their erudition, any more than the most wealthy are those who take the greatest pride in speaking of their riches, or the most nobly descended in boasting of their ancestry. The real benefit of learning, it has been said by a man well qualified to speak on the subject, is to be seen in the general tenor of a man's thoughts and style; and the citing of authorities and repeating of quotations is, for the most part, confined to smatterers, just on the same principle that tradesmen, whose stock of goods is scanty, seldom fail to make a great display in their shop windows. And we may further observe, without wishing to impugn the use, nay the necessity, of learning, with which, indeed, a lawyer can no more dispense than a handicraftsman with his tools, that it is after all but a mere instrument, the effects whereof depends entirely on the skill of him who wields it. The self-same brush and the self-same colors with which a dauber contrives to disfigure a signboard, might breathe life into the canvas under the hands of a Vandyck or a Reynolds.

Perhaps the occasional departure of Lord Mansfield, in his judgments, from the strict rules which had been laid down by his predecessors, may have caused it to be inferred by some that he was not sufficiently imbued with the knowledge of them. However this may be, it is certain that his anxiety to decide every case on the merits rather than on mere matter of form; his disposition to slight or to overrule judgments which had been founded on principles obviously no longer applicable to the state of affairs and of society; in short, his constant wish to administer justice as well as law, (they are not always synonymous), gave rise to much discontent and murmuring among many of the older practitioners of the bar. They might all shut up their old law books, they used to say, and content themselves with the only authority that had any weight in court, namely Burrow-Mansfield, by which appellation Burrow's reports were at that time generally designated among the profession. The same charge has been explicitly made by Junius in his well-known Letter to the Chief Justice, dated November 14, 1770. 'Instead of those certain positive rules by which the judgments of a court of law should invariably be determined, you have fondly introduced your own unsettled notions of equity and substantial justice. Decisions given upon such principles do not alarm the public so much as they ought, because the consequence and tendency of each particular instance is not observed or regarded. In the meantime the practice gains ground; the Court of King's Bench becomes a court of equity; and the judge, instead of consulting the law of the land, refers only to the wisdom of the court, and the purity of his own conscience.' The probable consequence that would arise from a system of purely discretionary judgment in court of law, is here, no doubt, well and forcibly pointed out: but who that reflects for an instant can believe that Lord Mansfield, or any other English judge, ever did or ever could lay himself open to so sweeping a charge as this? Surely the single fact, that his decisions were rarely appealed from, and, when appealed from, were almost invariably ratified by the courts above, is of itself quite sufficient to prove that, as a general imputation, the charge is groundless.

It cannot be denied that his anxiety to remedy particular grievances did occasionally lead to him to pass the strict boundaries which, without regard to isolated cases wherein they may work partial inconvenience, or even injustice, our laws have set up for the general security and advantage of the community. We may quote, as an example, his well-known dictum in the case of Corbet v. Poelnitz, (1 T. R. 5.) where he overruled the established doctrine, that a feme covert can neither sue nor be sued, nor can possess any property in her own right; giving, as his reason, that as times alter, new customs and manners arise, in consideration of which exceptions must be made, and must be variously applied. However, it would not be easy to find many other instances such as this. There can be no doubt that, even long before he was called to the bench, he had come to the settled conviction that the adaptation of judicial decisions to the manners, the wants, and the spirit of the times, was a benefit too great to be sacrificed for the sake of maintaining a rigid and literal uniformity with precedents which may have had their origin in a very different state of society. But he was always aware of the necessity of considering attentively the decisions of his predecessors, even when he could not follow them to the very letter. Indeed, he used to say his situation often resembled the one in which Sir Joshua Reynolds placed Garrick, between tragedy and comedy, inclination pulling him one way, and precedent the other.

Burke, in commenting on the principles of evidence discussed in the case of Ormichund v. Barker, (1 Atkyns,) says:—'The sentiments of Murray, then solicitor-general, afterwards Lord Mansfield, are of no small weight in themselves, and they are authority, by being judicially adopted. His ideas go to the growing melioration of the law, by making its liberality keep pace with the demands of justice and the actual concerns of the world; not restricting the diversified occasions of men, and the rules of natural justice, within artificial circumscriptions, but conforming our jurisprudence to the growth of our commerce, and of our empire. This enlargement of our concerns, he appears, in the year 1744, almost to have foreseen, and he lived to behold it.

This, and several other passages of the like tenor, wherein the most brilliant encomiums are given to Lord Mansfield, ('that great light of the law,' as he is called,) are to be found in the report of the committee of the house of Commons, appointed to inspect the Lords' Journals, (5th March, 1794,) with reference to the proceedings in the trial of Warren Hastings, which report was wholly drawn up by Burke, and is inserted in most of the editons of his works. We shall make one further extract from it, which appears to us to account very satisfactorily, and with great judgment as well as acuteness, for the severe enforcement, in former days, of many of those very rules Lord Mansfield is especially commended for palliating, or even dispensing with. 'In ancient times it has happened to the law of England, (as in pleading, so in matters of evidence,) that a rigid strictness in the application of technical rules has been more observed than at present it is. In the more early ages, as the mind of the judges were, in general, less conversant in the affairs of the world, as the sphere of their jurisdiction was less extensive, and as the matters which came before them were of less variety and complexity, the rule being in general right, not so much inconvenience on the whole was found from a literal adherence to it, as might have arisen from an endeavor towards a liberal and equitable departure, for which further experience, and a more continued cultivation of equity as a science, had not then so fully prepared them. In those times that judicial polity was not to be condemned. We find, too, that, probably from the same cause, most of their doctrines leaned towards the restriction; and the old lawyers being bred according to the then philosophy of the schools, in habits of great subtlety and refinement of distinction, and having once taken that bent, very great acuteness of mind was displayed in maintainiug every rule, every maxim, every presumption of law creation, and every fiction of law, with a punctilious exactness. And this seems to have been the course which laws have taken in every nation.'

The evils which have resulted from a too strict adherence to the practice of earlier times, particularly with respect to pleading, have been admitted by the numerous modifications wherewith, as well before as since the time of Lord Mansfield, both the legislature and the courts of law have interfered to temper their severity. Nothing, indeed, can be so well calculated to produce among the public a feeling of disgust and dissatisfaction against the laws, as to find matters of litigation frequently put an end to without the slightest reference to the facts of the case, but solely and entirely on account of some technical flaw, some slip of the pen, some casual oversight of the judgment, committed in the course of a process of which the public in general can neither comprehend the meaning, nor even perceive the necessity. And this the rather, that such cases are not only decided on grounds quite distinct from their merits, but almost invariably are decided against, and in defiance of those merits; because it is for the most part only the party who is conscious of the weakness of his cause in point of fact, that is anxious to avail himself of technical objections of law. It is obvious that this must occasionally happen under every system of law, and every mode of administering it; but surely, it is the bounden duty of every legislator, and of every judge, to palliate, though he may not be able to remedy the evil—to diminish the frequency of its occurrence, though he cannot prevent it from ever occurring—to catch at every opportunity of discountenancing it—in short, to use every effort towards securing the substance, though by the sacrifice of the shadow, of justice.

To be continued.

---

CANDOR ON BOTH SIDES.—The Chelmsford Chronicle gives the following anecdote; Mr O'Connell had an interview, the other day, with the Marquis of Anglesay, in Dublin, at which he stated that although strong excitement and regard for his country might induce him to speak of his Lordship, in his public character, with some severity, still he meant nothing personal towards him. To which the Marquis replied by requesting Mr O'Connell in future, to be a little more moderate and cool in his political expressions. 'And,' said he, 'Mr O'Connell, you may one day go too far; and if after this warning, you continue as violent should you come to be hanged, you must not consider it meant as anything personal towards you !!'

---

It is reported (but we know not with what foundation) in the legal circles, that Mr Baron Garrow is about to retire from the Bench and that he will be succeeded by the present Solicitor-General who will be replaced by Mr Sergeant Wilde—London Courier.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

MANDAMUS.

1. On the coming in of the return to an alternative mandamus, the papers on which the original motion was made must be presented and the points stated in writing, in support of the application. The People vs. Delaware C. P., 2 Wend. 255.

2. Five years after the final disposition of an appeal cause in the C. P., this court will not interfere by mandamus, to direct the quashing of the appeal. Same vs. Same, 2 Wend. 256.

3. A mandamus will not be granted where parties have acquiesced a year in the proceedings sought to be set aside. The People vs. Seneca C. P., 2 Wend. 264.

4. The respondents in an appeal cause, on whose motion an appeal is quashed, are not liable to the costs of suing out a mandamus, although at their request a return is made to an alternative mandamus, although they oppose the issuing of a peremptory mandamus, and although the relators obtain a judgment by default on demurrer, if the respondents have not appeared or been made parties to the demurrer. The People vs. Jefferson C. P., 2 Wend. 301.

MINOR.

A minor is incapable of holding a civil office within the state of New York; but it belongs not to the officer whose duty it is to administer the oath of office, to refuse to administer such oath. The People vs. Dean, 3 Wend. 438.

MORTGAGE.

1. A conveyance of land, accompanied by another instrument showing the conveyance to have been intended as a security in the nature of a mortgage, though absolute in its terms, will be considered as a mortgage; and, not being registered or recorded, will be adjudged inoperative and void, as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice. Brown vs. Dean, 3 Wend. 412.

2. Money paid by the holder of a mortgage to redeem mortgaged premises from a sale for taxes, is a charge upon the land, and may be demanded upon foreclosure of the mortgage. Burr vs. Veeder, 3 Wend. 412.

MORTGAGE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

1. The possession of personal property by the vendor or mortgager inconsistent with the face of the deed, is prima facie evidence of fraud. Divver vs. McLaughlin. 3 Wend. 546.

2. A mortgage of personal property intended to cover future responsibilities and advances not expressed in the instrument, but resting in a parol engagement, is void pro tanto as against creditors. Ib.

3. Where a mortgage of personal property gives a false account, and is vague and indefinite as to the amount of indebtedness; where the state of the accounts betweeen the parties is not known until the property is taken by a creditor; where a whole stock in trade is mortgaged and the mortgager remains in possession, continuing his business, selling the articles transferred, and continuing so to do until the mortgage becomes absolute, and for upwards of two years and a half after, without any accounting to the mortgagee and the knowledge of the mortgage is confined to one or two individuals, the mortgage will be held fraudulent and void as against creditors, however honest may have been the intentions of the parties. Upon such a state of facts, it is a question for the court, and not for the jury, to decide whether the mortgage is valid or void. Ib.

4. If a mortgagee, by the circumstances of the case, would be precluded from pursuing the property mortgaged into the hands of a bona fide purchaser, he is equally debarred from setting up his claim against a judgment creditor who has levied upon the property by virtue of an execution. Ib.

MURDER.

The crime of an accessory before the fact to a murder, is murder, and is not barred by the statute of limitations. The People vs. Mather, 4 Wend. 229.

NEW TRIAL.

1. Where the evidence is contradictory, making it the duty of a jury to decide upon the credibility of the witnesses, the court will not set aside a verdict as against the weight of evidence, although it seems to preponderate against the finding of the jury. Douglass vs. Tousey, 2 Wend. 352.

2. A new trial will not be granted on the ground of excessive damages in an action of slander, unless the amount is so flagrantly outrageous and extravagant as manifestly to show that the jury acted corruptly, or under the influence of passion, partiality, or prejudice. Ib.

3. The omission by a jury to deduct from the sum allowed as rent, in an action by the assignee of a term, the ground rent, is no cause for a new trial, if the question was not raised at nisi prius. Everlson vs. Sawyer, 2 Wend. 507.

4. On a motion to set aside a nonsuit, and for a new trial, a defendant may object the loss of the note declared on, being a note payable to bearer, as an answer to the motion; although at nisi prius no such objection was taken, and the defendant there set up a defence on the merits by showing a want of consideration. Kirby vs. Sisson, 2 Wend. 550.

5. A new trial will not be granted, although a judge errs in refusing a nonsuit, if, in a subsequent stage of the cause, the facts necessary to the maintenance of the action be shown. Lansing vs. Van Alstyne, 2 Wend. 561.

6. A new trial will be granted for the mis-direction of the judge, although the evidence may have warranted the verdict found, where the chances are equal that the verdict resulted from the direction. Wardell vs. Hughes, 3 Wend. 418.

7. Whether a new trial can be awarded in a criminal case for the mis-direction of the court, where there has been an acquittal of the accused by the jury, is an unsettled question; if the power exists, it will not be exercised unless it is reasonable to infer that the acquittal was induced by such mis-direction. The People vs. Mather, 4 Wend. 229.

8. The substantial ground of objection to the introduction of evidence must be explicitly stated at the trial, or it will not be heard in bank, if the party could have obviated the objection if properly made. Jackson vs. Christman, 4 Wend. 277.

9. A new trial will not be granted where, upon the question of the fraudulent alteration of a deed there is conflicting testimony, and the evidence nearly balanced; the verdict of the jury in such case will not be disturbed. Lewis vs. Payn, 4 Wend. 423.

10. Where a general objection is made to a decision of a court on the trial of a cause, and on a review thereof it appears that the decision, if objectionable at all, is so only in part, the party is not allowed to avail himself of the objection, for the want of precision in stating it at the trial. M'Allister vs. Reab, 4 Wend. 483.

11. A new trial may be asked for on a case made, on the ground of the mis-direction of the judge, although no exception is taken to the charge of the judge on the trial. Archer vs. Hubbell, 4 Wend. 517.

12. Want of proof of notice to quit cannot be urged as a ground for a new trial, if the objection was not taken at the circuit. Jackson vs. Russell, 4 Wend. 543.

13. It cannot be objected to the granting of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, that such evidence is cumulative, if the evidence alleged to be newly discovered is of a different kind and character from that adduced on the trial; as where the evidence on the trial is wholly circumstantial and the evidence newly discovered is positive and direct. Guyot vs. Butts, 4 Wend. 579.

14. In ordinary cases, where the newly discovered testimony consists of admissions made by the party against whom it is intended to be used, the motion will not be granted; but where the suit is against executors of a deceased person on a stale demand, the motion will be granted; and in such case, the court will not be astute in inquiring into the discrepancies between the testimony given and that offered to be produced on the second trial, but will leave the credibility of the witnesses to be passed upon by the jury. Ib.

15. A nisi prius roll and postea, which ought regularly to have been produced at the circuit to admit proof of what transpired on the trial of a former cause, may be brought into court in bank, and will be received on the argument of the case on a motion for a new trial. Burt vs. Place, 4 Wend. 591.

16. It is erroneous in a judge to instruct a jury, that they may indulge a presumption not warranted by the evidence disclosed in the case. Hollister vs. Johnson, 4 Wend. 639.

NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

Motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, must be on the record, and not on affidavit. Smith vs. Smith, 2 Wend. 624.

NONSUIT.

1. If a plaintiff proves all that is laid in his declaration, he ought not to be nonsuited. If the declaration is insufficient, the defendant may avail himself of the defect by demurrer. If he neglects to do so, he cannot object to the declaration at the trial, but will be put to his motion in arrest of judgment. The only ground of nonsuit at the trial is, that the proof is not sufficient to support the declaration. Safford vs. Stevens, 2 Wend. 158.

2. A nonsuit ordered by the court, without motion of the defendant, for a defect in the proof of one count in a declaration, when a good and distinct cause of action is shown under another count, but which is overlooked by the court in pronouncing judgment, will not be sustained, although the plaintiff did not direct the attention of the court to the cause of action shown under such second count. Had the application for the nonsuit been made by the defendant, the omission of the plaintiff to direct the attention of the court to the proof establishing his right of action, it seems, would be considered a waiver of his rights. Ib.

3. A plaintiff has the right to submit to a nonsuit on the coming in of a jury, although the jury are prepared to certify a balance in favor of the defendant in an action of assumpsit, where a notice of set off has been given. Wooster vs. Burr, 2 Wend. 295.

PARTIES TO AN ACTION.

1. On an agreement to pay to the attorney of a defendant in a particular suit the taxable costs in the same, an action to enforce the agreement in the name of the party, will be sustained. Safford vs. Stevens, 2 Wend. 158.

2. Where an accommodation bill is pledged for less than its face, and the holder transfers it and receives its full value, and the indorser is subsequently compelled to pay it, such indorser cannot maintain an action against such holder for the surplus; the action must be in the name of party pledging it; as where a bill of exchange was drawn by K. and M. for $1500 on K. and R. and the indorsement of G. and B. was obtained for the accommadation of the drawers and drawees, and the drawees pledged the bill for $1000 to B. and H. who subsequently transferred it to D. L. for its full face, and received the money, and D. L. sued the indorsers and recovered the whole amount of the bill, it was held, that an action for money had and received, brought by the indorser against B. and H. to recover the surplus, would not lie. Gregory vs. Burrall, 2 Wend. 391.

3. An action on a bastardy bond, given to A. & B. as overseers of the poor of a certain town must be brought in the names of the overseers of the poor in office at the time of the commencement of the suit. Armine vs. Spencer, 4 Wend. 406.

4. In an action by a firm, the name of a dormant partner need not and ought not to be used. Clarke vs. Miller, 4 Wend. 628.

PARTITION.

The general phraseology and provisions of the act for the partition of lands, contemplate an assignment to each owner of his respective portion when capable of being ascertained. McWhorter vs. Gibson, 2 Wend. 443.

2. But if the defendants in such proceeding wish to retain their proportions of the estate undivided, partition may be made accordingly, and their consent to such partition will be construed into an assent that a joint judgment be rendered against them for costs. Ib.

3. A partition between parties holding a conditional fee or an estate, for life only, does not enlarge the estate, but merely severs the tenancy or possession during its continuance. And if, from the lapse of time since the partition, releases might be presumed, the presumption would be that the releases were made in accordance with and not in enlargement of the estates of the parties. Jackson. vs. Christman, 4 Wend. 277.

PAUPER.

An adjudication as to the settlement of paupers, for whose relief expenditures have been incurred by a town, may be made subsequently to such expenditures; and such paupers will be deemed county charges, and the county subjected to the payment of money thus expended. The People vs. Supervisors of Oswego, 2 Wend. 291.

PAYING MONEY INTO COURT.

1. Where money is paid into the Court of Chancery by order of the court, on a balance admitted to be due, and the same is paid to the credit of the cause generally, and not in extinguishment or satisfaction of so much of the complainant's demand, and such money is invested in public stocks, on which a loss subsequently happens, the loss must be borne by the defendant and not by the complainants, especially if the complainants were willing to receive the money as a payment on account, and such appropriation was objected to by the defendant. Depeyster vs. Clarkson, 2 Wend. 77.

2. Payment of money into court admits the cause or causes of action stated in the declaration to the amount paid in, but nothing more, and beyond that amount the defendant may make his defence. So it was held in a case where the declartaion contained a count on a promissory note and the common money counts, and the money was paid in generally. Spalding vs. Vandercook, 2 Wend. 431.

PAYMENT.

1. Where a bond was given to a lessor of the plaintiff in an action of ejectment to indemnify him against the costs of such suit, and such lessor on the costs being demanded of him under the consent rule after a judgment against the nominal plaintiff, executed a bond and warrant of attorney to secure the payment of the same, it was held, that his so doing was not evidence of payment entitling him to sustain an action on the covenant of indemnity. Campbell vs. Jones, 4 Wend. 306.

2. A release of the equity of redemption obtained by a mortgagee, is a satisfaction of the mortgage and also of the bond accompanying it as a collateral security, if the property when the release is obtained is equal in value to the debt for which it was mortgaged. If it be of less value than the debt, it is payment pro tanto. Spencer vs. Executors of Harford, 4 Wend. 381.

3. A foreclosure of mortgaged premises without sale, does not operate as an extinguishment of the debt, unless the mortgaged premises are of sufficient value to pay the debt. Ib.

4. A plea that the plaintiff in an action of debt on a bond, executed as collateral security to a mortgage, had become possessed of the equity of redemption by purchase, was held bad, for the want of an averment that the value of the mortgaged premises, when the equity of redemption was conveyed to the plaintiff, was equal to the amount due on the bond. Ib.

5. So a second plea, which alleged that two years after the plaintiff became possessed of the equity of redemption, he sold the mortgaged premises for a sum far exceeding the debt, was also adjudged bad for the want of the same averment, or another that the property was of the same value when the equity of redemption was conveyed to the plaintiff, as when he subsequently sold it. Ib.

PERPETUATING TESTIMONY.

1. In a proceeding under the act to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses, it is not necessary to state in the affidavit, on which the order for examination is founded, the probable inability of the witness sought to be examined, to attend the trial. Jackson vs. Perkins, 2 Wend. 308.

2. A commissioner should specify in the order the number of days for which notice is to be given; where, however, no time is specified, the commissioners will be considered as having deemed fourteen days (the shortest time specified in the statute) reasonable notice. Ib.

3. The appearance of a defendant, and cross-examining the witness, is a waiver of a defective notice. Ib.

4. Proof that a witness is seventyfour years of age, and the belief of another from his knowledge of the situation and infirmities of the principal witness, that she could not endure the fatigue of a journey from Albany to Ogdensburgh without the most serious hazard to her health, is sufficient to authorize the admission of the deposition in evidence. No witness is bound to endanger his life by his attendance at court. Ib.

5. To authorize the production of a deposition in evidence, taken under the act to perpetuate testimony, the party must produce proof of the inability of the witness to attend at the circuit, and not rely on the presumption of such inability arising from the advanced age of the witness. Jackson vs. Rice, 3 Wend. 180.

PHYSICIAN.

Physicians and surgeons are entitled to recover for the services of their students in attendance upon their patients. Waring vs. Monroe, C. P. 4 Wend. 200.

PLEADING.

Nul tiel record, no judgment, and no ca. sa. not incompatible in an action on recognizance against bail. Shiland vs. Cory, 2 Wend. 246.

2. Where a plea is an answer to but a part of the declaration, the plaintiff must demur, and doing so, he shall have judgment. Hicox vs. Coates, 2 Wend. 419.

3. Where a party sets up title by purchase to personal property, claimed under a dormant execution, it is not necessary to aver time or place of purchase, or of directions given to suspend proceedings under the execution, nor that such directions were given to defraud, nor is it necessary to set forth the consideration paid; and the omission in the pleadings to set forth these particulars cannot be taken advantage of, even by special demurrer. Ib.

4. The plea of nil debet to an action of debt on recognizance of bail is bad on general demurrer. Niblo vs. Clark, 3 Wend. 24.

5. It is no departure for pleading for a defendant, after pleading liberum tenementum to rejoin to a replication setting forth a demise, that in the demise was contained a reservation to do the acts complained of as trespasses. Dutton vs. Holden, 4 Wend. 643.

PRACTICE.

1. It seems that the oath of admeasurers of dower may be administered by the attorney conducting the proceedings. Griffin vs. Borst. 4 Wend. 195.

2. Double replications or rejoinders cannot be interposed but by leave of the court obtained on special application. Ames vs. West. 4 Wend. 211.

ASSIGNMENT.

1. A claim of a person to compensation for wrongs done under Spanish authority, and provided for by the treaty of 22d of February, 1819, with Spain, passed to his general assignee upon upon his insolvency. United States vs. Hunter, 5 Mason, 62.

2. A surety on a custom-house bond, who has paid it, has the same priority, as the United States, against the estate of his principal in the hands of his assignee.

If such surely become insolvent, and the same person is assignee of both estates, the funds of the principal to the extent of the debt due such surety, as a priority creditor, is by operation of law deemed assets of the surety; and if the latter is also indebted to the United States for other debts the United States may, by a bill in equity against the assignee, insure its priority out of such fund or assets. United States vs. Hunter, 62.

3. If under the act of 24th May, 1824, ch. 140. § 2, the secretary of the treasury omit to retain the amount of debts due to the United States from a person entitled, by an award under the Spanish treaty, to money provided for payment of such award, it does not prejudice the right of United States to proceed for payment of such debts, against the general assignee, who has received the money from the treasury. United States vs. Hunter, 62.

4. Wherever the principal can trace his property in the hands of his factor or agent, and distinguish it from the mass of the property of the latter, he is entitled to recover it from the agent, or in case of his failure, from his assignee. McIntire vs. Curtis, 80.

5. Where a mortgage had been given to one partner to secure a debt of a firm, and after the failure of the firm, and an assignment of the debt, one of the partners entered into an arrangement with the debtor, without the consent of the assignee, by which he took negotiable notes for the debt payable on time, and afterwards he assigned the mortgage to the other partner, who was not party to the arrangement; it was held, that the mortgage was not extinguished. Osborn vs. Benton, 157.

6. Where goods on consignment at Boston were, on the failure of the owners, assigned for the benefit of creditors, and before notice to the consignees of the assignment could be reasonably given, another creditor of the debtor's attached them by a trustee process in Boston, the debtor and the creditors being citizens of the state of Pennsylvania; it was held, that the assignment if bona fide, was a sufficient title to pass the goods to the assignees, and to overreach the trustee process. Bholen vs. Cleveland, 174.

7. How far notice of a set-off is necessary to defeat the rights of an assignee. Greene vs. Darling, 202.

8. Quære, whether a party who has procurred an assigument of a debt of the plaintiff, can set it off against his own debt due to the plaintiff, which was previously assigned. Greene vs. Darling, 202.

9. Where the assignee of an insolvent debtor recovers a demand, and expenses are incurred thereby, the latter are a charge on the fund, and the right of priority of payment of the United States attaches on the residue.

The United States are not bound to contribute, pro rata, for the sum due to them. United States vs. Hunter, 229.

10. Under the trustee process of Massachusetts by statute of 1794. ch. 65, if the trustee swears he has no goods, effects, or credits of the debtor in his hands, he is entitled to be discharged, unless, from other parts of his disclosure, that averment is overthrown. United States vs. Langton, 289.

11. Where an assignment does not, on its face purport to be of all the debtor's property, it is incumbent on the United States, if they insist on a priority of payment under the act of Congress of 1799, ch. 128, § 65, to establish that it does, in fact, contain all the debtor's property.

A small portion left out by mistake or fraud will not defeat the priority of the United States. United States vs. Langton, 289.

12. An assignment of all the debtor's property in a schedule referred to, which enumerates only specific property and does not purport to be all, affords no presumption that it is all the debtor's property, or a general assignment. United States vs. Langton, 289.

13. The trustee process lies against assignees in favor of the United States, where a debtor makes an assignment of his property in trust to pay custom-house bonds or other debts due to the United States, to attach the funds to the amount of such trust, in the hands of the assignees, notwithstanding at law, the assignment passed the property clothed with the trust, to the assignees. United States vs. Langton, 289.

14. One of the trust of an assignment was to pay '8400 dollars on custom-house bonds, on which M is surety.' M being one of the assignees; he was surety on bonds to a less amount; but the debtor in fact owed bonds to the custom-house, to the amount of 8257 dollars; it was held, that no bonds were included in the trust but those on which M was surety.

Quære, whether parol evidence is admissible to explain the intent of the parties in the above assignment,, so as to show whether all bonds were intended to be included, or those only, on which M was surety. United States vs. Langton, 289.

15. Where there is a general assignment of a debtor's property, for the benefit of creditors, and the priority of the United States attaches, they having various debts due by bonds, with different sureties, all payments made by the assignees are to be applied pro rata to all the debts of the United States; and the latter are not at liberty apply the payments in any other manner, without the consent of all the parties in interest. United States vs. Armory, 455.

16. To entitle the United States to a priority of payment, under the 65th section of the collection act of 1799, ch. 128, out of funds in the hands of assignees, there must be a general assignment by the debtor of all his property. A partial assignment of a portion, however large, without fraud, is not sufficient. United States vs. Munroe, 572.

---

ATTACHMENT.

Under the statute of Massachusetts of 1823, ch. 242, giving relief against fraud to secure attaching creditors, it is not necessary, that the second attachment should be returnable to the same term of the Court as the first attachment.

Quære, if the plaintiff must, in all cases under that act, sign and make oath to his petition to be admitted to defend against the first attachment, or it may be done, if he is abroad, by his agent. Lodge vs. Lodge. 407.

---

AWARD.

1. An award, upon a submission of a question whether the parties had a right to set off, is conclusive.

Quære, whether a decision by a court of law, of concurrent jurisdiction on the same point, would not be conclusive. Greene vs. Darling, 201.

2. When an award directed each party to release to the other certain estate, and the term of 20 days was directed, within which the acts were to be done: the acts are to be deemed concurrent acts, so that neither party can insist upon a release without offering to execute a release on his own part to the other party. McNeil vs. Magee, 244.

3. Courts of equity have jurisdiction to enforce a specific performance of an award respecting real estate. But he who seeks performance must show a readiness to perform all the award on his own part. McNeil vs. Magee, 244.

4. After long delay and laches a court of equity will not decree a specific performance of an award, especially where there has been a material change of circumstances, and injury to the other party.

A fortiori, it will not decree it against purchasers even with notice, if their vendee is dead and insolvent so that they can have no remedy over.

Quære, in what cases a court of equity will award damages as a compensation for delay on a bill for a specific performance. McNeil vs. Magee, 244.

---

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1831.

Hayes' popular View of the Law of Real Property.

The object of this work is 'to supply the want of a short familiar introduction to a knowledge of the history, principles and practice of the law of England relative to Real Property,' in reference to the subject of legal reform.

To remedy the numerous defects in this department of English Jurisprudence, the Commission appointed to investigate the subject, has recomded a General Register of instruments relating to real estate.

With a view to render the discussion of the alterations proposed intelligible, the writer of the little book of 130 pages above named, has undertaken to present a popular view of the subject, and to give such information relative to the rise and progress; actual condition; excellences and defects of the system of English Law, in regard to Real Property, as will qualify the general reader to comprehend the discussions and perceive the reasons of the proposed changes, without plunging into the depths of legal learning. He gives, in the first place, a historical sketch of Real Property Law—of the origin and progress and consequences of the distinction between the legal and equitable ownership; a distinction which runs through the whole law and judicature, the grand barrier, which divides Westminster Hall into two parts, and which no judge, since the time of Lord Mansfield, has attempted or desired to throw down; a distinction unknown to the simplicity of their Saxon ancestors, as it was inconsistent with the feudal rigor of their Norman Conquerors, which sprung up with the craft of the Priesthood and was perpetuated by the wants of the laity, and by the ingenuity of lawyers, and exigencies of mankind, turned into the channels of commerce, and which has to this day continued to work the complicated machinery of the law of Real Property.'

The law formerly acknowledged no other title to land than the actual and visible enjoyment, or the right to such enjoyment. The land holder had a substantial interest, and his right was well termed real property. The dominion was single ; it had only one aspect, which looked directly to the soil. This was pure legal ownership. This dominion was the subject of tenure ; every landholder held of some superior.

Several important consequences flowed from the perfect unity of ownership and possession which formerly existed, and the doctrines of tenure which prevailed.

1. In regard to the enjoyment.—The tenant could only be deprived of his land by forcible dispossession, by violence and injustice, or his own neglect of duty. Owing to the imperfect occupation of land in those days, and the disorderly state of society, posessions were more likely to be disturbed than now. The old writers, therefore had much to say about, 'disseisins,' 'abatements,' 'intrusions.'

2. As to the modifications of ownership.—As the tenancy was not allowed to be vacant, or in suspense, all substitutions should be strictly consecutive. No substitution or gift over, was admissible in any other shape than of a 'remainder.'

3. As to the forms of conveyance.—These were simple, as all conveyances were of land, or of the present right to the future possession of land, or the determination of some existing interest, they were all perfected by ceremonies referrible to the soil, importing either immediate or future investiture. The thing itself was transferred.

An important change was introduced, in this system, by the introduction of 'equitable interest.' This new interest was of an abstract and ideal character. The owner of the land was under a moral obligation to dispose of it for the benefit of another. The latter was said to have the 'use.' This use charged the conscience of the legal owner, not the land. If the owner refused to discharge the obligation, there was no redress.

These 'uses' were odious and repugnant to the principles of the common law. They were styled 'crafty,' 'subtle,' 'impious.'

Means were soon devised for compelling the legal owner to keep his faith by confession on oath to the keeper of the great seal. Here equity arose. One person then had a legal right on one side of Westminster Hall, and another a personal right to be enforced on the opposite side.

This equitable ownership, being the creature of conscience, could not be the subject of 'tenure.' The doctrines of tenure were inapplicable to this secret agent created by a breath and often destroyed by an oath. This 'use' might be transferred without the usual ceremonies requisite to the conveyance of land. It might pass without any form or solemnity whatever. With 'uses,' too, the power of disposition by will was introduced. The land itself was not devisable, but the legal owner was bound, in equity, to observe the testamentary destination of the person to whom the 'use' belonged.

Thus there existed two kinds of proprietorship, the subjects of distinct modes of alienation, and the objects of distinct jurisdictions. The vulgar notion of 'equity' is that of a mild and liberal tribunal, tempering the austerity of the law. The correct legal notion, with reference to the subject before us, is that of a judicature peculiar in its constitution, searching the conscience, and acting against the person of the individual intrusted with the keeping of the land, as distinguished from a judicature consulting the common law and awarding possession of the land itself.

This state of things was found to be attended with evils. As the use was the creature of conscience, and incapable of tenure, the king and his subjects were defrauded. It could be disposed of by a secret conveyance or by word of mouth only. The famous statute of 'uses' was past—27 Hen. VIII. The object of the statute was to abolish uses, by turning them into legal estates ; to marry the 'use' to the land indissolubly, and thereby, restore the simplicity of the common law. The Legislature intended to extirpate and extinguish 'uses' altogether.

The statute, failed of its object. It, however, led to important results. It gave to the legal ownership the flexible and popular qualities of the 'use.' It annexed to the 'use' the actual possession. It did not prevent the creation of uses, but only operated upon them when created.

The courts avoided the statute in a very singular manner. They determined that if the legal owner of the land, was directed to hold the land for the use of B.—who was at the same time directed, or who contracted to hold it for the use of C. the statute would carry the land to B. at law, but no farther, leaving C. to enforce his right against B. with whom the land rested, to a conveyance and account of the profits, by a suit in equity. This ultimate use was said to be a 'use upon a use,' which the statute did not reach.

The statute only added three words ('to the use') to the conveyance. A conveyed land to B. —to the use of (or as it is now expressed 'in trust for') C. This secondary 'use' was called a 'trust.'

As the use had by the statute become, in effect, the legal estate in the land, it was no longer the mere creature of equity, but fell under the cognizance of the common law Courts.

The 'trust' then became like the 'use' before the statute. The characteristics of the latter were transferred to the former.

The statute having turned the 'use' into the legal estate, the owner could, after this statute deal with the land as he could before with the use. The stubborn qualities of the legal dominion were, therefore, in some measure, subdued to the convenience of the owner. The power of disposing of land, held by a particular tenure, by will, was now given by the legislature (32 Hen. VIII.) and afterwards (12 Charles II.) all freehold lands were reduced to that tenure.

The modes of conveyance were also considerably changed by this statute. Whatever would have created the use now operated to convey the land. Land could be conveyed by a mere note of hand, without any solemnities. To remedy this evil, the statute of Enrolments was passed, (27 Hen. VIII.) requiring such instruments to be sealed, indented and enrolled within six months after the execution. Such a contract was called a 'bargain and sale enrolled.' The lawyers soon found means by which to avoid the effects of this statute.

It did not extend to terms for years. 'If therefore, A. wished to make a conveyance of the inheritance of land to B. he first contracted for say, five shillings, to sell it to B. for a year. This contract entitled B. to the 'Use' for one year ; which 'use' the Statute of uses, immediately turned into a legal estate in the land for a year ; so that B. became tenant in possession. He being in possession, by the ancient law, A. might release his 'reversion' the next moment. The first Instrument was called a 'bargain and sale for a year'—or 'a lease for a year ;' the second 'a release ;' they together formed the conveyance now so much in use under the name of a 'Lease and Release.'

But the lease of an estate for a thousand years, might be conveyed, as well as for one, and by the joint result of the two, an estate of freehold or Inheritance granted, without entry, delivery of possession or enrolment.

But a small part of the law of real property in England, it will be perceived, is the result of design. 'Institutions stern and oppressive in their original, have been gradually humanised by the progress of opinion, accident favoring and the judicature abetting, the diffusion of a more grateful policy. While fear and fraud, the rapacity of monks, and the turbulence of Barons, seeking shelter, the one from the penalties of mortmain, the other from the forfeiture of treason, laid the foundation, the growing spirit of freedom, availing itself of two ill starred acts of Parliament, a whimsical construction of the first and a palpable oversight in the second, reared the superstructure of that system of legal and equitable ownership,—"uses" and "trusts"—with the mode of conveyance adapted to each, which, however, perplexed with subtleties and encumbered by forms—has been deemed adequate, as well to satisfy the wants, as to indulge the wishes, of a highly cultivated people.'

To be continued.

---

The uses of cross-examination were rather unmercifully exposed lately by Judge Parke, upon trial of some rioters, when a Learned Gentleman, concerned for one of the prisoners, asked some questions affecting another man who had no Counsel employed. 'He is not your client,' said the Judge. 'He is mine—do not hang my client, whatever you may do to your own.' This was passing sentence upon the unfortunate pleader at all events.

---

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Suggestions for some Alterations of the present state of the Bankrupt Law. By Francis Gregg, Esq., Barrister at Law, one of the Commissioners of Bankrupts.

The Practice on the Plea Side of the Court of Exchequer ; to which is added, an Appendix of Forms in General Use ; and, also, a Table of Costs as at present allowed on Taxation. By Thomas Dax, Esq., Master of the said Court.

A Dissertation on the Nature of the various Proceedings in the Masters' Office in the Court of Chancery, with Directions for carrying the most useful References to a Master into effect ; to which are added, a few Observations illustrative of the Practice in the Office of the Accountant General, with an Appendix of Precedents of the different Proceedings, taken from actual Practice. By W. H. Burnett, Esq. of the Middle Temple. 8vo.

The Horseman's Manual ; being a Treatise on Soundness, the Law of Warrany, and generally on the Laws relating to Horses. By R. S. Surtees, Gent. 12mo.

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars. April 9.

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIII. for March, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Moral Education. 1. The Library of Education, edited by Wm. Russell, vol. 1; containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education, by John Locke,' and 'A Treatise on Education, by John Milton.'

2. Account of the Edinburgh Sessional School, and the other Parochial Institutions for Education, established in that city in 1812; with Strictures on Education in general. By John Wood, Esq.

II. Prison Discipline 1. Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

2. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

III. Collection of Psalms and Hymns. A Collection of Psalms of Hymns for Christian Worship.

IV. Meaning of Αἰών. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays on several words relating to Future Punishment.

V. Works of the Rev. Robert Hall. The Works of the Rev. Robert Hall, A. M. Minister of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, England. First complete edition, with a brief Memoir of the author.

VI. Stuart and Whitman. 1. A Letter to William E. Channing, D. D. on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Moses Stuart, Professor of Sacred Literature in the Theological Seminary, Andover.

2. Two Letters to the Rev. Moses Stuart, on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College, February 3, 1831. March 19.

NEWSPAPER AND PERIODICAL AGENCY. EICHBAUN & NORVELL, Booksellers, Nashville, Tennessee, have, in addition to their regular business, established a GENERAL AGENCY for the procuring of subscribers to, and the collecting of debts due to Newspapers and Periodicals throughout the United States. To this business great attention will be paid, and the instructions of Publishers strictly attended to. The city in which they are established contains a population of six thousand inhabitants, and as the citizens have ever shown a disposition to encourage meritorious publications, with the aid of Agents, the publishers of Newspapers, Magazines, &c, might obtain a respectable number of subscribers. Refer to GRAY and BOWEN, Booksellers, Boston. March 19.

POPULAR JOURNAL OF MUSIC. THE HARMONICON, a Monthly Journal of Music—No. I. just received by GRAY & BOWEN. Each monthly number will contain—

I. An Original Biography of some distinguished Composer or Performer. II. Interesting Correspondence, or Original Dissertations, on Subjects connected with the Science. III. Detailed Accounts of the Opera, Concerts, and other Musical Performances of the past month. IV. Copious Extracts from the Foreign Musical Journals, giving the reader the latest information of the Progress of the art, and its Professors throughout Europe. V. Liberal and unbiassed Accounts of all Musical Works as they appear. VI. Six or seven pieces of Music, Vocal and Instrumental, English and Foreign, selected with care, and printed with a beauty and accuracy that may safely challenge competition.

Musical Families and Societies, subscribing to the Harmonicon, will be furnished monthly with (in addition to the literary contents of each number), on an average, Six Entire Pieces of Vocal and Instrumental Music, at a price not exceeding the common charge for a single piece, when printed in the usual way. March 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVII. for January.

CONTENTS.

Art I. Popular Defensive Force. II. Lesson's History of Man. III. Hannibal's Passage of the Alps. IV. Webster's American Dictionary. V. India and China Trade. VI. Character of George IV. VII. Scotch Parliamentary Reform. VIII. Heiress of Bruges. IX. Maxwell. X. Belgian Revolution. XI. J. P. Cobbett's Italy. XII. Bruce's Travels. XIII. Machine-Breaking. XIV. Tennyson's Poems. XV. Basil Barrington and Friends. XVI. The Wellington Administration. XVII. European Revolution; List of Books, &c. March 19.

SPLENDID BIBLE. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES. GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

> 'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
> As gifts for little girls and boys,
> But look within, and you will find
> Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Language.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII. Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

No. 15, North American Series.

This number contains articles on Screw Cutting; Locomotive Carriages; finding Velocity of Ships at sea; New Metallic Alloy for pivot Watches; Reflections on the Decline of Science in England; Improved marine Steam Engine Boiler; Claxton's Air Pump; Almanacks for 1831, &c, &c, with a great number of engravings.

Subscriptions received as above at $3 75 per annum. March 19.

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1831. NO. XXXIX.

LORD MANSFIELD.

Continued.

Lord Mansfield, then, surely deserves commendation, instead of censure for making this, as he did, his constant object. Thus, where an attempt was made (Hart v. Weston, Burrow, 2586,) to impugn the validity of a writ, because it was inadvertently recited in the declaration as if it had been issued in vacation, the lawyer, we think, must have had more pedantry than sense who could have refused to agree with him that it was an odious objection, and an endeavor to make the practice of the court a means of eluding justice, rather than obtaining it. He was, however, by no means inclined to depart from the very strictest rules of law, whenever they could, by possibility, be made subservient to the administration of substantial equity and right. In most cases, where technical objections or mere formal impediments stood in the way of justice, he did, indeed, openly express his wish that the merits should have a fair trial; but this was brought about by such means as the practice of the court had long sanctioned. An example may be found during the first week he presided in the King's Bench, when a case of this description was tried, and decided wholly on a point of form, but he afterwards left it to counsel to devise their own plan for bringing it a second time under the notice of the court, so that the real question in dispute might be discussed. So, too, in the case of the King v. Mayor of Caermarthen, (Burrow, 293,) where, a swearing-in under a mandamus having been inadvertently laid in the plea on a wrong day, the judge at Nisi Prius had refused to let the jury receive evidence of a swearing-in on a different day, and a new trial was moved for in the King's Bench, on the ground of misdirection, Lord Mansfield, conceiving the direction to be, in point of law, strictly correct, very properly refused to make the rule absolute: but at the same time, in order that the merits might have a trial, he suggested to counsel, that an application should be made to set aside the verdict, and award a repleader. It would be easy to make out a long list of similar cases, wherein he reconciled rigid law with true equity, and converted the forms of legal practice to their proper purpose and object, the administration of right. 'General rules,' he remarked, on delivering final judgment in this very case, 'are wisely established for attaining justice, with ease certainty, and despatch. But the great end of them being to do justice, the court are to see that it be really attained. This seems to be the true way to come at justice, and what we ought therefore to do; for the true text is "boni judicis est ampliare justitiam," not "jurisdictionem," as ithas been often cited. This is what I would wish to do, if we can do it.'

And this his favorite object of enlarging as it were, the boundaries of justice, he had opportunities of achieving by other means besides his spirited interpretation and equitable administration of the laws already established. As no body of laws, however excellent and however copious, can possibly foresee or provide for the countless variety of circumstances that are made the occasion of ligitation, every judge must of necessity be more or less frequently obliged to take upon himself, in some degree, the office of a legislator; and this duty Lord Mansfield, was called upon to perform far oftener than any magistrate who has ever presided in our courts. The length of time during which he sat on the bench, would of itself be sufficient to account for such a peculiarity as this in his career. But there were also other causes that increased it beyond all proportion to the mere difference in point of duration of judicial authority between himself and other judges. During the latter half of the eighteenth century, the rapid growth and extension of our foreign commerce gave birth to a host of novel sources of ligitation connected, for the most part, with matters which had not only been entirely overlooked by the legislature, but had been very little brought before the notice of the courts, or when they had been referred to them, had been decided with reference not so much to any settled principles as merely to the facts of each particular case. Lord Mansfield treated them in a very different mode. 'Within these thirty years,' said Judge Buller, on giving judgment in the case of Lickbarrow v. Mason, (2 T. R. 63) 'the commercial law of this country has taken a very different turn from what it did before. We find in Ince and Prescott, (1 Atkyns), that Lord Hardwicke himself was proceeding with great caution, not establishing any general principle, but decreeing on all the circumstances put together. Before that period, we find that, in courts of law, all the evidence in mercantile cases was thrown together: they were left generally to a jury, and they produced no general principle. From that time, we all know, the great study has been to find some certain general principle which shall be known to all mankind, not only to rule the particular case then under consideration, but to serve as a guide for the future. Most of us have heard these principles stated, reasoned upon, enlarged, and explained, till we have been lost in admiration at the strength and stretch of the understanding. And I should be very sorry to find myself under a necessity of differing from any case upon this subject which has been decided by Lord Mansfield, who may be truly said to be the founder of the commercial law of this country.'

The fact that there were no precedents or authorities to control the exercise of his judgment in this department of law, as it must add considerably to our admiration of the wisdom that dictated his decisions upon it, so it has also materially contributed to enhance their utility, and to widen the application of them. Not being here, as elsewhere, under the necessity of reasoning on principles that, though they still hold good their footing in Westminster Hall, are virtually obsolete elsewhere, and are totally at variance with the actual customs and exigencies of society; having no occasion, for instance, as in some real property cases, to frame a judgment at the close of the eighteenth century on the same grounds that Glanvil might have done in the reign of Henry the second, he was enabled to indulge without restraint his favorite wish of accommodating the administration of justice to the spirit and the wants of his own time. Among other obvious advantages which this has imparted to his decisions in mercantile cases, it is by no means a trifling one, that they are of equal authority in courts of law and in courts of equity. 'During the fifteen years I have sat on this bench,' said, on one occasion, the distinguished judge whose testimony we have just quoted, (Tooke v. Hollingworth, 5 T. R. 215,) 'I have never known any case which established a distinction between courts of equity and courts of law, on subjects of this kind. I have always thought it highly injurious to the public, that different rules should prevail in different courts on the same mercantile case. My opinion has been uniform upon that subject. It sometimes, indeed, happens that in questions of real property courts of law find themselves fettered with rules, from which they cannot depart, because they are fixed and established rules; though equity may interpose, not to contradict, but to correct, the strict and rigid rules of law. But in mercantile cases, no distinction ought to prevail.' Nor is it in English courts alone, whether of law or equity, that this uniformity subsists with respect to Lord Mansfield's decisions on matters of commercial jurisprudence. As they were invariably framed in conformity with those broad principles of justice and policy which, having received the unanimous assent and sanction of all civilized communities, form the groundwork of what (for want of a more correct term) is called the law of nations, it may safely be affirmed, that there are very few tribunals in Europe where they might not be quoted as authorities.

To all those who are conversant with these judgments it would be superfluous, and to those who are not so, impossible (at least within such space as we could here afford) to point out how much of their intrinsic merit, and of their extended application is attributable to Lord Mansfield's knowledge of the civil law. This splendid monument of human wisdom was to him a well filled storehouse of reasoning, from which a ready supply of principles and of rules might always be drawn to guide him in the decision of cases unprovided for by our own jurisprudence. And it was not only in such cases as these that he derived advantage from it. There are very few departments of our own law on which some light may not be thrown by it, in the way of analogical illustration; and, with respect to very many, as he has frequently had occasion to show, it is of more direct application, being, in fact, the source from which they have been either partially or entirely deduced. The happy facility with which, in each of these points of view, he so often brought it to bear on the legal questions submitted to his notice, must excite the admiration of every one who is competent to appreciate the merits of a judge: that the same quality should ever have been made the ground of censure or invective by any one, would, doubtless, seem little less than incredible, but for the jealousy of the civil law notoriously prevalent among the vulgar of this country. This most unfounded prejudice, we might almost say superstition (and, like all other superstitions, it is the offspring of folly and ignorance), has been turned to account by Junius in a manner that proves the writer either to have been strongly imbued with it himself, or at least to have been perfectly conscious of its prevalence, and, consequently, well aware of the effect he might produce by humoring it. 'In contempt or ignorance of the common law of England,' he writes, addressing himself to Lord Mansfield, 'you have made it your study to introduce into the court where you preside, maxims of jurisprudence unknown to Englishmen. The Roman code, the law of nations, and the opinion of foreign civilians, are your perpetual theme; but whoever heard you mention Magna Charta, or the Bill of Rights, with approbation or respect? By such treacherous arts, the noble simplicity and free spirit of our Saxon laws were first corrupted. The Norman conquest was not complete, until Norman lawyers had introduced their laws, and reduced slavery to a system.' This is quite as well calculated to catch the attention of the mob of readers, and to excite the contempt of sensible men, as the charges so often repeated by the same powerful libeller against Lord Mansfield, that he was a Scotchman, that he had once drunk the health of King James, and that he had a brother who had been in the service of the Pretender. The insinuation, that the spirit of the civil law is incompatible with the spirit of freedom, is, in truth, as admirably adapted to find favor with those who, having no knowledge of the subject, cannot detect the utter falsehood of it, as the assertion concerning the Saxon laws and the Norman lawyers to pass current with such as, exercising no reflection of their own, cannot at once detect it to be worse than irrelevant as connected with the matter under consideration, and do not instantly perceive that whatever principles, and maxims, and statutes the Norman lawyers may have introduced, those very principles and maxims and statutes it is the duty of an English judge to interpret and to administer. But the accusations of Junius cannot always bear, nor, indeed, were they originally intended to meet, calm and impartial investigation. They were addressed to the passions much more than to the reason. They were levelled against men in power at a time when any charge against men in power was sure to find abundance of willing believers in its truth; at a period when there existed a predisposition to condemn, that lent every advantage to the accuser; in a word during a season of political excitement, when the majority of the public never fails to honor at sight the most extravagant drafts upon their credulity, provided they be presented to them by the demagogues or the agitators to whom they may have, for the time, surrendered the use of their senses and their judgment.

What first gave occasion to the direct attack of Junius upon Lord Mansfield, and certainly constituted the most weighty of all the accusations with which he was charged, was his mode of directing the juries, in the various prosecutions for libel which were instituted (1770) by the government against Woodfall, and the other persons concerned in the publication of the letters previously written by the same author. The doctrine delivered in each of these cases, and in others of the like nature, was substantially the same; namely, that it was the province of the jury to decide, not on the legality or illegality of the writings alleged to be libellous, but merely on the fact of their publication, and on the meaning intended to be conveyed by the writer. In the two cases of the King v. Woodfall, which are reported in Lofft. 778, part of the chief justice's charge is thus worded: 'The evidence is very clear; Mr Hardinge has rightly argued that you must see the author meant what was imputed to him. It is not that he is accurate as to dates and facts: you must see what ideas the author meant to convey, according to your sense of what he has written.' Thus the verdict not guilty would negative the fact of the defendant's having published a paper of the tenor and meaning set forth in the indictment; and the verdict of guilty, on the other hand, would affirm both the fact of his having published the paper, and of its bearing, by the intention of the writer, the meaning ascribed to it; the question as to the legality or illegality of that meaning (in other words, as to whether the paper was or was not a libel) remaining a point of law to be determined by the court. That this doctrine was a highly dangerous one, and one that tended to undermine the great constitutional bulwark of the trial by jury, in a quarter where it affords the best barrier against the encroachments of arbitrary power, we certainly are very ready to admit; but to infer therefrom, without any further evidence to warrant the supposition, that Lord Mansfield propounded it merely from an anxiety to extend the authority of the crown, or (what some may think much the same thing) of the judges, is certainly unjust and unreasonable. Even had he been the original inventor of it, we should be fully justified in demanding some evidence to support the charge that he invented it for such a purpose. But this view of the law of libel was one that had been frequently taken by his predecessors on the bench, and had guided them in their administration of it; nor, would it be a very difficult matter to show, that (whatever its effects) it is strictly reconcileable with principle. Indeed the fact, that an act of parliament was considered necessary to place the rights of a jury in cases of libel on the footing they at present hold, is an acknowledgment on the part of the legislature, that the doctrine acted upon by Lord Mansfield was so well established, that it could not be overruled without their interference. Doubtless, the thanks of every friend of liberty are due to Charles Fox for bringing forward the bill that did so overrule it; but Charles Fox acted in the capacity of a legislator, Lord Mansfield fulfilled the duties of a judge; Fox introduced a new law, Mansfield expounded the law as it existed, or at least as he understood it. Some authorities, it is true, leaned the other way; but the general current of precedents, particularly in later times, fully justified his doctrine; and though we do not mean to say, that this was not a case which might have excused, or justified, a disregard of legal authority; yet it must be admitted, that the same persons who blame him for ever having taken upon himself to depart from precedent, cannot, with much show of consistency, also censure him for adhering to it in this instance.

Of the purity of his motives we think there can be no question. Though he never enlisted himself among the advocates of the popular party, he was equally far from being an uncompromising supporter of prerogative. To steer a middle course between the opposite extremes, was in politics his favorite object. Except, however, in so much as every judge must necessarily bring to the bench the same cast of mind which leads him to adopt a particular line of conduct or of opinion elsewhere, he certainly never suffered political considerations of any kind to influence his judicial decisions. But so far was he from entertaining in his own person, or endeavoring to encourage among his colleagues, any feelings of subservience towards government, that it is to him we owe the earliest and most popular act of George the third's reign, which entirely emancipated the judges from the control of the crown, and secured their independence in such a manner as to place them, as far as possible, beyond the reach of temptation to swerve from their duty. Even had he not been himself the author of this measure, the very fact of its having been adopted at all, is quite sufficient to prove, that no motives of self-interest could by possibility have had any undue influence over his conduct. Had he been only a puisne judge, it might have been said that he courted promotion. But he had already attained the summit of his ambition. He was Chief Justice of the King's Bench: the chancellorship he had more than once refused; and the crown had no preferment to offer, of which the prospect could have induced him to feel anxious about cultivating its favor.

Were all these considerations to be entirely neglected, the general integrity and nobility of Lord Mansfield's character ought of itself to exonerate him from all suspicion of ever having introduced corruption into the seats of justice. A strong presumption, to say nothing more, that his opinions on the law of libel were the result of honest and sincere conviction, is afforded by his anxiety to submit them to revisal, and even to correct them himself if it could be shown they were erroneous. This he frequently professed his readiness to do. We quote one instance out of several: (Rex v. Woodfall, Burrow, 2668.) 'That the law, as to the subject matter of the verdict, is as I have stated, has been so often unanimously agreed by the whole court, upon every report I have made of a trial for libel, that it would be improper to make it a question now, in this place. Among those that concurred, the bar will recollect the dead and the living not now here. And we will again declare our opinion, that the direction is right and according to law. This direction, though often given with an express request from me, that if there was the least doubt they would move the court, has never been complained of in court. And yet, if it had been wrong, a new trial would have been of course. It is not now complained of.'

The occasion on which he thus expressed himself, was, when the verdict of the jury in the trial of Woodfall for having published Junius' letter to the King, was brought under the consideration of the court of King's Bench, (November 20, 1770,) in consequence of two cross motions, the one made on behalf of the crown, the other of the defendants. The jury, after deliberating for many hours, had been conveyed in hackney coaches to Lord Mansfield's house in Bloomsbury Square, (the objection of its being out of the county being cured by consent,) and had there delivered to his Lordship their verdict, that the defendant was guilty of printing and publishing only. Nothing further had passed at the time, and the verdict had been entered word for word on the record. Upon this the defendant's counsel moved, either that it should be considered tantamount to an acquittal, or that at all events a new venire should be awarded, on the ground that it did not pronounce him guilty of all the charges contained in the information. The counsel for the crown, on the other hand, applied for a rule to show cause why the verdict should not be entered according to the legal import of the finding of the jury. The opinion of the court, as delivered by Lord Mansfield, was in favor of a venire de novo. It is well worth while to quote another passage from the report, to show how plainly he acknowledged the right of the jury to decide on the meaning and intent of a libel, that is, whether or not it corresponded with the meaning and intent imputed to it in the declaration or indictment. 'If,' he said, 'by "only," they meant to say they did not find the meaning put upon the paper by the information, they should have acquitted the defendant. If they had expressed this to be their meaning, the verdict would have been inconsistent and repugnant; for they ought not to find the defendant guilty, unless they find the meaning put upon the paper by the information: and judgment of acquittal ought to have been entered up. If they had expressed their meaning, in any of the other ways, the verdict would not have been affected; and judgment ought to be entered upon it. It is impossible to say, with certainty, what the jury really did mean. Probably, they had different meanings. If they could possibly mean that which, if expressed, would acquit the defendant, he ought not to be concluded by this verdict. It is possible, some of them might mean not to find the whole sense and explanation put upon the paper by the innuendos in the information. If a doubt arises from an ambiguous and unusual word in the verdict, the court ought to lean in favor of a venire de novo. We are under the less difficulty; because, in favor of a defendant, though the verdict be full, the court may grant a new trial. And we are of opinion, upon the whole of the case, that there should be a venire de novo.'

With this mode of disposing of the case, one would think it impossible to find fault. And yet even for this decision, Lord Mansfield was abundantly visited with the scurrility of the popular press, which ever since the institution of the proceedings against Wilkes, some years previous, (1764,) had plentifully poured out the vials of its wrath against the Chief Justice for the part he had taken in them. Abuse, and calumny, and invective had been all along doing their utmost to impugn the justice of his decisions, to misrepresent his motives, in short to blacken in every way his character as a judge. Every topic of accusation dwelt on by Junius, and many more to boot, had been previously expatiated upon with a degree of rancor and unfairness not often to be met with in the annals even of political hostility; and indeed Junius himself professed to do nothing more than collect, as he phrases it, these scattered sweets, till their united virtue should torture the sense. In the opinion of men of sense and calm reflection, these aspersions on such a character as that of Mansfield were like nothing more than the tinkling of Priam's feeble weapon against the shield of Pyrrhus. But with the multitude they had their effect. Wilkes and liberty, (or as his Lordship's old schoolfellow, Bishop Newton chooses to expound it, 'in plain English, the devil and licentiousness') had set the whole nation in a ferment; and it fell to the lot of very few to preserve, amid the universal turbulence and excitement of party feelings, anything like cool consideration or dispassionate judgment. Under these circumstances, it is hardly surprising that Lord Mansfield should, for some years of his life, have been in reality, as his enemies did not fail to remind him, the most unpopular man in England. How far the fact of his having incurred so much odium is a proof of his having deserved it, will be best understood by those who have been in the habit of observing by what sort of impulses the veerings of the weathercock of popularity are most commonly guided. We shall presently have an opportunity of showing what degree of importance he himself attached to them.

(To be continued.)

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

PRESUMPTION.

1. Whether a fact which is unknown, is to be presumed, from its usual connexion with other facts which are known, it seems, is properly, in all cases, a question for the jury. The modern practice, however, of taking verdicts, subject to the opinion of the court, has led to adjudications upon matters of fact as questions of law, and questions of fact, which formerly were determined by the jury alone, have now become questions of law, and the jury is said tobe concluded by them, as in the case of the presumption of payment of a bond, the legal presumption of fraud, &c. Where, however, the presumption is not urged as a rule of law binding upon the jury, but by way of evidence, to which the jury may give such credit as it deserves, whether a fact shall be presumed or not, is ordinarily a question for the jury. By Stebbins, senator. Schauber vs. Jackson, 2 Wend. 15.

2. After a lapse of 32 years, a release to a cestui que trust will be presumed against the heirs at law of a trustee. Moore vs. Jackson, 4 Wend. 58.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

1. Where the course of business between a merchant in the country and a merchant in town is such, that the country merchant transmits to his correspondent in town his produce and such other articles as he has to sell, and the merchant in town, in return, supplies him with such articles of merchandise as he deals in, and fills up his orders by procuring from other merchants on credit such articles as he does not deal in, and charges them to the merchant in the country, the latter is not liable to the seller for any articles thus procured, although he directs the purchase of an article which he knows the merchant in town does not deal in, and the seller is informed for whom the purchase is made, if the merchant in the country has funds in the hands of the merchant in the city, and has never authorized him to pledge his credit on the purchase of any articles thus ordered, or recognised such act. Jaques vs. Todd, 3 Wend. 83.

2. The agency in such case is special, without authority to pledge the credit of the principal. Ib.

3. Where a person for a series of years forged the name of his friend as the indorser of his notes and bills, with the knowledge of his friend, who, although judgments were obtained and executions issued against him in suits on such forged indorsements, never disavowed such acts until the person committing the forgeries had absconded and fled from justice, it was held, in a case where the indorser was sued and suffered a default, and attempted no defence until after the escape of the maker of the notes, that proof of these facts was admissible in evidence, and that from it the jury might imply an authority from the indorser to the maker thus to use his name. Weed vs. Carpenter, 4 Wend. 219.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

A surety extinguishing a debt by the payment of only one half its amount, is not entitled to recover more from his principal than the amount actually paid. Bonney vs. Seely, 2 Wend. 481.

PRIVILEGE FROM ARREST.

A party attending a reference is entitled to privilege from arrest; but it extends only to a reasonable time after the hearing. Clark vs. Grant, 2 Wend. 257.

REFERENCE.

Referees will not be ordered in the first instance to return the proceedings and testimony before them, nor their decisions upon the admission or rejection of evidence, nor their reasons for their final report. They will not be required to do so unless in the opinion of the court, after the coming in of papers on both sides, such proceeding should be necessary. Curtis vs. Staring, 4 Wend. 198.

SALE.

1. A sale of chattels where the possession is continued in the vendor without any agreement as to such continuance, is equally fraudulent and void against creditors as if such agreement existed, except in special cases and for special reasons to be shown to and approved of by the court. Jennings vs. Carter, 2 Wend. 446.

2. The facts that a vendee had not a farm or forage to keep cattle on, is not a sufficient reason to justify the continuance of the possession of cattle in a vendor. The evidence in relation to an excuse offered for the continuance of such possession being uncontradicted, it belongs to the court, and not to the jury, to decide the question of fraud. Ib.

3. A contract made in the city of New York for the sale of 500 bales of cotton, to be delivered on its arrival at New York from New Orleans, at any time between the date of the contract, which was the ninth day of February, and the first day of June thereafter, to be paid for in cash on delivery, the cotton to be weighed and two per cent tare to be allowed, is an executory contract, and the title to the cotton does not pass. The vendors are not chargeable for the non-delivery of the cotton until its arrival at New York; and the specification of the time is only a limitation fixing the period beyond which neither of the parties are bound by the contract, and not an agreement that the cotton shall at all events be delivered by the specified day. Russell vs. Nicoll, 3 Wend. 112.

4. A party contracting for the sale and delivery of a large quantity of any particular item of merchandize, (for instance, 500 bales of cotton,) on its arrival at a particular port, is not bound to deliver a portion only of the article, the whole not having arrived. The vendee not being bound to receive, the vendor is not obliged to deliver a quantity less than the whole; the obligation being reciprocal. Ib.

5. A warranty of the quality of an article in the sale of chattels when made, is an essential part of a bargain, and should be stated in the note or memorandum; the omission of it renders the contract void, and parol evidence is inadmissible to take the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds. Peltier vs. Collins, 3 Wend. 459

6. There is no contract, if there be a material difference between the note of the bargain delivered by a broker to the vendee and that delivered to the vendor.

7. In an action of assumpsit for the recovery of the price of an article sold at a stipulated sum, a defendant may give evidence showing the true value of the article sold in case of a breach of warranty, in reduction of the amount of the recovery claimed, as well in case of a sale of warranty as in cases of fraud; such evidence being allowed to avoid circuity of action, and to prevent further litigation upon the same matter. And it seems that a defendant would be allowed to give such evidence in a case of warranty, although the article sold was not returned to the vendor. M'Allister vs. Reab, 4 Wend. 483.

8. Where a bill of sale was made by a tavern keeper of all his household furniture, &c, and on the same day the vendee executed a lease of the same property to a brother of the vendor, who at the time resided with the vendor as a hired man, and the vendor and the lessee continued to reside together, and the business of tavern keeping was continued, it was held, that the judge ought to have instructed the jury that if they believed the lease was real, and bona fide intended to put the lessee in possession of the property, and that he actually took possession of the same, and conducted the public house in which they were, then the sale to the vendee was valid, and he was entitled to recover damages against a sheriff who took the same by virtue of an execution against the vendor; but that if they believed that the lease was colorable, and that it was intended by the parties that the vendor should continue in the possession and enjoyment of the property, then the whole transaction was void, and the defendant was entitled to a verdict. Archer vs. Hubbell, 4 Wend. 514.

---

SENTENCE OF ADMIRALTY COURT.

1. The sentence of an instance court of admiralty, proceeding in rem, condemning property seized as forfeited, is final and conclusive to change the property, and the question of forfeiture cannot be inquired into collaterally in any other court of the same country where such condemnation takes place. The same rule prevails as to the decisions of admiralty courts proceeding as prize courts agreeably to the law of nations. In England, the sentence of such courts is held final and conclusive against all the world, not only as changing the property, but as precluding an inquiry into the facts of the case, either directly or collaterally, by the courts of any other country. So also the law has been holden to be by the Supreme Court of the United States, and by some of the states; in New York, however, it is otherwise. The rule there is, that the sentence of a foreign court of admiralty, condemning property as good and lawful prize according to the law of nations, is conclusive to change the property, but is only prima facie evidence of the facts on which the condemnation purports to have been founded; and in a collateral action, such evidence may be rebutted by showing that no such facts did in reality exist. By Walworth, Ch. Ocean Insurance Company vs. Francis, 2 Wend. 64.

2. The judgment or decree of a court having jurisdiction of the subject matter, is evidence of the grounds upon which it is rendered; but from the terms of the proposition two things must appear: 1. That the court had jurisdiction; 2. The grounds of the decree. A decree pronouncing a vessel forfeited, 'for a breach of some or one of the laws relating to trade and navigation,' amounts to no more than saying that the vessel is condemned 'for some cause or other,' and will not be recognised as a judgment. The sentence should establish a violation of some precise law; and where in itself it is insufficient, it is unnecessary to inquire whether it has been successfully impeached by the facts of the case. By Spencer, senator. Ib.

---

SET OFF.

Compensation for the part performance of a contract by a defendant cannot be set off against the damages of the plaintiff occasioned by the non-performance of the residue; and it was accordingly holden, where one party agreed to saw by a given time 300,000 feet of boards, at a stipulated price per 1000 feet, and failed to saw the whole quantity, that though he had sawed 144,000 feet, which had been received by the other party, that a compensation for the quantity sawed could not be set off against the claim for damages for the omission to saw the residue. Stephens vs. Beard, 4 Wend. 604.

---

SLANDER.

1. In an action of slander, proof of the character of the plaintiff subsequent to the speaking of the words, is not admissible, although the character offered to be proved is of such a description that it could not have been caused by the speaking of the words, i. e. the defendant will not be permitted to prove that the plaintiff is reputed a common prostitute, when the words charged are that she is a thief. Douglass vs. Tousey, 2 Wend. 352.

2. General character is the estimation in which a person is held in the community where he has resided, and, ordinarily, the members of that community are the only proper witnesses to testify as to such character. Ib.

3. A witness who goes to the place of the former residence of a party to learn his character, will not be allowed to testify as to the result of his inquiries. Ib.

4. Words spoken by a person who has preferred a criminal complaint against another in the presence of a magistrate, on the defendant's being brought before him on warrant, averring the truth of his complaint, are not actionable. Allen vs. Crofoot, 2 Wend. 515.

5. An action of slander may be brought for the charge of a crime, though not couched in direct and positive terms; the imputation of a crime may be as effectually made by way of interrogation as by an affirmative allegation. Gorham vs. Iver, 2 Wend. 534.

6. If the words spoken, in connexion with the circumstances of the case leave no reasonable doubt that it was the intention of the defendant to impress upon the minds of the hearers the belief that a forgery had been committed by the plaintiff, an action lies. Ib.

7. In an action of slander, it is unnecessary to preface each count with all the inducements and allegations contained in the first; a reference in the second count to the allegations in the first is sufficient. Loomis vs. Swick, 3 Wend. 205.

8. Where, in the first count of a declaration in slander, it was alleged, in the introductory part of it, that the plaintiff was a merchant, which was omitted in the second and third counts, but the words were alleged to have been spoken in another discourse of and concerning the plaintiff 'in his business of a merchant, and of and concerning his said books of account which he kept with his customers and others, as such merchant as aforesaid,' it was held, that the reference to the first count was sufficient to cure the defect. Ib.

9. A plaintiff is not bound to prove all the words as laid in the declaration; if he proves some which are laid and which are actionable, it is enough. Ib.

10. Where, in answer to an inquiry, 'Were there any failures yesterday?' it was said, 'Not that I know of, but I understand that there is trouble with the Messrs S.' it was holden that such words being spoken of the plaintiffs as merchants were actionable in themselves. Sewall vs. Catlin, 3 Wend. 291.

11. Any words which in common acceptation imply a want of credit or responsibility, when spoken of a merchant, are actionable. Where such words were spoken by a defendant, evidence that another person heard the report that the plaintiffs had failed, and in consequence withdrew from them business to a large amount, is inadmissible in support of a charge for special damage, unless the report thus acted upon is traced to the defendant. Ib.

12. A bank director is not justified in making a communication to a co-director in the public streets, affecting the credit or responsibility of a merchant, where there is no evidence of such communication being confidential. At a meeting of the board of directors, he would be justified in communicating to his associates any report which he might have heard in relation to the solvency or circumstances of the customers of the bank, or probably of any other person. His motive in such case would be presumed to be innocent, which presumption could only be repelled by proof of express malice. Ib.

13. In slander, where the words are spoken in a foreign language, the proper mode of declaring is to state the words in the foreign language, and to aver the signification of them in English, and that they were understood by those who heard them. Wormouth vs. Cramer, 3 Wend. 394.

14. In an action of slander, particular facts which might form links in the chain of circumstantial evidence against the plaintiff, cannot be received under the general issue in mitigation of damages; and it was accordingly held, that proof that the plaintiff was in possession of the property alleged to have been stolen, and returned it to the owner about the time of the prosecution of another person for the stealing of another article alleged to have been taken at the same time, it was inadmissible under the general issue. Wormouth vs. Cramer, 3 Wend. 395.

15. In slander, where the plaintiff in his declaration after setting forth the words spoken, avers that the defendant by means of the words, insinuated, and meant to be understood as charging the plaintiff with the crime imputed, and that the defendant was so understood by the hearers; whether or not such was the intention of the defendant, is a question of fact, to be determined by the jury upon the evidence adduced in support of the averment. Gibson vs. Williams, 4 Wend. 320.

16. A defendant who couches his slander in ambiguous terms, in the hope of blasting the reputation of his neighbor without incurring legal responsibility, is not entitled to an indulgent construction of his words either from the court or the jury. Ib.

17. The understanding and opinions of witnesses are not received in evidence, except in matters of science and a few special cases resting upon peculiar circumstances. It is the business of witnesses to state facts, and it is the province of the jury, under the direction of the court, to draw the necessary inferences or conclusions. Ib.

18. Slander will not lie for charging a witness with perjury whilst testifying before arbitrators, if, after the oath is administered to him, new parties are added to the arbitration and new matters in controversy are submitted to be passed upon, and the charge be made in reference to what is said by the witness after such addition of parties and matters in controversy. Bullock vs. Koon, 4 Wend. 251.

19. It seems that in testing the materiality of testimony charged to be false, reference must be had to the issue as it existed when the oath was administered to the witness. Ib.

20. Slander will not lie for saying that a particular article manufactured by another, or in which he deals, is not good, or in other words, is bad; or for saying that the articles manufactured by him, or in which he deals, are bad; or that they are not as good as articles of a similar kind manufactured by another, or are inferior to articles manufactured by such other, unless special damage is alleged. Tobias vs. Harland, 4 Wend. 537.

21. Where the words are spoken not of the trader or manufacturer, but of the quality of the articles made or dealt in, to render them actionable, per se, they must import that the plaintiff is guilty of a deceit or mal-practice in the making or vending, or of a want of skill in the manufacturing of the articles. Ib.

22. In slander, evidence that the defendant had been told by a third person that the plaintiff was guilty of the crime imputed to him, is inadmissible. Mapes vs. Weeks, 4 Wend. 659.

23. So evidence of general reports that the defendant is guilty of the imputed offence is inadmissible, as well in mitigation, as in justification. Ib.

24. It seems, however, that such reports would be received in evidence in mitigation, under circumstances showing an absence of malice and an admission of the falsity of the charge. Ib.

---

STAYING PROCEEDING.

Where judgments rendered by the Supreme Court have been reversed in the Court of Errors with costs, and venires de novo awarded, the proceedings of the plaintiff will be stayed until the payment of the costs in error. Jackson vs. Schauber, 4 Wend. 216.

---

STRUCK JURY.

The testing the genuineness of a signature to a note, is a not question of intricacy demanding a struck jury; nor is a controversy between parties, exciting much speculation and interest in a county, so important as to induce the granting of such jury. Poncher vs. Livingston, 2 Wend. 296.

SURETY.

A surety for the payment of rent to a landlord, who engages, in case of default by the tenant to make up the deficiency, and fully satisfy the conditions and agreements of the tenant, without requiring notice of non-payment or proof of a demand being made of the tenant, has no right to call upon the landlord to distrain the tenant's goods, and is not exonerated from his covenant, though the landlord, on request, refuses so to do. Ruggles vs. Holden, 3 Wend. 216.

2. Where application was made to A to lend his name as a maker to a negotiable note for the benefit of B, upon being told that B could procure C and D to sign a note with him for the amount wanted, and A accordingly signed such note, after the same had been signed by B, C, and D, and when the same fell due was compelled to pay the note, it was held, in an action brought by A against the three others to recover the money thus paid that the same could not be maintained; that C and D were co-sureties with A, and were liable only for their aliquot proportion of the money paid, to be recovered in a separate action against each. Beaman vs. Blanchard, 4 Wend. 432.

2. An indemnity given to A, under the circumstances of this case, by a third person, would have been no bar to a recovery upon the implied promise, had the defendants all been principals. Ib.

4. The omission of the comptroller, for eight years, to prosecute the bond of a commissioner of loans, forfeited by the non-payment of interest, constitutes no defence to the surety, although for three years subsequent to the default, the principal was solvent and able to pay, and at the time of the commencement of the suit was insolvent and unable to indemnify his surety. The case of The People v. Janson, (7 Johns. Rep. 332.) is in this respect overruled. The People vs. Russell, 4 Wend. 570.

---

TRIAL.

1. A party is entitled to poll the jury, where a sealed verdict is brought in, unless he has expressly assented to waive the right. Jackson vs. Hawks, 3 Wend. 619.

2. It seems, that a party has a right to call and examine witnesses who have arrived in court, after the proofs are closed, and before the opposite party has summed up the cause to the jury. Leggett vs. Boyd, 3 Wend. 376.

3. Where the principal and interest due on a bond exceed the penalty, the jury, on the trial of a cause, ought to give the excess in damages. If, however, nominal damages only are assessed by a jury, the excess cannot subsequently be taxed by the taxing office and included in the costs, as is the practice where the judgment goes by default or confession. Cook vs. Tousey, 3 Wend. 444.

4. Where the nature of the proceeding or the form of action or pleadings gives the opposite party notice to be prepared to produce a writing or instrument, if necessary to falsify his adversary's evidence, no other notice to produce it is requisite. Story vs. Patten, 3 Wend. 486.

5. According it was held, that notice to produce an execution was not necessary in an action against a constable for not returning the process and paying over the money, where, in the declaration, the execution and the judgment on which it issued were fully described. Ib.

6. Notice on the trial to a party to produce a written instrument, where there was no evidence that it was in his possession, and where his residence was shown to be fifteen miles from the place of trial, it seems, would have been adjudged insufficient had the notice been necessary. Ib.

7. If it is apparent that the witness is in the interest of the adverse party, it is proper to permit the direct examination to take the character of a cross examination. The People vs. Mather, 5 Wend. 229.

8. If the question relate to introductory matter, and be designed only to lead the witness with the more expedition to what is material to the issue, it may be put, though it be leading. Ib.

9. Putting a question in the alternative form as whether or not a party did a certain act, specifying it, does not remove the objection to its being leading. Ib.

10. It is not allowable to put a question which assumes a fact proved which is not proved, even on cross examination. Ib.

11. It rests in the discretion of the court before whom a trial is had, whether or not to permit the re-examination of a witness after the lapse of a day, and after the examination of other witnesses; the Supreme Court will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion but in a very flagrant case. Ib.

12. In a trial for a conspiracy to kidnap a person, who was actually carried off, and whom it was believed was murdered, the prosecutor asked a witness, whether on a certain evening he was at the house of a certain person? and whether on that evening a hack or covered carriage arrived there, in which carriage it was alleged the person kidnapped was? the witness declined answering, alleging that his answer might implicate him in the transaction respecting the person kidnapped, and might expose him to infamy, it was held, that the witness was not bound to answer. Ib.

13. When the direct answer to a question will disgrace a witness, and fix a stain of infamy upon his character, he is not bound to answer; and that whether the question be material or not to the merits of the cause in which he is examined. It is not enough, however, for the witness to allege that his answer will have a tendency to expose him to infamy or disgrace; the question must be such that the answer to it, which he may be required by the obligation of his oath to give, will directly show his infamy, and the court will see that such must be the case before they will allow the excuse to prevail. Ib.

14. Where the answer to a question will have a tendency to implicate the witness in a crime of misdemeanor, or will expose him to a fine or forfeiture, he is not bound to answer; and when he claims to be excused from answering, the court are to determine whether the answer he may give to the question can criminate him directly or indirectly, by furnishing evidence of his guilt, or by establishing one of many facts, which together may constitute a chain of testimony sufficient to warrant his conviction, but which one fact of itself could not produce such result; and if they think the answer may in any way criminate him, they must allow his privilege, without exacting from him to explain how he would be criminated by the answer which the truth may oblige him to give. Ib.

15. The proper question to be put to a witness called to impeach another, is, whether he would believed him on oath. The opposite party may then go into a cross-examination to ascertain the ground of the unfavorable opinion, the means of knowledge of the character of the witness impeached, and the source, extent, and the duration of the unfavorable reports. Ib.

16. Counsel entrusted by his client with papers relating to the action depending in court, is not obliged to produce them, nor can he be compelled as a witness to state their contents. Jackson vs. Denison, 4 Wend. 558.

17. Notice to produce in evidence, on the trial of a cause, a written document, given in a suit before a justice, is good and operative in the Common Pleas, if such suit is subsequently removed into such court by appeal. Wilson vs. Gale, 4 Wend. 623.

---

EVIDENCE.

1. Persons who do not believe in the existence of a God, or in a future state of existence, are not competent witnesses. Wakefield vs. Ross, 5 Mason, 16.

2. The ordinary presumption is, that all the partners have access to the partnership books, and know the entries therein; but this is a mere presumption from the ordinary course of business, and may be repelled by any circumstances, which lead to a contrary presumption. U. S. Bank vs. Binney, 176.

3. Where goods are seized, and claimed as forfeited as part of the cargo, the onus probandi is on the government to prove, that such goods were part of the cargo on board at the time of the offence.

The claimant may file a special defence on that point, if he chooses; but it is also in issue on the general denial of the allegations of the libel. United States vs. an open boat, 232.

4. Where certain merchants had entered into a written contract to subscribe certain sums for a voyage to Africa, &c, and authorized their agent to draw bills for the amount if he fitted out the expedition, and he drew a bill on one of the subscribers for the amount subscribed by him, to pay for goods bought for the voyage on the credit of the written authority above stated, which was shown to the payee of the bill; it was held, that the agent, though drawer, was a competent witness to prove the facts in a suit brought by the payee against the subscriber, upon a constructive acceptance of the bill, it having been dishonored, when presented for acceptance. Lowber vs. Shaw, 241.

5. If a bill admits the defendant to be a purchaser of the legal title, and the plaintiff sets up an equitable title, and demands a conveyance of the legal title to himself, he must aver and prove all the material facts to entitle him to such conveyance. If he relies on notice in the purchaser, he must aver it in his bill, and if not admitted by the answer, he must prove the notice before he can have relief.

A purchaser, who chooses to answer the bill generally, need not aver, that he is a purchaser without notice. The plaintiff must prove notice.

Notice, if denied by the answer, must be proved by two witnesses, or by one witness and circumstances. McNeil vs. Magee, 244.

6. Notwithstanding an order of the Court, closing all testimony in a cause, after a limited time, under a commission, the Court will enlarge it, upon proof of newly discovered evidence, which the party could not procure to be taken under such commission, the same having come to his knowledge after the execution thereof. Schooner Ruby, 451.

---

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1831.

---

Hayes' popular View of the Law of Real property.

(Continued)

The faults of the English System of Real property Law are its insecurity, dilatoriness and expense.

The insecurity has not been such as to affect very materially the value of land in the market. Moneyed men have in seasons of difficulty and danger fled for safety to the soil. 'Purchasers and mortgagees repose soundly on their "parchment couches," though often liable to be aroused from their territorial visions by some latent legal or equitable claimant.'

Besides the minor risks occasioned by the unrecorded state of the evidence of title, the tedious and expensive searches and inquiries and the dispersed condition of the muniments of title,—the purchaser must always incur the hazard of ascertaining whether he has obtained the legal title, It is difficult for him to know whether or not, he is affected with knowledge, of some other existing right. Here the doctrines of 'notice' and 'constructive notice' apply. What is meant by 'actual notice' does not seem difficult to understand. But the other species of notice, ('constructive notice')—is not so clear. It may exist in law, and yet the purchaser be entirely innocent of it. Where he has some knowledge of a fact or circumstance (as possession or the exercise of an act of ownership) which, if investigated, would have conducted him immediately or through a long train of facts and circumstances, to a knowledge of the existing right or claim, he is said to have constructive notice.

So constructive notice to an agent is constructively imputed to the principal, although never communicated.

To acquire land with either of these kinds of notice, is in law, to acquire it dishonestly.

The legal Estate may, therefore, be obtained without any advantage to the Purchaser.

The history of attendant Terms, 'a mysterious name,' in the law, is briefly given and some strictures offered on them.

If the rule were, that a purchaser possessing himself of land, without knowledge of the trust affecting it, is entitled to keep it, would be intillible.

As it now is, the apparent owner is never safe; because the prior legal title may exist under some suppressed deed, and because the owner may be made a Trustee by having 'notice' of some Equitable right fastened upon him.

The remedy for some of these defects which has been proposed is a General Register to be established in London for the registration of Instruments affecting the title to real Estate in England and Wales.

John Tyrrell of Lincoln's Inn, has the merit of leading in this plan. The term, real Estate, for this purpose, embraces all interests in money to arise from the sale of land or secured upon it, and to other subjects falling within the description of personal estate, but connected with the title to real property.

The author discusses at some length the principles upon which such register ought to be founded, which would be uninteresting to our readers.

One of the great difficulties to be encountered in establishing this system lies in the question, to what extent the equitable principles as to 'notice' shall be introduced. It seems to be admitted that these principles must be limited in their operation.

'If on the ground of "notice" or want of "notice," a registered legal title may be destroyed by an unregistered Equitable interest, and a registered equitable interest excluded by an unregistered legal title, the flood-gate is at once opened to all the difficulties and uncertainties, in point of law, as to what constitutes notice, and, in point of evidence, as to the fact of notice, with the attendant evils, litigation and perjury. Besides, the machinery of legal estates and terms of years, now employed to fence round a title, would, in that state of things, be still retained.'

The arguments for and against the exclusion of notice are then stated at large.

One of the arguments is grounded on the uncertainty of any definition of 'notice' which can be given, so as to define where 'constructive notice' ends, and 'actual notice' begins. There is a difficulty in the practical application of the principles to the circumstance of every case. It is contended that the only safe way is to throw the matter upon the judicature.

A majority of the commissioners appointed to consider this subject reported that it was, on the whole, expedient, that actual notice of the unregistered deed should not affect the priority of a registered deed for a valuable consideration.

The Report holds the following language on this subject:—

'The reasons against expressly denying effect to notice, seems to be in substance as follows:—One of the chief ultimate objects of law is to protect against fraud. Now it is necessary for the guidance of men in the ordinary conduct of their affairs, that the rules of law should be clear and strict; but to defeat contrivances, in whatever form they may be devised, for taking unfair advantages of the strict rule, the jurisdiction to relieve against fraud should not be strict, but large. The principal object of a register is, to protect fair purchasers against prior secret deeds; this protection is not wanted against a deed which is known. The man who assists a fraudulent seller or mortgagor in defeating a fair purchaser, is not himself a fair purchaser, and a law which should assist him against a fair purchaser, would be a law in favor of fraud; the fraud, indeed, would be of an aggravated nature, as it would have the character of conspiracy. Although no person might be induced to pay the full value for an estate under such circumstances or actually to advance money upon it is a security on lawful terms, advantages might be held out to a purchaser, and especially the property might be given in discharge of an existing debt, or made a security for it; in which case the temptation to the debtor to release himself from immediate pressure might be irresistible, and the creditor might take without scruple whatever he could get from the debtor to satisfy a just demand. Ignorance, forgetfulness, improvidence, and hurry, frequently occasion the neglect of forms, though simple and of the utmost importance, such as enrolments of bargains and sales, surrenders and admittances in case of copyholds, presentments of customary deeds the forms of execution of wills of land, and o.

powers, and many other forms; and such neglect is peculiarly liable to happen in small transactions, which are entitled to the protection of the law no less, and perhaps require it more, than those of magnitude. The registration of deeds, too, must be entrusted by parties to their professional agents, who, it is to be expected, would be sometimes careless or forgetful, and sometimes wilfully or corruptly negligent; so that whatever care were taken to make known the new law, and to facilitate compliance with its provisions, neglect of registration would occasionlly happen, and every instance in which a person with full notice should by means of the new law defeat a just purchaser, would be considered as a proof of the unjust rigor of the law, and tend to render it odious. Again, as dealings on confidence would still be carried on without registration, a dangerous temptation to the abuse of such confidence would be created. Besides, there must be some form, however simple, essential to validity of registration, and mistakes in this respect must be liable to happen, however rarely. Again, even although reasonable diligence were used, and especially if delay occurred in registering a deed, there might be an interval in which superior activity might gain priority for a subsequent deed. This, if done in order to defeat a just right acquired, would be fraud. On such grounds it is, that the Courts of Equity in this country, and also in Ireland, have determined that actual notice of an unregistered purchase deed shall deprive a purchaser of the benefit of his registry, fraud being by some of the judges expressly stated as the grounds of these decisions; and the same rule prevails generally in the United States of America.

'As fraud is the ground on which it is proposed to give effect to actual notice against registry, it appears to be generally agreed, that no such effect ought to be given to notice by construction of law, which is no proof of knowledge, nor even raises a fair presumption of it; and it is contended by those who think that the effect of actual notice should not be taken away, that sufficient guard would be provided against effect being given to constructive notice, if the preference to be given to deeds according to priority of registration were enacted in strong terms, with an express saving of the jurisdiction of equity in cases of fraud; or if there were a provision, that notice simply, or notice by construction of law, should not affect the rule of priority without actual fraud; and further, that there are many cases of fraud, of which notice is an ingredient, which must escape the jurisdiction of equity, if, in consequence of an express enactment that notice should not have the proposed effect, it came to be considered as not an ingredient towards constituting a case of fraud.

'It is contended on the same side, that a statement which has been brought forward, that the effect given to notice has materially impaired the benefits of the registers actually established, is not founded in fact; that cases in this country and in Ireland, in which an unregistered deed has prevailed against a registered deed, by aid of the doctrine of notice, are not so numerous as to have had much effect in producing neglect of registration, and that very few, if any of them, have worked injustice in the particular instance: and that other means beside the hope of obtaining protection from notice, have probably occasioned neglect of registering in Yorkshire, and Middlesex, and in Ireland. That the same neglect is not likely to happen when registering shall be universal, and shall be put ou an improved footing, and its benefits shall be fully understood; that in fact the hope of escaping from the loss of an estate through the means of a Chancery suit, and only in case knowledge of the deed shall be brought home to another party, is not likely to lead to many cases of neglect of registration; and further, that should such inconvenience be found to exist, the remedy will be easy by increasing the rigor of the law; but that if the rigor of the law now to be established shall be found to work injustice and mischief, there will be no remedy for the time past, and there may be danger that the remedy applied for the future may be to abrogate or to annul by gradual disuse the whole law of registration.

'The reasons in favor of excluding the interference of Courts of Equity on the ground of notice, may be thus stated:—

'If the public good require that a purchaser, to have the protection of the law, should comply with a form, and that form be made simple and easy, a purchaser omitting the form has no just ground of complaint that the protection is not given. If the omission were not wilful, he should still blame only his own want of care, or that of his agents. It is greatly for the public good, that civil rights should be capable of being ascertained without difficulty; and for this purpose the law on which they depend should, as far as possible, be general, and not varying in different circumstances, which would lead to mistakes; they should be supported by evidence, not open to doubt, and as little as possible exposed to falsification. For these reasons, it has been thought necessary, in most countries, to require the title of land to be proved by written documents, and thereby prevent attempts to enforce pretended claims by parol testimony or circumstantial evidence. A registered title possesses the advantages of certainty and security in a high degree; but they will be impaired, if preference be given to an unregistered over a registered deed, on the ground of notice. The fact of notice will in every case be possible, and in many probable; there will be a temptation therefore to the unregistered claimant to commence a suit, in the hope that the other claimant may confess notice, or circumstances from which it may be implied; and there may also be a temptation to support the suit so commenced by false evidence.

To be continued.

---

A Fat Case.—A case arising out of the transactions of the British Iron Company came before the Court of Exchequer last week, the briefs to Counsel on which consisted of about seventeen reams of paper; the statement of the bill, the answers, and pleadings, occupied about 13,000 folios and eightyeight large skins of parchment were filled with the plaintiff's interrogatories. The examination of witnesses cost 1,500*l.* a side, and 2,000*l.* expended in procuring office copies of the evidence. The suit which has caused this enormous expense was instituted by three gentlemen, named Small, Shears, and Taylor, to set aside a contract which they entered into in 1825, to purchase some mines in Staffordshire of Mr Attwood, for 550,000*l.* which the allege were not worth more than 160,000*l.*

The cause came before the Court with the view of procuring further evidence, so that there is no prospect of the suit being brought to a conclusion.

Lord Lyndhurst has been sitting, for some days past, in the little Hall of Gray's Inn, where his Lordship's Court presented a marked contrast with that over which he lately presided did. His Lordship is seated at a table on the floor of the Hall, with the officers of the Court near him; the rest of the family party (for it really looks like one), being composed of some half-dozen barristers, an equal number of attorneys, two or three attorneys' clerks, and, perhaps, a solitary spectator! There are no noisy interruptions, no calls for silence; indeed, Gray's Inn Hall appears to be a perfect terra incognita to those worthy gossips whose 'sweet voices,' have proved a source of so much annoyance to Lord Brougham, at Lincoln's Inn.

---

Lord Thurlow's Resignation.—When it was resolved to deprive Lord Thurlow of the Seals, none of the Ministers seemed willing to be the person to demand them (which it was desirable should be done personally), from the ungracious reception which it was supposed he would meet with. At last Lord Melville was prevailed upon to undertake the task. He adopted the following for that purpose:—The evening before he sent a note to the Chancellor, informing him that he proposed having the honor of breakfasting with his Lordship next day, and that he had some very particular business to settle with him. On his coming next morning Lord Thurlow said to him, 'I know the business on which you have come. You shall have the bag (purse) and seals. There they are,' pointing to a table on which he had placed them, 'and there is your breakfast,' of which they partook very sociably together. Lord Melville said that he never saw Lord Thurlow in better humor, and they parted apparently very good friends.—The Correspondence of the Right Honorable Sir John Sinclair.

---

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A letter to the Right Hon. Henry, Baron Brougham and Vaux, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, on the expediency of establishing a General Registry of Births. By Richard Matthews, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

A Dissertation on the Nature of the various Proceedings in the Masters' Office in the Court of Chancery, with Directions for carrying the most useful References to a Master into effect; to which are added, a few Observations illustrative of the Practice in the Office of the Accountant General, with an Appendix of Precedents of the different Proceedings, taken from actual Practice. By W. H. Bennett, Esq. of the Middle Temple. 8vo.

The Horseman's Manual; being a Treatise on Soundness, the Law of Warranty, and generally on the Laws relating to Horses. By R. S. Surtees, Gent. 12mo.

Observations on the Causes of the Evils resulting from the Tithe System, with Suggestions for a Remedy. By a Barrister.

An Address to the King, the Lords and Commons, on the Representative Constitution of England. By H. A. Mereweather, Esq., Serjeant at Law.

Some Observations on the necessity of reforming the House of Lords, considered as the Court of ulti mate Appeal in the Administration of Justice.

A Review of the Objections taken by an 'Observer,' and by Mr Raines, on the Lord Chancellor's Bill for the establishment of Courts of Local Jurisdiction, with a brief Account of the Local Courts of France; and an Appendix, containing a Copy of the Bill. By M. J. Quin, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars. April 9.

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIII. for March, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Moral Education. 1. The Library of Education, edited by Wm. Russell, vol. 1; containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education, by John Locke,' and 'A Treatise on Education, by John Milton.'

2. Account of the Edinburgh Sessional School, and the other Parochial Institutions for Education, established in that city in 1812; with Strictures on Education in general. By John Wood, Esq.

II. Prison Discipline 1. Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

2. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

III. Collection of Psalms and Hymns. A Collection of Psalms of Hymns for Christian Worship.

IV. Meaning of Αἰων. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays on several words relating to Future Punishment.

V. Works of the Rev. Robert Hall. The Works of the Rev. Robert Hall, A. M. Minister of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, England. First complete edition, with a brief Memoir of the author.

VI. Stuart and Whitman. 1. A Letter to William E. Channing, D. D. on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Moses Stuart, Professor of Sacred Literature in the Theological Seminary, Andover.

2. Two Letters to the Rev. Moses Stuart, on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College, February 3, 1831. March 19.

NEWSPAPER AND PERIODICAL AGENCY. EICHBAUN & NORVELL, Booksellers, Nashville, Tennessee, have, in addition to their regular business, established a GENERAL AGENCY for the procuring of subscribers to, and the collecting of debts due to Newspapers and Periodicals throughout the United States. To this business great attention will be paid, and the instructions of Publishers strictly attended to. The city in which they are established contains a population of six thousand inhabitants, and as the citizens have ever shown a disposition to encourage meritorious publications, with the aid of Agents, the publishers of Newspapers, Magazines, &c, might obtain a respectable number of subscribers. Refer to GRAY and BOWEN, Booksellers, Boston. March 19.

POPULAR JOURNAL OF MUSIC. THE HARMONICON, a Monthly Journal of Music—No. I. just received by GRAY & BOWEN. Each monthly number will contain—

I. An Original Biography of some distinguished Composer or Performer. II. Interesting Correspondence, or Original Dissertations, on Subjects connected with the Science. III. Detailed Accounts of the Opera, Concerts, and other Musical Performances of the past month. IV. Copious Extracts from the Foreign Musical Journals, giving the reader the latest information of the Progress of the art, and its Professors throughout Europe. V. Liberal and unbiassed Accounts of all Musical Works as they appear. VI. Six or seven pieces of Music, Vocal and Instrumental, English and Foreign, selected with care, and printed with a beauty and accuracy that may safely challenge competition.

Musical Families and Societies, subscribing to the Harmonicon, will be furnished monthly with (in addition to the literary contents of each number), on an average, Six Entire Pieces of Vocal and Instrumental Music, at a price not exceeding the common charge for a single piece, when printed in the usual way. March 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVII. for January.

CONTENTS.

Art I. Popular Defensive Force. II. Lesson's History of Man. III. Hannibal's Passage of the Alps. IV. Webster's American Dictionary. V. India and China Trade. VI. Character of George IV. VII. Scotch Parliamentary Reform. VIII. Heiress of Bruges. IX. Maxwell. X. Belgian Revolution. XI. J. P. Cobbett's Italy. XII. Bruce's Travels. XIII. Machine-Breaking. XIV. Tennyson's Poems. XV. Basil Barrington and Friends. XVI. The Wellington Administration. XVII. European Revolution; List of Books, &c. March 19.

SPLENDID BIBLE. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES. GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Language.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII. Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

No. 15, North American Series.

This number contains articles on Screw Cutting; Locomotive Carriages; finding Velocity of Ships at sea; New Metallic Alloy for pivot Watches; Reflections on the Decline of Science in England; Improved marine Steam Engine Boiler; Claxton's Air Pump; Almanacks for 1831, &c, &c, with a great number of engravings.

Subscriptions received as above at $3 75 per annum. March 19.

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1831. NO. XL.

LORD MANSFIELD.

Continued.

After the records had been made up for trial in the two informations filed by the government against Wilkes, for the libels contained in No. 45 of the North Briton, and the Essay on Woman, an application had been made to the court on the part of the crown, for leave to amend them, by striking out the word 'purport,' and substituting the word 'tenor' in both the informations. A summons was accordingly granted, in the usual way, and no cause being shown why the alteration should not be allowed, it was made as a matter of course. Wilkes not appearing at the trial and no objection being offered by his counsel in respect of this amendment of the records, he was found guilty in each cause. Writs of capias were then issued, the usual forms of proclamations and exigents were gone through, and the defendant, who still remained abroad, was duly outlawed. Somewhat more than four years afterwards, (20th April, 1768,) he voluntarily made his appearance in the court of King's Bench, objected to the validity of the verdicts on the ground of alterations in the record, assigned errors in the outlawries, and demanded to be admitted to bail: the Attorney-general, on the other hand, moved that he should be committed to custody. The court refused to grant either application, as the defendant had not been regularly brought before it; and it was decided that the question as to the legality or illegality of the outlawry must be set at rest, before any proceedings could be taken upon the judgments. The Attorney-general then granted his fiat for writs of error on the outlawries, and Wilkes, having surrendered to the sheriff of Middlesex, was committed on the motion of the Attorney-general to the custody of the marshal. The errors were finally argued on the eighth of June following, and Lord Mansfield, at the close of a beautiful and luminous exposition of the law on the subject, delivered it as his opinion, in which the other judges concurred, that although the errors assigned could not be allowed, yet as the court found the outlawries to be deficient in a point of form, they should be reversed. It was in the course of this speech from the bench, that he thought proper to allude to the menaces by which it had been attempted to frighten him into a decision, which Wilkes and his party had rather hoped than anticipated. The annals of oratory can boast few more splendid specimens of calm and dignified eloquence.

'These are the errors which have been objected; and this the manner and form in which they are assigned. For the reasons I have given, I cannot allow any of them. It was our duty, as well as our inclination, sedulously to consider whether upon any other ground, or in any other light, we could find an informality which we might allow with satisfaction to our minds, and avow to the world. But here let me pause!—It is fit to take some notice of the various terrors being held out; the numerous crowds which have attended and now attend in and about the hall, out of all reach of hearing what passes in court; and the tumults which, in other places, have shamefully insulted all order and government. Audacious addresses in print dictate to us, from those they call the people, the judgment to be given now, and afterwards upon the conviction. Reasons of policy are urged, from danger to the kingdom by commotions and general confusion.

'Give me leave to take the opportunity of this great and respectable audience, to let the whole world know, all such attempts are vain. Unless we have been able to find an error which will bear us out, to reverse the outlawry, it must be affirmed. The constitution does not allow reasons of state to influence our judgments. God forbid it should! We must not regard political consequences, how formidable soever they might be; if rebellion were the certain consequence, we are bound to say 'Fiat justitia, ruat cœlum.' The constitution trusts the king with reasons of state and policy; he may stop prosecutions; he may pardon offences; it is his to judge whether the law or the criminal should yield. We have no election. None of us encouraged or approved the commission of either of the crimes of which the defendant is convicted: none of us had any hand in his being prosecuted. As to myself, I took no part (in another place), in the addresses for that prosecution. We did not advise or assist the defendant to fly from justice: it was his own act, and he must take the consequence. None of us have been consulted, or had anything to do with the present prosecution. It is not in our power to stop it; it was not in our power to bring it on. We cannot pardon. We are to say, what we take the law to be; if we do not speak our real opinions, we prevaricate with God and our own consciences.

'I pass over many anonymous letters I have received. Those in print are public; and some of them have been brought judicially before the court. Whoever the writers are, they take the wrong way. I will do my duty, unawed. What am I to fear? That mendax infamia from the press, which daily coins false facts and false motives? The lies of calumny carry no terror to me. I trust, that my temper of mind, and the color and conduct of my life, have given me a suit of armor against these arrows. If, during this king's reign, I have ever supported his government, and assisted his measures, I have done it without any other reward, than the consciousness of doing what I thought right. If I have ever opposed, I have done it upon the points themselves; without mixing in party or faction, and without any collateral views. I honor the king, and respect the people; but, many things acquired by the favor of either, are, in my account, objects not worth ambition. I wish popularity: but it is that popularity, which follows, not that which is run after; it is that popularity which, sooner or later, never fails to do justice to the pursuit of noble ends, by noble means. I will not do that which my conscience tells me is wrong upon this occasion, to gain the huzzas of thousands, or the daily praise of all the papers which come from the press: I will not avoid doing what I think is right, though it should draw on me the whole artillery of libels; all that falsehood and malice can invent, or the credulity of a deluded populace can swallow. I can say, with a great magistrate, upon an occasion, and under circumstances not unlike, "Ego hoc animo semper fui, ut invidiam virtute partam, gloriam, non invidiam putarem."

'The threats go further than abuse: personal violence is denounced. I do not believe it; it is not the genius of the worst of men of this country, in the worst of times. But I have set my mind at rest. The last end that can happen to any man, never comes too soon, if he falls in support of the law and liberty of his country: (for liberty is synonymous to law and government). Such a shock, too, might be productive of public good; it might awake the better part of the kingdom out of that lethargy which seems to have benumbed them; and bring the mad part back to their senses, as men intoxicated are sometimes stunned into sobriety.

'Once for all, let it be understood, that no endeavors of this kind will influence any man who at present sits here. If they had any effect, it would be contrary to their intent: leaning against their impression, might give a bias the other way. But I hope, and I know, that I have fortitude enough to resist even that weakness. No libels, no threats, nothing that has happened, nothing that can happen, will weigh a feather against allowing the defendant, upon this and every other question, not only the whole advantage he is entitled to from substantial law and justice, but every benefit from the most critical nicety of form, which any other defendant could claim under the like objection. The only effect I feel, is an anxiety to be able to explain the grounds upon which we proceed; so as to satisfy all mankind that a flaw of form given way to in this case, could not have been got over in any other.'

As to the alteration made by Lord Mansfield in the record, for which so much senseless clamor had been raised against him, it was afterwards clearly shown by the court, when the validity of the judgments in the two informations was disputed, that nothing had been done in this respect which was not clearly warranted, as well by abundance of written precedents, as by the traditionary recollections of practice preserved among the officers of the court. It was, moreover, explained that Wilkes could not possibly have been, in any way, injured by the allowance of the amendment; because, had the advisers of the crown considered the records imperfect as they originally stood, they would have been at liberty to file fresh informations, the only effect of which must have been to burden the defendant with additional expense. Other objections had been taken against the judgments, but they were equally overruled; and the idol of the mob was accordingly sentenced to fine and imprisonment. An appeal to the House of Lords was afterwards tried, but without effect. Lord Camden and the rest of the judges were unanimous in their opinion as to all the points whereon error was assigned; and the decision of the King's Bench was accordingly affirmed.

It was not always that the opinions of Lord

Camden on legal subjects coincided with those of his illustrious contemporary. His elaborate argument in the case of Doe d. Hudson et al. v. Kersey, wherein he overruled the decision relative to the construction of the statute of wills, given by Lord Mansfield in Wyndham v. Chetwynd, will probably occur to the recollection of many of our readers. The difference of their sentiments with respect to the power of juries in cases of libel is no doubt known to all. It stands on record in many pages of the parliamentary history, where the chancellor appears more than once as an impugner, not only of the doctrine of the chief justice, but of his motives for propounding and upholding it. In the strain of accusation he always thought fit to assume when this topic was brought forward in the House of Lords, he was constantly seconded by his ally Lord Chatham. As the ties of party which united these two great men were drawn closer by those of private friendship, so the political hostility which both professed against Lord Mansfield seems to have derived additional poignancy from a common feeling of personal dislike. We have already intimated our opinion of that probability that jealousy may have done much towards engendering this feeling in the mind of Pitt; and although the fact, that a similar one grew up in the breast of Lord Camden may be sufficiently accounted for by the facility with which we often involuntarily adopt the very prejudices of our friends, yet this same infirmity of jealousy is one from which even the noblest natures are so seldom entirely exempt, that we are warranted in suggesting at least the possibility of its having exercised some influence over the one as well as the other. Many more causes, no doubt, may have had their share either in kindling the first sparks of such sentiments of animosity, or afterwards fanning them into flame. Giving credit to both Chatham and Camden for a sincere devotion to the political opinions they professed, we consider it far from unlikely they may have fallen into the very common error of supposing that all those who differed from them did so from unworthy motives, and not from honest conviction. That most persons who interest themselves warmly in politics, in times of violent party disputes, do adopt this sort of prejudice against their opponents, is likely, we think, to be contested by no one who has accustomed himself to mark the tone of the public press, and even of private conversation, during such seasons, when tories appear to look upon whigs as factious promoters of sedition, while whigs are apt to regard tories as little better than unflinching advocates and supporters of downright despotism. We by no means mean to say it is probable, that men like Chatham or Camden, could ever go such lengths as this; but as we have no right to suppose them altogether superior to a weakness so generally prevalent, we certainly do think it likely, that something of it may have contributed to bias their judgments, with respect to the principles and conduct of one who generally thought and acted in opposition to them.

These causes, and perhaps many others, (for the motives of every man's thoughts and actions are mixed and complicated in a wonderful degree,) probably combined to generate and to foster the repugnance of these two eminent men against Lord Mansfield, and will account for the general asperity of their tone whenever allusion was made to his conduct. From what we have already said of the timidity of his character, it may be upposed that, with every requisite of an orator except confidence, he did not always appear to advantage on these occasions. Sometimes, indeed, he rose manifestly superior to his antagonists; and not only vindicated himself with success, but ventured to leave the defensive, and attack in his turn: as, for example, when he dwelt upon the gross ignorance displayed in the assertion of Lord Chatham, that an action might be brought against the House for the expulsion of Wilkes, and deduced from it the very plausible inference, that not much reliance ought to be placed on his lordship's legal opinions. But for the most part, he endured too patiently their tone of superiority, or even of scornful sarcasm; and instead of replying in the same strain, meeting invective with invective, and defiance with defiance, he would often plead not guilty to their accusations, and exculpate himself from the charges made against him, with reasoning and language, indeed, that might have made the reputation of an advocate at the the bar defending a client arraigned by the laws, but had far less effect in the mouth of a peer of parliament rebutting, in the presence of his fellow peers, the aspersions cast on himself. This (if the accounts given in the parliamentary history be correct) was fully exemplified during some of the debates in which his opinions on subjects of constitutional law, and particularly his charges to juries in cases of libel, were visited with the censure of his opponents. After the house of Lords had refused to listen to Lord Lansdowne's proposition for the institution of an inquiry into the state of the courts, and the administration of justice, and the house of Commons had negatived by a majority of more than two to one, a similar motion brought forward by Sergeant Glynn, Lord Mansfield thought fit to summon the peers (7th Dec. 1770), and inform them that he had deposited with the clerk of the house a copy of the judgment given by the court of King's Bench in the case of the King v. Woodfall, in order that they might have an opportunity of reading or copying it. This was, in some measure, provoking an inquiry, and showing that he thought he had nothing to fear from the result of it. The mode of proceeding was, indeed, much less direct than it might have been; and the house certainly had reason to be disappointed in their expectation of what was to ensue after they were thus specially assembled, when they found that their attendance had been required merely to inform them they could procure a sight of a report which had proviously been the round of the newspapers. This course certainly was not the most manly or dignified one that might have been adopted; but had the design of bringing on the discussion been plainly manifested and boldly persisted in, the mode of doing so would have been immaterial. However, if he had originally conceived such a design, he eventually wanted the resolution to carry it into effect. He refused, at the time, to have the paper entered on the journals; and a few days afterwards (Dec. 11th), when Lord Camden announced his intention of taking up the gauntlet he had thrown down, and boldly proclaimed his readiness to maintain that the doctrine of the chief justice was contrary to the law of the land, Lord Mansfield, instead of accepting the challenge, evidently shrank from the encounter. Instead of affording every facility in his power for bringing on the investigation with despatch, his object evidently was to procrastinate or prevent the discussion. With much difficulty a promise was drawn from him, that the matter should not be suffered to drop; but on the Duke of Richmond's congratulating the house that he had thus pledged himself, he again rose, disclaimed anything like a pledge, and merely said that he intended to take a future opportunity of giving his opinion. He was pressed to name a day; but even this he declined, and as we find no further notice of the subject, it is to be presumed no debate afterwards took place upon it.

We mention these circumstances as they are related in the Parliamentary History (vol. 16.), because, in the first place, being mere matters of fact, they are not so liable as matters of doctrine and opinion to the suspicion of being either wilfully or undesignedly misrepresented by the writers who have recorded them; and secondly, because they agree so well with what we know from other sources of Lord Mansfield's timidity and indecision, that they carry with them internal evidence of probability. It is right, however, to mention, that a great majority of the periodical publications which have furnished most of the materials of this compilation, were enlisted in the cause of the party opposed to that of which Lord Mansfield was an adherent. There is, therefore, some probability that (considering the imperfections of the system of parliamentary reporting at that time, when no publication professed to follow every speaker closely through the debates, and the aid of imagination was often called in to fill up the blanks left by memory) some of the writers unconsciously, and others by design, may have endeavored to throw the weight of argument into the scale of the party whose opinions they themselves espoused. An example of this may be found in the case of Lord Mansfield himself, on that memorable occasion when Lord Chatham and Lord Camden, in general the champions of popular privileges, undertook (being at the time ministers) to defend the cause of arbitrary prerogative; and the chief justice, who was usually considered a staunch supporter of the crown, ably combatted its right to intrench on the privileges of parliament, by issuing proclamations.

The discussion arose on the proposition of the bill of indemnity (Dec. 1766), for those who had been concerned in advising the measure of the embargo laid by the sole authority of the king, during the recess, on the exportation of wheat. The circumstances will probably be in the recollection of many of our readers, from the fact of their having been dwelt on at some length by Mr Canning, when, anticipating the necessity of some similar restrictions, he adopted the more constitutional course of applying to parliament beforehand, for authority to impose them. The speech on the suspending and dispensing prerogative (as it is entitled) which was printed in Almon's Register as the report of what had been delivered by Lord Mansfield, contains, we are assured by one who was present at the debate, more than three times as much matter as the speech he actually did make. It was, in fact, a digest of all the principal arguments that had been employed on the same side of the question. Now, if much was intentionally added to the record of what he was supposed to have spoken on the popular side; it may be presumed that, on the other hand, something was occasionally taken away of the reasoning with which he supported opinions or measures of a different tendency. We have, therefore, cause to mistrust even the good faith o some of the reporters of that time. Their opportunties of gaining full and correct information were not always very great; and when they did contrive to obtain genuine accounts, they were not always disposed to impart them unalloyed.

We can only repeat our regret that nothing but so imperfect and meagre a record should exist of those powers of eloquence which for so many years astonished and delighted both houses of parliament. Some few of the speeches we know to be authentic, as, for instance, that celebrated one in which he supported (3d Feb. 1766) the right to tax the American colonies, in answer to Lord Camden, who had denied it: and that on the appeal of the dissenter Evans, which we shall presently mention more particularly. Both of these were revised by himself, and made public with his sanction. The speech also (8th May, 1770) against the exemption of peers' servants from arrest, seems to have been touched either by his own hand, or by that of no ordinary reporter. But these specimens may be said to give us a glimpse rather than a view of his talent as a parliamentory debater. A much better idea may be formed of his judicial oratory, from the specimens of it which have been preserved in the reports of Burrow, Wilson, Lofft, Cowper, Douglas, and Durnford and East, particularly the first. Sir James Burrow was not in the habit of taking short-hand notes in court, and he professes to give rather the substance than the exact words of what was spoken by the Chief Justice; but Lord Mansfield, it is well known, looked over and corrected the greater part of his proofs before they were published, so that if this work does not contain all he actually said, it at least conveys his arguments as nearly as possible in his own language. The eloquent passage we have already transcribed from the judgment in Wilkes' case, bears evident marks of having been carefully revised by the orator himself; and there are several others that carry with them the same stamp of authenticity. Even these, however, convey an inadequate idea of the peculiarities of his style as a speaker. In common with many eminent orators, he often disregarded the niceties of grammatical accuracy. The construction of his sentences, too, was frequently what in writing might have been called slovenly, abounding in parentheses and inversions. But such was the consummate art with which he modulated his voice, that by its inflexions the exact bearing and relation of every member of a long sentence was distinctly marked; so that passages which on paper would have appeared intricate and obscure, left on the mind of those who heard them from the lips of Lord Mansfield, a clear and vivid impression of their meaning. Indeed, perfect clearness and intelligibility were the leading characteristics of his speeches, notwithstanding these peculiarities, (we will not call them defects), partly, perhaps, in consequence of them; for they imparted to what he said a sort of colloquial air, which sometimes has more effect than any particular forms of language, in enabling an auditory to catch a just apprehension of the sense intended to be conveyed.

This manner he most commonly adopted when delivering his opinions on obscure or difficult questions of law, the intricacies of which he unravelled with a facility that not only showed how fully he himself was master of the subject, but materially aided his hearers in comprehending it. In parliament, he could soar into a higher region of eloquence; and when the occasion called for it in court, he never failed to rise to the level of his matter. We may instance the different opportunities afforded him while he sat on the bench, of exposing his views on the subject of religious toleration. Such, among others, was the case of the catholic priest, Webb, who was prosecuted at the suit of a common informer, for saying mass. The penal statutes which had disgraced the reign of king William, were still in force, and the judge had no alternative but to obey them: but, with very justifiable latitude of interpretation, he contrived to reconcile the performance of this duty with strict adherence to his own principle of troubling no man for conscience' sake, by explaining to the jury, that the reasons of policy which produced the acts in question had ceased to exist; that the pope no longer possessed the power he then had, or was supposed to have; that the influence of the jesuits had decreased still more; and that even during the reign of William the Third, when the penal laws were enacted, the legislature had no intention of putting them in force, unless some urgent necessity might call for the execution of them. This charge to the jury is printed at length, from the notes of a short-hand writer, in Barnard's Life of Dr Challoner. Another case, which occurred not long before that of Webb (1767), furnished him with an occasion of upholding the same great principles of religious liberty in the House of Lords. This was the case of Evans, a dissenter, who had been called upon to serve the office of sheriff in the city of London, and had refused to do so, because he could not conscientiously submit to the religious test required by the corporation. For this refusal, he was subjected, as a matter of course, to the usual fine, which, however, he determined not to pay. From the decision of the Chamberlain's court, he appealed to the court of Hustings, and, finding no redress there, he carried his cause before the Delegates, who decided in his favor. A writ of error was afterwards brought in the House of Lords, and it was then that Lord Mansfield had an opportunity of expressing his sentiments on the particular question before the House, and generally on the broad principles of toleration, by which he contended that the decision of it ought to be governed. The masterly speech he delivered has fortunately been preserved to us in a much more perfect state than any other of his parliamentary discourses. Dr Furneaux, a man of much reputation among the dissenters, was present throughout the whole discussion, and took copious notes of all that passed: the draft of Lord Mansfield's speech he submitted to the orator himself for revisal; and his Lordship, after correcting and retouching it, authorised him to publish it as an authentic report.

To be continued.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

TROVER.

1. Trover will not lie against a common carrier for not delivering goods entrusted to him for transportation, if the goods are not in his possession at the time of the demand and have either been lost or stolen. The action should be case and not trover. Packard vs. Getman, 4 Wend. 613.

2. If, however, they be in his possession, or if he has delivered them to a third person, though by mistake, trover lies. Ib.

TRUST.

Cestuis que trust who have paid the consideration of lands conveyed, may claim the benefit of a resulting trust, and will be considered as holding the legal estate so far as to enable them to defend or maintain an action of ejectment for lands thus held. North Hempstead vs. Hempstead, 2 Wend. 109.

VARIANCE.

1. In an action of debt, on recognizance of bail, a variance of six cents in the amount of the judgment against the principal, between the declaration and the record produced, is fatal on a plea of nul tiel record. Bibbins vs. Noxon, 4 Wend. 207.

2. A variance in the amount of recovery between an execution and the judgment on which it issues, will not affect the sale, the execution being amendable as well after, as before the sale. Jackson vs. Anderson, 4 Wend. 474.

VENDOR AND VENDEE.

1. A bona fide vendor, believing he has title, covenanting to convey land, and discovering, before any part of the consideration money is paid, a defect in his title, is not liable to damages for refusing to convey. If, however, he acts mala fide, and refuses to convey because the property has increased in value, and with a view of putting the enhanced value into his own pocket, he is liable to an action for damages. Baldwin vs. Munn, 2 Wend. 399.

2. A purchaser for a valuable consideration of chattels levied upon by an execution, and suffered to remain in the possession of the defendant under orders from the plaintiff to the sheriff to suspend proceedings until further direction, acquires title to the same, and may maintain trespass against the sheriff for dispossessing him of the property. Hicox vs. Coates, 2 Wend. 419.

3. A person entering into the possession of wild, uncultivated land, under a contract of sale, giving him a right of entry and occupancy, and reserving to the landlord the land as security until the payment of the consideration money by withholding the deed has a right to enter and enjoy the land for agricultural purposes. Moores vs. Wait, 3 Wend. 104.

4. If such person cuts timber for any purpose other than the cultivation, improvement and enjoyment of the land as a farm, the timber thus separated from the freehold becomes the personal property of the owner of the inheritance, who may maintain an action of trover for it against any one in possession, though a bona fide purchaser under the occupant. Ib.

VERDICT.

1. A verdict will not be set aside for irregularity, where the jury have separated after agreeing to a sealed verdict, and on coming into court, one of the jurors dissents to it, who subsequently, on the jury being sent out again agrees to the verdict as originally rendered. Douglas vs. Tousey, 2 Wend. 352.

2. Where a judge directs a jury to bring in a sealed verdict, and gives them permission to separate after agreeing on the same, if no objection is made by the parties to such direction, they will be deemed to have assented to it. Ib.

WITNESS.

1. Where a person, who is directly interested in favor of the plaintiff in a cause, is called by the defendant to prove a particular fact, and is sworn as a witness, the plaintiff has a right to examine him generally as to the merits of the cause. Varick vs. Jackson, 2 Wend. 166.

2. A plaintiff who has called and had the benefit of the testimony of a witness, cannot afterwards object to him on the ground of interest; and the witness having been sworn in chief, the opposite party may not only cross-examine him in relation to the point which he was called to prove, but may examine as to any matter embraced in the issue. Fulton Bank vs. Stafford, 2 Wend. 483.

3. A release by one to the other of two parties jointly liable to the payment of a sum of money, and in a case where contribution might be enforced by one against the other, renders the party released a competent witness for the releasor in a suit against him alone by the creditor, although without such release the witness would be directly interested in the event of the suit. Bagley vs. Osborn, 2 Wend. 527.

4. Evidence that a witness has been indicted for perjury and forgery, he not having been tried and convicted, is inadmissible to impeach his credibility. Jackson vs. Osborn, 2 Wend. 555.

5. It is no objection to the competency of a witness in an action by a moneyed institution that a few days before the trial he had sold out his stock, although he stated that he supposed he could purchase it back if he chose; he testifying the transfer by him was without any agreement, either express or implied, that the stock should be re-conveyed. Utica Ins. Co. vs. Cadwell, 3 Wend. 296.

6. A co-obligor not sued is a competent witness to prove the terms and conditions on which a joint and several bond has been executed, where the suit is commenced against only some of the obligors. Lovett vs. Adams, 3 Wend. 380.

7. A person having no fixed legal interest in the event of a cause, is a competent witness, although he declares himself bound in honor to share in the loss which may be incurred by the party calling him. Moore vs. Hitchcock, 4 Wend. 292.

---

LAW OF PARTNERSHIP.

Under this branch of our subject it is proper to consider when, at what moment, a partnership is to be regarded as established for the benefit of third persons. The principle which rules this point is, that persons cannot be jointly liable upon a contract as partners, unless their interest was joint at the time when the contract is made. A contract is made between two individuals: a third person afterwards takes from one of these individuals an interest in that contract: such third person will not be liable to the other contracting party, whatever his arrangements may be with him under whom he takes the interest. Thus an individual purchased goods on credit, to be shipped to a foreign port: he then sold a share in the adventure to a third person: the seller of the goods not being paid, sued the individual and this third person, under the belief that he had by partaking in the adventure, become a partner in the original contract: but the seller failed in the attempt to recover from the third person. His contract was with the original purchaser, who then stood alone: the contract was completed with him; it could not by any subsequent act to which he was not a party, be altered either to his disadvantage or in his favor. The partnership in the adventure did not commence until after he had sold his goods, and he was consequently held to have no claim upon the third person. But* for all debts incurred in the prosecution of that adventure, the third person would however, be undoubtedly liable; for from the moment of his purchase of an interest in the concern, he became a partner. So too, if several persons agree to form a partnership, and that each shall contribute a certain share of the capital, and any of the persons borrow or purchase the share, which he afterwards brings into the common stock, the liability to the lender or vender is not joint, but personal. So if a contract be made by one person for the purchase of goods and a subcontract be made by him with others for taking a particular share of them, these subcontractors do not become liable with him to the seller. There is here no community of profit; each person receives his own share, and enjoys his own profit, or sustain his own loss: nor was there a joint interest in the goods.

The preceding are some of the modes in which this peculiar association may be formed.

It is important to know, when it is formed, in what manner, and to what extent, one partner may influence the fortunes and bind the property and fate of his copartners. The general and broad rule upon this subject is, that partners are bound universally by the acts of each other, done in the course of the partnership business. Each partner may so contract as to bind all the others; all of course, are liable for the contracts of any and each of the association. The most unbounded confidence, therefore, is the corner stone of the edifice; the superstructure can be preserved only by untainted fidelity and truth.

The most usual form in which engagements are created binding the firm, is that of negotiable paper. This, however, is only an instance. Every contract, every act done, by one partner in or connected with a transaction relating to the partnership, binds all the others. Thus a partner travelling on the business of the firm had occasion to borrow money to meet his expenses: an action was brought against the house to recover it back; the defence relied upon was, that the money was lent to one of the house individually; but a recovery took place upon the principles just stated: and it matters not if the act done be in direct opposition to the express provisions of the articles of partnership. If it be one which apparently is connected with the partnership, and these provisions are unknown to the person with whom the contract is made, his claim under it will be valid against all.

Over the partnership stock each partner may exercise absolute dominion, and dispose of it at his will; a sale made by one is the sale of all, and transfers the property of all: he is regarded as the authorized agent of the others. In the same manner, he may purchase in the name of the firm, and all will be held liable to make payment. In selling or in purchasing, it is of no importance that his objects are fraudulent: that the proceeds in the one case and the goods in the other do not come into the partnership stock. Provided the person with whom he deals is not a party to the fraud, and has no knowledge of it direct, or indirect, the transaction will bind his partners. And this power of disposal seems to be without limit; it may extend to the whole of the joint stock, if the circumstances are not of such a character as to beget suspicion in the mind of a man of ordinary intelligence. The contracting party in general has a right to suppose that the partner is acting with good conscience, and fairly exercising the power inherent in him as a member of the firm. It has, however, been doubted whether a guarantee of the debt of a third person by one of a firm shall bind his co-partners, unless a similar course of dealing had previously taken place from which an authority might be implied. But if this guarantee relates to business transacted by the firm itself, it will bind all. It would be in vain to attempt an enumeration of the various engagements, contracts and arrangements which come under the principle we are examining; they are as various as are the operations of commerce itself, as changeable as the dispositions of the votaries of commerce.

There is one class, however, which cannot be passed without further notice; because the facility with which the engagement is formed, and the extent to which it may be carried, gives it a character of the first importance. It will be perceived that negotiable paper is the class here referred to. In an instant the pen of an imprudent or an unfaithful partner may distil a drop as fatal to the prosperity of his associates, as deadly to their commercial as would be a drop of the prussic acid to their physical existence. A promissory note issued by one partner in the name of the firm, a bill of exchange drawn, or accepted in the same manner, creates an obligation imperative on them all, from which there is no release, no escape, but payment, or protest. It has this effect in the hands of the original holder, if it is created in a transaction relating to the partnership business; and in the hands of a third person to whom it has been transferred for value, it will have this effect, whatever may have been its origin, however fraudulent its concoction, if he has received it without information of the fraud, or just cause to suspect it. It is necessary to the existence of partnership business that partnership paper should carry its own sanction with it; and its credit be unimpeachable in the hands of those who hold it in good faith and upon valuable consideration; and in such hands its demands cannot be refused. But in the hands of the original holder it is liable to resistance and refusal, if he has unduly or unfairly become its possessor. Thus if an individual partner being indebted, should, with the knowledge of his creditor create paper under the name of the partnership, and deliver it in payment, the creditor could not recover upon it, it would be a gross misapplication of the partnership name of which the creditor who permitted himself to be a party to the act could not avail himself: but if he should transfer it to a third person, it would pass into the hands of that third person cleansed of its impurity, and relieved from the stain of fraud. Or if the creditor of the individual partner should receive from him a partnership security without knowledge that it had been manufactured for the occasion, and without reason to suspect that it was not fairly the property of his debtor, he would be entitled to demand and receive its amount from each and all the firm; he would be justified in believing that the partnership security had become fairly the property of the individual partner, and as a consequence, that his transfer would convey a title to whomsoever it might be made. Having once fairly received from a partner the partnership paper, the holder's title becomes by that act perfect and complete; any subsequent discovery by him, or communication to him that the transaction was fraudulent on the part of the partner, will not deteriorate the value of the security in his hands, or render his remedy upon it less efficient.

* Young v. Hunter, 4 Taunton, 582.

The power which one partner thus possesses to influence the fate and dispose of the fortunes of his associates, cannot be controlled by any agreement between themselves; their articles of copartnership may contain provisions intended to guard against the danger, carefully worded, expressed in the clearest and strongest terms which the conveyancer's art may supply to him. But to all this the world are strangers; with the private arrangements of the partners they are unconnected. In their course they are guided by the beacon erected, and the chart held out by the partners themselves: that beacon directs them to the fortunes of the firm, and that chart points out the individual members as the channels of communication. When the association is formed, the individuals who compose it proclaim their unbounded confidence in each other; they declare to the world, these are the men upon whose integrity we rely as upon a rock; winds cannot move, nor waves shake it; and the principles which declare they must submit to the results which flow from these their own acts, need not be looked for in the books of the law; they are found deeply engraven on the human heart.

There are, however, limits to the power of the partner, prescribed by that same good faith which compels submission to all occurrences within the circle of these limits.

The declaration to the world is, we repose confidence without bounds in all matters connected with partnership business; in all that is necessary to its successful prosecution, or connected naturally with its progress. Beyond that the pledge of faith does not go, and shall not bind. Hence it is that a partnership in one particular transaction will not authorize the annexation of the names of the partners to paper, or to contracts unconnected with that transaction; and that the holder of such paper cannot recover upon it. He has not been beguiled by false lights, he had not been misled by the declaration of a general partnership; he takes at his own risk, and and he must abide the loss. Hence also the general rule, that one partner cannot bind another by deed: commercial operations do not require the introvention of instruments of so solemn and technical a character. The spirit of commerce is volatile; its vitality is in frequent and rapid exchanges; its payments are made in the transfer of credits, or delivery of goods; the power to execute deeds is not essential to its operations; it is not, therefore, a power incident to, or growing out of a contract of partnership; and does not, therefore, follow the person of a partner. It is obvious that if it did, it would exceed those authorities which have been already touched upon. They extend no farther than to the disposal of partnership goods, part of the joint stock, and to the creation of liabilities which may affect the whole fortunes of the partners, real and personal, by their consequences; but not to the creation of direct liens upon the property of the individual partners, which might be the result of a power to bind by deed. The term 'deed' must not, however, be understood to mean only and merely a conveyance of real estate; its signification is much more comprehensive, and includes all instruments under seal; assignments, covenants, agreements, bonds. The partner cannot by an act under seal bind his copartners, whether he put that seal opposite to their names signed by himself, to the name of the firm written by himself, or to his own name, for himself and on behalf of his partners: a transfer by such an instrument of the personal property of the firm would, therefore, be of no avail, although that very property might be transferred by the same partner without seal. A bond so executed, even for a partnership debt, would probably be of no avail, although the same partner might give an effectual security by a bill of exchange, or promissory note. It may, perhaps, be difficult to give a reason entirely satisfactory for the limit, it would in some degree be merely technical, and not within the scope of a familiar essay. But it is apparent without referring to technicalities, that the power being permitted would lead to consequences difficult to be foreseen, and not necessary to the conduct of commercial affairs. It is necessary, therefore, at all times to uphold and assert the principle, just as the Hollander would resist the first and apparrently innocent influx of the gentle stream, which if unopposed would gradually undermine and sweep away the mounds and barriers which defend him from the raging ocean. But the other partners may specially authorize such an act, or they may stand by and authorize it, or subsequently adopt it; and in those cases they will be bound by the act; and the partner who executes it cannot be permitted, so far as it affects his interests, to deny its validity. There is one exception to this rule, for the convenience of commerce: a partner may release a debt—a release is a sealed instrument —and this release will be conclusive on the whole firm, if it be without fraud. In practice it is often given under assignments made for the benefit of creditors.

In another particular, modern decisions have restrained the power of a partner. It was long the opinion that even after the dissolution of the firm the declarations and acknowledgments of any one of its members in relation to its former transactions would be conclusive against the others; and claims against the partnership have been revived by such admissions after they had been permitted to sleep during a length of time, which would effectually bar a recovery. It was a dangerous power; it protracted the period of rest to an indefinite time: ancient transactions were resuscitated from the tomb of oblivion to haunt and harass the perplexed and wearied merchant: the hope of repose became a hope deferred, and made the heart sick. A better and a sounder doctrine now prevails; acknowledgments after a partnership has ceased, no longer bind the interests of any but those who make them. The statute of limitations is restored to its legitimate rights, and is once more a harbinger of peace of rest.

We shall now offer a few observations upon the manner in which the association we have been considering may be dissolved.

Whether the partnership be for a limited or an unlimited period of time, it is always dissolved by the inexorable destroyer of all human ties—death. The representatives of the deceased partner do not occupy his place, and succeed to his rights; the association is broken up and ended; and it only remains to wind up the concerns and divide the fruits of past transactions: yet by the original articles of agreement the partnership may be made to continue, and the rights and interests of a deceased partner to pass to such persons as in that agreement may be designated: and in England, the great commercial centre, such dispositions are frequent, and the duration of the partnership is sometimes made to exceed by many years the ordinary duration of human life. This, however, must be always matter of special agreement: if the articles of co-partnership are silent, the blow which prostrates the partner destroys the bond of union.

If the association is originally formed without any limit of time, it may be dissolved by the mutual agreement of the partners: and if the original articles were under seal, the dissolution should also be under seal: or it may be dissolved at the mere will of either party, at a moment's notice. He may select his own time, and put an end to the association: and although in particular cases this may operate hardly, the rule is well settled. The security that the right will not be abused is found in the operations of self interest, which will generally be sufficient to prevent such an act from being done at an unfortunate or improper period. It is often necessary to exercise this right, to prevent ruin from the conduct of a faithless partner: and in such cases it should be resorted to unhesitatingly and boldly.

If the articles designate a time, the copartnership will of course expire at that time, and cannot sooner be defeated by the act of one partner; and if they point out a manner, that manner must be carefully observed and pursued, or the party dissolving will involve himself in the consequences of a breach of contract.

Although the articles of partnership may designate the period of its duration, or point out a special manner of dissolution, yet extreme misconduct on the part of a partner, gross abuse of faith among the parties, or the existence of circumstances rendering it impossible to conduct the business, would induce a court of chancery to dissolve the tie: and here where we have no such courts, it is believed would authorize a partner to declare a dissolution, and render that declaration effectual.

The same effect is produced by insolvency, and by confirmed lunacy or insanity; though in the latter case some doubt may be entertained as to the proper course to be pursued.

The partnership being dissolved in any of the preceding modes, the duty arises of winding up its concerns and disposing of its effects; and for these purposes in a degree the association continues, and the power of the partners remains over the joint property for all purposes connected with this one object. The joint stock, or partnership effects, must be applied to payment of partnership debts; and either partner may insist upon the whole being sold and converted into money.

If, instead of a general dissolution, one partner retires, he has the same right; but usually, he conveys his interest in the firm, and takes an indemnity against its debts, if he has confidence in those with whom he deals.

It is of primary importance upon the dissolution of a firm, or when retiring from it, to give full and unequivocal notice of that fact to all the world. And in this country it is prudent to give special notice do all those persons and institutions with which the firm has been in the habit of transacting business. Unless this be done, new liabilities may be created, and the retiring partner, or all the partners when the dissolntion is general, be involved in engagements created in the name of the firm with persons ignorant of the dissolution.

We are afraid to proceed further with those branches of the subject connected with the doctrine of dissolution: the manner, the consequences, the duties resulting from it, the division of the property, the continuance of liability, are all topics of importance and of interest; but we feel that we have reached the limits of a familiar essay, and the bounds of our readers' patience. The aim has been merely to open the portals of the edifice; none but the midnight student or experienced merchant can hope to explore its secret places.—Journal of Law.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1831.

Hayes' popular View of the Law of Real property.

(Concluded.)

'The mischiefs of letting in constructive notice have been so strongly felt, that some Equity Judges have held it excluded under the present Registry Acts. But no provision which can be made for denying effect to constructive notice will be effectual, because the distinction between actual and constructive notice cannot be defined, and must, therefore, often fail to be justly drawn either by a Court or a Jury; and cases of individual hardships might lead to a course of decisions which would encroach on the spirit of the act, and impair its benefits. Among other cases, a great difficulty would arise as to notice to the agent. Frequently the principal, being out of the way, could receive notice only though his agent, and under some circumstances such notice ought to bind him in the fullest manner. Under other circumstances, there would be great injustice in affecting the principal with notice given to the agent. There would perhaps be much liability to mistake on the part of Courts and Juries in individual cases under this head. Between actual notice and the highest degree of constructive notice, there is no substantial difference; indeed the latter, as resting oftener on written evidence is frequently more clear and satisfactory; and the deference to moral feeling, which affords perhaps the strongest reasons for giving effect to actual notice, would be violated in no less degree by denying the same effect to a strong and clear case of constructive notice. The line between such cases, and cases more slight and doubtful, can be drawn with no certainty; what should excite suspicion in a reasonable mind, may be thought equivalent to information; no one can predict how far the want of inquiry into circumstances, which inquiry would have led to actual notice, may be held fraudulent, or how far a presumption of actual notice may be inferred either by a Judge or a Jury from the knowledge of circumstances.

'The doctrine of notice, which frequently depends upon presumption, arising from evidence liable to suspicion, leaves a wide opening for conjecture, and may be a most fruitful source of litigation. Although the cases of notice which have arisen under the Local Register Acts in this country have not been numerous, questions respecting the same doctrine have frequently been discussed in the different Courts in America.

'The rule of Equity, which gives priority to an unregistered deed on the ground of notice, has, since it was settled, been regarded with dissatisfaction by several of the Equity judges. Lord Hardwicke said, 'the meaning of it (the Register Act) was to prevent parol proofs of notice or no notice.' Lord Alvanley expressed his regret that the statute had been broken in upon by parol evidence; and Sir William Grant said, that 'limited as the law on the subject is (to actual notice) the security derived from the register is considerably lessened, as no one can with certainly tell what circumstances may truly or falsely be given in evidence, or what judgment a Court will form as to the effect of the evidence in any particular case.' The inconvenience of giving effect to notice has led to the adoption of a contrary rule in other countries. When the Chancellor D'Aguesseau, among other questions which he proposed to all the Parliaments of France, asked whether a creditor or purchaser, having notice of the substitution before his contract or purchase, should be admitted to plead the want of registration—the answer returned by all of them except one was, that to 'admit the contrary doctrine would make it always open to argument, whether a purchaser or creditor had or had not notice; and that this would lead to endless uncertainty, confusion, and perjury.' And it is provided by the Code Napoleon, t. 3 tit. 2, c. 6, art. 1071—'Le defaut de transcription ne pourra être supplée, ni regardé comme couvert par la connoissance que les créanciers, ou les tiers acquéreurs, pourraient avoir eu de la disposition par d'autres voies que celle de la transcription.' The same rigorous adherence to the strict law of registration has prevailed in Scotland, without any inconvenience. Both our own and other laws afford strong examples of enforcing rigid rules of law against just claimants who have been wanting in vigilance. A stronger case could not be cited than that of our Statute of Frauds which annuls, even as between the parties, all contracts relating to land, unless evidenced by writing. This statute has often the most rigorous operation against a careless, in favor of an unjust person, and sanctions the violation of the most solemn engagements, when they cannot be proved otherwise than by parol evidence. Yet its effects are acknowledged to have been highly beneficial; it secures an extensive public good, of infinitely greater importance than the few individual interests which are sacrificed by its provisions; and some important exceptions to it, which a regard to moral justice in the individual case, or compassion for the suffering party, has induced our Courts of Equity to establish, are now generally considered to be unwise.

'The statute 27th Elizabeth, against fraudulent conveyances, takes effect both at Law and in Equity, even when a purchaser has the fullest knowledge of a settlement, which is defeated by his conveyance; and Courts of Equity have not attempted, on the ground of notice, to interfere with the acts for the registry of life annuities or shipping.

'The exclusion of interference on the ground of notice will very rarely prevent the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity, in case of actual fraud. In all cases in which priority may be given to a registered over an unregistered deed by means of fraud, although notice must be one of the ingredients to prove the existence of the fraud, there will usually be other circumstances by which, independently of the notice, a fraudulent intention will be manifested. Any conspiracy or improper conduct, for preventing or impeding the registration of one deed in order to give effect to another, may always be avoided as fraudulent; and, in other cases, fraud will be shewn by inadequacy of price, or the circumstances under which the subsequent deed was executed. Where a party suffers from his own negligence, or from not requiring a caveat, which would have protected him against any superior activity in another, he will have relied upon confidence in the parties instead of the protection afforded by the law, and will have no just cause of complaint.

'It may be further urged, that little apprehension is to be entertained of failure in the registration of an instrument; and that the cases, where this failure and the existence of a fraudulent intention to take advantage of it by the vendor or mortgagor concur, must be so rare, that they may safely be disregarded. It is only in such cases that the proposed rule of letting in notice would be beneficial to the purchaser or mortgagee, and then only in case he should succeed in establishing, by a suit in Equity or an action at Law, notice against the subsequent purchaser; and that it appears a conclusive argument, that in a prospective law, made for the security of all future purchasers, it would be unwise to introduce a rule necessarily detracting from the security of every purchaser, for the purpose of giving a very uncertain chance to individuals, in cases of rare occurrence, to repair the effects of their own misfortune or carelessness.

'If all persons about to become purchasers or mortgagees could be consulted on the subject, little doubt can be entertained that the great majority would prefer the rule, by which their own diligence would insure their perfect security, to one by which they might have a chance given them of obviating the consequences of failure, but upon the terms of being exposed to the chance of having the consequences of another person's failure fixed upon them by evidence which they might not be able to rebut.

'Upon the whole, the question of giving or denying effect to actual notice against the register, appears to be a question of balance of evils; it is therefore material to consider, how far and in what cases evil is likely to arise from the rule denying effect to notice, and whether sufficient remedies consistently with the rule can be provided.'

JURIDICAL LETTERS.

Addressed to the Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, in reference to the present crisis of Law Reform. Letters II. III. By EUNOMUS.

On the appearance of the first of these letters, we warmly recommended the series as likely to afford much interesting information of a kind particularly required. The writer has since amply justified the confidence we placed in him by the general conduct of his work; but more particularly so by the concluding portion of his third epistle. This really comprises a very valuable discovery—discovery, we mean, so far as England is concerned—which, with as much brevity as possible, we shall endeavor to make generally known. We begin by an explanation rather more formal than that given by Juridicus, who introduces the subject by a recapitulation of cases from the English reports.

'Independently of the difficulties which every law may present, as expressing obscurely or imperfectly the nature of the events or circumstances which are to create the duties imposed by it, or the extent of such duties, new laws present, as such,—that is to say by the mere circumstance of their changing the established law,—a peculiar class of difficulties. The question in short, is, whether from the moment the new law is held to be known, the anterior law, (which it modifies,) loses all its power, so that each person's rights and duties may be thenceforward regulated exclusively by the new law, even should they have relation to events which took place under the old law. To resolve this question, it is to be remarked, in the first place, that every new law encounters, at its birth, expectancies formed conformably to the ancient law.'

Thus we expect to exercise all rights whatever, which the law or private convention has bestowed on us: the minor who knows that at a certain age he shall attain his majority, expects to have at this epoch the free administration of his property; the individual whom the law has once recognised as filling any social relation, has conceived the hope of being always considered as invested with the same privileges in respect of it, and of being called upon for no additional proof in support of them; subject only to be deprived of them by the means, or on the happening of the contingencies, pointed out by the law under which they were required. He, again, who has seen an event come to pass, from which, according to the dispositions of the law then in force, some beneficial right should result to him, has formed an expectation that the event will have the effect such law has assigned to it. 'Whenever,' adds the writer from whom we translate this explanation, 'an expectancy has been thus established in conformity to the laws, whether it be in accordance with the formal dispositions or the mere silence of the legislator, this expectancy merits attention, and cannot be justly set aside.'* Accordingly, these expectancies, under the name of attentes, have long occupied the attention of the continental jurists: from the code Napoleon in particular, innumerable cases of the description arose, and took both judges and legislators by surprise. 'The importance of the questions was only exceeded by their difficulty. It was soon seen that if all the expectations, all the hopes which had come into existence under the old laws were to be respected, a new law could only govern the individuals who came into life, or at least arrived at the age to form such expectations or hopes, subsequently to it. But how were they to distinguish between the expectations and the hopes that were to be judicially respected, and those which were not? How to draw the line between those results of contracts and events antecedent to the new laws which were to be sacred, and those which were to be sacrificed?'†

The Roman law was first resorted to, but its foundations being laid in times when innovations in law were rare, was resorted to in vain. The French lawyers were reduced to depend upon their own invention for remedies, which they have ever since been laboring to perfect. M. Chabot de l'Allier led the van with two quarto volumes, entitled, Questions Transitoires sur le Code Napoleon. Then came Professor Blondeau with the Essay before-mentioned, published originally in the Bibliothéque du Barreau. These were followed by MM. Meyer and Merlin; and the subject has also given rise to much learned disquisition in Germany. It were but natural to suppose that some rumor of these things might have reached England, despite her insular situation; or, on entering on our present wide and long career of reform, we might even have instituted some trifling inquiry as to the results of innovating on a comprehensive scale abroad. That nothing of the sort has been done, it is quite unnecessary to say; that it was the duty of those on whom the revisal of our system has devolved,—that we have already suffered greatly, and are likely to suffer more, from their ignorance, we shall now demonstrate by some examples from Juridicus:

'In the session, Sir, of 1825, was passed one of the most important and extensive pieces of civil legislation which English lawyers have yet produced. I speak of the new Bankrupt Act. An unusual amount of skill and labor was bestowed upon that work. The Act may perhaps be said, in a general sense, to have met all the difficulties but one—that structural difficulty which was precisely the most appalling, and the most important; but which, if we may pronounce from the contents of the Act itself, never presented itself to the minds of lawyers either in or out of the House: the discovery of principles or propositions which should determine for a large body of new rules of civil law their retrospective or non-retrospective application to transactions, or the results of transactions, which originated under the old law. What, Sir, has been the consequence? Why that which every continental jurist would have foreseen from the moment the act was before the public. That it has been necessary to obtain a judicial decision upon almost every case which has occurred, in which the provisions of the new Act have come in contact with the combinations produced under the old law, to determine the applicability or non-applicability of the former. And how, Sir, have English judges great and talented as many of them are, dealt with this difficulty? Were they prepared with any scientific principles for resolving it? Sir, I hardly dare betray to the lawyers of the Continent, to M. Merlin, M. Chapot, M. Meyer, and M. Blondeau, what they have said and done. I shrink with English pride from this exposure of the nakedness of the land. But our Term Reports, Sir, have already begun to travel to Paris, and the truth will out. Let us profit then by the knowledge of it.

'In Bell v. Bilton (4 Bing. 615.) the court of Common Pleas held that where the words were capable of a retrospective construction, they should be so construed, unless the contrary were expressed.

'In ex parte Grun ly, (3 Russ. 423. n.) the Vice Chancellor thought it was going too far, to say that every section in the new Bankrupt Act was to have a retrospective effect, except such sections as were expressed in words positively confining them to a prospective operation.

'In Churchill v. Crease (5 Bing. 177.) the Court of Common Pleas held that the 82d section of the Act was retrospective, because it contains the expressions "payments made, or which hereafter shall be made."

'In Terrington v. Hargreaves (5 Bing. 492.) Chief Justice Best agreed that the provisions of a statute cannot be retrospective unless declared to be so by express words.

To be concluded.

---

Plan for construction of Statutes.—The Bill to prevent the misconstruction of Statute Law by the Judges of his majesty's Court of King's Bench, has been read a first time, and ordered for a second reading. The object of the bill is to confine the Judges within the proper sphere of their duty. As things are now, the Law is exactly what any two Judges may fancy it to be; so that, in fact, they are the law makers, and every new Judge may make an old Statute a new Law. This Bill is meant to apply a remedy, and provide that the Judges sitting in bank on a reserved point of law, shall not decide the case unless they be unanimous, and in case of a disagreement in opinion, the whole are to submit their opinions, and the authorities on which they are founded, in writing to the Governor, in order to their being laid before Parliament at the next ensuing session who are to settle the question by a declaratory act. Who so proper to explain the ambiguities of the Law as those who made it? It is hoped that when the Bill makes its appearance, it will excite the energies of acute reasoners to confirm or explode the principles it aims to establish—that the Legislature should be the only Law makers, and that any other power attempting to fill that office, however benevolent the intention, is an undue and insufferable assumption.—Canada paper.

---

Instructions to be given by the Court to a Jury.—It is, doubtless, within the province of a Court, in the exercise of its discretion, to sum up the facts in the case to the jury, and submit them, with the inferences of law deducible therefrom, to the free judgment of the jury. But care should be taken in all such cases to separate the law from the facts, and to leave the latter, in unequivocal terms, to the jury, as their true and peculiar province, per Mr J. Story, in M'Kanahan v. Universal Insurance Co. 1 Peters' R. 182.

---

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT.

Baltimore—Beale Rendall, McClintock Young, and Alexander Cheves. Philadelphia—Daniel H. Miller, James M. Brown, and Edward D. Ingraham. New York—Hector Crag, Charles G. Dewitt, and John W. Mulligan—to be Commissioners of Insolvency under the act of Congress of the last session for the relief of certain insolvent debtors, &c.

Thomas B. Monroe, of Ky. Attorney of the U. S. for the District of Kentucky, in the place of John Speed Smith, resigned.

Daniel Le Roy, District Attorney, Michigan.

Nathaniel S. Benton, Attorney, Northern District of N. Y. vice Samuel Beardsley, elected to Congress.

David E. Baker, of Il. District Attorney, State of Illinois vice Samuel McRoberts.

Thomas E. Burfoot, of Virginia District, Attorney, Eastern District of Virginia, Vice Robert Stannard, resigned.

---

The Governor and Council have appointed Hon. Charles Jackson, Hon. Samuel Hubbard and John Brazier Davis, Esq. to be Commissioners 'to revise the existing Laws in relation to Debtor and Creditor, and to provide for the equal distribution of the estate of Insolvent Debtors,' agreeably to the provision of a Resolve of March 18, 1831.

---

Judge Putman at Worcester in his charge to the Grand Jury in defining and explaining perjury is said to have remarked that perjury was the violation of an oath lawfully administered—and added, to constitute perjury, it is not necessary that the oath should have been lawfully administered, and not as is sometimes improperly done—unlawfully or extrajudically.

---

* Essai sur ce qu'on appelle Effet Rétroactif des Lois. Par M. le Professeur Blondeau (Themis, Tome. viii. p. 289.), now said to be engaged on an elaborate treatise on the subject.

† Letter 3.

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars. April 9.

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIII. for March, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Moral Education. 1. The Library of Education, edited by Wm. Russell, vol. 1; containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education, by John Locke,' and 'A Treatise on Education, by John Milton.'

2. Account of the Edinburgh Sessional School, and the other Parochial Institutions for Education, established in that city in 1812; with Strictures on Education in general. By John Wood, Esq.

II. Prison Discipline 1. Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

2. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

III. Collection of Psalms and Hymns. A Collection of Psalms of Hymns for Christian Worship.

IV. Meaning of Αἰων. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays on several words relating to Future Punishment.

V. Works of the Rev. Robert Hall. The Works of the Rev. Robert Hall, A. M. Minister of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, England. First complete edition, with a brief Memoir of the author.

VI. Stuart and Whitman. 1. A Letter to William E. Channing, D. D. on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Moses Stuart, Professor of Sacred Literature in the Theological Seminary, Andover.

2. Two Letters to the Rev. Moses Stuart, on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College, February 3, 1831. March 19.

NEWSPAPER AND PERIODICAL AGENCY. EICHBAUN & NORVELL, Booksellers, Nashville, Tennessee, have, in addition to their regular business, established a GENERAL AGENCY for the procuring of subscribers to, and the collecting of debts due to Newspapers and Periodicals throughout the United States. To this business great attention will be paid, and the instructions of Publishers strictly attended to. The city in which they are established contains a population of six thousand inhabitants, and as the citizens have ever shown a disposition to encourage meritorious publications, with the aid of Agents, the publishers of Newspapers, Magazines, &c, might obtain a respectable number of subscribers. Refer to GRAY and BOWEN, Booksellers, Boston. March 19.

POPULAR JOURNAL OF MUSIC. THE HARMONICON, a Monthly Journal of Music—No. I. just received by GRAY & BOWEN. Each monthly number will contain—

I. An Original Biography of some distinguished Composer or Performer. II. Interesting Correspondence, or Original Dissertations, on Subjects connected with the Science. III. Detailed Accounts of the Opera, Concerts, and other Musical Performances of the past month. IV. Copious Extracts from the Foreign Musical Journals, giving the reader the latest information of the Progress of the art, and its Professors throughout Europe. V. Liberal and unbiassed Accounts of all Musical Works as they appear. VI. Six or seven pieces of Music, Vocal and Instrumental, English and Foreign, selected with care, and printed with a beauty and accuracy that may safely challenge competition.

Musical Families and Societies, subscribing to the Harmonicon, will be furnished monthly with (in addition to the literary contents of each number), on an average, Six Entire Pieces of Vocal and Instrumental Music, at a price not exceeding the common charge for a single piece, when printed in the usual way. March 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVII. for January.

CONTENTS.

Art I. Popular Defensive Force. II. Lesson's History of Man. III. Hannibal's Passage of the Alps. IV. Webster's American Dictionary. V. India and China Trade. VI. Character of George IV. VII. Scotch Parliamentary Reform. VIII. Heiress of Bruges. IX. Maxwell. X. Belgian Revolution. XI. J. P. Cobbett's Italy. XII. Bruce's Travels. XIII. Machine-Breaking. XIV. Tennyson's Poems. XV. Basil Barrington and Friends. XVI. The Wellington Administration. XVII. European Revolution; List of Books, &c. March 19.

SPLENDID BIBLE. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES. GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Language.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

No. 15, North American Series.

This number contains articles on Screw Cutting; Locomotive Carriages; finding Velocity of Ships at sea; New Metallic Alloy for pivot Watches; Reflections on the Decline of Science in England; Improved marine Steam Engine Boiler; Claxton's Air Pump; Almanacks for 1831, &c, &c, with a great number of engravings.

Subscriptions received as above at $3 75 per annum. March 19.

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1831. NO. XLI.

LORD MANSFIELD.

Continued.

In accordance with the principles of religious toleration, of which, both on the bench and in parliament, Lord Mansfield thus always professed himself the advocate, he was, of course, among the supporters of the bill passed in 18 Geo. 3. for the removal of a portion of the disabilities imposed on the catholics by the too famous 'act for preventing the growth of popery,' 11 & 12 W. 3. He was not immediately concerned in bringing forward the bill, which originated in the commons; and as it met with very little opposition in either house, he had no opportunity, on this occasion, of signalizing his zeal for the cause of religious liberty. But his sentiments on the subject had long been well known; and he was, accordingly, one of the many marked out for the vengeance of the 'no popery' mob. Friday, the 2nd of June, 1780, witnessed the beginning of those disgraceful outrages which, for a whole week, filled the inhabitants of London with consternation and dismay. On that day, the wretched leader of the faction, Lord George Gordon, proceeded to the House of Commons for the purpose of petitioning, as he chose to call it, for the repeal of the obnoxious act. In pursuance of his real design, which was to extort by intimidation, what he knew there was little chance of obtaining by legal means, he had previously given out that he would not proceed thither unless he found full twenty thousand persons assembled to accompany him. A greater number had congregated together; and the government, though fully warned, having neglected to take reasonable precaution against the disturbances that could not but be anticipated, the fury of lawless multitudes was checked with nothing that deserved the name of opposition. The obnoxious members of either house met with little mercy at their hands. As they drove down to Westminster, many of them were dragged out of their carriages, pelted, hustled, and otherwise maltreated. The equipage of Lord Mansfield's nephew, Lord Stormont, who was at that time secretary of state, was literally knocked to pieces by the mob, and he remained nearly half an hour in their power, when they were prevailed upon to let him retire. The windows of Lord Mansfield's own carriage were smashed with stones, the pannels stove in, and he himself had great difficulty in making his way into the lobby of the House of Lords, before they could proceed to wreak their utmost rage on his person. The Chancellor, Lord Thurlow, not being present, the duties of Speaker devolved upon him; and he remained in his place while the rest of the peers were contriving, each for himself, to make good their departure under the cover of darkness and disguises. It certainly redounds little to the credit of these noble lords that their venerable president, then in his seventysixth year, should have been thus at length left entirely alone and without any protection, but such as his own servants, or the officers of the house, could afford him. The dangers that threatened him on his return, he luckily contrived to evade. But he was not long left unmolested.

After four whole days more of pillage, havoc, and devastation, on the evening of the following Tuesday (June 7th) an immense body of the mob took their way towards his house in Bloomsbury Square, with the avowed design of burning it to the ground. This intention had been made so public that Lord Mansfield had time to take measures for thwarting the accomplishment of it; and had he possessed that firmness of character which nature had unfortunately denied him, there is little doubt but he might have succeeded in repelling the meditated attack, or even in preventing it from being attempted. At least his neighbor, Lord Thurlow, who was nearly as much the object of popular resentment as himself, contrived effectually to intimidate the rioters by making a stout show of resistance at his house in Great Ormond Street, though provided with no greater force than a sergeant's guard of soldiers. Lord Mansfield, in his dread of consequences, resolutely persisted in his refusal to post the military in the same manner. A detachment of the guards was sent for by Sir John Hawkins, who, with two other police magistrates, had hastened to the spot on the first intimation of the approaching danger; but no persuasion could induce Lord Mansfield to have them stationed beneath his own roof. By his desire they were marched to the vestry room of St George's church in Hart Street; and from that distance, had their numbers been trebled, there was little chance of their being able to make their way through the dense phalanx of the mob in time to afford any effectual resistance against an attack upon a house in Bloomsbury Square. They had not long been despatched to this post, when the shouts of the advancing multitude were heard. Many persons had previously assembled in the square to witness the spectacle of the threatened conflagration. The incendiaries did not keep them long waiting in expectation. The front entrance of the house was instantly forced, and Lord Mansfield and his lady had barely time to save themselves by a precipitate retreat through a back door, before the leaders of the mob were seen at the upper windows, tearing down and throwing below curtains, hangings, pictures, books, in short everything they could lay their hands on likely to serve as fuel for the burning. So intent were these ruffians on their work of destruction, that no time was lost in pillaging; and one of them, it is said, by way of setting an example against any such digressions from their main object, threw into the pile, which was already blazing underneath, a valuable piece of plate, and a large sum of money in gold. In a very short time the whole building was enveloped in flames; and as no attempt was or could be made to arrest their progress, long before morning nothing of it was left standing but the bare and blackened skeleton of the walls.

The loss thus sustained by Lord Mansfield, must have been very considerable, even leaving out of the calculation, all that to himself must have had a value entirely beyond any pecuniary estimate. The house itself, the furniture, the paintings, all were of a kind befitting the establishment of a wealthy English peer; and all this was destroyed. This, however, money might have replaced: but no sums would restore the cherished memorials of early friendship with the great and the illustrious,—the volumes inscribed to him by Pope or by Bolingbroke; the remarks noted down on the margin of others in the handwriting of the poet or the statesman; not the records of his own thoughts during the greater part of a life spent in constant intercourse and collision with the learned, the witty, and the wise.

'And Murray sighs o'er Pope and Swift,
And many a treasure more,
The well-judged purchase, and the gift,
That graced his letter'd store.

'Their pages mangled, burnt, and torn,
The loss was his alone;
But ages yet to come shall mourn
The burning of his own.'

Lines written by Cowper on the burning of Lord Mansfield's Library.

Independent of such precious relics as these, there are associations connected with the books of every man who is fond of literature, which make him look upon them with a feeling almost of affection. Surrounded by them, he feels himself in the presence of old friends; he recollects the date of his first acquaintance with each individual volume;—what motive first led him to make himself master of it;—what new train of thoughts or of emotions was awakened by the perusal of it; and merely by casting his eye along the backs of them as they stand ranged on the shelves, he can read the history of his own mind, and of his own actions which that mind has governed, perhaps, almost from the earliest infancy of his reason. We have no fear of subjecting ourselves to the ridicule of those who have experienced such feelings, and can appreciate the force, as well as the delicacy of such associations, when we say that no other than the very identical volumes that have first created them, can call them up again in the imagination with anything like the same vividness or reality. We may purchase the self-same works—better editions of them, in handsomer bindings; but the fine thread has been snapped; the charm is dissolved. This will doubtless appear very extravagant, and very absurd to those who consider books as nothing more than pretty furniture for the walls, and order them as they would hangings or papering—by the yard. To such persons we must despair of conveying any notion of the pang the destruction of his library must have inflicted on Lord Mansfield. 'I speak not from books,' he once said, in the house of Peers, after this event, 'for books I have none!' Those only who know what it is to feel a warm attachment, we had almost said friendship, for their books, can appreciate the full pathos of this simple sentence.

It was not till a week after the conflagration, that Lord Mansfield again appeared in his place in the King's Bench. A note in Douglas' Reports informs us, that a reverential silence, much more expressive than any set speech of condolence, could have been, was the greeting given him by the bar, on his first entry into court. This was on the 14th of June. In the course of the following month, a vote of the House of Commons gave him an opportunity of showing that, however great his loss might be, he was above receiving any indemnification for it out of the public money.* And here we may remark, in further disproof of the insinuations we have already alluded to, as to his supporting the measures of government from corrupt or interested motives, that he never, during the whole course of his life, took advantage of his influence with ministers to make himself or any of his family or dependents a charge to the nation. The only person, as he himself once stated in the House of Lords, for whom he ever solicited the slightest provision out of the funds of the public, was the unfortunate Lady Jane Douglas, who had no claims to interest him in her behalf, but her distress. For her he obtained a pension of 150*l.*; and assuredly, if the admitted privilege of the crown to provide by such means against the utter decay and ruin of ancient families had never been exerted but in cases of such extreme urgency as this, the people of England would never have felt inclined to murmur as they now very naturally do, at the abuses of the pension-list. It may doubtless be said, that small praise is due to a man who, being himself in the possession of great wealth, chooses to refrain from quartering on the public purse, those he is bound, and is well able to provide for, himself. This is incontestably true. Such conduct is only entitled to the negative praise, that it is not unworthy. But we have only to cast our eyes around us, and we shall unfortunately be compelled to allow that it has also, if not the merit, at least the peculiarity, of being extremely rare. That it has not been at all more common among chancellors and chief justices, than with ministers, secretaries, and lords of the bedchamber, may be demonstrated by a very cursory inspection of the list of sinecure offices, wherein by no means a small or an unconspicuous space is occupied by the posterity of deceased judges, and the relatives or connexions of the living.

On Lord Camden's resignation in the beginning of 1770, the Great Seal had been again offered to Lord Mansfield, and again he had declined it. After the death of Charles Yorke, it was once more tendered to his acceptance, and it was only on his positive refusal that it was finally committed (January 23d, 1771,) to Lord Bathurst. A higher dignity in the peerage was also at his command; but having no children of his own, nor for some time, indeed, any prospect of male heirs in his family, he declined for himself the honors of a more elevated hereditary rank. The king had already conferred upon him the personal honor of creating him a knight of the Thistle. At length, however, on hearing that the lady of his nephew, Lord Stormont, was about to become a mother, he felt a very natural anxiety that his own should be taken as the first title in his family, and he accordingly expressed his desire to exchange his baron's coronet for an earldom. From his own account, given in a letter to Bishop Newton, the manner in which this dignity was conferred was such as to give him great pleasure. The patent of his creation bears date October 31st, 1776. He was therein designated as Earl Mansfield of Mansfield, in the county of Nottingham. The title was granted to himself and his heirs male, or in default of such to Louisa Viscountess Stormont, and her heirs by Lord Stormont. The patent was thus drawn out, because it was held at the time that an English peerage could not be limited even in remainder to one who was already a peer of Scotland. Some years afterward (1792,) when it has been decided that this could be done, a new patent was granted, in which he is styled Earl Mansfield of Caen Wood, in the county of Middlesex, with remainder to Viscount Stormont, and the heirs male of his body. The latter of these patents not having the effect of superseding the other, it happens that, at this time, a son of the then Lord Stormont bears the title of Earl Mansfield of Caen Wood, in the county of Middlesex, while the then Lady Stormont, who is still living, is, in her own right, Countess Mansfield of Mansfield, in the county of Nottingham.

Caen Wood, the place named in the latest patent, is a villa and small estate so called, in the neighborhood of Highgate. This, which had only been his occasional residence, before the destruction of his town mansion in Bloomsbury square, afterwards became his more constant abode. The death of his lady, which happened four years afterwards (1784), deprived him of an affectionate companion, with whom he had enjoyed nearly fortysix years of uninterrupted domestic happiness. The loss must been to him irreparable; but his friends and acquaintances found her place supplied, and the honors of his hospitable board equally well performed by his two nieces, who had, for some time before, been constant inmates of his house, and continued so as long as he lived. The same elegance and propriety for which his domestic establishment had always been remarkable, still continued to distinguish it. We are assured by some who have had good opportunity for observation, that in no situation did Lord Mansfield appear to greater advantage than at his own table. The dignified manner of the judge was there laid aside for the affability and the ease of the polished gentleman. Nor did he ever suffer the pride of genius, or of great acquirements, to seduce him into the habit of displaying his intellectual superiority in the moments of social intercourse. If, as Johnson said of his friend Burke, the man of genius could be detected even by an ostler to whom he might give directions about his horse, or by a stranger who might take refuge from a shower under the same gateway with him, we may suppose it is not very likely any one should pass several hours in the society of such a man as Lord Mansfield without making the same discovery. But there never was on his part any studied or voluntary exhibition of his powers. Indeed, he was generally averse from introducing any topic of conversation that might call for much exertion of thought. His public duties gave sufficient occupation to the severer faculties of his mind; and as (to make use of Coke's favorite phrase,) the bow cannot be kept always bent, he was glad to avail himself of opportunity to relax its tension.

An anecdote is related of him, which shows that, even much earlier in life, he not only enjoyed but felt the necessity of granting himself this indulgence, and which at the same time displays his character in a very favorable light. He had reason to feel himself under considerable obligation to Lord Foley, who, if report speaks true, had persuaded his family to let him make the law his profession, instead of the church, for which they had originally designed him; and had obviated all objections as to pecuniary matters, by volunteering to defray the additional expenses of his legal education out of his own purse. The debt of gratitude thus incurred by the young lawyer was never afterwards forgotten. When he had risen to eminence at the bar, he was in the constant habit of spending his Saturday afternoons and Sundays at the old nobleman's country mansion; and upon some of his acquaintance expressing their surprise that he should forego all the social pleasures at his command to pay his accustomed visit at so dull a house, he assured them that he thereby enjoyed the double gratification of giving pleasure to a tried friend, and of allowing his mind an interval of complete repose.

Probably many persons were in the habit of winding up to the highest pitch their expectations of the instruction they were to derive from the conversation of one, whose reputation for wisdom and eloquence ranked so deservedly high; and in that case it was not at all unlikely they should experience a feeling of disappointment when they found him merely bear his part, like an ordinary guest, in the familiar chit-chat of the dinner table. In the same manner, we have no doubt, many an idler who had consumed his morning in doing nothing, and would fain have babbled of books when he found himself, towards evening, in the same room with such a man as Gibbon, must have been surprised to see the philosophic historian sit down to the card-table, and bestow as much apparent attention upon the kings and the knaves in his hand, as he had been giving during the previous part of the day to the kings and the knaves who make a figure in the affairs of the lower empire. But we venture to say, any one who had known what it was to keep all the faculties of his mind for a long time together on the stretch, would be as little likely to participate in this astonishment or disappointment, as a sportsman to wonder at seeing a brother fox-hunter fast asleep in his chair after a hard run. Only the indolent or the unemployed are apt commit the common injustice (common as indolence and the want of occupation) of estimating the mental powers of a hard-working lawyer, or author, by such a display of them as he may choose to make in private society, when he is, perhaps, making an effort to keep them, as much as possible, in a state of inaction.

It is not every chief justice of the King's Bench, who has the same multiplicity of public duties to burthen his mind that fell to the share of Lord Mansfield. There has never been one, for example, among those who have had a seat in the house of peers, who took such a prominent part

---

* The following is a copy of the letter sent by him to Mr Keene, the government surveyor, who had been directed to apply to him for an estimate of the amount of his loss:—

'21*st August*, 1780.

'Sir—I am extremely obliged to you for your attention in calling upon me before I went the circuit, and last Friday again since my return, and in now communicating to me by your letter of Saturday the unanimous vote of the house of Commons, and the reference of the lords of the treasury of the 18th July to your board, desiring me to enable you to comply with the order of the lords of the treasury; and so far as I am concerned, I return you my thanks for your great civility. Besides what is irreparable, my pecuniary loss is great. I apprehended no danger, and therefore took no precaution. But how great soever that loss may be, I think it does not become me to claim or expect reparation from the state. I have made up my mind to my misfortune as I ought, with this consolation, that it came from those whose object manifestly was general confusion and destruction at home, in addition to a dangerous and complicated war abroad. If I should lay before you any account or computation of the pecuniary damage I have sustained, it might seem a claim or expectation of being indemnified. Therefore you will have no further trouble on this subject from 'Your most obedient and humble servant,

MANSFIELD.'

in the debates; and the weight attached to his opinions on all questions of foreign as well as of domestic policy, entailed upon him the necessity of bestowing deep consideration, thought, and sometimes also research, before he uttered them. Then his duties as a privy councillor were not to be performed without much labor. For many years, government relied almost solely upon him for the decision of appeals from the colonies; and these were much more numerous at that time than they have been since the separation of America from the mother country. Perhaps it may be needless to add, that his attendance in court by no means constituted the whole of what he was called upon to do in his capacity of chief justice alone. Besides the customary attendance at chambers, many of the decisions pronounced by the bench required study that occasionally occupied the evenings not spent in attendance at the House of Lords. In a note to one of his fellow judges, at the time he was preparing his elaborate argument in the case of Taylor v. Horde, he gives an account of the time he chose for putting his materials together. 'I am very impatient,' he writes, 'to discharge myself entirely of it. While the company is at cards, I play my rubbers at this work, not the pleasantest in the world; but what must be done I love to do, and have it over.' Now when the mind is thus continually kept on active duty, occasional relaxation is as necessary to recruit its strength, as cessation from bodily toil to repair the animal forces. In both cases, too, repose is a positive enjoyment, and like most other enjoyments, is better appreciated in proportion as it is more seldom tasted. Another of his letters, giving an account of the zest with which he indulged in complete idleness, during a long vacation, he concludes by quoting the very just remark: 'Liber esse mihi non videtur qui non aliquando nihil agit.'

Perhaps it was partly in consequence of Lord Mansfield's general abstinence from any severe exertion of his mental faculties, except such as the duties of his station demanded, that he contrived to keep them unimpaired up to the latest period of a long life. Little more than a week before his decease, his nephew, Lord Stormont, on asking his opinion concerning a law case in which he was concerned, found that he still retained the same clearness and quickness of perception, for which he had been always remarkable, and that his powers of reasoning remained also entirely unimpaired. About three years before this, one of his nieces was reading Burke's work on the French Revolution, which formed at that time the general topic of conversation, and happening to meet with the word psephismata, she applied to a gentleman near her for an explanation of its meaning. His answer was, that he had considered it to be a misprint for sophismata; but Lord Mansfield immediately corrected this error, and after a short pause, recited from memory a tolerably long passage from Demosthenes, wherein the word in question was employed, and explained by the context. He was then in his eightysixth year. His bodily strength did not last so long. His increasing infirmities prevented him from taking his place in court after Michaelmas Term, 1787. Probably he then anticipated a return of health, that might enable him to resume his seat there, for he did not immediately resign his situation; but finding his expectations on this score disappointed, he gave in his dismission on the 4th of June, in the next year; having thus held the situation of chief justice within a few months of thirtytwo years. As soon as his resignation was made known, the bar came to the resolution of deputing Mr Erskine, then one of the leading counsel in the court of King's Bench, to convey to him an address of farewell in their name; and accordingly, about a fortnight afterwards, (June 18,) the following letter was sent to him at Caen Wood. In less than five minutes from the receipt of it, his answer, which we shall also subjoin, was delivered to the bearer.

'My Lord—It was our wish to have waited personally upon your lordship in a body, to have taken our public leave of you, on your retiring from the office of chief justice of England; but judging of your lordship's feelings upon such an occasion by our own, and considering, besides, that our numbers might be inconvenient, we desire, in this manner, affectionately to assure your lordship, that we regret, with a just sensibility, the loss of a magistrate whose conspicuous and exalted talents conferred dignity upon the profession, whose enlightened and regular administration of justice made its duties less difficult and laborious, and whose manners rendered them pleasant and respectable. But, while we lament our loss, we remember with peculiar satisfaction, that your lordship is not cut off from us by the sudden stroke of painful distemper, or the more distressing ebb of those extraordinary faculties which have so long distinguished you among men; but that it has pleased God to allow to the evening of a useful and illustrious life the purest enjoyments which Nature has ever allotted to it—the unclouded reflections of a superior and unfading mind over its varied events; and the happy consciousness that it has been faithfully and eminently devoted to the highest duties of human society, in the most distinguished nation upon earth. May the season of this high satisfaction bear its proportion to the lengthened days of your activity and strength!'

'Dear Sir—I cannot but be extremely flattered by the letter which I this moment have the honor to receive. If I have given satisfaction, it is owing to the learning and candor of the bar: the liberality and integrity of their practice freed the judicial investigation of truth and justice from difficulties. The memory of the assistance I have received from them, and the deep impression which the extraordinary mark they have now given me of their approbation and affection has made upon my mind, will be a source of perpetual consolation in my decline of life, under the pressure of bodily infirmities, which made it my duty to retire.—I am, dear Sir,

With gratitude to you and the other gentlemen,
Your most affectionate and obliged humble servant, Mansfield.'

Caen Wood, June 13, 1788.

There was nothing of exaggeration or of insincerity in the language of affection and attachment towards the venerable chief justice, thus eloquently expressed by Erskine on behalf of the bar. The affability and kindness of his manner towards the whole of the profession had always in reality been such as to convert into a pleasure those duties which are certainly as irksome as can well be, when such qualities are not to be found on the bench. And they were displayed too, with perfect impartiality towards every member of the bar. The differences of silk gown and stuff gown, of large or small practice, of a seat in the front or in the back row, never caused the slightest distinction in the uniform urbanity of Lord Mansfield's address and demeanor. That sort of undue influence with the bench, which, every one who attends the courts will admit, has sometimes been painfully conspicuous in the case of particular counsel, whether acquired by favoritism, or by the assumption of superior knowledge, or eminently successful practice, was never to be remarked in the King's Bench while Lord Mansfield presided there; although like most other judges he had his private friends among them, and although the bar could boast of such men as Mingay, and Bearcroft, and Dunning, and Erskine, and many others whose names will long continue to live in the recollection of their successors. The junior barristers had particular reason to feel gratified by his attention to them. He would often relieve the timidity or the embarrassment of of an inexperienced young man, by a few words of encouragement, or an observation that would throw a sudden ray of light upon his case. He also instituted a custom, for which not only the younger members of the profession, but the public in general ought still to hold themselves indebted to him; one, that does as much towards facilitating the despatch of the term business in court, as equalizing the distribution of a considerable portion of it among counsel of different standing. This was the going through the bar. Previous to his time, it had scarcely ever happened that in one day motions were heard from more than the two or three first rows of benches; and when on the following day the hour would arrive for moving the court, it had been usual to commence again with the attorney-general, or senior king's counsel, and go on as before, according to the established form of precedence. Thus, a junior on one of the back rows might wait for a term or more without having an opportunity afforded him of moving; the necessary consequence of which was, that clients, rather than incur the certainty of great delay in the progress of a cause, never thought of entrusting this sort of business to any but those who claimed the right of preaudience. Lord Mansfield's practice was to go entirely through the bar, if possible, every day, in the same manner as now is done; but if time pressed, and he could only call on a portion of the barristers, he began the next day precisely where he had left off, and heard those who had previously missed their opportunity, before he began again within the bar. The benefits of this method are obvious; and it is to be regretted that it is not still adhered to, so far as regards the alternative adopted whenever the court could take but part of the motions at one sitting.

The only fault ever found by the bar with Lord Mansfield's demeanor on the bench, was the habit he sometimes indulged in of reading the newspaper, or writing letters, while counsel were addressing the court or the jury. This is a custom we certainly shall not attempt to defend. But it must be remarked, that this neglect of the speaker was always more apparent than real, for in summing up the evidence, or delivering his opinion, as the case might be, it was evident that nothing of importance had escaped him; and it is to be supposed, that those who were convinced by constant experience how fully he possessed the power of thus dividing his attention, were ready to pardon the mere semblance of bestowing it altogether upon matters foreign to the business in hand. Casual frequenters of the court, who were not daily accustomed to witness the display of his astonishing memory, would occasionally expect nothing less than to find him embarrassed and confused, when he began the recapitulation of evidence or arguments, of which he had not only taken no note, but had been to all appearance a very inattentive auditor; so that when, on laying down his newspaper, he went minutely through the whole, not forgetting or mis-stating so much as the name of a single case or a single witness, their wonder knew no bounds. But there was much more to admire than the mere display of memory. There was the statement of the case, in itself worth an argument, the clear arrangement of facts, the acute deduction of inferences, the ready replies to objections, and the conclusion so plainly suggested to the hearers, long before it was announced, that the least able reasoners might be betrayed into a high opinion of their own discernment, for perceiving what the consummate art of the speaker had made it quite impossible they should not perceive.

During the whole period of his chief justiceship, the court seldom or ever failed to be crowded in term time with a concourse of students, who frequented it as the best school of legal instruction they could attend. Indeed, previous to Judge Buller's rapid rise at the bar, and early promotion at the bench, which induced young men to pursue the same course of study he had so ably profited by, and first rendered general the practice of passing the greater part of their noviciate in the chambers of a special pleader, a constant attendance upon the courts had been the most usual method adopted for the acquirement of practical knowledge of the law. Lord Mansfield always appears to have taken quite a fatherly interest in their progress, and to have made it a part of his duty to afford them every facility of acquiring solid and correct information. Whenever he was about to pronounce the decision of the court, in a cause that had been argued some time before, he generally called upon one of the counsel concerned, to give a statement of the case, for the benefit of the students, before he began to deliver the judgment; and numerous instances are recorded in Burrow's Reports, of his stopping to explain obscure points of law or of history connected with the case, to give his opinion upon the character of particular books, or to refute some erroneous doctrines supported by strong authority; all, as he expressly used to state, that the students might not be misled. We know not what finer, or more instructive lectures they could have listened to than the elaborate arguments, rich with historical illustration, and judicious comment, by which he explained the grounds of the decisions in such cases as Taylor v. Horde, or Millar v. Taylor, or Wyndham v. Chetwynd, or a host of others we might quote.

To be continued.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

ACTION.

If A's personal property is attached in a suit against B, and A sells and assigns his property to a third person while it is under attachment, an action of trespass for the benefit of the vendee, against the attaching officer, is properly brought in the name of A. Holley vs. Huggeford, 8 Pick. 73.

ACTION ON THE CASE.

Where real property is in the possession of a lessee, other then a tenant at will, case, and not trespass, is the proper form of action to be brought by the landlord for an injury by a stranger affecting the inheritance, even where trespass would be the proper remedy if the landlord were himself in the possession. Lienow vs. Ritchie, 8 Pick. 235.

ADMIRALTY.

1. The admiralty has jurisdiction over petitory, as well as possessory suits, to reinstate owners of ships, who have been wrongfully displaced from their possession. Schooner Tilton, 5 Mason, 465.

2. The admiralty has jurisdiction in case of a wrecked ship, to decree a sale upon application of the master. Ib.

AMENDMENT.

1. A verdict may be amended by the judge's notes, after error brought and joinder in error. Clark vs. Lamb, 8 Pick. 415.

2. A special verdict cannot be amended by the minutes of the judge, without the consent of both parties. Walker vs. Dewey, 8 Pick. 520.

3. If the infancy of the plaintiff is pleaded in abatement, the court may allow him to amend by inserting in the writ, that he sues by A, his next friend. Blood vs. Harrington, 8 Pick. 552.

ASSIGNEE.

1. The assignee of a bond takes it subject to all the equities which existed against it in the hands of the original obligee; and a fraud in obtaining the bond by the obligee, may be set up in an action at law, as a defence against the assignee, though he purchased it for a valuable consideration,, and without notice of the fraud. Barrow vs. Bispham, 6 Halst. 110.

2. The assignee of a rent charge may take advantage of the clause of re-entry. Fairley vs. Craig, 6 Halst. 263.

3. Whether an ejectment may be brought by the assignee of the rent charge against a tenant of the demised premises, on a refusal by him to pay rent according to the terms of the lease, and the clause of re-entry contained therein. Quære. Ib.

ASSIGNMENT.

In an indenture of assignment and release between a debtor and his creditors, the property assigned was described as a quantity of certain kinds of goods in the hands of divers persons named, and it was provided that a schedule of the property should be made out and annexed to the instrument 'as soon as may be.' Held, that annexing a schedule was not a condition precedent to the operation of the release: and that omitting to annex it did not make the assignment void or defeat the release; though the provision might amount to a covenant that the debtor would, whenever it should be required, make out and annex such schedule. Emerson vs. Knower, 8 Pick. 63.

2. Where goods on consignment at Boston were, on the failure of the owners, assigned for the benefit of creditors, and before notice to the consignees of the assignment could be reasonably given, another creditor of the debtor's attached them by a trustee process in Boston, the debtor and the creditors being citizens of the state of Pennsylvania; it was held, that the assignment, if bona fide, was a sufficient title to pass the goods to the assignees, and to overreach the trustee process. Bholen vs. Cleaveland, 5 Mason, 174.

ASSUMPSIT.

1. A tax imposed by a municipal corporation, cannot be recovered on a count for money paid, laid out, and expended: although such corporation has paid the costs of the improvement, for which the tax was created. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore vs. Hughes, 1 Gill & Johns. 480.

2. Nor can the cost of such an improvement, or any part thereof, be recovered from a defendant liable to pay tax therefor, on a count for work and labor, where the ordinance under which the work was done, has not been properly pursued, so as to create a legal liability in the defendant. Ib.

ATTACHMENT.

Butter made from the milk of a debtor's only cow, is exempt from attachment and execution. Leavitt vs. Metcalf, 2 Vermont Cases, 342.

ATTORNEY.

An attorney who is employed to collect a debt is liable to his client if he neglect, without fresh instructions, to pursue the bail of the debtor in due time. And though the bail be insolvent, yet if there be reasonable ground to believe that the officer will be liable upon a failure to collect of the bail, the bail should be pursued for that purpose. Crooker vs. Hutchinson, 1 Vermont Cases, 73.

AUDITA QUERELA.

Audita querela will not lie where a writ of error is the proper remedy, though such writ is taken away by statute. Dodge vs. Hubbell, 1 Vermont Cases, 491.

BAIL.

A person having become bail in one state in the Union, may take the principal in another state. Commonwealth vs. Brickett, 8 Pick. 138.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

1. The endorsee of a note void in its creation, may recover of the endorser without proving a demand of the maker. Chandler vs. Mason, 2 Vermont Cases, 193.

2. When a bill exchange is endorsed in full, all the legal interest is transferred to the endorsee, and having the legal interest, he alone is qualified to maintain an action on such bill. He cannot use the name of the payee, because the payee having transferred his interest, can have no competency to maintain an action. Bowie, use of Ladd vs. Duvall, 1 Gill & Johns. 175.

3. So where it appeared that the note of the defendant, payable to B. or order, had been endorsed as follows, 'I assign the within for value rereceived, to L;' signed B., but which endorsement was erased just before the jury was sworn; it was held that an action in the name of B., originally instituted for the use of L., could not be maintained upon the note as there was no evidence from which the jury could infer that the payee and plaintiff was the holder of the note; neither could an action be maintained on the money counts, although there was proof of an express promise to pay the sum demanded in such suit, as that must be considered as enuring to the benefit of him who had a right to the note. Ib.

4. The endorsement of T., on the promissory note of E. payable to A., as follows: 'I hereby guarantee the ultimate payment of the within note,' is void for want of consideration; and under the plea of non assumpsit to a declaration founded upon that guaranty, the objection to the want of consideration may be taken. Aldridge vs. Turner, 1 Gill & Johns. 427.

5. Where I., an endorser of a protested bill, after having had sufficient opportunity to ascertain the circumstances of the presentment, protest, and notice, promised M., a subsequent endorser, who had taken up the bill, to repay him, afterwards received the bill from M., proved it in his own name against the estate of the drawees who had failed, and received a dividend upon it, and retained the bill; it was held, that I. was liable on this promise to repay M., unless he could prove that his promise was made under a mistake of the facts. Martin vs. Ingersoll, 8 Pick. 1.

6. During the Christmas holydays vessels are not allowed to clear out at the Havana; it seems, therefore, that during the continuance of the holydays, it is not necessary to write a notice of the dishonor of a bill, to be sent to a foreign port. Ib.

7. The maker of a note, who has been committed to jail on execution on a judgment in favor of the holder, but has not paid the note, is still liable to be sued by an endorser who pays the amount of the note to the holder; and the suit of the endorser may be brought while the maker is still in jail in the prior suit. Cole vs. Cushing, 8 Pick. 48.

8. An action for money had and received may be maintained by the endorsee of a note against the maker, although the note was signed by the maker, merely for the accommodation of the payee, and the maker never received either money or any other consideration for signing it. Ib.

9. Where the holder of a note with several endorsers in blank, sues the maker and writes over the name of the first endorser an order to pay it to himself, the holder, but without striking out the names of the subsequent endorsers, he does not thereby discharge them; and therefore one of them who pays the amount of the note to the holder, may sue any of the prior parties. Ib.

10. A bill of exchange, which was endorsed by C. of New Orleans, and was payable in Boston, was owned by T. of New York. The bill was dishonored by non-acceptance, August 11, and H., who was T.'s agent at Boston, wrote to T. by mail the same day, informing him of the dishonor of the bill. T., by an answer dated August 13, requested H. to give the notices. H. accordingly had the notice to C. put into the mail at Boston, August 19. Held, that the notice was not seasonable, even if T. was justifiable in sending to H., instead of sending notice himself directly from New York to New Orleans. Talbot vs. Clark, 8 Pick. 51.

11. In an action by the holder of a bill of exchange against the endorser, a subsequent endorser is not a competent witness to charge the defendant, without a release from the plaintiff. Ib.

12. The defendant, a merchant in this country, directs the plaintiff, his correspondent in England, to purchase goods and to draw for the price on a banker in London; who also authorizes the plaintiff to draw. The plaintiff, having similar orders from other persons purchases goods in his own name for them and for the defendant indiscriminately. On the 30th of July he draws a bill in his own name three months payable on account of the defendant. The bill is drawn on account generally, in payment for several parcels of goods and not in payment for goods purchased for the defendant; the defendant however being indebted to the plaintiff to the amount of the bill for goods already sent to him. The banker accepts the bill, having then in his hands only a small balance due to the defendant, but in September he receives funds beyond the amount of the bill. A few days before the 2d of November when the bill falls due, the acceptor becomes a bankrupt. On the 26th of November a stranger, through mistake, pays the bill for the honor of a person not a party, claiming, however, to hold the plaintiff and all the other parties, but no notice of the dishonor is given to the plaintiff. Afterwards the person who paid the bill recovers judgment against the plaintiff upon a default by consent. In an action by the plaintiff, against the defendant to recover the price of the goods, it was held, that the plaintiff, having had good reason to expect that the bill would be paid by the drawee, was entitled to notice of its dishonor; that he could not waive notice to the prejudice of the defendant; and that the action could not be maintained. Grosvenor vs. Stone, 8 Pick. 79.

13. A judgment in an action against the endorser of a note in his favor, on a verdict which was rendered on the ground that the action had been brought before notice was given, is no bar to another action commenced after notice was given; and consequently such judgment is no bar to a suit in equity brought against the endorser and his assignees in order to enable the plaintiff to obtain the benefit of the assignment. New England Bank vs. Lewis, 8 Pick. 113.

14. Where a note is made by A payable to B, and endorsed by C at the time it is made, C becomes a promiser on the note, and may be declared against as such. Baker vs. Briggs, 8 Pick. 122.

15. In an action by B against C as a promiser of such a note, the declarations and admisssions of A are not admissible against C, for A himself is a competent witness. Ib.

16. A bill of exchange was drawn in Boston by J. R. B. on H. & Co. of Richmond, who accepted it for the accommodation of the drawer, and on his engagement to place funds in New York, where the bill was payable to meet it at its maturity. The bill was endorsed by the plaintiff, also for the accommodation of the drawer with a knowledge of all the circumstances, and he advised the drawer to adopt this mode of raising money. The drawer having failed and assigned his property for the benefit of his creditors, before the bill became payable, it was dishonored and returned to Boston, where it had been discounted for the drawer, and where the plaintiff took it up as endorser. The assignment provided for idemnifying the plaintiff against all endorsements made by him on account of the drawer, and there were funds in the hands of the assignees to which he could resort for the payment of the bill. Held, that the acceptors were exonerated, and that the holders must resort to the funds in the hands of the assignee, for pay of the bill. Bradford vs. Hubbard, 8 Pick. 155.

17. A covenant by the payee of a promissory note not to sue the maker within a limited time, cannot be pleaded in bar to an action brought within the time by a person to whom the note was endorsed after it became due. Perkins vs. Gilman, 8 Pick. 229.

18. Two notes dated in October, and falling due in January and February following, were endorsed by the defendant who was an Englishman, a master mariner and unmarried man, having no home in this country, and when in England, residing in Liverpool. On the 12th of December he wrote from Boston to the holder at Providence, that he should leave Boston in a day or two for Liverpool, but in fact he remained in Boston till the middle of March. The holder did not know of this fact nor of his residing in Liverpool and sent no notice to him of the dishonor of the bill; neither did it appear that the holder made any inquires for his residence. Held, that due diligence had not been used to give notice to the endorser. Hodges vs. Galt, 8 Pick. 251.

19. Assuming that a foreign bill of exchange, payable after sight, ought to be presented within a reasonable time, that time must be judged of with reference to the usage among merchants as to delays in the negotiation and transmission of such bills. Wallace vs. Agry, 5 Mason, 118.

20. Where certain merchants had entered into a written contract to subscribe certain sums for a voyage to Africa, &c, and authorized their agent to draw bills for the amount if he fitted out the expedition, and he drew a bill on one of the subscribers for the amount subscribed by him to pay for goods bought for the voyage on the credit of the written authority above stated, which was shown to the payee of the bill; it was held, that the agent, though drawer, was a competent witness to prove the facts in a suit brought by the payee against the subscriber, upon a constructive acceptance of the bill, it having been dishonored, when presented for acceptance. Lowber vs. Shaw, 5 Mason, 241.

21. Where a note is made payable at a particular place, and the endorser resides there; if the holder remits it to his agent at such place, for payment, and it is dishonored; the agent is not bound to give notice of the dishonor to the endorser; but his duty is to give notice to his principal, who may then give notice to the endorser, and if given in due time after the principal has received notice, the endorser is bound. U. S. Bank vs. Goddard, 5 Mason, 366.

22. If due notice is given by a holder to his immediate endorser, of the dishonor of a note, and the latter gives due notice to a prior endorser, the holder may recover against the latter, although he has never given him any notice, for due notice given by any party on the bill, is notice to charge in favor of all subsequent parties. Ib.

---

CONDITION.

The demandant being owner of a parcel of land with a dwellinghouse thereon, adjoining on the north to land with a dwellinghouse thereon belonging to his sister, facing to the south, conveys to the tenant's grantor in fee simple, 'provided, however, this conveyance is upon the condition, that no windows shall be placed in the north wall of the house aforesaid, or of any house to be erected on the premises, within thirty years from the date hereof.' After the sister has conveyed her land to a stranger, the tenant mortgages by a deed reciting the foregoing provision, and afterward, while remaining in possession, makes windows in the north wall. Held, that the above clause was a condition, not a covenant; that it was a valid condition; and that such a breach of it worked a forfeiture of the estate, and gave the demandant a right to re-enter. Gray vs. Blanchard, 8 Pick. 284.

COMMON CARRIER.

1. A person delivering a package to a common carrier to be transported, is under no obligation to state the value of the articles it contains, unless an inquiry is made on the subject. Phillips vs. Earle, 8 Pick. 182.

2. But it seems, that in case an inquiry should be made and a false answer given, or any fraudulent attempt be made to conceal the real value of the articles from the carrier, he would not be liable for the value, in case of loss without his default. Ib.

3. Where a package was delivered to the agent of a stage-coach company, at the post office where the stage was standing, and not at the office of the company, to be carried from Boston to Hartford, and was by the agent, when he received it, entered on the way bill, he having previously directed the person who had the care of the package to bring it to the post office; and the package was lost before reaching Hartford; it was held, that the owners of the coach were liable to the owner of the package for its value, the delivery at the post office being with the assent of their agent. Ib.

4. The package was directed to a person at Hartford, who was not there at the time when the coach arrived, nor for several days after; it was held, that as the package never in fact arrived, the absence of the person to whom it was directed, didnot exonerate the owners of the coach from their liability. Ib.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1831.

JURIDICAL LETTERS.

(Concluded.)

'Persons who are desirous of further tracing the mass of confusion and arbitrary decision—the worst possible species of jurisprudence—which has already accumulated on the transitive operation of the new Bankrupt Act, may also consult the cases mentioned below.*

'To these may be added another line of cases not mentioned by Juridicus; those relating to Lord Tenterden's act, 9 Geo. 4. c. 14. Under this comparatively trifling alteration, many cases like the following have arisen, and caused a great deal of costly litigation. A. has a demand on B. of more than six years' standing, revived by a verbal acknowledgment in 1828; he commences an action to enforce it, but the trial does not come on till after the 1st Jan. 1829, on which day the act began to operate. Under these circumstances it has been held that A, not being able to produce a written acknowledgment, must fail; and the decision would have been the same had he been merely suing as nominal plaintiff on the record for the benefit of a third party to whom the debt —being thus in commerce—had been assigned.* This strikes us to be glaringly unjust, but the noble and learned framer of the bill no more anticipated an effect of the sort, than the framers of the bankrupt act; nor even now are English legislators aware that the difficulties in question have any deeper source than the accidental inaccuracies of particular draftsmen. They have never yet attempted to generalize; they stop the holes their bad workmansnip has left, and leave just as many in their succeeding productions; like the boxer in Demosthenes, they are wholly engaged with the last blow they receive, but have not skill enough to anticipate the next, much less to plan a scientific defence. The First Report of the Real Property Commissioners is, in this respect, on a par with the statute book, and betrays a total ignorance of the above principle of legislation. On all the subjects comprised in it, on which transitive questions may arise, no sort of provision for such questions has been made. But that they will arise in crowds, is what no one who reads this Letter can doubt. What we have said already will enable the reader to judge of their close affinity to new rules of Limitation, and they may and will spring up under the heads of Inheritance, Dower, and Curtesy, as well.

'A new rule of descent is enacted: the ascending line, and the half blood are let in. It is easy enough to say the new law will only apply to the case of a descent after the act. But is that the only question that can arise? A man limits a remainder by will or settlement before the act, "to the right heirs of A. B." (a person then living,) having particular individuals in his eye. A. B. dies after the act. Are persons to take who at the time of the will or settlement never could have answered the description? It will perhaps be answered that "Nemo est hæres viventis," and that no individuals were in point of law indicated till the estate vested. Very well; so be it: but it would want a decision even for that. A man limits an estate before the act to A. for life, remainder to B. in fee, if he shall be living at the death of A., but if he shall be then dead to the right heirs of C., who is dead. This remainder does not vest till after the act. Is it to vest in the statutory, or the common-law heir? If the former, what becomes of the person to whom for a valuable consideration the common-law heir has passed his contingent interest by estoppel? In this case the decision would probably be the other way; but the decision must be had. The cases would occur too of heirs selling their descendible expectancies before the act.'

'Go on to Dower. The law we are told is to apply to every case of a person dying after the passing of the Act. If so, titles of Dower commenced before the Act would be defeated by a simple alienation by the husband; for "right to dower is to attach a law upon hereditaments to which the husband at the time of his death had a right for any estate," &c. (Prop. I.) and "every widow shall be entitled to dower in equity out of all such hereditaments, &c, which shall have belonged to her husband at the time of his death," &c. (Prop. II.) But then comes the question, must this alienation be after the Act, or will an alienation before the Act do, the husband not dying till after the Act?'

'Suppose it to be so decided; (and who can tell how it might?)—then might come the case of a man purchasing before the Act, expressly subject to the dower, (the wife separated, and refusing to join) and giving a price minus the estate in dower. Then comes the Act; and then comes a suit in Equity to see whether the purchaser is to have the estate of the doweress, contrary to his bargain, or whether the heir of the vendor is to have it, by way of resulting trust.'

Some other illustrations are given, and then a challenge is thrown out: 'Let the commissioners give a certain eminent conveyancer [meaning Mr Preston] whom I could name, a guinea a question for as many cases as he can put upon the transitive application of their own propositions, and see whether they or he will stop first.'

The writer does not illustrate the difficulty by suggesting cases under the Registration Report, but in the last page of the next article but one, the reader will find ample proof of its applicability.

Having no further view in this article than to give full warning of the difficulty and provoke the necessary inquiries, we shall here break off; referring those who desire further information to Juridicus. Indeed, it would hardly be fair to paraphrase or anticipate him; he has done good service, and should have the full and undivided honor with all the attendant advantages of his discovery. Already, however, his main point has been gained; he has now placed himself on the best possible vantage ground for encountering that narrow-minded tribe, who sneer at juridical science, make a boast of an ignorance at which they should blush, conceive the home-bred jurisprudence of England to be quite sufficient for her wants, and would exclude the law-books of Germany and France as zealously as their wines or their corn. In his next Letter, we trust, he will complete the demolition of the prejudice, by entering upon the subject at at large. He may not succeed better than the jurists of the Continent in framing any general law which shall dispense with the necessity of particular provisions; but he may point out the principles on which such provisions should be framed, or give a popular explanation of the manner in which the difficulty has been met by the French, and state the value they put upon the different classes of attentes. If he cannot do this in Letters, let him lay aside his incognito, and present us with a regular work. He may rest assured that the confidence in his learning and sagacity is now sufficiently high, to make this by no means an unprofitable and certainly a highly honorable course.—Law Magazine.

MR DANE'S APPENDIX

TO VOL. IX. OF HIS ABRIDGEMENT.

This Appendix is wholly devoted to an exposition of constitutional law. The author comes out with a venerable authority in his old age, in vindication of those great and fundamental principles of a government, which he was a fellow-laborer, with his revolutionary contemporaries, to establish. The treatise, though not rigidly methodical, is rich in historical learning, and full of wisdom and deep reflection, and unanswerable in argument. The positions are indeed such as have already the assent of a great majority of the nation, but some of them have lately come into discussion, and accordingly, these expositions and elucidations are very opportunely presented to the public.

In regard to the doctrine which has not we be-

* Exp. Shepard, 1 Mont. & M. 67. Exp. Ruck, ib. 297. Key v. Cook, 2 Moore & Payne, 720. Phillips v. Hopwood, 10 Barn. & Cres. 39. Kay v. Goodwin, 6 Bing. 576. Cuming v. Welsford, ib. 502.

* Fowler v. Chatterton, 6 Bing. 258., and the cases there cited. It will there be seen that cases of the same sort arose upon the construction of the Statute of Frauds.

lieve, until very recently been questioned, that the states are not sovereign in the most extensive meaning of that expression, the author, with his usual sagacity, takes notice that the term is not applied to the states, execpting in two constitutions, and in these in a qualified sense only; and adds, that in its broadest sense it is not applicable to the general government, but only to the people themselves. Though this position is disputed in the political controversies, we presume that no statesman or lawyer will deliberately entertain a question respecting it. But the precise relation of the states to the Union, is a subject of very interesting inquiry, on which many things remain to be settled, and one on which Mr Dane in this treatise, has thrown much light.

His remarks upon the use of the term compact, in application to government, civil politics, or a constitution, are, we believe, original; at least they are not ordinarily met with in the popular treatises. His idea is, that a constitution, though it may originate in a compact, still, when once ordained and established, is not a compact, but strictly a law—a rule of conduct. At first view, this distinction may appear to be a matter of speculative theory, rather than of practical import; but on reflection, it will be found to be pregnant with important consequences. And if Mr Dane is right, much of the political philosophy drawn from Rousseau's Social Compact, will prove to be more visionary than solid, and the settling of this fundamental proposition will very clearly expose its fallacy.

The importance and necessity of an interpretation and application to individual rights and obligations, of the laws and constitution, is a subject that necessarily occupies a great deal of space in this Appendix. It seems a little astonishing that any set of men should, in our system of government, think of addressing themselves to popular partiality, by decrying the judiciary, or attempting to prostrate it to the legislative or executive power; for it is in fact the only direct safeguard the citizen has against those powers, so that making the judiciary a subservient, dependent appendage of the other powers of government, is in fact, a total destruction of personal liberty. This we take to be an undeniable proposition, the truth of which is palpable to any man of ordinary capacity. That any set of men, who find the judiciary standing in the way of some temporary views of their own, should feel a dissatisfaction with the judges, is not unnatural, and as judges are sometimes wrong, as well as other men, there are not wanting just occasions to dissent from their opinions. But that any person should go so far as to decry the judiciary itself, as a part of the government, and think that the people would even, for a moment, maintain the idea of crippling and prostrating the power, in the strength and independence of which their own personal liberty and all their social rights are involved, is a thing which, if it had never happened, would at once be pronounced incredible. The judiciary is not only the sole protector of individual liberty and rights, under every government where it is independent, (where it is not so there is no liberty,) but it is also, as Mr Dane remarks, in fact, by far the most unpopular branch of the government, where it is, as with us, connected with trial by jury.

'When we consider the numerous judicial magistrates, and especially two or three hundred thousand of jury men, the solid and select part of the people in the judiciary, exclusively, and others connected therewith, I hesitate not to affirm that there is more weight of character in the judiciary than in both of the other two departments.'

'In the following passage the author takes a very liberal and philosophical view of our parties, and draws from their history another argument in favor of the necessity that the citizens should have an independant tribunal to which to look for the protection of their persons and their rights.

The varying notions of party men.—If we would know how one of them construes the constitution and laws, we must inquire whether he is in the majority or minority. Men naturally enlarge powers, when in their own hands, or the hands of their friends, and limit them when in the hands of their adversaries, in the same degree. Majorities possess and exercise them. Their passions, feelings, and self-confidence ever influence them to extend them, and to make them bear hard on opposed minorities, whose passions and feelings are, by nature, against such extensions. We may cite thousands of cases to prove the facts. A few must suffice. When a respectable member of Congress, Mr B. was in the federal majority, he thought the citizens' right and power to sue a state, was the fairest feature in the federal constitution, and that, its specified powers must yield, so as to effect the common defence and general welfare. When in the minority, his object was to confine its powers to the plain meaning, and to limit them to the very letter of the specified powers. Instance of a state legislature. In 798, that of Virginia was in the minority in the general government; then it thought Congress had no power to enact the alien and sedition acts, and that the Supreme Court was not the common arbiter; and it strove hard to limit federal powers. In 1810, Virginia was in the majority in the general government; then her legislature unanimously held, that court was the common arbiter, as above, and then supported the very extended powers of the general government, exercised in creating and upholding the long embargo, and restrictive system; and more especially the despotic acts of Congress, enacted to enforce those measures. In 1829, Virginia, on the great subjects of the times, as tariffs, and internal improvements, was in the minority, and her legislature returned to its ground of 1798, denied the Supreme Court was the common arbiter, and limited the powers of the Union as much as possible. These facts cannot be disputed.

'Take the majorities in the three cases. The Virginia legislature has made that court the common arbiter, and once or twice, not such arbiter. Such changes have not been peculiar to Mr B. and Virginia, but a majority of party men, and of states, have conducted in a similar manner, during fiftyfour years, though the evidence of their changes may not be so well preserved on record. From all this we may infer, that the numerous speeches made in so long a time, to extend or limit constitutional powers and rights, state and federal, have not all grown out of the constitution, so much as they have out of party feeling and passion, self-love and self-confidence. Therefore, we find the same men, parties, and states, have been, at different times, and on different occasions, directly opposed to themselves. When some states supported the alien and sedition acts, their speeches and writings were framed to extend federal powers. When the same were opposed to embargoes, restrictions, and the war, all were framed to limit these powers. All these things prove the necessity there is of a common arbiter, to sit and hear parties, not to think and act like them; as exempt as possible from party spirit, party passions and feelings, to decide the numerous contests that daily arise among a free and active people, ever contending for their respective rights. In 1810, the Virginia legislature, unanimously, proclaimed very just and valuable opinions, declaring this Supreme Court was the common arbiter, and therein agreed, eight states, to wit, North Carolina, Maryland, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky, New Jersey, Vermont, and New Hampshire. No states appeared to dissent. (Johnson, p. 38, and Doings of Virginia, 38, 39.) The more we examine these subjects, the more we are induced to hold that the state legislatures are the most unfit to be the common arbiter, to judge and decide controversies, not only because, on sound American principles, they are only law makers, in number above twenty, and composed of numerous members, but because they are a party organized, not to hear parties, and stand between them to judge and decide uprightly, but to argue pro and con, and to be influenced to decide by argument and eloquence, rather than by evidence and truth, dispassionately, coolly, and impartially weighed. In contests with the general government, it is the duty of state legislatures to claim rights rather than to sit in judgment, and decide, finally, on the rights they claim as theirs. Experience proves members of Congress and of state legislatures, in general, argue pro and con, like parties, and not sit, hear, and decide, like judges. To think and decide what the law ought to be, is their proper business, and not what it is.'

The author, however, vindicates the state gevernments, and is in favor of strenuously maintaining them.

There are not wanting some repetitions in this treatise, and it presents occasional traces of political feelings which actuate the great mass of the community much less powerfully now than formerly; yet the reader's patience is by no means tried by the former, nor his confidence impaired by the latter. The work is written with more spirit and earnestness than is usually met with in a law book, and so may be read with greater interest, than is inspired by a string of naked propositions and references.

In a note Mr Dane clears up the question discussed in the Senate last winter, relating to his share in the authorship of the ordinance of 1787, for the government of the North-western Territory, and shows, very satisfactorily, that the public, in considering him to have been its author, has given him no more credit than belongs to him, and has done no injustice to the claims of any other person.—Jurist.

---

The Lord Chancellor and the Male Gossips.—On Saturday the Lord Chancellor again complained of the gabble of the gossips in his Court, and, addressing the doorkeeper said,—'It seems to be of no use speaking to you and therefore, if the noise continue, I shall speak to your successor.'

---

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A Letter to the Right Hon. C. W. Williams Wynn, M. P, &c. on the Legal Right of the Dormant Parliamentary Boroughs. By F. Palgrave, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.

Evidence and Arguments before the Committee for General Purposes, in support of the Elective Franchise of the resident Freemen of London. By J. Newell, Esq.

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars. April 9.

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIII. for March, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Moral Education. 1. The Library of Education, edited by Wm. Russell, vol. 1; containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education, by John Locke,' and 'A Treatise on Education, by John Milton.'

2. Account of the Edinburgh Sessional School, and the other Parochial Institutions for Education, established in that city in 1812; with Strictures on Education in general. By John Wood, Esq.

II. Prison Discipline 1. Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

2. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

III. Collection of Psalms and Hymns. A Collection of Psalms of Hymns for Christian Worship.

IV. Meaning of Αἰων. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays on several words relating to Future Punishment.

V. Works of the Rev. Robert Hall. The Works of the Rev. Robert Hall, A. M. Minister of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, England. First complete edition, with a brief Memoir of the author.

VI. Stuart and Whitman. 1. A Letter to William E. Channing, D. D. on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Moses Stuart, Professor of Sacred Literature in the Theological Seminary, Andover.

2. Two Letters to the Rev. Moses Stuart, on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College, February 3, 1831. March 19.

NEWSPAPER AND PERIODICAL AGENCY. EICHBAUN & NORVELL, Booksellers, Nashville, Tennessee, have, in addition to their regular business, established a GENERAL AGENCY for the procuring of subscribers to, and the collecting of debts due to Newspapers and Periodicals throughout the United States. To this business great attention will be paid, and the instructions of Publishers strictly attended to. The city in which they are established contains a population of six thousand inhabitants, and as the citizens have ever shown a disposition to encourage meritorious publications, with the aid of Agents, the publishers of Newspapers, Magazines, &c, might obtain a respectable number of subscribers. Refer to GRAY and BOWEN, Booksellers, Boston. March 19.

POPULAR JOURNAL OF MUSIC. THE HARMONICON, a Monthly Journal of Music—No. 1. just received by GRAY & BOWEN. Each monthly number will contain—

I. An Original Biography of some distinguished Composer or Performer. II. Interesting Correspondence, or Original Dissertations, on Subjects connected with the Science. III. Detailed Accounts of the Opera, Concerts, and other Musical Performances of the past month. IV. Copious Extracts from the Foreign Musical Journals, giving the reader the latest information of the Progress of the art, and its Professors throughout Europe. V. Liberal and unbiassed Accounts of all Musical Works as they appear. VI. Six or seven pieces of Music, Vocal and Instrumental, English and Foreign, selected with care, and printed with a beauty and accuracy that may safely challenge competition.

Musical Families and Societies, subscribing to the Harmonicon, will be furnished monthly with (in addition to the literary contents of each number), on an average, Six Entire Pieces of Vocal and Instrumental Music, at a price not exceeding the common charge for a single piece, when printed in the usual way. March 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVII. for January.

CONTENTS.

Art I. Popular Defensive Force. II. Lesson's History of Man. III. Hannibal's Passage of the Alps. IV. Webster's American Dictionary. V. India and China Trade. VI. Character of George IV. VII. Scotch Parliamentary Reform. VIII. Heiress of Bruges. IX. Maxwell. X. Belgian Revolution. XI. J. P. Cobbett's Italy. XII. Bruce's Travels. XIII. Machine-Breaking. XIV. Tennyson's Poems. XV. Basil Barrington and Friends. XVI. The Wellington Administration. XVII. European Revolution; List of Books, &c. March 19.

SPLENDID BIBLE. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES. GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Language.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII. Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

No. 15, North American Series.

This number contains articles on Screw Cutting; Locomotive Carriages; finding Velocity of Ships at sea; New Metallic Alloy for pivot Watches; Reflections on the Decline of Science in England; Improved marine Steam Engine Boiler; Claxton's Air Pump; Almanacks for 1831, &c, &c, with a great number of engravings.

Subscriptions received as above at $3 75 per annum. March 19.

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1831. NO. XLII.

LORD MANSFIELD.

(Concluded.)

Though his general deportment on the bench was characterized quite as much by dignity, as by courtesy and suavity of manner, he did not consider it incumbent upon him to preserve so much stateliness, but that he might occasionally relax the muscles of the court with a jest. When Macklin had recovered seven hundred pounds' damages in an action for a conspiracy to hiss him off the stage, and after the delivery of the verdict declared it was not his intention to demand the sum, he received for his generosity and forbearance a compliment from the chief justice, which he afterwards used to tell of with as much delight as of Pope's exclamation on seeing him play the part of Shylock. 'Mr Macklin,' said his lordship, 'I have many times witnessed your performances with great pleasure; but in my opinion you never acted so finely as upon this occasion.' A prisoner being once tried before him for stealing a watch, he was directing the jury to find the value of it under one shilling, with the view of avoiding the conviction for grand larceny, when the prosecutor interrupted him by calling out: 'A shilling, my lord! why the very fashion of it cost me more that five pounds!' 'Oh, sir,' said Lord Mansfield, 'we cannot think of hanging a man for fashion's sake.' The facetious Sergeant Davy had, one morning, been subjecting a Jew to a long cross-examination, in order to prove his incompetence to be received as bail. The amount required happened to be a very small one, and the Jew was dressed in a tawdry suit all bedizened with tarnished lace. His lordship at length interfered: 'Nay, brother Davy,' he said, 'you surely make too much of this trifle—don't you see the man would burn for a greater sum?' With another brother of the coif (Hill) he sometimes ventured upon a species of joke that, it must be owned, almost trespassed on the bounds of indecorum. The Sergeant was a man who possessed deep and varied stores of learning. He had been distinguished at Cambridge both as a classical scholar and mathematician, and had since acquired extensive reputation for the profundity of his legal knowledge, particularly on the subject of real property. Indeed there is no doubt he had more of mere legal learning than Lord Mansfield; but he was so wholly deficient in the art of turning it to account in public, that there was as much difference between the practical value of the knowledge possessed by them, as between that of a block of coal and a diamond, both of which are but different modifications of the self-same substance. Among his contemporaries at the bar he always went by the name of Sergeant Labyrinth; for he never attempted to argue a case without speedily involving himself in such a maze as bewildered himself no less than his hearers. On such occasions his intellect and his senses would seem alike enwrapped in a mist; he would stand motionless in one posture, his eyes half closed or dimly fixed on vacancy, and, wholly unconscious of the presence of the auditory, would roll forth sentence after sentence, heap tautology on tautology, and endeavoring to explain one obscurity, go on propounding others still more obscure, like a heavy-laden horse floundering in soft mire, and sinking the deeper the more he labors to extricate himself. It may be supposed the gravity of the bar was not altogether proof against so ridiculous an exhibition. By the time smiles had increased to tittering, and tittering was well nigh expanding into a most audible laugh, Lord Mansfield would generally interfere, and call upon the learned Sergeant by name. As he was rather deaf, and besides wholly wrapt up in his own speculations, the call was generally repeated three or four times before he stopped; and then some inquiry after the state of his health would often turn out to be the only matter for which the chief justice had interrupted him. We know not whether Sergeant Hill inwardly resented this sort of quizzing, but it certainly is sufficiently evident from the notes he was in the habit of writing on the margin of his copy of Burrow's Reports (which notes are inserted in the modern edition of that work), that he felt anything but a friendly disposition towards Lord Mansfield.

The long and eminently useful career of this illustrious man was finally closed on the 19th of March, 1793, he being then in his eightyninth year. Though not free from the infirmities of age during the latter part of his life, he underwent little or no bodily suffering. Nor was his death occasioned by any painful or violent disease. The first symptoms of illness were felt on Sunday, March 10th: he shortly afterwards fell into a kind of stupor, and this settled into a trance so complete, that no other mode could be devised to afford him the slightest sustenance, except that of occasionally wetting his lips with a feather dipped in wine or vinegar. On the 15th very little appearance of life could be detected; some appearance of mortification began already to be visible; and in this state he lingered on till the 19th, when he sank by an almost imperceptible transition into death. On the morning of the 28th of the same month his body was privately interred in the same tomb with the remains of his lady, in Westminster Abbey; according to a wish expressed in his will, that he might be suffered to show this mark of respect to the place of his early education. It had been the intention of the judges and members of the bar to testify their respect for his memory by assembling in full numbers to attend the funeral; but the design was abandoned on their being informed it had been his own desire that the ceremony should be as private as possible. A bequest of fifteen hundred pounds having been left some years previously, by a Mr Bailey, to defray the expense of a monument to his memory, Flaxman, who had then just returned from his studies at Rome, was deputed to execute one, and it was placed on the spot whore he had been buried, between the tombs of Lord Chatham and of Lord Robert Manners. The bulk of his fortune, which was very considerable, comprising it is said upwards of 26,000*l.* a year on mortgages, besides property otherwise invested, descended with his title to his nephew, Lord Stormont. Considerable legacies were left to his two nieces, the honorable Anne and Marjory Murray, to whom the king, in compliment to the memory of their uncle, shortly afterwards (April, 1793) granted, by his royal sign manual, the same pre-eminence and precedence as if they had been daughters of an Earl of Great Britain. Among the other bequests was one of 2000*l.* to Judge Buller, who had been indebted to the friendship of Lord Mansfield for his early promotion to the bench; and would have been nominated as his successor, but for the debility of his health, in consequence of which the chief justiceship was given, with a peerage, to Sir Lloyd Kenyon, the Master of the Rolls.

With the exception of the celebrated answer (drawn up in 1752, when he was solicitor-general) to the memorial of M. Michel, the secretary to the Prussian embassy, which, though it bears the signature of other law officers besides himself, we know to be entirely his composition, we are not aware that any proofs of his talents as a writer have been preserved. The protest against the repeal of the American stamp act, which was entered on the journals of the house of lords in 1776, during the time when he was in opposition to the administration, is also supposed to have been dictated by him throughout. It is allowed to be one of the ablest performances contained in the records of parliament; as the former production assuredly is a model for state papers. The general belief, which is expressed in the verses of Cowper we have already quoted, was, that several manuscript compositions of his own were consumed by the conflagration of his house in Bloomsbury-square; but this was merely a vague supposition, and as it is well known that he never was fond of writing, we may infer that it was incorrect. The grandest monument of his genius is assuredly the commercial jurisprudence which he created and brought to maturity.

In stature Lord Mansfield was not above the middle size. His personal appearance was extremely prepossessing, and this natural advantage, which is of more importance to an orator than is perhaps usually supposed, he improved by the consummate grace and propriety of his gesture in speaking; in the same manner as he gave additional effect to the natural melody of his voice, by his skill in modulating it. The brilliancy and vivacity of his eye was such as could not fail to catch the attention, and gave token of the acuteness and vivacity of his intellect. The general expression of his countenance is probably familiar to most of our readers, from the many likenesses of him that have been painted, and reproduced in the shape of engravings. The originals of two miniatures by Vanloo, taken in the earlier part of professional life, are still, we believe, in the possession of private individuals. Besides the portrait painted by Martin for Christ Church, there is another by the same artist, representing him in the court dress he wore when presented to the king and queen of France, during a short visit he paid to his nephew at Paris in the year 1774. He also sat twice to Copley, at the request of his friend Justice Buller; and once to Sir Joshua Reynolds, on the solicitation of the corporation of London, who were anxious to adorn Guildhall with the portrait of one who had done so much, on that very spot, to claim the gratitude and the respect of the merchants of England. Trinity Hall, Cambridge, has a bust of him by Nollekens.

There can be little occasion, we think, for adding to this sketch, however feeble and imperfect, of the life and character of Lord Mansfield, any formal refutation of the calumnies which personal jealousy or political enmity have directed against him. We have already alluded to the most serious of them; and we are even not without apprehension that in so doing, we may appear sometimes to have committed the fault which of all others we should be most anxious to avoid, namely, that of pleading for him as an advocate, rather than endeavoring with strict impartiality to form a calm judgment as to his merits. If this be so, we can only say, that we have, at least, done all in our power to guard against this besetting sin of biographers. It is only on mature consideration of the charges made against him, that we have arrived at the conviction of their injustice. As to his political opinions, we think it quite unnecessary to uphold them, in order to justify his adoption of them. That he was sincere and honest in his belief of their soundness, and always consistent in his advocacy of them, is, in our estimation, quite sufficient for that purpose. With respect to his merits as a judge, we consider them beyond all praise. We believe, indeed, that the opinion of the public in general, as well as of the legal profession, is quite made up on this point; and that we shall run little risk of contradiction, when we declare that, in our estimation, he has done more for the jurisprudence of this country, than any legislator, or judge, or author, who has ever made the improvement of it his object.—Law Magazine.

DIGEST OF ENGLISH CASES.

COMMON LAW.

(Comprising 10 Barnewall & Cresswell, Part 2; 1 Barnewall & Adolphus, Part 1; 7 Bingham, Part 1; 1 Crompton & Jervis, Part 2; 1 Tyrwhitt, Part 1. 3 Manning & Ryland, Part 3.)

ADMINISTRATOR.

Assumpsit by an administratrix on promises to the intestate, and also on an account stated with the plaintiff as administratrix, concerning money due to the intestate; the verdict was for the defendant. Held, that on the face of the declaration the contract appeared to be with the plaintiff, and that she was therefore liable to costs by the 23 H. 8. c. 15; but only to such costs of the declaration as applied to the count on the account stated.—Jobson vs. Forster, 1 B. & Adol. 6.

ARBITRATION.

The authority given to an arbitrator by order of Nisi Prius is revocable at any time before his award is made, and the court cannot grant costs, unless empowered by the order of reference.—Skee vs. Coxon, 10 B. & C. 483.

ATTORNEY.

1. A suit is ended by the judgment, and the attorney, &c, is then entitled to call for payment of his bill. No items of charge, therefore, for matters subsequent to the judgment, relating to the costs, will connect with the items previous to the judgment, so as to take these also out of the statute of limitations. It was contended further, that the right of action accrued de die in diem during the progress of the suit; but the Court gave no opinion upon that.—Rothery vs. Munnings, 1 B. & Adol. 15.

2. The Court will admit as an attorney, an articled clerk who has been prevented by illness from giving regular attention to business during a considerable part of the term of his articles, but has attended as his health permitted.—Ex-parte Matthews, 1 B. & Adol. 160.

3. Where, in an action against an attorney in the Court above, the plaintiff recovers less than 40*s*., the judge may certify to deprive him of costs.—Wright vs. Nuttall, 10 B. & C. 492.

4. It is the duty of an attorney, before suing out a writ, to communicate personally with his client, if possible; at all events to make inquiry into the nature of the claim, and of the evidence in support of it; otherwise he cannot recover for business done in the suit.—Gill vs. Lougher, 1 C. & J. 170; 1 Tyrw. 121.

AWARD.

An attachment will be granted for non-payment on demand of money awarded, notwithstanding an action brought on the award and afterwards discontinued, where the action was not pending at the time of the demand.—Higgins vs. Willis, 3 M. & R. 382.

BAIL.

Bail sued on the bail-bond cannot dispute the arrest. The sheriffs, having returned non est inventus, after taking the bond and before assigning it, does not affect the assignee's right of action.—Taylor vs. Clow, 1 B. & Adol. 223.

BILL OF EXCHANGE.

1. An acceptor is liable upon a bill dated on Sunday.—Begbie vs. Levy, 1 C. & J. 180; 1 Tyrw. 130.

2. In action by indorsee against acceptor, where the indorsement was not in the party's own hand-writing, evidence that other bills so drawn and indorsed had been accepted and paid by the defendant, was held, as against the acceptor, sufficient proof of an authority to indorse.—Jones vs. Lord Turnour, 1 L. & W. 318.

3. A bill was given for an apprentice fee. The apprentice served and was provided by his master with food, &c, for some months, when it was found that the indenture was wrongly stamped, and he left the service: Held, that this was only a partial failure of consideration, and afforded the acceptor no defence to an action on the bill by an indorsee.—Mann vs. Lent, 1 L. & W. 320.

4. In trover for a bill or note, a party having no title to the value cannot recover for the paper merely—Perreira vs. Jopp, 10 B. & C. 452. note.

BILL OF LADING.

By a Spanish bill of lading, the cargo was made deliverable to A. (omitting the words, 'or his assigns,') on being paid freight, &c. It was proved that this was the usual form of Spanish bills, and that they were nevertheless indorsable like others, and that the indorsee was looked to for the freight, &c: Held, that the indorsee of such a bill was liable.—Renteria vs. Ruding, 1 L. & W. 274.

COVENANT.

1. Covenant by the commander of a vessel in the service of the post office, that he would well and truly pay unto the owners of the ship, and to their and every of their several and respective heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, such sum, as should be allowed by the postmaster-general, in such parts and proportions as were set against their several and respective names; held, that the interest of each was several, and a joint action not maintainable.—Servante vs. James, 10 B. & C. 410.

2. The defendants chartered a ship to New Zealand, and covenanted either to load her there, or by their agent to give the plaintiff notice that they abandoned the adventure, in which case they were to pay him 500*l*. On the ship's arrival at New Zealand, neither cargo nor agent were there; and the captain made a circuitous voyage home, which voyage, after all allowances, proved to be more profitable than the original adventure would have been: held, that the plaintiff could not recover the 500*l*. penalty in addition to the profits of the homeward voyage.—Staniforth vs. Lyall, 7 Bing. 169.

DAMAGES IN TORT.

The owner of goods wrongfully seized, and of which a man is placed in possession, may recover damages, although he be allowed to use the goods all the time.—Bayliss vs. Fisher, 7 Bing. 153.

DECEIT.

1. The defendants made false statements to the plaintiffs, respecting a person whom the former wished the latter to employ as their agent: held, that in an action on the case for deceit, the plaintiffs need not show that the defendant was actuated by an intention to benefit himself or injure them.—Foster vs. Charles, 7 Bing. 105.

2. The judge at the trial directed the attention of the jury to the distinction between fraud in fact and fraud in the legal acceptation of the term: the jury found for the plaintiff, and added, that the defendant had no fraudulent intention, although what he had done constituted a fraud in the legal acceptation of the term: the court refused to enter the verdict for the defendant.—Id. ibid.

DEMURRAGE.

The master of a ship cannot maintain assumpsit in his own name on an implied contract to pay demurrage.—Evans vs. Forster, 1 B. & Adol. 118; 1 L. & W. 285.

DEVISE.

1. Devise of copyholds to the testatrix's mother for life, then to F. and his wife for life, then to their children, living at their decease, in fee. The testatrix then devised all the residue of her estates do her mother in fee, but charged such residue with an annuity of 20*l*. to her grandmother for life. F. and his wife died leaving no child. Held, that the reversion of the copyhold estates passed by the residuary clause; for that the charge of the annuity upon the residue did not, under the circumstances, sufficiently manifest a clear intention that it should not so pass.—Doe d. Moreton vs. Fossick, 1 B. & Adol. 186.

2. Devise to A. and his heirs for ever; but in case A. die without heirs, then to J. P. and his heirs, or in case A. offers to mortgage or suffer a fine or recovery upon the whole or any part thereof, then to go to J. P. and his heirs: held, 1st, that (the plaintiff) took an estate in fee in the devised lands, under the will, with an executory devise over, to take effect upon conditions which are void in law. 2d, That if the plaintiff were to convey a part of the estate to a purchaser in fee, the purchaser's title would not be affected by the plaintiff's afterwards mortgaging or levying a fine, or suffering a recovery of the residue of the estate. 3d, That if the plaintiff were to convey the whole estate to a purchaser in fee, the purchaser would have a good title to the fee, against all persons claiming under the said will.—Ware vs. Cann, 10 B. & C. 433.

EMBLEMENTS.

A lease was granted on condition, that if the lessee should contract a debt upon which he should be sued to judgment, and a writ of execution should issue, the lessor should re-enter as of his former estate: the lessor did so re-enter after judgment and execution, and it was held that he was entitled to the emblements.—Davis vs. Eyton, 7 Bing. 154.

EVIDENCE.

1. Evidence of the execution of a deed is not dispensed with because it was obtained out of the hands of the adverse party, who formerly claimed a benefit under it, some months before the trial of the cause.—Vacher vs. Cocks, 1 B. & Adol. 145.

2. A private book, kept by a collector of taxes, containing entries whereby he acknowledged the receipt of sums in his character of collector, was held admissible after his death against his surety. The case was decided on the general principle that statements of deceased persons, which appear to have been made against their interest, are admissible; and without reference to the relation of principal and surety.—Middleton vs. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317.

3. An action was brought by a corporation against the defendants for having made, while directors, false entries in the books of the corporation; the specific entries complained of were not disclosed in the declaration, nor was any particular delivered: the defendants were held not to be entitled to inspect the books, at all events not without an affidavit that they were unable to conduct their defence without such inspection.—Imp. Gas Co. vs. Clarke and others, 7 Bing. 95.

4. An offer by the defendant to pay a sum less than that demanded by the plaintiff, is not of itself evidence to support a count upon an account stated.—Wayman vs. Hilliard, 7 Bing. 101.

5. Secondary evidence may be given of the contents of a writing, promising to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations, where the writings has been lost.—Hayden vs. Williams, 7 Bing. 163.

6. W., having an open account with the defendant, drew a bill on him, which was accepted, neither knowing at the time the state of the account between them; it appeared afterwards, that W. was then indebted to the defendant. The bill was indorsed by W. to the plaintiff, who knew that he was absconding from his general creditors, and that he had comitted an act of bankruptcy. W. afterwards became a bankrupt: held, that W. was an admissible witness in the cause; and the court refused to disturb a verdict for the defendant.—Bagnall vs. Andrews, 7. Bing 127.

HIGHWAY.

1. If a road be made public a one by an act of parliament, which is to continue in force for a limited period only, and which binds the parish to do statute duty on the road, that liability ceases on the expiration of the act, for then the road ceases to be a public one.—The King vs. Mellor, 1 B. & Adol. 32.

2. An order of justices for making a new road, and stopping up the old one was quashed, they not being empowered to stop up the old one, till the new one is complete. Littledale J. observed, that there was another fatal objection to the order, viz. that it did not contain any statement that the justices had viewed the course proposed for the new road. (See 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. and 55 Geo 3. c. 68. s. 2.)—The King vs. Justices of Kent, 10 B. & C. 477.

3. A surveyor going out of office is not bound to pay over the balance to his successor, until his accounts have been settled in the manner pointed out by 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. s. 48.—Heudebourck vs. Langton, 10 B. & C. 546.

4. Where a turnpike road is stopped up by the trustees, and the site of it given in exchange for that of a new road, under 3 G. 4. c. 126, there is no necessity for a conveyance of the latter to the trustees, or for any written agreement, if the owner of the soil be sui juris. Allnutt vs. Pott, 3 M. & R. 439. n.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

1. A husband is not penally answerable under 5 G. 4. c. 83. s. 3. for refusing to maintain his wife, who has left him and committed adultery; although he also has since lived in adultery.—The King vs. Flintan, 1 B. & Adol. 227.

2. By a deed of separation, reciting that the husband had agreed to allow the wife an annuity of £250 out of his salary as an officer of customs, he covenanted generally to pay her an annuity of £250. Having been deprived of his situation, held that he was no longer bound to pay the annuity.—Hesse vs. Albert, 3 M. & R. 406.

INDICTMENT.

Indictment for perjury stated, that it became a material question whether, on the occasion of a certain alleged arrest, L. touched K. &c. The defendant's evidence, as set out, was, L. put his arms round K. and embraced him; innuendo, that L. had, on the occasion to which the evidence applied, touched K: Held, that the materiality of the evidence was not sufficiently shown, there being nothing to indentify the transaction to which the evidence applied with the certain alleged arrest.—The King vs. Nicholl, 1 B. & Adol. 21.

INSURANCE.

1. A shipowner may effect an insurance on freight on his own goods by his own ship, and recover from the underwriter, in case of loss, the the value of the benefit he would have derived from carrying them on the voyage insured.

The risk on freight does not attach, until goods are actually shipped, or there is an actual binding contract for shipping them.—Flint vs. Flemyng, 1 B. & Adol. 45; 1 L. & W. 257.

2. The port of destination mentioned in a policy was altered by a memorandum after the policy had been subscribed, in consequence of the ship's being unavoidably detained beyond the intended time of sailing: Held, that the change of destination was merely an alteration in one of the terms or conditions of the insurance, within the meaning of the 35 G. 3. c. 63. s. 13. and that a fresh stamp was not required.—Brocklebank vs. Sugrue, 1 B. & Adol. 81; 1 L. & W. 263.

3. Assumpsit for work and labor in and about the drawing, &c, of divers policies of insurance, as an insurance broker, and also for divers sums advanced and paid for the defendants as premiums, and for divers premiums due from the defendants, for and in respect of T. F. (whose assignees were the plaintiffs in the action), having underwritten, and subscribed, and caused and procured to be underwritten and subscribed, divers policies for the defendants. Plea, general issue by both defendants; plea, also, by one of them, B., that the plaintiffs had formerly impleaded him for the same cause of action, and that he paid a certain sum into court, which they received, with the costs, in full satisfaction.

The defendants were shipowners. F. was employed by them to effect divers policies, which he effected with a company (to which he belonged, though the defendants did not), by the regulations of which none but members could insure. The policies were, therefore, effected in F.'s name, and he covenanted to pay the premiums—the defendants' names not being mentioned in the policies. F. would have been entitled, and allowed by the company, to deduct from the premiums to be paid by him, the amount of the commission due to him for effecting the policies. The particular of the plaintiff's demand was for insurance merely: Held, 1. That under this, a compensation (the commission) for work and labor in effecting the policies, was recoverable. 2. That the premiums, whether actually paid or not, were recoverable under the count for premiuns due in respect of plaintiff's having underwritten and subscribed, and caused to be underwritten and subscribed, policies; the words in Italics being rejected as surplusage. It would seem that the premiums not actually paid could not have been recovered under the count for money paid. With regard to the special plea, it appeared that the plaintiffs, in the former action, did receive the taxed costs, but suffered the money paid into court to remain: Held, that this did not amount to satisfaction.—Power vs. Butcher, 10 B. & C. 329.

4. Settlement in account with an insurance broker, by set-off against premiums due from him, is not good payment to the assured, unless it appear that the broker had authority to receive payment in that mode, either express, or implied from the former course of dealing, or the circumstances of the case, or a usage of trade, known and recognised by the assured.

A cash payment to the broker is not a good payment to the assured, unless it appear to have been specifically applied to the loss in question.—Bartlett vs. Pentland, 1 L. & W. 235.

5. A policy was effected on goods by four ships named, all or any, at and from Singapore, Penang, Malacca, and Batavia, all or any, to the ship's port of discharge in Europe, with leave to touch, stay, and trade at all or any ports and places whatsoever, and wheresoever, in the East Indies, Persia, or elsewhere; beginning the adventure upon the said goods from the loading thereof aboard the ship as above; with liberty to sail to, and touch, and stay at any ports or places whatsoever and wheresoever, in any direction, and for any purpose, necessary or otherwise, particularly Singapore, Penang, Malacca, Batavia, &c, without being deemed any deviation. It was found by a special verdict, that the ship having taken on board goods at Batavia, sailed from thence, in the prosecution of the adventure, to Sourabaya, another port in the island of Java, but not in the direct course from Batavia, Singapore, Penang, or Malacca, to Europe, and directly out of the course from each of those four places to any other of them, and distant from Batavia four hundred miles eastward: that she there took on board other goods, then returned to Batavia, and sailed thence with all the goods on board, for Europe, and was lost by perils of the seas: Held, that the sailing to Sourabaya was a sailing on the voyage insured; that it was no deviation; and that the goods loaded there were protected by the policy.—Hunter vs. Leathley, 1 L. & W. 244.

LIBEL.

The judge directed the jury to consider whether it was the defendant's intention to injure the plaintiff; but in conclusion, told them to find for the plaintiff, 'if any person, from reading the matter complained of, could conceive an ill opinion of the plaintiff:' Held to be a substantially proper direction, though it was admitted that the effect, and not the intention, was the proper object of consideration.—Fisher vs. Clement, 10 B. & C. 472.

LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF.

A conditional promise in writing to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations, must be declared, as conditional, although it was given within six years after the debt was contracted.—Haydon vs. Williams, 7 Bing. 163.

MARRIAGE.

If banns are published in a wrong surname, and that a name by which the party has never gone, although one which had been entered by mistake in the register of his baptism, and although there is no intention to mislead, and no one having an interest in the marriage is in fact deceived, the marriage is void. Semble, that if the name had been one which the party had ever been known by, or if the error had been merely the partial variation of the name, or the addition or suppression of one christian name, there being no fraud, the case would have been different.—The King vs. Inhabitants of Tibshelf, 1 B. & Adol. 190.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

The most important cases in VERMONT REPORTS. Vol. I. and II.
HALSTED, New Jersey. Vol. VI.
GILL and JOHNSON, Maryland. Vol. I.
PICKERING, Massachusetts. Vol. VIII.
MASON. Vol. V. Circuit Court of the United States in the District of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island.

CONSIDERATION.

1. The assignment of a chose in action for a valuable consideration, is a sufficient consideration for a promise of the debtor to make payment to the assignee. Moore vs. Wright, 1 Vermont Cases, 57.

2. A special promise of an executor to pay a debt of the testator to such assignee, in consideration of the assignment and of assets in the hands of the executor, is valid, and he is liable thereon in his own right. Ib.

3. H. purchased a quantity of tin in boxes for one F. at his request, and delivered it to him in the same condition unopened: afterwards, on opening the boxes, it was found that the tin was materially damaged; of which H. had reasonable notice, and thereupon promised F. to make him an equitable allowance therefor: held that said promise was void for want of consideration. Hawley vs. Farrar, 1 Vermont Cases. 420.

CONSIGNOR AND CONSIGNEE.

1. Where a voyage was undertaken to Havana, and thence to Leghorn and back, and the owners ordered the consignees at Leghorn to apply their funds, estimated at 4600 pezzos to the purchase, first of 2200 pezzos value of tiles, and the residue to invest in paper; and the consignees accepting the orders, invested the whole funds in paper, because they fell short of the estimated sum, although a sum of 1750 pezzos might have been so invested; it was held, that the consignees were liable in damages, for the breach of orders. Cunningham vs. Bell, 5 Mason, 161.

2. The damages in such case, are not to be confined to the transactions at Leghorn; but are to be calculated upon the actual injury to the plaintiffs in the events of the voyage, taking into consideration the markets at Havana, and all the other circumstances. Ib.

3. The receipt of the proceeds of the paper, after sale, by the master at Havana, is not in point of law, per se, a ratification of the purchase, and investment in paper by the owners. Ib.

4. By the act of Congress of 1799, ch. 128, consignees are authorized to enter goods, and give bonds for the duties. In such case the United States have no remedy over against the owner of the goods, for whom the consignee acts as agent or trustee, if the duties are not paid. Knox vs. Devans, 5 Mason, 380.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. An act of the legislature exempting the body of a judgment debtor from arrest for a limited time, and discharging him from imprisonment on the creditor's execution, is void. Lyman vs. Mower, 2 Vermont Cases, 517.

2. The 3d section of the act of 1823, ch. 95, by which the legislature required a husband to pay a trustee for the use and benefit of his wife, from whom such act divorced him, a sum certain annually, is an exercise of judicial authority, repugnant to the constitution of Maryland, and void. Crane vs. Meginnis, 1 Gill & Johns. 463.

CONTRACT.

1. B. with a number of other persons, signed a subscription paper, thereby promising to pay to the University of Vermont, fifty dollars, for the purpose of erecting such suitable college buildings as the corporation thereof should think adviseable. In an action brought against B. after the erection of the buildings to recover the amount of his subscription, it was held, that the acceptance of the subscriptions by the corporation, and the actual commencement of the work, with a view to complete the same, so consummated the contract that B. could not avoid payment on the ground that there was no consideration for the promise. University of Vermont vs. Buel, 2 Vermont Cases, 48.

2. When one, by voluntary subscription, promises to pay in labor or materials at his option, another season, for the purpose of erecting a public building, and who can be presumed to know that the building is being erected, a demand on him for the labor or materials, previous to the completion of the work, is not necessary. A demand made after the building is finished is sufficient, if the payee is ready and willing to receive such pay at the place where the building is erecting, or at any other place equally convenient for the promiser. Ib.

3. An agreement between A and B that the latter shall raise a single crop on shares upon the land of A does not amount to a lease of the land. Bishop vs. Doty, 1 Vermont Cases, 37.

4. Intoxication to avoid a contract, must disable a man to know the consequences of his agreement. Foot vs. Tewksbury, 2 Vermont Cases, 97.

5. An executory agreement in writing, may before breach, be discharged or rescinded by a subsequent unwritten agreement. Perrine vs. Cheeseman, 6 Halst. 174.

6. Contracts are distinguished in two classes; contracts by parol and contracts under seal. There is no distinct class of contracts merely in writing. Ib.

7. A lease with a scroll, or ink, or other device, affixed by way of seal, falls under the denomination of a simple or parol contract. So an indorsement on a lease, though it has a scroll by way of seal, may lawfully be rescinded by a subsequent parol agreement and parol evidence, to show it was so rescinded, is competent and admissible. Ib.

8. Where the plaintiffs agreed to perform work for the defendant upon a canal, and the defendant agreed to make payments 'from time to time by certificates from the engineer as the work advances,' it was held, that the plaintiffs might bring an action without having given notice to the defendant of a certificate previously made, each party being bound to take notice. Punderson vs. Shepherd, 8 Pick. 370.

9. The defendant gives the plaintiffs a written contract, by which, after reciting that he places his son with the plaintiffs to learn the art of printing, 'to stay till he is twentyone years of age,' the defendant agrees, 'in consideration of the son's being so old' (he was then eighteen), to pay the plaintiffs a stipulated amount if the son does not continue in the plaintiffs' employment six months after he is twentyone. The son enters into the plaintiffs' employment in pursuance of the agreement, and is instructed by the plaintiffs in the act of printing, for some months, when he leaves the plaintiffs without cause. Held, that there was a sufficient consideration for the defendant's contract, and that he was liable on it to the plaintiffs. Phelps vs. Townsend, 8 Pick. 392.

10. The want of a counterpart to such a contract does not render it invalid. Ib.

11. A covenant by an heir expectant that he will convey the estate which shall come to him by descent or otherwise, is valid, if made with the consent of the ancestor, and for a sufficient consideration, and without advantage being taken of the covenantor. Fitch vs. Fitch, 8 Pick. 480.

12. A owing B a note, gave several new notes to B, altogether being of smaller amount than the old note and payable at future days. At the same time they entered into a written agreement, that if the new notes were paid 'when due,' the old note should be given up to A to be cancelled.

but if any of the new notes were not paid, the old note should be in force; and B in such case agreed that if he should see fit to enforce the old note, he would enter upon it such sums as A should have paid on the new note, and return the other new notes to A. A paid the first of the new notes, but the second not being paid on the day when it became due, B had a writ made out on the old note against A, and afterwards indorsed on the old note the amount which A had paid, and then delivered the writ to the officer, who served it:—

Held, first, That payment of the new notes, on the days when they became due, was necessary to entitle A to the benefit of the agreement:

Secondly, That A having failed to perform this part of the agreement, B had a right to sue on the old note:

Thirdly, That the indorsing of the first payment on the old note, and the returning of the new notes, was not a condition precedent in order to entitle B to sue on the old note:

But, fourthly, it seems that if the performance of these acts had constituted a condition precedent they were done seasonably. Tufts vs. Kidder, 8 Pick. 537.

---

CONVEYANCE.

1. A conveyance to a man, his heirs and assigns, so long as wood grows and water runs, creates a fee simple. Arms vs. Burt, 1 Vermont Cases, 303.

2. A purchaser with notice, from another purchaser without notice may protect himself by the want of notice in his vendor. Per Bland, chancellor. Hagthorp vs. Hook, 1 Gill & Johns. 270.

3. When a purchaser cannot make title, but by a deed which leads him to a knowledge of the fact; and more especially, when the deed by virtue of which he takes, recites, or directly refers to the instrument, in which the trust is declared, or from which it arises, he shall be deemed cognizant of the fact, and a purchaser with notice. Ib.

---

CORPORATION.

1. A corporation may be bound by an implied promise. Smith vs. First Congregational Meeting House in Lowell, 8 Pick. 178.

2. An act, incorporating individuals for a particular purpose, does not vest in the corporation, land previously owned by them as tenants in common and previously used for the same purpose. Leffingwell vs. Elliot, 8 Pick. 455.

3. Parol evidence is not admissible to show that a deed given by one of such tenants in common, of his share in the stock of the corporation, was intended to pass his share of the land. Ib.

---

COVENANT.

If a grantee of land with warranty, being evicted by a paramount title, extinguishes such title for a nominal consideration, he can recover upon the warranty the amount of such consideration only, together with a reasonable compensation for any trouble and expenses to which he may have been put in procuring the extinguishment. Leffingwell vs. Eiot, 8 Pick. 455.

---

DAMAGE.

1. The obligee may recover on an indemnifying bond the money paid, to the amount of penalty, and interest on the same beyond the penalty. Clark vs Wilson, 1 Vermont Cases, 266.

2. When a foreign creditor sues for his debts in Mass. he will recover (except in the case of a bill of exchange) at the par of exchange. Adams vs. Cordis, 8 Pick. 260.

3. Where one summoned as trustee is indebted to the principal defendant on a demand drawing interest, and he continues, after the service of the writ upon him, to use the money due, he is chargeable with interest up to the time when the money is demanded of him upon the execution against the fund in his hands; but where interest would be recoverable by the principal defendant, only as damages for breach of contract, it will not accrue during the pendency of the trustee process. Ib.

---

DEBT.

1. Counts on a special contract under seal, and a quantum meruit for labor done and materials found may be joined in an action of debt. Smith vs. First Congregational Meeting House in Lowell, 8 Pick. 178.

2. An action of debt or assumpsit may be maintained upon an implied promise, for labor done and materials found under a special contract which has not been performed on the part of the plaintiff. Ib.

---

DEPOSITION.

Parol testimony is sufficient to prove the form of the caption of a deposition required by the laws of a sister state. Brownell vs. Reynolds, 1 Vermont Cases, 259.

---

DUTIES.

1. Under the Tariff act of 22d of May, 1824, ch. 136, bombazines, being goods of which wool is a component material, are liable to pay a duty 30 per cent. United States vs. Clarke, 5 Mason, 30.

2. If a collector of the customs cancels a bond for duties, without receiving payment of the amount of duties, in connivance with the debtor, the cancellation is void, and the bond may still be declared upon as a subsisting deed; for the cancellation is, in such a case, a flagrant violation of duty. Johnson in Error vs. United States, 5 Mason, 425.

3. A collector of the customs is not at liberty to receive anything but money of the United States, or foreign gold or silver coin made current, in payment, of duties. If he receives a check on a bank in payment, it is at his own peril, and if the check is not paid, the bond is not discharged; a fortiori, it is not discharged by the receipt of a memorandum check. Ib.

4. The receipt of a collector acknowledging payment is prima facie evidence, but not conclusive of the fact of payment. Ib.

5. A collector, like other public officers, cannot bind the United States by any acts beyond, or contrary to, the authority given him by the Laws. Ib.

---

EASEMENT.

A liberty granted in a deed 'to dig a canal through the grantor's land,' does not include, as an incident, the proprietary interest in the soil, when dug up and removed. Lyman vs. Arnold, 5 Mason, 195.

---

EQUITY.

1. A failure to comply with an engagement to do a mere nugatory act ought not to impair the rights of a complainant in equity to relief, when the facts of his case, otherwise concur to sustain his bill. Coale vs. Barney, 1 Gill & Johns. 324.

2. Relief, by the doctrine of substitution, is never extended to a security, but upon the assumption that the creditor's debt has been, or is to be fully paid—that his further detention of the mortgaged property, is against equity and good conscience. Union Bank of Maryland vs. Edwards, 1 Gill & Johns. 346.

3. So where a mortgage was executed, for the purpose of securing the payment of all or every sum or sums of money, then owing, or which might thereafter be due and owing from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, upon any promissory note, or notes negotiated or to be negotiated with the mortgagee, of which the mortgagor might be drawer or indorser, or otherwise however, and upon sale of the mortgaged premises, the proceeds being insufficient to pay a note of the mortgagor's to the mortgagee, for which the latter had no other security than the mortgage; it was held, that an accommodation indorser on the note of the mortgagors, discounted by the mortgagee after the execution of the mortgage and before the sale could not call upon a court of equity to distribute the fund above mentioned, ratably, in payment of both notes. Ib.

4. It is the common practice where a purchaser is kept out of possession by the former owner, for the chancellor to interpose the authority of that court, and cause the possession to be delivered up. Gowan vs. Sumwalt, 1 Gill & Johns. 511.

5. A bill for a discovery of assets lies in equity, notwithstanding a remedy at law. Pratt vs. Northam, 5 Mason, 95.

6. Courts of equity have jurisdiction to enforce a specific performance of an award respecting real estate. But he who seeks performance must show a readiness to perform all the award on his own part. McNeil vs. Magee, 5 Mason, 244.

7. If one defendant does not appear, and is not compellable to appear, and is a necessary party to the bill in equity, the other defendants who have appeared and answered the bill, may move for a dismissal of the suit for nonprosecution of the bill against the nonappearing defendant; and the Court will grant a further time for the appearance of such defendant, if it seems reasonable after which the bill is to be dismissed, unless such defendant appears and answers. Picquet vs. Swan, 5 Mason, 561.

8. In what cases a court of equity will reform a written instrument, upon the ground of mistake. The mistake must be made out by the clearest and most unequivocal evidence.

Semble, that the Court will not reform it to the prejudice of bona fide purchasers without notice. United States vs. Munroe, 5 Mason, 572.

---

ESTOPPEL.

The obligors in an administration bond are estopped by it to deny that the principal was appointed administrator. Cutler vs. Dickinson, 8 Pick. 386.

---

EVIDENCE.

1. The confessions of the overseer of the poor and agent of a town, made while executing his agency, may be proved as evidence against said town. Burlington vs. Calais, 1 Vermont Cases, 385.

2. A book of accounts exhibiting no mutual course of dealings between the parties, but containing a single entry or charge of cash lent, is inadmissible evidence to sustain a demand for money lent and advanced. Carman vs. Administrators of Dunham, 6 Halst. 189.

3. In an action brought by an executor to recover rent of a person who had been a number of years in possession, parol evidence of the declarations of the testator that he was to pay no rent, are admissible. Coxe vs. Baird, 6 Halst. 105.

4. No person who is called as a witness, not being a party to the suit, can refuse to give testimony, on the ground, that he may thereby become liable to a civil action not of a penal nature; or sustain pecuniary loss: or that the verdict may be used as evidence against him in some other civil proceeding then pending, or which may thereafter be instituted. Hays vs. Richardson, 1 Gill & Johns. 366.

5. A witness on the voir dire, may by the party objecting to his examination in chief, for the purpose of showing his interest, be called on to state the contents of written instruments, which are not produced; and the reason assigned is, that the party objecting, could not know previously, that the witness would be called and consequently might not be prepared with the best evidence to establish his objection. Ib.

6. One of two witnesses to a deed deposed that he did not recollect witnessing it, but knew the attestation to be in his hand writing, and that the other subscribing witness had a short time previously, but long after the commencement of the suit in which the deposition was taken, left the commonwealth, after advertising his intention so to do and that though the deponent did not recollect having seen him write his name, he had often received letters from him, and thought the signature in question was his hand writing. Held, that this was sufficient proof of the execution of the deed for the purpose of reading it in evidence. Russell vs. Coffin, 8 Pick. 143.

7. Where a witness on the stand upon cross-examination, contradicted a deposition he had previously given in the same case, the party calling him was not permitted to call other witnesses in support of his general character for truth. Ib.

8. Where an assumpsit on a policy of insurance on a ship, the declaration alleged that the ship by force and arms and in a certain hostile manner, was captured, seized, and taken by certain armed soldiers and thereby wholly lost, and the plaintiff proved by witnesses, that she was seen in possession of armed soldiers in a foreign country, and that she never returned home, it was held, that he made out prima facie, a loss, and that he was not bound to read in evidence the record of a trial and decree of condemnation, which he had in court and which he offered to the defendant to be used by him if he thought proper. Door vs. Pope, 8 Pick. 232.

9. Evidence of acts done and declarations made by the claimants of land, after a possession by one of them for thirty years, is admissible to show that such possession was not adverse. Church vs. Burghardt, 8 Pick. 327.

10. The testimony of a juror who tried the cause, is admissible upon the hearing of a petition for a review. Ferrill vs. Simpson, 8 Pick. 359.

11. And where a deputy-sheriff returned on a writ, that on the day specified he had attached hay in the defendant's barn, his declaration on the same day, while he was at work on a fence near the barn, that he had attached the hay and was then watching it, was held inadmissible to prove the attachment, it not being a part of the res gestæ. Merrill vs. Sawyer, 8 Pick. 397.

12. In order to establish, on a trial, a title to personal property by purchase, it is not necessary for the purchaser to offer his bill of parcels in evidence; but he may prove his purchase by parol evidence. Blood vs. Harrington, 8 Pick. 552.

13. Persons who do not believe in the existence of a God, or in a future state of existence, are not competent witnesses. Wakefield vs. Ross, 5 Mason, 16.

---

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1831.

Condensed Reports of Cases in the Supreme Court of the United States; containing the whole series of the Decisions of the Court, from its organization to the commencement of Peters' Reports at January Term, 1827. With copious Notes of parallel Cases in the Supreme and Circuit Courts of the United States. Edited by Richard Peters, Esq. Counsellor at Law and Reporter of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Vols. I. and II. pp. 655 and 736. Philadelphia. 1830.

The learned editor of this valuable work, who has now been the reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States between two and three years, gives the following reasons for the present publication, together with an exposition of his plan, in the preface to his first volume:

'The Supreme Court of the United States has been organised for thirtyeight years, and its decisions form, in themselves, almost an entire code of laws. Many of the difficult and important questions of constitutional construction, and of the nature and extent of the powers reserved, granted, and claimed under the constitution, have passed under the careful observance and judgment of the court. International questions of the highest moment; numerous points of general commercial law; principles, upon which, as its deep and broad foundations, the law of evidence rests; the construction of statutes of the United States; the rules and statutes, by which the titles derived under the United States, to the lands held by the enterprising and prosperous inhabitants of the vast and fertile regions of the south and west, are permanently governed:—all have there been subjects of investigation and final adjudication.

'The chancery jurisdiction of the federal courts has brought before the Supreme Court, in submission to its scrutiny and judgment, most of the rules of equity practice and much of the general chancery law; and the right of appeal and writ of error, by which cases arising in the courts of the District of Columbia may be removed for final determination, has obliged the court to decide many points, which, but for this domestic jurisdiction, might not have been under its consideration. Many questions which have been brought up in those cases, are of usual occurrence in the common transactions and business of life; and are of very general application and influence.

'Considerations growing out of these circumstances impose the necessity, that the law thus general, thus established, thus supreme, should be universally known. That there should be found but few copies of the reports of the cases decided in the Supreme Court of the United States, in many large districts of our country in which there are federal and state tribunals, is known to be a frequent fact. In some of those districts not a single complete copy of the reports is in the possesion of any one; [!] and thus the great and overruling law of the land, is almost unknown in many populous parts of the Union.'

Mr Peters then adds, what every professional man has felt, that this state of things is the consequence of 'the heavy expense' of purchasing the twentyfour volumes of Dallas, Cranch, and Wheaton; and it is the object of his present publication to obviate this inconvenience, by condensing those twentyfour volumes into six, which will include 'all the cases adjudged in the Supreme Court of the United States from 1790 to 1827, inclusive.' In order that the work may still preserve 'a form which will make it authority in all judicial tribunals, the whole opinion delivered by the court in every case will be given in the language of the court; and such a statement or abstract of the facts of the cause will be made as will fully and accurately exemplify the decisions. The matter will not be abbreviated, so as to omit anything which is important, or which in any manner forms an essential feature of the case. An abridgment is not contemplated; the work is intended to be of a higher order; . . . . and, to maintain and illustrate the connexion between this publication and the reports of Mr Dallas, Mr Cranch, and Mr Wheaton, and to enable those who shall possess it, to resort to the cases in their volumes, a reference is always given, as well in the body of the work as in the index, to the pages of those reports.'

Such is the plan of this work; and we believe the profession will generally agree, that it promises to be of great utility. We have been obliged thus far to deny ourselves the gratification of possessing all the United States' Reports, for the reasons alluded to by the editor; and we have accordingly resorted to the present publication. So far as we have had occasion to use it, we have found it very satisfactory in the statements of the original cases; and the numerous references to what Mr Peters calls 'the parallel cases decided by the court,' as well as his other references, give great additional value to this work. He has also supplied a deficiency, which has been always felt, in the decisions taken from Dallas' part of the series of United States' Reports—we mean, the want of an abstract, either at the head or in the margin of each case. Every little facility of this kind, made with judgment, is, to a practising lawyer, of more importance than its humble rank would seem to indicate.

It gives us much satisfaction to observe that Mr Peters, consistently with his plan of an economical and 'condensed' edition, contents himself with referring to the Digests now in use, (as in page 1, to Coxe's Digest,) instead of repeating the 'bead roll' of cases under every head. In conformity with his plan of retrenching unnecessary matter, we observe he generally omits the opinions of dissentient judges; but sometimes he inserts them. Which is the better course, might perhaps be a subject of dissenting opinions among professional men.

We need not add, that we are much gratified at the prospect of having in such a very moderate compass so great a body of American law from the highest tribunal of our country. The plan, we presume, will comprehend the Reports of Mr Peters himself, after the decisions shall be so numerous as to make it proper for him to give the public a 'condensed' edition of the whole series. The body of judicial opinions, which will thus be communicated to all those countries with which we have any international connexion, will be one of the proudest monuments of American juridical talent and learning.—Jurist.

REFORM IN CHANCERY.

The whole fabric of Chancery abomination totters to its fall; and venerated dust and rubbish of antiquity is to be swept away; the cobwebs are to be brushed from their perspective corners; the spiders cry out that the world is at an end; and, as daylight is let into the intricate crevices of the building, the obscene birds who have formed their hereditary nests there, from generation to generation, hoot at the light, and in there purblind struggles, fly in the faces of the unwelcome intruders. The Chancellor has redeemed his pledge; he now stands forth—not the popular declaimer—not the opposition orator—but the practical, ministerial, reformer of the law. He proposes no petty amendment—no abolition of minor officers or minor evils—no palliative—no sedate—non placebo—no compromise between acknowledged evil and conflicting interests. He lays his axe to the root of the evil—he aims a mortal blow at —— the pockets of his adversaries—he refuses the supplies, and the ways and means of corruption are at an end. Judicial officers, and their administrative subordinates, are to be paid by salaries—not by fees; or if in part by fees, then only in that stage of proceeding over which they have no control to multiply, hasten, or retard the steps of the suitor. The Masters' Clerks grieve for their gratuities—the Registers for their copy money; those pleasant unctions—those cordials to pen-wearied diligence—those stimulants to expedition; are gone forever. The Masters plunge their hands into the depths of their femoralia, and with lengthened faces and lack lustre eye, meditate the departed glory of their warrants; while seventy Commissioners of Bankrupts, dispersed to all quarters of the wind, wonder what this world is to do without them.—Yet all this is done with so much judgment, with so much due consideration for individual interest, that those who inwardly curse, and privately mutter, cannot openly complain. If they remain in office, they are liberally paid for the proper execution of their duty. If their services are dispensed with, they are as liberally compensated for the loss of their emoluments. A present and permanent good is cheaply purchased at the expense of a temporary and decreasing encumbrance; and this, too, is put on its just footing; there is no twaddle of the indefensible rights of vested interest—no prattle of freehold—no talk of inheritance in official exactions. Thus the sinecures held by the Reverend Mr Thurlow amount to between nine and ten thousand a year, among these is the most iniquitous office that it ever entered into the mind of man or courtier to imagine—a tax of seven thousand a year out of bankrupts' estates to be collected at a further expense of about fifty per cent.—London Examiner.

---

Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States.—The following additional rules were adopted at the late Session of the Court; their importance to the profession and to parties has induced their publication, before the publication of Mr Peters' fifth volume of the Reports of the decisions of the Court, at January term, 1831, which will appear in July.—U. S. Gazette.

RULE NO. 37.

1. In all cases the clerk shall take of the plaintiff a bond with competent security to respond to costs in the penalty of $200, or a deposit of that amount to be placed in Bank subject to his draft.

2. In all cases the clerk shall have fifteen copies of the records printed for the Court, provided the government will admit the item in the expenses of the Court.

3. In all cases the clerk shall deliver a copy of the printed record to each party; and in cases of dismission (except for want of jurisdiction) or affirmance one copy of the record shall be taxed against the plaintiff, which charge includes the charge for the copy furnished him. In case of reversal and dismission for want of jurisdiction each party shall be charged with one half of the legal fees for a copy.

---

NEW HAVEN, April 30.

The U. S. Circuit Court, Judge Thompson presiding, assisted by Judge Bristol, the District Judge, commenced its session in this city last Wednesday. A cause of much importance to the town of East Windsor was tried on Thursday, and $1500 awarded against the town. It was a suit brought against the town by Mr Chester Kellogg, of Amherst, (Mass.) for damages sustained in falling through a bridge in a stage in May last, which bridge it was claimed belonged to the town to have kept in repair. Mr Kellogg had his leg broke in two places, and was detained from home and from his business for several weeks, at great expense. Another suit, brought by Mr Rufus Coles, of Amherst, (Mass.) who was in the same stage, and his thigh broken, was tried on Friday, and a verdict of $1050 against said town given in his favor.

We understand that two cases are pending before the Courts in this state for damages sustained on the same occasion; one for bodily injury received, and the other by the stage owners, for a horse killed by the breaking of the bridge.

The result of these trials thus far, is a loud call to the different towns to see that their bridges on all public roads are kept in good repair.—N. J. State Gazette.

---

The Supreme Judicial Court, on Tuesday last, closed a term of four weeks and one day, having disposed of all the actions on the Docket.

---

CONTENTS of the American Jurist and Law Magazine, No. X. for April; published by STIMPSON & CLAPP, and FREEMAN & BOLLES.

Article I. Mathews on Presumptions.

A Treatise on the Doctrine of Presumption and Presumptive Evidence, as affecting the title to Real and Personal Property. By John H. Mathews, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law. With Notes and References to American Cases: By Benjamin Rand, Esq.

II. Notes on Mortgages in Cuba.

III. Insurance—Deduction in Repairs.

IV. Double Pleading.

V. Horse Causes.

A Treatise on the Law of Warranty of Horses. By R. S. Surtess, Gent.

VI. Cowen's Digest.

A General Digested Index to the nine volumes of Cowen's Reports of Cases argued and determined in the Supreme Court and in the Court for the Trial of Impeachments and Correction of Errors in the State of New York. By the author of those Reports.

VII. Advice to a Young Lawyer.

Digest of Recent Decisions.

The most important cases in Vermont Reports, vols. 1 and 2; Halsted, New Jersey, vol. 6; Gill and Johnson, Maryland, vol. 1; Pickering, Massachusetts, vol. 8; Mason, vol 5, Circuit Court of the United States in the District of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island.

Chancery.

Principal cases in Paige's Chancery Reports, vol. 1.

Recent English Decisions.

Legislation.

Vermont.
Connecticut.
Rhode Island.
New Jersey.
Georgia.
Tennessee.
Indiana.
Alabama.

Short Reviews and Notices.

Judge Thacher's Address to the Suffolk Bar.

Pamphlet against Lord Chancellor Brougham's Bill.

Holroyd's Law of Patents—A Practical Treatise on the Law of Patents for Inventions. By Edward Holroyd, Esq.

Intelligence and Miscellany.

Account of the various Officers attached to the French Courts.
Mr Humphreys.
Proper Qualifications of an Attorney.
Cheapness of Law.
Presiding Talent of Lord Lyndhurst.
Anecdote of Lord Kenyon.
Changes in the English Courts.
Judges in Ohio.

Quarterly List of Law Publications.

---

The following deserved compliment to the above work was given in a speech recently delivered by the Hon. G. C. VERPLANCK, of New York, at a public dinner given him in honor of 'his able and persevering exertions in the Congress of the United States to place literary property on a secure and permanent footing.'

'It would be unjust on this occasion to omit to mention, with special honor, the first and ablest champion who appeared in this cause, and I have only to regret that I cannot mention him by name. I mean the author of a well written, and well reasoned article in a valuable legal journal of Boston, the American Jurist. I have not the pleasure of any acquaintance with the editors, nor have I ever been able to ascertain the name of the author of the article to which I allude. But it is due to him to say, that in his essay on the law of the copy-right he placed in a striking point of view the defects of the existing legislation and the obvious justice and policy of an efficient reform, asserting the rights of literary property with the learning of an accurate lawyer, the congenial feeling of a man of letters, and the large views of a statesman.'

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars. April 9.

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIII. for March, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Moral Education. 1. The Library of Education, edited by Wm. Russell, vol. 1; containing 'Some Thoughts concerning Education, by John Locke,' and 'A Treatise on Education, by John Milton.'

2. Account of the Edinburgh Sessional School, and the other Parochial Institutions for Education, established in that city in 1812; with Strictures on Education in general. By John Wood, Esq.

II. Prison Discipline 1. Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

2. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

III. Collection of Psalms and Hymns. A Collection of Psalms of Hymns for Christian Worship.

IV. Meaning of Αἰών. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays on several words relating to Future Punishment.

V. Works of the Rev. Robert Hall. The Works of the Rev. Robert Hall, A. M. Minister of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, England. First complete edition, with a brief Memoir of the author.

VI. Stuart and Whitman. 1. A Letter to William E. Channing, D. D. on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Moses Stuart, Professor of Sacred Literature in the Theological Seminary, Andover.

2. Two Letters to the Rev. Moses Stuart, on the subject of Religious Liberty. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College, February 3, 1831. March 19.

NEWSPAPER AND PERIODICAL AGENCY. EICHBAUN & NORVELL, Booksellers, Nashville, Tennessee, have, in addition to their regular business, established a GENERAL AGENCY for the procuring of subscribers to, and the collecting of debts due to Newspapers and Periodicals throughout the United States. To this business great attention will be paid, and the instructions of Publishers strictly attended to. The city in which they are established contains a population of six thousand inhabitants, and as the citizens have ever shown a disposition to encourage meritorious publications, with the aid of Agents, the publishers of Newspapers, Magazines, &c, might obtain a respectable number of subscribers. Refer to GRAY and BOWEN, Booksellers, Boston. March 19.

POPULAR JOURNAL OF MUSIC. THE HARMONICON, a Monthly Journal of Music—No. I. just received by GRAY & BOWEN. Each monthly number will contain—

I. An Original Biography of some distinguished Composer or Performer. II. Interesting Correspondence, or Original Dissertations, on Subjects connected with the Science. III. Detailed Accounts of the Opera, Concerts, and other Musical Performances of the past month. IV. Copious Extracts from the Foreign Musical Journals, giving the reader the latest information of the Progress of the art, and its Professors throughout Europe. V. Liberal and unbiassed Accounts of all Musical Works as they appear. VI. Six or seven pieces of Music, Vocal and Instrumental, English and Foreign, selected with care, and printed with a beauty and accuracy that may safely challenge competition.

Musical Families and Societies, subscribing to the Harmonicon, will be furnished monthly with (in addition to the literary contents of each number), on an average, Six Entire Pieces of Vocal and Instrumental Music, at a price not exceeding the common charge for a single piece, when printed in the usual way. March 19.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Westminster Review, No. XXVII. for January.

CONTENTS.

Art I. Popular Defensive Force. II. Lesson's History of Man. III. Hannibal's Passage of the Alps. IV. Webster's American Dictionary. V. India and China Trade. VI. Character of George IV. VII. Scotch Parliamentary Reform. VIII. Heiress of Bruges. IX. Maxwell. X. Belgian Revolution. XI. J. P. Cobbett's Italy. XII. Bruce's Travels. XIII. Machine-Breaking. XIV. Tennyson's Poems. XV. Basil Barrington and Friends. XVI. The Wellington Administration. XVII. European Revolution; List of Books, &c. March 19.

SPLENDID BIBLE. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

HINTON'S UNITED STATES. GRAY & BOWEN have just received the four first numbers of the History and Topography of the United States, edited by John Howard Hinton, assisted by several literary gentlemen in America and England. Each number of this work is illustrated with three beautiful engravings on steel.

GRAY & BOWEN have also recently received and have for sale a few copies of the following Foreign Books, viz: Hamilton on the Progress of Society; Iconology or Emblematic Figures explained, by W. Pinnock, with 72 engravings; Panorama of London, with numerous engravings and a complete Plan of the city, taken from actual survey in 1830; Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History; Pinnock's Modern Geography and History; Abliaux or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries, 3 vols; Spix's Travels in Brazil; Memoirs of Moses Mendelsohn; The Doom of Devorgoil, by Sir Walter Scott; Dibdin's Library Companion; Essai Politique Sur le Royaume de la Nouvelle Espagne, par Alexandre de Humbolt, in two vols. folio, accompanied by a splended Atlas. Price $15. Feb. 19.

GIRL'S OWN BOOK. This day published by CARTER, HENDEE, & BABCOCK,

'The Girl's Own Book.' By Mrs Child, author of Hobomok, and Evenings in New England, and editor of the Juvenile Miscellany.

'I have no trinkets, cakes, or toys,
As gifts for little girls and boys,
But look within, and you will find
Both food and playthings for the mind.'

The Girl's Own Book is intended for those who are too old to read merely infantile books, yet somewhat too young for such costly presents as the Annuals. It embraces a great variety of subjects: All sorts of Games and Exercises suitable for Girls—Directions for Sewing and Knitting, Needlebooks, Pincushions, Purses, Boxes, and Bags of all sorts—Charades, Puzzles, &c.—Fables, Stories, and Maxims, Poetry, Gardening, Silk Worms, and Bees. Jan. 1.

THIS DAY published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Language.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

MECHANICS' MAGAZINE.—This day published by GRAY & BOWEN.

No. 15, North American Series.

This number contains articles on Screw Cutting; Locomotive Carriages; finding Velocity of Ships at Sea; New Metallic Alloy for pivot Watches; Reflections on the Decline of Science in England; Improved marine Steam Engine Boiler; Claxton's Air Pump; Almanacks for 1831, &c, &c, with a great number of engravings.

Subscriptions received as above at $3 75 per annum. March 19.

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. This day published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1831. NO. XLIII.

INCOMPETENCY OF WITNESSES,

FROM INFAMY OF CHARACTER.

'There are many offences which our law considers such blemishes on the moral character, as to incapacitate from giving evidence in courts of justice; as treason and every species of the crimen falsi, such as forgery, perjury, subornation of perjury, &c, and other offences of the same kind, which involve the charge of falsehood, and effect the administration of justice.' Individuals convicted of those crimes, upon whom judgment has been passed, are said to be incompetent from infamy of character, and are not even heard.

The evils of this rule may be enumerated in a few words. To the extent of its operation, it licenses the commission of any and all crimes in the presence of, and upon persons thus convicted, (none but convicts being present) and completely annihilates all rights of person or property, where those rights can only be established through the medium of this sort of evidence. The benefits of a contrary rule would, of course be the prevention of those evils.

The object of courts being to ascertain the truth, and the only evil to be guarded against being wrong decision, it is perfectly immaterial, what or how infamous the witness may be, provided, when called on the stand, he speaks the truth. This being the only object of the introduction of any witness it follows, that if a person convicted of theft be equally likely with any other individual not so convicted, to state the truth, he answers equally well the purpose of his introduction, and should be heard. Infamy of character, no more than deformity of body, affords a valid reason for rejecting testimony which is probably true. However desirable it might be that none but witnesses of high moral character should ever be introduced, it would undoubtedly be still more desirable, that no occasion should arise for the introduction even of such testimony; that is, that litigation should cease. But as this is utterly hopeless, and as it is impossible to foresee every dispute which may arise, and to pre-appoint the testimony, and, as there are frequently no witnesses of a contested transaction but those whose characters are thus tainted with infamy, the question occurs whether the ends of justice would be better served by the introduction of such testimony, however dangerous it may be, than by its rejection. If other testimony be attainable, this will never be introduced. It might as reasonably be supposed, that a party would prefer the interests of his opponent to his own, as that he would introduce secondary, when the best evidence was within his reach—a man of less, when one of more credit, might be obtained. The question, therefore, is, whether, when as full evidence as by possibility might exist, cannot be obtained, we shall reject that which actually is within our power; whether the light of the sun being unattainable, total darkness should be preferred to the dim and uncertain light of the twinkling stars.

In discussing every question of exclusion, the argument for general admission is so cogent, that the burden of proof undoubtedly lies on the objecting party to support his position; to show a preponderance of evil resulting from the admission of the evidence, which he would reject.

The strongest objections which can be urged against the admission of a witness convicted of crime, are, a *presumed want of truth inferred from the moral turpitude displayed in the commission of previous crimes, and the inefficiency of moral restraints in such witness, and the probability that, if he should testify untruly, the judge of the facts will, from some cause, place undue reliance on this evidence; for if the witness testify truly, or if no more than proper credit be given to his statements, the rights of the parties or the interests of the community will not suffer. In other words, the advocates of exclusion say, that there is preponderant probability that the witness will perjure himself, and that his perjuries will be credited.

To justify this result, it is, inferred, from the commission of one crime, that the individual will commit perjury. It is undeniably correct, that the fact of a witness' having once violated the laws of morality, is a good reason why less reliance should be placed on his statements, than on those of an individual of unimpeachable reputation. It is a well known rule of the law, that every man is to be presumed innocent till his guilt is established by satisfactory proof. But this rule reverses that statutory maxim; it excludes not for actual, but presumed want of truth, and on account of supposed prospective guilt. The convict may and can speak the truth. Because a man has committed theft, it by no means follows that he will commit perjury. Because he has violated one law, it is by no means sure that he has or that he will violate any or all the laws in the statute book. Does the father never again question a child who has once told an untruth? After having once felt the punishment of the law for its violation, it by no means follows, that, from some peculiar obliquity of taste, he will again court its punishment. Take the case of perjury; and let the inference be, that because he has once perjured himself, he will do the same the next time an opportunity occurs. Who does not perceive such an inference rash and unbounded? Where an individual on trial for theft, what magistrate would consider the record of past, conclusive proof of the subsequent supposed theft, in the absence of all other evidence? But this rule of exclusion conclusively infers perjury from some precedent delinquency, and it allows no evidence to dispove this inference. The case in which the perjury was committed, was one in which the balance of conflicting motives induced him to commit the crime; but it furnishes no certainty in a case differently situated. Indeed, unless the present penal code be deplorably inefficacious, even in a case perfectly similar, the probability is, that having once experienced the penalties of the law, he will not again provoke them. The commission of other crimes affords still less proof of this species of guilt.

In all cases, where there is no sinister interest, no motive to seduce from truth, the worst equally with the best man, is entitled to credence, unless it be considered sound reasoning to suppose an effect without a cause. The convict is of the same common nature, actuated by the same desires, incited by the same hopes and deterred by the same fears which influence the actions of others. The commission of any given crime shows that under a certain combination of circumstances, he had not sufficient firmness to resist temptation, and affords a ground to believe that where his own interests are an issue (and in no other case) that he would more readily than another yield to temptation; that preventives to crime have less weight with him than with others—but not that they have no weight. It is a stain on his character, for which a deduction should be made from the credit otherwise to be given to his evidence, and of the force of which the jury can judge as well as of any other discrediting circumstances.

So stands the argument as to the probability of the truth of his statements. If, then, his evidence being necessary, it be rejected, certain evil, inevitable misdecision is the result; while, if admitted, the worst that happens is what is sure in the event of exclusion: that is, certain, is preferred to doubtful and contingent evil.

If then the witness, whether his testimony be true or false, is admitted, still, unless undue reliance be placed on his testimony, no evil ensues. The position that there will be this error assumes for its basis, either imbecility or dishonesty on the part of the judge of fact, and operates only as an argument why there should be a change of judges. The evil, remember, is undue reliance on this suspicious testimony. The judge, who can in other cases weigh and compare testimony, can equally well do the same in this. A witness comes forward, having, at some previous time, been convicted of perjury. He comes with the mark on his forehead. The jury, (if the trial be by jury) are cautioned by counsel and judge, and the proof of his recorded infamy. Would every word he uttered be received implicitly as truth? Would the danger be that, thus forearmed and forewarned, he alone would be too dangerous to be heard?—so dangerous that he must be excluded? Would not the danger rather be, that his evidence, being true, would be disbelieved, than that being untrue, it would be credited? Is there such magic in falsehood? The judge says, this is suspicious, dangerous evidence, too doubtful to affect the rights of parties; and yet knowing its doubtfulness, the suspicion adhering to it, for fear he shall believe, dare not trust himself to hear it. 'Strike, but hear.' To judge, hear. Would he not be better prepared to judge of the truth of his testimony after its delivery, than before? The evidence when disbelieved, is the same as if not heard. When believed, the legislator, who establishes such a law, assumes, on his part, that he is a better judge of the truth of the statements of an individual of whom he is totally ignorant, than the tribunal which sees his manner, hears and compares his testimony with the other evidence adduced, and after this comparison, still believes.

* 'It cannot reasonably be expected that such a person would regard the obligation of an oath. By the turpitude of his conduct he has shown that he is regardless of all laws, human and divine,' 1 Starkie, 82.

But to this as to every other rule of law exceptions exist—exceptions, which, if correct, show the impropriety of the general rule, and which, if incorrect, should be repealed. Accomplices are every day admitted, and yet the anticipated evils do not occur. In this case proof of present depravity, the fact alone worthy of regard, (for past is adduced only to prove present depravity) is more clear and decisive than in any other case. Persons formerly convicted may have changed their character, or the conviction may have been erroneous; but in this case the guilt is recent and the proof conclusive. So far, therefore, as present depravity is regarded, the accomplice is less admissible than the convict. *Policy and necessity are the reasons given for the admission of this testimony, as otherwise the greatest crimes might escape unpunished. But if guilt be a ground of exclusion and if the testimony of persons of such character, is too doubtful and suspicious to be introduced in civil cases much more should policy and necessity reject such evidence in criminal cases, when reputation and even life itself are at hazard. Infamy or interest either excludes testimony, says the judge, and as proof of this truth, up steps on the stand the accomplice confessing his guilt—the traitorous accomplice, "who swears 'under an implied promise of pardon;' who 'has an equitable title to recommendation for the king's mercy,' and who to the unlearned in the law would seem excluded on the double ground of infamy and interest. The taint on the character, the moral guilt of the individual, the doubt and suspicion attached to the statements of him who is condemned out of his own mouth, are equally great as if the guilt were proved by the production of a record. If there be danger from the thief, whose recorded guilt is adduced against him, it is none the less because he voluntarily admits his guilt. The law, in a spirit of mercy, says, that it is better ten guilty men should escape than one innocent man suffer. How important, then, would seem the rejection of this testimony to the exclusionist? But in fact if any judgment can be formed from the experience of centuries, no evil results from this rule, or if occasional evil, it is more than balanced by its benefits.

There is still another exception. The convict, if a party to a suit, may make an affidavit in his defence, but not as complainant. Here under the very worst mode of testifying, when the evidence is given unquestioned, uninterrogated, his interests being involved, the convict is allowed to give his evidence under the additional disability of interest—as if any conceivable danger attached to such testimony, were not more than double under these circumstances. Yet his affidavit is admitted; and why? Because 'otherwise he would be without remedy:'*—a good reason undoubtedly, indeed the only reason, why testimony is ever given: but equally applicable to the case, when, without such testimony, others 'would be without remedy,' in which case the evidence would be given under infinitely less objectionable circumstances.

The witness, too, whose character for want of truth is notorious, is admitted, and this want of truth is urged as an argument against his credibility. In this case a witness with a proved want of truth, is admitted, while in the exclusion of the convicted, a supposed want of truth excludes.

But this exclusion is said to be a part of the punishment attached to the offence. As a punishment on the guilty this is nugatory—as if an individual, when other motives would not restrain, would be influenced by the fear of not being permitted to give testimony when the rights of others were concerned. The real punishment falls not on the guilty, but on the innocent, on him whose misfortune it is to need such testimony, and whose rights are impaired by its rejection.

Objectionable as is the rule, the modes of 'restoring competency,' the sovereign remedies by which all danger is removed, and the mouth of the witness opened, can scarcely be mentioned without a smile. To pass by the sham process of 'confessing errors in the record,' or the mystic virtues of burning in the hand, as modes of expelling mendacity, a remark or two many be made with regard to the case of pardons, whether by statute or under the great seal, the 'most effectual modes of restoring competency,'* and which are the only modes in vogue with us. The others though possessing no ordinary virtue, have been little tried here. It would hardly be supposed that a witness would be more trustworthy the moment before, than the moment after pardon: and indeed it seems (1 Phillips' Ev. 29) that some have thought 'that a pardon could only remove the incompetency and not the blemish.' But such absurd notions have given place to more reasonable ideas; it being now clear that a pardon, whether under the great seal, or by act of parliament, 'makes the witness a new creature, and gives him a new capacity.' If such be the virtues of the great seal, or of parchment, (and if such are not the effects, it will be difficult to tell what they are) it seems unfortunate that they are not oftener tried to the utter removal of all falsehood. However, as a sure though a quack remedy to an imaginary disease, it is not without its use.'†

In the preceding remarks, the case of the accomplice was considered an exception to the rule; although one in reality, yet technically considered it is not, as neither the crime, nor the punishment, nor the conviction, but the 'judgment alone creates the disability; but even then, only in the state where the judgment was passed. To most it would seem that guilt (when proved) should render infamous; that if there be danger arising from the evidence sufficient to warrant its rejection, the rule should be coextensive and commensurate with the danger; while the criminality or the infamy arising from this criminality, be proved by the admissions of the party or by record, whether the deed be committed within the jurisdiction of one state or another.‡ One thing is clear, namely, that the rule or the exceptions should be abolished.—Jurist.

* Policy and necessity, says Phillips: Policy and perhaps necessity, says Starkie. 2 Starkie, 19; 1 Phil. Ev. 31

† 2 Starkie Ev. 723.

* 1 Phil. Ev. 29.

† But even this remedy is not wholly free from evil. A pardon is frequently granted to a criminal; his punishment remitted, to procure his evidence against some other. His punishment was right or wrong. If wrong, he should on other grounds have been pardoned. If right, he escapes deserved punishment, that thus a chance may be had to punish some worse criminal. A certain evil done; the remission of deserved punishment, that good may come, and that good uncertain. It would obviously be better that neither should escape. The witness would be as likely to tell the truth without, as with a pardon. The pardon except as far as by rendering the witness a new creature, it alters his character in some miraculous manner, is, in respect to his credibility, mere mummery.

‡ In the case Com.v. Green, 17 Mass. 517. it is decided, that a conviction in another state does not render the witness incompetent. In Maryland the decisions are the other way.

DIGEST OF ENGLISH CASES.

NEW TRIAL.

Where a defendant, having an opportunity of trying a cause, permits a verdict to be taken against him, as in an undefended cause, the court will not grant a new trial, even on payment of costs.—Breach vs. Costerton, 7 Bing. 224. and Masters vs. Barnwell, ib.

NONSUIT, EFFECT OF.

The judge directed the jury to find for the plaintiff, if they came to a certain conclusion; if they came to either of two other conclusions stated by him, to find for the defendant, and say on which ground they proceeded. The plaintiff then elected to be non-suited: Held, that he was not entitled to a new trial on the ground of misdirection, if either of the two latter points was properly put to the jury.—Vacher vs. Cocks, 1 B. & Adol. 145.

PARTNERSHIP.

A. and others carried on business under the name of the Plas Madock Colliery Company. A. retired from the firm, which afterwards became indebted to the plaintiff. No notice of any kind was given of the dissolution. It did not appear that the plaintiff ever knew A. as a partner, or that his being so was so notorious that the plaintiff must be presumed to have known it: Held that A. was not liable to the plaintiff. Carter vs. Whalley, 1 B. & Adol. 11. 1 L. & W. 297.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Where the seller of goods put into the hands of a broker who bought them for a party unknown to the seller, a document which enabled the broker to mislead his principal into supposing the contract different in its terms from that under which the broker actually bought, and the principal paid the broker for the goods according to the contract stated by him: Held, that the principal was not afterwards liable to the seller. And (by Parke, J., wherever the broker has stated to the principal) and the latter has bonâ fide adopted, a different contract from that under which the broker bought, the seller cannot call upon the principal; because the seller sues on the actual contract under which the goods are sold, and must, therefore, show that the principal authorized or ratified that contract, not a different one substituted by the broker.—Horsfall vs. Fauntleroy, 1 L. & W. 340.

PRISONER.

A person who has been in execution for the costs of an ejectment more than twelve successive calendar months, is not entitled to his discharge under 48 Geo. 3. c. 123. the statute being confined to persons in execution upon a judgment for a debt or damages.—Doe vs. Reynolds, 10 B. & C. 481.

PROBABLE CAUSE.

In an action for maliciously suing out a commission of bankruptcy against the plaintiff, he proved that shortly before the docket was struck, he had removed some goods under circumstances not constituting an act of bankruptcy, on hearing of which the defendant sued out the commission. It was not shown, however, that this was the fact on which the commissioners made their adjudication. He further proved that he sued the defendant in trespass for the seizure under the commission, and, on issue joined on a plea of the bankruptcy, recovered a verdict: Held sufficient evidence of want of probable cause to throw on the defendant the onus of proving the contrary. Very slight evidence of such a negative is sufficient.—Cotton vs. James, 1 B. & Adol. 128.

PROMISSORY NOTE.

1. A declaration by the payee of a note that its concoction was illegal, is not admissible in evidence against a subsequent holder for value.—Beauchamp vs. Parry, 1 B. & Adol. 89 1 L. & W. 334.

2. A promissory note 'for value received by my late husband,' is valid on the face of it. Evidence cannot be given of a consideration other than that which appears on the face of note.—Ridout vs. Bristow, 1 C. & J. 231. 1 Tyrw. 84.

3. An instrument containing a promise to pay money on a contingency, for value received, is no evidence on the money counts.—Mogan vs. Jones, 1 C. & J. 162. 1 Tyrw. 21.

SHIP-OWNER'S LIABILITY.

The owner of a ship, by charter-party, appointed G. B. to the command, and agreed that he should be at liberty to receive on board a cargo of lawful goods, (reserving 100 tons for the owner,) and proceed therewith to Calcutta, and there reload the ship and return to London; and upon her arrival in London, and discharge, the service should end: the owner further agreed to supply the ship with stores for the time necessary to complete the voyage; in consideration of which, G.B. agreed to take the command, and pay the owner a certain tonnage per month for the use and hire of the ship. It was further agreed, that G. B. should remit all freight bills for the homeward cargo to B. B. & Co. in London, who should hold them as joint trustees for the owner and G. B. that they should be applied to the payment of the freight due to the owner, and the surplus be handed to G. B. It was then provided that the owner should have an agent on board, who was to have the sole management of the ship's stores, with power to displace G. B. for any breach of the charter-party, and appoint another commander. The plaintiffs shipped goods on board the vessel in Calcutta for London, having first received a copy of the charter-party: Held that they could not recover against the owner for the loss of their goods.—Newbury vs. Colvin, 7 Bing. 190; 1 C. & J. 192; 1 Tyrw. 55.

SLANDER.

An allegation of special damage in an action for words spoken by the defendant, is not supported by proof that the defendant had spoken the words to B, and that B had repeated them as the words of the defendant, whereby damage ensued to the plaintiff.—Ward vs. Weeks, 7 Bing. 211.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

The right to stop in transitu is paramount to any lien of a third party against the purchaser.—If goods be specifically directed to a particular place of destination, the transitus continues till they have arrived there, or the purchaser has given them a new direction.—Morley vs. Hay, 3 M. & R. 396.

TOLL.

Toll thorough cannot be claimed, unless in respect of repairs done to the particular road or street for passing through which it is claimed; not, for instance, upon all carts entering a town by a certain street, in respect of repairs done to other streets of that town.—Brett vs. Beales, 10 B. & C. 508.

TRESPASS.

Under particular circumstances, it may be lawful to lay hands on a party, in order to serve him with process.—Harrison vs. Hodgson, 10 B. & C. 445.

TROVER.

A. being indebted to B., gave him a delivery order for goods in a wharfinger's hands, which the wharfinger accepted. A. afterwards gave C. an order for the same goods; the wharfinger refused to transfer to C., unless he could get B.'s order, but engaged not to part with them without informing C. B.'s debt being afterwards paid in part, he gave A. a delivery order for the goods, which he handed to the wharfinger. C. again demanded them, and offered an indemnity, but the wharfinger again refused to deliver them to him, without B.'s order. Held, that C. had no property in the goods on which he could maintain trover against the wharfinger.—Melling vs. Kelshaw, 1 C. & J. 184; 1 Tyr. 109.

USURY.

A covenant that the grantor of an annuity for four lives should insure the principal sum within thirty days after the lapse of the third life, does not make the contract usurious.—In re Naish, 7 Bing. 150.

VENDER AND PURCHASER.

Assumpsit on an agreement for the sale of lands. The abstract was delivered to the plaintiff in August, 1827, and returned with objections on the 4th of September following. These were answered on the 20th; the conveyance was not to be perfected until April, 1828. The plaintiff re-sold the premises in November, 1827, without comparing the abstract with the deeds. The title having failed, but without any evidence of mala fides on the part of the defendant, (the original vendor); held that the plaintiff was only entitled to damages to the amount of the expenses that he had incurred in the investigation of the title, or to nominal damages for the breach of contract; but not to the loss he had incurred by the re-sale.—Walker vs. Moore, 10 B. & C. 416.

EQUITY.

3 Bligh, Part 1; 3 Y. & J. Part 4; Younge, Part 1; Tamlyn, Part 3.

ACCOMMODATION BILLS.

Bills of exchange were excepted by A. for the accommodation of B and C. B. being one of the executors of D., and as such having a large sum in his hands, which was deposited in a box in his possession, discounted such bills, by taking out of the box the requisite money, and placing the bills there instead: Held that B. could not so sever his character of co-executor of D. from his character of partner with C. as to prevent the executors of D. from being affected with notice of the transaction, and enable them to sue as indorsees, for a valuable consideration.——— ———, vs. Adams, 1 Y. 117.

EXECUTOR.

An executor is not accountable for moneys placed in the hands of persons simalarly entrusted by the testator, although such persons are not bankers; an executor is not chargeable unless he acts from corrupt motives, or crassa negligentia.—Lord Dorchester vs. Earl of Effingham, 1 Tam. 279.

JURISDICTION.

A., the accountant-general of the court of exchequer in Ireland, executed a power of attorney, authorising his clerk to make transfers in the bank books of any stock of which A. should first have executed a transfer draft, under his hand, upon cheque paper, pursuant to the order of the court. This power was deposited in the bank. The clerk having produced a certificate, purporting to be signed by A., but in fact forged, written on plain paper, and otherwise not conformable to the particulars required by the power and statutory regulations, obtained a transfer of stock from one cause to another. A., being ordered, on motion, by the court of excehquer, to replace this stock, appealed to the house of lords; and they, doubting whether the court below had jurisdiction to proceed in this summary way, on a motion not in a cause; and also, whether the house could entertain the appeal, ordered the case to stand over, with liberty to the appellant, in the meantime, to apply to the court below for a revision of the order on the question of jurisdiction, without reference to the merits. That court having refused, after many discussions to make any further order, the case came on again before the house of lords; when the person at whose instance the order was originally made purposely abstaining from appearing, it was reversed without observation, the council for the bank of Ireland consenting to take £100 for cost.—O'Neill, App., Fitzgerald Resp., 3 Bli. 24.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Demise to A. for eighty years, at a yearly rent, and subject to the payment, in addition, of certain sums in the nature of fines; with a covenant that, in case the rents and fines should be punctually paid, the lessor would, at the end of the term, renew the lease. A. assigned to B. part of the land for the residue of the term of eighty years, subject to the payment of a proportionate part of the rent, and of the sums to be paid as fines, but the proportion was not mentioned. C. afterwards purchased of the lessor the reversion, subject to the lease; and, subsequently, all the premises comprised in the lease which had not been assigned to B. After the purchase by C. one of the fines became due, but was not paid, and no proportion was demanded by C. from, or was paid by, B.: Held that the double character of lessor and lessee represented by C. relieved B. from the strict performance of the covenants, and that the non-payment by him of a proportion of the fines, was not such a breach of the covenant as to deprive him of his right to a renewed lease; and a demurrer for want of equity was overruled.—Statham vs. The Trustees of the Liverpool Dock, 3 Y. & J. 365.

POWER.

1. A. gave a voluntary bond to B. in a certain sum, to be paid to B., 'for the use of herself and children, but at her disposal.' An error in the amount secured having been subsequently discovered, a second bond was executed by A. conditioned for payment of a further sum to B., 'for the use and benefit of herself and children only, in what proportion among the latter she might think proper to direct, but for no other use, purpose, or intent, whatsoever.' Held, that the obligor meant B. to have the interest of the money secured for her life, with a power of disposing of the capital among her children: that an exclusive appointment to two of them was void, and all of them took as tenants in common.—Fowler vs. Hunter, 3 Y. & J. 506.

2. Notwithstanding the general rule, that an instrument must be construed by the provisions contained in it, and not by anything dehors; it was held that the justice of the foregoing case required the language of the second instrument should be kept in view in construing the first.—S. C.

3. Where there is a power of appointment among children, and the appointment from any cause fails, the children take as tenants in common.—S. C.

PRACTICE.

1. On a bill for a discovery and an injunction to restain proceedings at law, the injunction was granted until answer and further order. Upon motion pursuant to notice, on the part of the defendant in equity, before answer, and an undertaking by his counsel to admit, at the trial of the action at law, the facts upon which the plaintiff grounded the equity of his case, the injunction was dissolved. —Fletcher vs. Birch, 1 Y. 22.

2. A supplemental bill cannot be filed where subpœnas have not been issued on the original bill; the latter should be amended.—Stewart vs. Nicholls, 1 Tam. 307.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

A. and B., his surety, gave C. a joint and several promissory note. C. having recovered in separate actions against A. and B., sued out execution against the latter, who paid the debt and costs. To a bill by the representative of B. against A. and C., for an assignment of the judgment obtained by C. against A., a general demurrer for want of equity was put in by A. The Court allowed the demurrer, on the ground that the point might possibly come before the court of law on pleading in scire facias, or in a proceeding by auditâ querelâ.—Dowbiggin vs. Bourne, 1 Y. 111.

SOLICITOR AND CLIENT.

In a suit for tithes, the defendant averred in his answer that the plaintiff was simoniacally presented to the living. To establish this, interrogatories were exhibited for the examination of A, who had acted as solicitor for B, the owner of the advowson, in the sale of the next presentation to the person by whom the plaintiff was presented. A demurred to answering without the consent of B, alleging that he had no knowledge of the matters inquired after, except such as he had derived from being the solicitor of B. The demurrer was overruled, as applying to some of the interrogatories which could not relate to privileged communications; but the witness was allowed to say that any particular fact interrogated to was communicated to him by his client, or to state how he derived his knowledge of it: the question of privilege being left to the future consideration of the court.—Lonsdale vs. Heaton, 1 Y. 72.

SPECIFIC DEVISE.

A testator having given various pecuniary legacies, and devised certain specified lands, concluded thus: 'I do hereby expressly charge and make liable my real and personal estate to and with the payment of the aforesaid several legacies.' The Lord Chief Baron Alexander, in his judgment in the court below, laid down, 'that there was no difference between a specific devise of a particular estate, and a residuary devise of a real estate; and that a general charge of pecuniary legacies upon real estate, as it would effect a residuary devise, so it would effect a property specifically devised: real estates being, in their nature, specific devises; and if a legatee has a right to resort to the one, he has an equal right to resort to the other;' and he decreed that the lands in question were liable to the payment of the legacies on a deficiency of personal assets. The house of lords, refusing to assent to the proposition laid down, reversed the judgment.—Spong, App., Spong, Resp., 3 Bli. 84.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

In a suit for the specific performance of an agreement to accept a lease, the Court being of opinion that the defendant had waived his right to a reference of the title, directed the master merely to settle and approve the lease. In the course of the inquiry for this purpose, circumstances were disclosed which showed that the plaintiff could make no valid title to the lease which he had undertaken to grant; but the master, nevertheless, approved of a lease. On exceptions to his report, the Court held that notwithstanding the defendant's waiver, yet, as it had come out collaterally, that the plaintiff could make no title, a specific performance could not be decreed; and dismissed the bill, but in consideration of the circumstances, without costs.—Warren vs. Richardson, 1 Y. 1.

2. A. having made two wills, the provisions in which caused great discontent among his children, they entered into an agreement for the division of the property, with the intention of submitting it to him for his approbation; this, however, in consequence of his death on the following day, was not carried into effect. The personal property having been divided according to the agreement, a deed was executed, which J. S., one of the parties, understood to be for the purpose of carrying into effect the agreement; when, in fact, the two instruments differed materially. The Court, notwithstanding it deals liberally with family arrangements, refused to enforce the agreement, which was not to operate without the approbation of the testator; and also, to execute the deed by which J. S. clearly intended to carry into effect the agreement.—Beastall vs. Swain, 1 Tam. 288.

3. The defendants covenanted, within two years, to procure the heir at law of K. L. to convey certain premises, or within that time to prefer a petition to the House of Lords for, and use their utmost endeavors to procure, an act of parliament for substituting some proper person to be a trustee of the premises in the stead of the heir, in case he could not be discovered, or there should be no heir, and the estate should have, in consequence, escheated. The master, on reference, certified that he did not find that there was any heir at law. The Court decreed the defendants to permit their names to be used in an application to parliament for the necessary act, by petition or otherwise, as the Master should appoint, in case the parties differed, and to pay the costs up to the time of the decree.—Frederick vs. Coxwell, 3 Y. & J. 514.

Semble. The old law by which a husband was compellable to procure his wife to levy a fine according to his covenant, is now shaken. The Court will not decree an impossibility.—S. C.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. and B., his wife, in 1757, joined in making a mortgage in fee of an estate belonging to the wife, and a fine was levied to the uses of that deed. In 1765, they conveyed the equity of redemption to the mortgagee, but the wife's interest did not pass for want of a fine. The wife died in 1780, and the husband in 1809, and in 1829, the persons claiming under the heir of the wife, filed a bill for redemption. A plea of the statute of limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16., was overruled, without prejudice to the defendants using it as a defence in the answer.—Ravald vs. Russell, 1 Y. 9.

TITHES.

On a bill by a rector, the defendant set up a composition real. The lands in question were, in the reign of Charles the second, divided, upon partition, among three persons, from whom the title was conveyed to the present proprietor by numerous instruments, many of which include the tithes of those portions of the lands comprised in them; and some of which show that a small money payment, parcel of a larger one, amounting to 10*s.*, was provided for the parson in lieu of tithes. A verdict in an action in 1663 for not setting out tithes, on the statute of Edward, in favor of the defendant, a then occupier of the lands, was also given in evidence. There was no trace of tithes having been set out after the reign of Edward the second, nor of the payment of the 10*s.*, or any part of it. Neither the pleadings nor evidence contained any reference to a composition deed. The question was, whether upon the partition deed, the verdict, and the non-render of tithes, a composition real could be inferred. The Court held that such evidence was not sufficient; and that a real composition cannot be acted upon without some evidence of a deed containing the contract having been executed.—Lediard vs. Ainstie, 3 Y. & J. 548.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

EXECUTION.

1. A levy of execution on all the right, title, and interest, in and to land, of a particular description, is void. Arms vs. Burt, 1 Vermont Cases, 303.

2. A prior execution, kept on foot with an intent to delay and defeat other creditors, will be postponed to a subsequent execution. Matthews vs. Warne, 6 Halst. 295.

3. The requisites of a good levy, in all ordinary cases, are 1st. That the officer should see the goods and have them in his power. Per Drake, Just. [But quære of this.] See the opinion of Ford Just. contra. 2d. That he should, in addition to this, do some act demonstrating his intention, from that time forward, to appropriate them in obedience to the command of the writ. Lloyd vs. Wyckloff, 6 Halst. 218.

4. Two executions should not be issued at one and the same time against several persons, upon one judgment rendered on one scire facias and one recognizance. State of New Jersey vs. Stout, 1 Halst. 362.

5. A sheriff must apply the money arising from a sale to the execution under which he sells; he canot apply it to the discharge of previous liens. Mushback vs. Ryerson, 9 Halst. 346.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

1. A charge of interest by an administrator will be viewed with caution, and the circumstances offered to sustain it will be examined with scrupulous care. But circumstances may exist which will not barely justify, but commend an advance of money by the administrator, and entitle him to the allowance of interest. Liddell vs. McVickar, 6 Halst. 44.

2. If the personal estate is insufficient for the payment of the debts; and the administrator actually and in good faith, and under proper circumstances, advances moneys for the purpose, an order for sale may be made to reimburse him. Ib.

3. According to the law of England an administrator d. b. n. cannot call the representatives of the previous deceased administrator of his intestate to account, for any property of the intestate that such predecessor may have converted or wasted; nor can he claim or recover anything but those goods and chattels and credits of his intestate which remain in specie, and are capable of being clearly and distinctly designated and distinguished as the property of the intestate. Per Bland, chancellor. Hagthorp vs. Hook, 1 Gill & Johns. 270.

4. Where an original administration is granted in one of the United States, and an ancillary administration, in another state, and the estate is insolvent, a creditor in the latter state is entitled to a pro rata dividend only, although the assets in that state are sufficient to pay his demand in full. Davis vs. Estey, 8 Pick. 475.

FOREIGN LAWS.

The knowledge of the court of the law of a neighboring state empowering a justice of the peace to take the acknowledgment of deeds may be sufficient without other proof. Middlebury College vs. Cheney, 1 Vermont Cases, 336.

FRAUD.

1. An administrator cannot avoid the deed of his intestate by showing the same to have been made to defraud the creditors of the intestate, though there be no other fund from which these debts can be paid. Adm'r of Martin vs. Martin, 1 Vermont Cases, 91.

2. Fictitious subscriptions, obtained for the purpose of affecting other subscribers, render void those that come afterwards; and owing to the particular character and object of the subscription in question, renders the whole uncollectable. Middlebury College vs. Adm'rs of Loomis, 1 Vermont Cases.

3. If there is an allegation of fraud in obtaining a bond on which judgment has been entered by confession, the court will award a feigned issue to try the question of fraud. Barrow vs. Bispham, 6 Halst. 110.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

A parol agreement that the son of A shall serve B, for the term of four years, is void under the statute of frauds, as being a contract not to be performed within a year. And the operation of the statute is not avoided by a service of a few months under the contract. Quære, whether a part performance is ever an answer to the statute, except in courts of equity? Squire vs. Whipple, 1 Vermont Cases, 69.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

1. A signed a note, as surety for O. payable to H.; and O. in order to secure A for becoming his surety, gave him an absolute bill of sale of a chaise then in the possession of a third person, and of some other property in the possession of O. The whole was left in the same situation as before, no actual delivery or change of possession being made, except that notice of the transfer of the property to A. was given to the person holding the chaise, and he agreed to keep it for A. Afterwards the chaise was seized and taken away on an execution in favor of a creditor of O., and A. took it from the possession of the officer. In an action of trespass brought by the officer against A for the chaise, it was held:

1st. That although the note in which A. had become surety, might be usurious and void, yet he was entitled to hold the property assigned to him for his security, until he was indemnified or relieved from the note.

2d. That there had been a sufficient delivery and change of possession against the creditors of O.

3d. That the fact of a part of the property being suffered to remain in the possession of the vendor, did not defeat the right of the vendee as to the residue, unless the transaction was fraudulent in fact.

4th. That the jury were the proper judges, whether, from all the circumstances in the case, the sale was merely colorable, and made to defeat the rights of creditors, or was fair and bona fide. Spaulding vs. Austin, 2 Vermont Cases, 555.

HIGH SEAS.

The words 'high seas' in the crimes statute of 1825, ch. 376, § 22, mean the uninclosed waters of the ocean on the sea-coast outside of the fauces terræ. United States vs. Grush, 5 Mason, 290.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

An ante-nuptial contract by which the wife is to hold her own earnings to her separate use, is fraudulent as it respects previous or subsequent creditors of the husband. Keith vs. Woombell, 8 Pick. 211.

INFANT.

A minor, having purchased his time of his father is entitled to his own earnings as against the creditors of his father. Chase vs. Elkins, 2 Vermont Cases, 295.

INSOLVENT DEBTOR.

1. A person who, by the reason of the commission of a crime, is disqualified from being a witness, may be examined upon his application as an insolvent debtor. Anonymous, 6 Halst. 93.

2. If a surety on a promissory note pay it after the principal has been discharged under the insolvent act, he may recover the amount from the principal, whose discharge will be no bar to the action. Paxson vs. Haster, 6 Halst. 410.

INSOLVENT LAWS.

1. A certificate obtained under an insolvent law of one state, which declares the person of the insolvent to be exempted from arrest for debts contracted previously to his assignment, is no bar to an action on such a debt, commenced by arresting him another state. Boston Type, &c, Foundry vs. Wallack, 8 Pick. 186.

2. A discharge obtained under an insolvent law of one of the United states, is no bar to an action brought by citizen of another state against the insolvent, even upon a contract made between them in the state where the insolvent law was passed. Braynard vs. Marshall, 8 Pick. 194.

3. Where a contract is made between citizens of the same state, and the defendant is afterwards discharged under the insolvent act of such state from imprisonment, and his person is exempted from future imprisonment thereon; still, if the contract itself is not discharged, a general judgment will be entered against him upon a suit brought in another state, according to the lex fori. Titus vs. Hobart, 5 Mason, 378.

JUDGMENT.

1. A judgment rendered in one state by a court having jurisdiction, is conclusive evidence in another, if it appear from the record that the defendant was served with process within the state, or appeared and submitted to the jurisdiction of the court though he resided out of the state in which the judgment was rendered. Hoxie vs. Wright, 2 Vermont Cases, 263.

2. A defendant, appearing and answering to an action out of his state, and judgment against him, cannot, when sued upon that judgment in his own state, defend upon the original merits. Bellows vs. Ingham, 2 Vermont Cases, 573.

3. A judgment in the court of probate of a state is not conclusive where it has been obtained by fraud. The settlement of an administrator's account in the probate court, procured by fraud, is not conclusive. Pratt vs. Northam, 5 Mason, 95.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

G., a feme sole, contracted with the plaintiff to let him sow a field in grain, and he agreed to give her one third of all the grain raised, as rent. The plaintiff went upon and sowed the field in rye. The defendant, who after the making the contract, intermarried with G., entered upon the field, refused the plaintiff permission to cut the crop, and afterwards cut it himself and carried it away. In an action of trover for the value of the rye, it was held, that the contract between G., and the plaintiff, clearly constituted them landlord and tenant: and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Hoskins vs. Rhodes, 1 Gill & Johns. 266.

LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF.

1. A replication to the plea of the statute of limitations, stating 'that the defendant before and at the time the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff, was out of the state of New Jersey, to wit, in the state of New York, and that the defendant has not been resident in the state of

New Jersey for the term of six years, nor for so great a term as six years since the cause of action accrued, and before the commencement of the suit, is bad on demurrer. Patterson Bank vs. Ludlow, 6 Halst. 354.

2. An account 'concerning the trade of merchandise, between merchant and merchant' is not barred by the statute of limitations, although none of the item are within six years before the action was brought. Bass vs. Bass, 8 Pick. 177.

3. The death of one of the parties to such an account, does not operate as a settlement or statement of the account, so as to bar it by the lapse of six years from the time of his death. Ib.

4. Whether accounts concern 'the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant,' is a question of fact to be decided by the jury. Ib.

5. Such accounts are not merely accounts for merchandise bought and sold between the parties, but also include demands for money growing out of the trade of merchnndise. Ib.

6. The defendant in an action upon a promissory note said, 'he supposed the note was paid by the land mortgaged as collateral, that he was willing to do what was right, that he should be willing to make some small additional payment, for the purpose of settling the business, but if the plaintiff thought proper to sue, without taking the land, he should resist the suit.' Held, that this did not take the demand out of the statute of limitations, although it was proved, that the value of the land was much less than the amount due on the note. Gardner vs. Tudor, 8 Pick. 206.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1831.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUDICATURE,

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE—GRAFTON COUNTY.

May Term, 1831.

The opinions of the Court were, as usual, at this term, pronounced by Richardson, Chief Justice. They are generally drawn by him, and, as is generally known, are by him reported.

It is not the practice in that state, as in Massachusetts, to report all the cases, which arise on matters of law and are decided by the Court. The Reporter is left at liberty to report such, and only such as may seem to him to be worthy of publication. In some of the counties, in that state, the number of points raised and cases made, during a term, are, considering the quantity and nature of the business transacted in the Court, altogether unusual and extraordinary. It is pretty much a matter of course to get the case upon some legal point or technical difficulty, which will serve to hang it up for, at least, an additional term.

A case can be hardly found so barren of all doubt and uncertainty, as to baffle the ingenuity of Counsel in attempts to create real or fancied legal difficulties.

It is quite a different thing there as well as elsewhere to get a verdict, and to get the case. There is often much less trouble about the merits of the question, than with the capricious and sometimes, absurd rules and doctrines of the law. A party is astonished to learn that, while he has the former so clearly with him, by verdict after verdict, he is likely to lose his case and suffer, as a natural consequence, an additional and often ruinous calamity from the accumulation of costs, upon the strength of some unsubstantial error or a case in point from the Books.

The community begins to doubt the wisdom of the law, and with much reason, suspect the fairness of some of its professors, and the propriety of the course of its administration.

Litigation has become burthensome and oppressive, beyond all example and all endurance. Difficulties arise and multiply as the cases progress, till a client, who supposed himself claiming a plain matter of right before a tribunal created to administer justice, between citizens, finds himself involved in a lawsuit, from which he can escape, if he escape at all, only by a sacrifice of double and sometimes, of ten times the amount in dispute. It is no unfrequent occurrence to have an action remain in Court, seven and ten years, and this under a constitution which provides that justice shall be administered 'promptly and without delay.'

It should not be understood that any blame is to be attached to the Judges. The fault lies in the system. The evil is in the organization of the Court and in the defect of the laws which they are called upon to administer. These delays and uncertainties are not only fatal to the parties, but are injurious to the members of the Profession. A reproach is thereby cast upon them and they are also made to suffer from the loss of much fair and honorable business, which would otherwise naturally pass through their hands.

In an action decided at this term, Dyer vs. Hunt and als, which was brought to recover damages for enticing away an indented apprentice, who had been bound by the overseers of the Poor in the town of Norwich, in the state of Vermont, by virtue of a provision of the Poor laws of that state, to the plf. a member of the society of Shakers in the town of Enfield, in the state of New Hampshire—the Court were of opinion that the contract being made in Vermont, with a view to its being performed in N. H., the right and obligations arising under it, and its validity were to be determined by the Laws of N. Hampshire; and as no law of N. H. was found authorising the overseers of the Poor in Vermont to bind out poor persons to the citizens of N. H., the indentures were void.

This opinion may materially affect the rights of many individuals who hold apprentices under similiar contracts made in the neighboring states. It has been long the practice to bind poor children from the poor houses of this state to the citizens of New Hampshire, Vermont and other New England States. We are not aware that the question of the validity of such contracts has ever before arisen.

In the action Udal vs. Metcalf, which was assumpsit for the price of tickets sold by the plaintiff, residing in Vermont, in a lottery authorised by an act of the legislature of that state, to the deft. a citizen of New Hampshire, with a view to their being sold in New Hampshire, where the sale of tickets is prohibited by law—the Court held that it could not enforce such a contract, and that the plf. was without a remedy in law.

NEW HAMPSHIRE REPORTS,

VOL. V.—PART I.

The following are the principal cases reported in part 1. of Volume V. of N. H. Reports, recently published.

An officer, having an execution in a case where bail had been given, returned that he had given notice to the bail, but omitted to make a return of non est inventus as to the principal—it was held that the officer might be permitted to amend his return, and insert a return of non est inventus in order to charge the bail.

In scire facias against bail, it is no defence that the name and place of abode of the bail were not indorsed upon the execution which issued against the principal.—Mahurin vs. Brackett.

An attachment of goods is not to be considered as ipso facto dissolved by the lapse of thirty days after the end of the term when the defendant was defaulted, although no continuance of the cause was ordered; but a court may in its discretion order the cause to be brought forward at a subsequent term, in order to save the attachment.

And in such a case, a release of the attachment is a good consideration for a promissory note. —Hackett vs. Pickering.

C. being in prison on an execution issued in favor of N. and having the liberty of the prison yard, N. wrote on the back of the prison bond a certificate that he exonerated the sureties from all liability. But the certificate was not under seal and was without consideration. Immediately afterwards C. escaped and went at large, without the prison limits,—it was held that the certificate was not sufficient evidence to show the assent of N. to the escape.—Nealey vs. Cilley.

If a mortgagee continue in the actual and peaceable possession of the mortgaged premises for a year after the condition is broken, the right of the mortgagor to redeem will be lost, although he may have resided with the mortgagee upon the land.—Gilman vs. Hidden.

L. was the owner of a lot of land in the town of G. bounded upon the original line between the towns of G. and N., and H. was the owner of a lot of land in the town of N. adjoining L.'s said lot, and bounded on the said original line; it was held that an adjudication of the court of sessions establishing the said line, in a suit between the towns, was not evidence of the true line between L. and H.

But perambulations of the said line by the selectmen of the towns were held to be evidence in a suit between L. and H. —Lawrence vs. Haynes and al.

Where there are three sureties, if one be insolvent and another pay the whole debt, the third shall contribute a moiety.

And if three persons give a note for their joint debt, each is to be considered with respect to the others as a surety with regard to two thirds, and as a principal with regard to one third, of the debt: and if one be insolvent and another pay the whole debt, the third shall contribute a moiety. —Henderson vs. McDuffee.

Where a new trial was granted by this court in a case which had been decided in the court of common pleas, and the cause again tried in the common pleas and another judgment rendered, it was held that one of the parties who was aggrieved by the last judgment might bring the cause by appeal to this court.—Robinson vs. McDuffee.

Under the statutes of Febuary 15, 1791, and of June 13, 1796, it was not necessary, in order to entitle a prisoner to the benefit of the poor debtor's oath that he should make application to the magistrates in writing, or that the magistrates should be together when they appointed a day of hearing.

A creditor could take no advantage of any informality in the certificate, which the magistrates gave in such a case to the jailor.—Keay vs. Palmer.

When a mortgagor continues in possession of the mortgaged premises, he may be considered, if there be no contract on the subject, either as a trespasser, or as a tenant at will at the election of the mortgagee.

If a tenant at will do any act, which amounts to waste, this will be a determination of the tenancy, and he, and those who assist him, may be treated as trespassers.

And even if a mortgagor who continues in possession can be considered as a disseizor, he will be liable in traspass after the mortgagee obtains possession, for any injury done by him, while in possession, to the freehold.

A mortgagor has no right to remove a building by him erected on the land.—Pettengill vs. Evans and al.

S being seized of a tract of land lying partly in lot No. 10, and partly in lot No. 9, and granted to J. S. a tract of land in which he described in the deed as lot No. 10, but as bounded on all sides by land of other persons—it was held, that the whole tract lying in both lots passed, although in the description of the granted premises it appeared there were mistakes as to the owners of the adjoining lots.

In a deed poll where there is a doubt, the construction must be against the grantor.

A general description may be enlarged or abridged by a particular description of the granted premises.—Tenny vs. Beard.

A gave B a note payable to him or order, and having made his will and constituted B executor and residuary legatee, died; B caused the will to be proved, and took upon himself the burden of executing the same, and gave bonds for the payment of the debts and legacies. He then indorsed the said note to C who brought an action against B as executor, and had judgment by default. Afterwards B and his sureties in said bond, applied by petition for a new trial. It was held, that although the note was discharged when the bond was given, yet there was no cause for granting a new trial, because by letting the judgment stand, no injustice was done to the executor himself, and the sureties and others who were strangers to the judgment could in no way be affected by it. —Tarbell vs. Samuel and al.

A refusal by an executor or administrator to account for a particular sum, supposed to have been received by him on account of the estate, is not a breach of the condition of probate bond.

A judge of probate may charge an executor or administrator with money not credited by him. And if there be anything in his hands for which he has not given credit, it must be adjusted and determined when his accounts are settled in the probate court.

In debt upon a bond, if the defendant plead performance of the condition and the plaintiff assign an insufficient breach upon which issue is joined and found for the plaintiff, judgment must be arrested.—Judge of Probate vs. Briggs.

PHILADELPHIA DISTRICT COURT.

Joseph Worral vs. Nathan Harper.

Capias case to Sept. term 1829, No. 740. C C. B B. Bail bond executed by defendant and Lancaster.

December, 1829.—Continued at March T. 1830, to wit, on the 5th of April. Wm. Lancaster, who had joined in the bail bond, entered special bail; he was received without objection by the prothonotary. 20th May, 1830, the plaintiff, without examining whether special bail was entered, brought a suit on the bail bond to June, 1830, No. 347. Joseph Worral a. v. c. vs. Nathan Harper and Wm. Lancaster. 26th June, 1830, motion by Jesse Y. Castor on behalf of the bail to stay proceedings on this bail bond suit, and rule to show cause.

Opinion delivered by Judge Hallowell, 2d April, 1831, and concurred in by Judge Coxe, Judge Barnes being absent.

Hallowell, J.—It was improper and erroneous to sue the bail bond after special bail had been entered; there was default both in the plaintiff's attorney and in the prothonotary: the plaintiff's attoney should always ascertain by actual examination, whether special bail has been entered before he directs such a suit; and if he does not, the prothonotary should search for the original action; and if special bail has been entered, should refuse to issue the process. Special bail is a legal appearance; and after it is entered, the bail bond, which is conditioned for the appearance of the principal, is, generally speaking, satisfied; the proper method, and we think the only method for the plaintiff to pursue, if he deems the bail irregular so as to affect his legal rights, is to apply to the court to expunge it.

Union Bank of N. Y. a. v. c. vs. Kraftd and another, 2 S. and R. 284. and M'Farland vs. Holmes, 5 S. and R. 50. fully establish this doctrine; in the latter case the motion on behalf of the plaintiff was to expunge or strike out the special bail, which was done, because it was entered after the plaintiff had lost the opportunity of obtaining a trial or judgment at or before the third term.

We are therefore of opinion that for this irregularity the rule must be made absolute:—the proceedings on the bail bond suit set aside with costs, to be paid by the plaintiff, who brought that suit wrongfully, and which he cannot sustain.

But the setting aside this suit and the proceedings thereon, will not determine the question finally, as between the plaintiff and the bail; it is better, therefore, at once to consider the subject as it would stand if the case were now on a motion by the plaintiff to strike off the special bail, and direct the bail bond to stand as a security for the debt and costs due in the original suit.

The entry of this special bail cannot be considered as a nullity, and although it may have been taken in contravention of the 21st rule of this court, page 16, yet it was taken by the proper legally authorized officer without objection, as if all were regular: the rule is but directory to the officers; but if violated the act is good till vacated by the court, quod fieri non debet factum valet. What are the objects of giving notice to the plaintiff or his attorney as the rule requires? One is, that he may object to the sufficiency of the bail; but here he could not with any good effect have objected to the sufficiency, for it is undoubtedly sufficient, as the plaintiff's own conduct shows: —he has subsequently taken an assignment of the bail bond from the sheriff, with the same security; indeed, it seems agreed on all hands that he is sufficient. In this respect, therefore, notice would have been of no use to him. Another object to be answered by notice is, that the plaintiff may object to the entry of special bail as too late, and may allege that the bail is fixed, but the prothonotary took the bail without requiring such notice, or apprizing him of the necessity of it. He was therefore, from the 5th of April to the 20th of May, 1830, lulled by the officer of the court into a false security. That officer should have refused to take the bail without proof of notice: if he had done so, the surety would have awakened and have seen his actual situation,—probably have taken good advice: he would then have found that that he was still in time to relieve himself; he could have gone to his principal, got him to move the court for leave to enter special bail on confessing judgment, if the debt were undisputed, as we are informed it was; or if not, to permit the case to be put on the trial list of March term, 1830, which the court, on proper representation for the relief of the bail, which is always a favorite object with them, undoubtedly would have done. That was the third term;—the plaintiff, therefore, if the debt was undisputed, would have got his judgment and execution before the expiration of six weeks from the commencement of March term, 1830; or if disputed, he would have had the same chance of trial at that same term which every plaintiff in an action to Sept., 1829, had, where special bail had been entered, with the utmost regularity. We must look to the 5th of April, 1830, as the important day, and regulate the rights of the parties as they then stood.

The result is that we cannot strike off the special bail, it must stand; and the plaintiff must carry on his action against the principal in the usual way, and cannot avail himself of the bail bond as a security.

This decision does not interfere or come into collision with the judgment of the court delivered lately in Kuhn vs. Beatty, or with any of the principles therein stated, for there no special bail was entered or offered till the fourth term, when the plaintiff had completely lost his chance of judgment or trial at the third.

Rule absolute for setting aside the proceedings on the bail bond suit, with costs to be paid by the plaintiff.

Mr Archibald Randall and Mr Dallas for the plaintiff. Mr Stroud for the bail.—Journal of Law.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Solicitor's New Complete Table of Costs in the Exchequer of Pleas. By J. Wickstead, Gent. 8vo.

An Examination of the Rules of Law, respecting the Admission of Extrinsic Evidence in Aid of the Interpretation of Wills, containing Observations on the Case of Goblet v. Beechey and Others. By J. Wigram, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

The Law of Forgery, including the Alterations effected by the late Act 1st, Wm. 4. c. 66., together with the Act, and Explanatory Notes, Forms of Indictments, and the Evidence in support of each Indictment. 12mo.

A Popular View of the Law of Real Property, with an Application of its Principles to the important measure of a General Register, showing what changes in the System, a Register is calculated to produce. By W. Hayes, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. 8vo.

The Rules and Orders of the Plea Side of the Court of Exchequer, including the new Rules, with Notes on the Practice. By F. A. Carrington, Esq., Barrister at Law. 12mo.

A Practical Treatise on the Law of Landlord and Tenant, with a full Collection of Precedents and Forms of Procedure. By William Woodfall, Esq., Barrister at Law. A New Edition, entirely remodelled and greatly enlarged. By S. B. Harrison, Esq. of the Middle Temple. In Royal 8vo.

VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS, recently received from Europe, and for sale by GRAY & BOWEN, No 141 Washington street.

Browne's Self Interpreting Bible, with notes, references, illustrations, reflections, and a memoir of the author; in one large quarto volume.

The Mirror of Parliament, edited by John Barrow, Esq. This work contains a complete account of the doings and debates in the British Parliament, during the last December session ; in eight parts, folio.

Select Views on the River Clyde, engraved by Joseph Swan, with historical and descriptive illustrations; in one quarto volume, with fortytwo splendid engravings.

Select Views of the Lakes of Scotland, from original paintings ; in two parts.

Hinton's History and Topography of the United States. This work will be completed in thirty numbers, quarto, with ninety engravings; eight numbers are already received.

History of the sufferings of the Church of Scotland, from the restoration to the revolution ; by Rev. Robert Wodrow; 4 vols. 8vo.

History and Antiquities of the Doric Race ; by C. O. Müller ; 2 vols. 8vo.

History of Scotland, from the Union; by John Struthers ; 2 vols. 8vo.

A Selection from the Papers of the Earls of Marchmont ; illustrative of events from 1685 to 1750 ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, complete in two vols. 8vo.

A System of Geography, popular and scientific ; illustrated by a complete series of maps and other engravings ; by James Bell ; 3 vols. 8vo.

McUre's History of Glasgow, with plates and illustrations ; 1 vol.

History of Modern Greece ; by James Emerson ; 2 vols. 8vo.

Rollins' Ancient History, with Life, notes and numerous maps and plates ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Thompson's Narrative of an official visit to Guatamala ; 1 vol.

Six Years' residence in the United States of America ; by Peter Neilson ; 1 vol.

Lardner's Cyclopedia ; complete set as far as published; 16 vols.

Lardner's Cabinet Library, annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 1831.

Murphy's Treatise on the art of Weaving ; with fifteen engravings ; 1 vol.

Mackenzie on the Diseases of the Eye ; 1 vol.

Spix's Travels in Brazil, with engravings ; 2 vols. 8vo.

BYRON'S WORKS—a new and beautiful edition, with a portrait, and other engravings ; in 4 vols. 16mo.

Evan's Sketch of the Denominations of the Christian World ; 1 vol.

Addison's Works ; 4 vols. ; a new edition.

Bowring's Poetry of the Magyars; 1 vol.

Constable's Miscellany ; vols. 60 to 65 inc.

Family Library.—Lives of British Painters—Lives of Physicians—Life of Bruce—Court and Camp of Buonaparte—Demonology and Witchcraft.

Foreign Tales and Traditions ; 2 vols.

The Casquet, or Literary Gem ; edited by Alexander Whitelaw ; 2 vols.

do do do (2d series) 2 vols.

The Atheneum, an original Literary Miscellany; 1vol.

The Midsummer Medley for 1830 ; by the author of Brambletye House.

Life on board a Man of War ; 1 vol.

Robertson's Parent's Guide to Baptism ; 1 vol.

Gospel Truth accurately stated and illustrated ; by Rev. John Brown ; 1 vol.

Outline of the Scripture Evidence for the Trinity; 1 vol.

The New Testament, translated by Doddridge, Campbell and Macknight ; 1 vol. 12mo.

An Essay on Chemical Analysis ; by M. Thenard ; translated by J. G. Children ; 1 vol.

Aids to Reflection ; by S. T. Coleridge ; 1 vol.

Fabliaux, or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries.

A Help to Professing Christians ; by Rev. John Barr ; 1 vol.

The Wine Drinker's Manual ; 1 vol.

The Shamrock, a collection of Irish Songs.

The National Minstrel ; a choice selection of popular songs.

Parochial Psalmody ; by J. P. Clarke.

Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History.

Pinnock's Modern Geography and History.

The Caterer ; being a selection of pieces in prose and verse ; 1 vol.

Johnson's Dictionary, complete in one imperial 8vo.

Morewood's Essay on Inebriating Liquors.

Dibdin's Library Companion ; 1 vol.

Biblia Hebraica.

Novum Testamentum Græce.

Aristophanes Comædiæ.

Sophocles Tragædiæ.

Pindari Carmina.

Æschyli Tragædiæ. May 21

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIV. for May, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College.

II. President Wayland's Sermon. The Certain Triumph of the Redeemer. A Discourse. By Francis Wayland, D. D.

III. Meaning of Αἰων. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays.

IV. Grimké's Discourses. 1. An Address on the Expediency and Duty of adopting the Bible as a Class Book. By T. S. Grimké. 2. An Oration of the Advantages to be derived from the Introduction of the Bible and of Sacred Literature, as Essential Parts of all Education. By Thomas S. Grimké.

V. Children's Books. 1. The Young Reader. By John Pierpont. 2. Peter Parley's Tales about the Sun, Moon and Stars. 3. Tales of Travels, West of the Mississippi. By Solomon Bell. 4. Cousin Elizabeth. By the Author of 'A Visit to the Sea Side.' 5. The Children's Robinson Crusoe. By a Lady. 6. The Little Girl's Own Book. By Mrs Child.

VI. History of English Baptists. Sermons on Various Important Public Occasions. By Robert Hall, A. M. 3. Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Rev. Andrew Fuller. By J. W. Morris. Edited by Rufus Babcock, Jr. 4. Asiatic Journal for British India.

VII. Sullivan's Political Class Book. The Political Class Book, By William Sullivan. Counsellor at Law. With an Appendix, by George B. Emerson.

VIII. Dr Waterhouse's Essay on Junius. An Essay on Junius and his Letters ; embracing a Sketch of the life and character of Wm. Pitt, &c.; with reflections relating to the Affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785. By Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

IX. The Way of Truth and Union.

JUST published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Language.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours ; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise ; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII. Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books ; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide ; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals ; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars.

April 9.

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

SPLENDID BIBLE. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1831. NO. XLIV.

MERCANTILE LAW.

THE CONTRACT OF SALE.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

To the extensive commerce the system of credit is of course essential; and one of the chief ends, therefore, of mercantile jurisprudence is the protection of creditors against the fraud or improvidence of debtors. Whether in this country the favor bestowed by the law upon the creditor has not been carried to an extreme, hurtful to the true interests of commerce, this is not perhaps the place to inquire; though we cannot help hinting, that in a community where capital is abundant and living expensive, there need no adscititious stimulants to speculating and adventurous trading. Credit, however, there must be; and it is, when taken in its largest sense, of two kinds: first, when a future day is fixed for payment, either by agreement or by usage, through the medium generally of bills of exchange, made payable at that date—and secondly, when the goods are sent upon the trust of immediate or early payment. Now we have seen, that in the former of these cases (supposing a specific appropriation to have been made), the absolute ownership vests immediately in the buyer—that in the case where no day has been fixed, although the seller may, if he choose, retain the possession as a pledge for the payment of the price, the privilege is lost by delivery—that in all cases, and under all circumstances, the entire right of property (including in that term, not merely the naked ownership, but the right of immediate possessson) is by delivery, transferred to the purchaser—and, lastly, that goods are, for this purpose, delivered, so soon as the seller lets them go out of his own hands on their way to the hands of the buyer. But it is obvious, that in the transmission of commodities between distant places, circumstances may occur during the interval of conveyance materially affecting the interests of the seller. It happens, for instance, very frequently, that after the consignment, and before the goods can possibly have reached their destination, intelligence is received of the insolvency of the buyer; and in that case what is the seller to do? What he will do is evident enough—he will endeavor, by every means in his power, to get them back again;—and however some may doubt as to the expediency of permitting a resumption under any circumstances, still, as it is impossible not to feel that it would be a hard case on the seller, if goods not paid for should come into the hands of a bankrupt, we cannot wonder that the attempt to get them back should have received the sanction of the law. Accordingly we find that in many of the continental states this equitable claim of the seller has been so entirely recognised, that, founding themselves upon the rule of the civil law, * they have allowed an unpaid vendor to take back his goods even out of the possession of the insolvent buyer, when found distinct from the general stock, and capable of specific identification. In other states the transaction has been treated as a fraud upon the seller, and disposed of accordingly. Thus, for example, the law of Scotland, as it formerly stood, decreed restitution of all goods not paid for, which had been purchased within three days of the period of insolvency, unless the buyer, or the creditors who had succeeded to his rights, could rebut the general presumption of fraud by showing that they were bought with a bonâ fide intention of paying for them. * Neither of these rules, however, is free from objection. That which founds itself upon fraud is obviously too vague and indefinite to be made immediately available in practice, and the other is obnoxious to the still more serious charge of affording a bankrupt debtor the means of favoring such of his creditors as he may think fit to prefer—and these probably, as regards the interests of the community, the least entitled to such preference—to the prejudice or even exclusion of the rest. The law of England, while it has recognised the justice of the principle, has judiciously, or rather perhaps fortunately, avoided both these faults in the application. The rule which it has finally adopted may be stated briefly as follows: The unpaid seller may, on the insolvency of the buyer, stop or reclaim the goods whilst on their passage; but if, before the assertion of the claim, they have come, either actually or constructively, into the possession of the buyer, the privilege is gone, and the seller must thenceforth be content to rank among the general creditors of the insolvent—a rule, which has so far received the warrant of experience, that (to say nothing of its introduction into the mercantile law of Scotland, where, indeed, it seems to have been forced upon the courts by a decision of the house of Lords, or rather of Lord Chancellor Thurlow who presided there) it was, after a careful investigation of the comparative merits of the two systems, adopted by the framers of the Code Napoleon in deliberate preference of the civil law doctrine of restitution, which had up to that time prevailed in France.† It is singular, therefore, that a doctrine so confessedly reasonable, should have been the result in some degree of accidental circumstances. Yet so, as we have before intimated, undoubtedly it was; and as the history of its origin and gradual development will not only be interesting in itself, but will, at the same time, materially illustrate the principles on which the system rests, the time which is devoted to a short review of both, will not, perhaps, be mis-spent.

The first instance which is found reported in the books, occurred in the year 1690, and was as follows: * Altenory and Altoery, merchants at Leghorn, had consigned silks to the Bonnells, merchants in London. Before the ship, which had the goods on board, left her port of sailing, information was received of the failure of the London house, whereupon the consignment was altered, and the good having come under this new direction to the hands of one Vandeput, the assignees of the Bonnells filed their bill in chancery against him for a discovery and relief. The lords commissioners (for the great seal was at the time in commission) ordered the plaintiffs to bring an action of trover for the purpose of trying, 'whether the first consignment, notwithstanding the altering thereof, and the new consignment made before the ship sailed, vested the property of the silks in the Bonnells.' Upon the trial a verdict was found for the plaintiffs; and the cause having come on for a second hearing in equity, the court finally adjudged, that 'the Bonnells having paid no money for the goods, if the Italians could by any means get them again into their hands, or prevent their coming into the hands of the bankrupts, it was but lawful for them so to do, and very allowable in equity.'

The principle thus laid down had been acted upon in two subsequent cases,† when, about forty years after its introduction, it received the full and unqualified approbation of Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, who, in pronouncing judgment on a case where the same point arose, though under circumstances more involved, is stated to have used the following strong and often-quoted expression: 'If the defendant [the unpaid vendor] got the goods back again by any means, provided he did not steal them, I would not blame him.' ‡ From this time the right of revendication may be considered as naturalized into the jurisprudence of England. It happened, however, that in none of the cases calling for the interposition of the courts had the goods reached their destination, when the privilege of resumption was exercised. It became unnecessary therefore to decide what would have been the effect, if, when reclaimed by the seller, they had been already reduced into the actual possession of the buyer; and as it is the principle of our law to proceed upon precedent, it thus came to pass, that the right of restitution in case of insolvency was narrowed into that of stoppage in transitu.

Hitherto the doctrine had been confined to courts of equity; and the reason of this is manifest, if in the instance first cited it was rightly decided, upon the trial at common law, that the original vendee had, notwithstanding his insol-

---

* Quod vendidi non aliter fit accipientis quam si aut pretium nobis solutum sit, aut satis eo nomine datum, vel etiam fidem habuerimus emptori sine ulla satisfactione. Dig. 18. 1. 19.

'The seller, who has sold anything, and still lies out of the money which he was to have for it, if he finds the thing that he sold in the hands of the buyer, may seize on it and he is not obliged to share it with the other creditors of the buyer. Domat. book 4. tit. 5. s. 2. art. 3. And it seems that by the custom of some of the provinces of France if the article had been sold on the terms of prompt payment, the seller could have claimed it even from a third person who had purchased it bona fide from the buyer, the property not being considered as having passed from the orignal vendor. Id. book 3. tit. 1. s. 5. art. 4.

* See Bell's Commentaries, vol. i. 207. et seq.

† See the 'Discours des Orateurs du Gouvernment,' prefixed to the code, justifying this alteration in the law. It is important to know that the old doctrine of revendication had been almost universally reprobated by the merchants, upon experience of its injurious operation. Had Mr Eden been aware of this fact, he would hardly perhaps have ventured to recommend the substitution of it in this country for our own doctrine of stoppage in transitu. See his Treatise on Bankruptcy, p. 295.

* Wiseman v. Vandeput, 2 Vern. 203.

† Exp. Clare, Cooke's Bankrupt Law, 419. Exp. Frank. cited in Snee v. Prescot.

‡ Snee v. Prescot, 1 Atk. 245.

vency and the consequent alteration of the consignment, acquired an indefeasible right of possession by the mere placing of the goods on board. But this position was denied by Lord Hardwicke, who, in the somewhat diffuse and ill-reported judgment,* to which we have before adverted, is represented as saying, 'I admit, that if goods are delivered to a carrier or hoyman, the consignee can only [alone can] bring the action, which shows the property to be in him; and it is the same where goods are delivered to the master of a vessel. But suppose such goods are actually delivered to a carrier to be delivered to A, and while the carrier is upon the road, and before actual delivery to A, by the carrier, the consignor hears that A, his consignee, is likely to become bankrupt, or is actually one, and countermand the delivery, and gets them back into his own possession again, I am of opinion that no action of trover would lie for the assignees of A, because the goods, while they were in transitu, might be so countermanded.' † The claim thus put in for the jurisdiction of the common law over the doctrine of stoppage in transitu was afterwards strenuously enforced by Lord Mansfield, before whom, on the rapid extension of British commerce, which took place in his day, the question frequently arose on trials at Guildhall. That great judge, who has been styled, not without reason, the founder of our mercantile code, affected indeed to consider it as a branch of the general proprietory lien of the unpaid vendor, maintaining, that although delivery to a carrier, or on board a ship, was constructive delivery to the vendee, so as cast the risk upon him, yet nothing short of actual delivery could defeat the seller's right over the goods as a pledge for the payment of the price.‡ Lord Loughborough also, seems to have assumed for the foundation of his judgment in the celebrated case of Lickbarrow v. Mason, to which we shall have occasion hereafter to advert, that the privilege of stoppage in transitu was a strictly legal, and not a mere equitable right. § Yet notwithstanding the deference due to names so illustrious, it cannot be questioned, that the doctrine was unknown to the ancient common law—possibly because the case had never occurred—nay, further, that it is even inconsistent with its principles of the absolute transfer of property by sale and delivery; and that it must consequently be considered as a graft from the courts of equity, to which it owes its undoubted origin.

Accordingly, Mr Justice Buller, than whom none had more thoroughly investigated the subject, spoke of it thus: 'The right of the vendor to seize goods in transitu, is founded only on equitable principles. It is a right with which he is indulged on principles of justice, originally established in courts of equity, and since adopted in courts of law.'* And Lord Kenyon states it to be 'a kind of equitable lien adopted by the law for the purposes of substantial justice.'† Nevertheless, the successors of Lord Mansfield, though they rejected his reasoning, availed themselves of his authority, and acknowledged the doctrine of stoppage in transitu as part of the law-merchant, not upon ancient title, but because it was just in principle, and had been found expedient in practice.‡ Nor is the question as to the origin of the doctrine to be considered as one of mere controversy. That it has important practical results will be at once apparent from the following example. If this right were, as was insisted by Lord Mansfield, a part of the general proprietory lien of the seller, it would follow that he might exercise it at any moment before the actual arrival of the goods, at his mere caprice, and without reference to the circumstances of the buyer. He might thus, on a sudden rise of the markets, countermand the delivery, disappoint the consignee whom he had apprised of the shipment, and at whose risk the goods had been from the time when they were placed on board, and turn the speculation to a more profitable account, by selling them at an advanced price to another.§ It is true that by so doing he would render himself liable to an action at the suit of the buyer, for not delivering according to his contract, and that the difference in the market price would be taken into account in measuring the damages to be recovered. Still, even in the most favorable view, the right to the goods would be turned into a mere remedy against the person,—a difference, the importance of which will be at once felt by all who are conversant with trade. Lord Mansfield himself saw this consequence of his principle, and did not shrink from avowing it. 'The goods,' he said, 'are in the hands of the carrier to be conveyed; the owner may get them back again.' §

On the other hand, if the rule is to be taken as we contend it must be, not as resting on any legal right of property, but as a mere equitable indulgence to the unpaid seller, its application will then be confined to the case of insolvency of the vendee, in which case only the courts of equity either did, or consistently with the principles which govern them could, afford the extraordinary relief. Accordingly we find that, by the universal understanding of the profession, as well as the practice of mercantile men, the right of stoppage in our law is considered as depending on the fact of the vendee's insolvency. It is a consequence which flows, we repeat, necessarily from its equitable origin; but if the support of authority were wanted, what better could be given than the following extract from a judgment of Lord Stowell: 'If the person to whom the goods are consigned is not insolvent—if from misinformation, or from excess of caution, the vendee has exercised this privilege prematurely—he has assumed a right that did not belong to him, and the consignee will be entitled to the delivery of the goods, with an indemnification for the expenses that may have been incurred. In the law of England, as far as I can recollect it, and in all books into which I have looked, it is not an unlimited power that is vested in the consignor to vary the consignment at his pleasure, in all cases whatever. It is a privilege allowed to the seller for the particular purpose of protecting him against the insolvency of the consignee.' 'Certainly,' he adds, 'it is not necessary that the person should be actually insolvent at the time. If the insolvency happens before the arrival, it would be sufficient, I conceive, to justify what has been done, and to entitle the shipper to the benefit of his own provisional caution. But if the person is not insolvent, the ground is not laid on which such a privilege is founded.'*

Lord Mansfield, as we have said, maintained that nothing short of actual delivery, was sufficient to devest the seller of his proprietory privilege; and that actual delivery might be distinguished from constructive by a broad and palpable line, he made the criterion of the former to be the corporeal touch of the vendee. On this principle many cases were decided, of which it may be sufficient to select one. A bale of cloth wat forwarded by order to an innkeeper for delivery to the vendee, who, on information of its arrival, directed that in should be sent to a neighboring quay for shipment. This was accordingly done; but arriving too late, it was sent back to the innkeeper, and again placed in his warehouse. Some days afterwards a clerk of the vendee being asked by the innkeeper what was to be done with the bale, desired him to keep it in his custody until another ship, which was presently to sail, should be ready to receive it. In the meantime, but after this direction, the vendee became bankrupt; and the innkeeper having, at the request of the vendors, refused to deliver the bale to the assignees, was sued by them in an action of trover. Lord Mansfield decided against the plaintiffs, expressing himself as clearly of opinion, that, to defeat the right of stoppage, there must be an absolute and actual possession by the vendee.†

The courts, however, in later times, considering that goods may be in the possession of the vendee for every available purpose, even though no brought within his personal keeping, have rejected this rigid interpretation of actual delivery, and

---

* See the remark of Mr Justice Buller on this case in the elaborate judgment delivered by him before the House of Lords, in the case of Lickbarrow v. Mason, reported 6 East, 20. (n.)

† Snee v. Prescot, ubi ante.

‡ Assignees of Burghall v. Howard, 1 H. Bl. 365. n. 'Lord Mansfield said, that he had known it several times in chancery, that where the consignee becomes a bankrupt, and no part of the price had been paid, it was lawful for the consignor to seize the goods before they came to the hands of the consignee or his assignees; and that this was ruled, not upon principles of equity only, but the laws of property.' See also the case of Savignac v. Cuff, tried in 1778, and cited 2 T. R. 66., and Stokes v. La Riviere, as cited by Lawrence, J., 3 East, 397. 'No point,' Lord Mansfield said in this latter case, 'is more clear than that if the goods are sold, and the price not paid, the seller may stop them in transitu, I mean in every sort of passage into the hands of the buyer. There have been a hundred cases of this sort—ships in harbor, carriers' bills have been stopped—in short, when the goods are in transitu, the seller has that proprietory lien. The goods are in the hands of the defendants [the carriers] to be conveyed: the owner may get them back again.'

§ 2 H. Bl. 362. et seq.

* 3 T. R. 469; and see 6 East, 27. (n)

† 7 T. R. 445.

‡ See the excellent observations of Mr Justice Buller in Tooke v. Hollingworth, 5 T. R. 215: 'I have always,' he says, 'thought it highly injurious to the public that different rules should prevail in the different courts on the same mercantile case.'—'The mercantile law of this country is founded no principles of equity; and when once a rule is established in that court, as a rule of property, it ought to be established as a rule of law.'

§ 'The mercantile law I take to be clear and distinct, that the seller has not a right to vary the consignment, except in the peculiar case in which he is reinstated by the privileges of the vendeur primitif. The mischief and inconvenience that would ensue on a contrary supposition are extreme. The goods might be put on board, and might lie at the risk of the consignee for two or three months; and if the consignor could come and resume them at pleasure, it would place the consignee in a situation of great disadvantage, that he should be exposed to the risk during such a length of time, for an object which might be eventually defeated at any moment by the capricious or interested change of intention in the breast of the consignor. It would be to expose the consignee altogether to the mercy of the seller.' Per Lord Stowell (then Sir W. Scott), 6 Rob. Adm. Rep. 321.

§ In Stokes v. La Riviere, ubi ante.

* The Constantia, 6 Rob. Adm. Rep. 321. Abbott, on Sh. 371. The remainder of this elaborate judgment will well repay a perusal.

† Hunter v. Beale, cited in Ellis v. Hunt, 3 T. R. 465.

have admitted constructive possession as determining the transit of the goods, and, consequently, the right of stoppage. * And thus the general doctrine, as it now stands, matured by the experience of a century, will be found to be in substance what was stated at the outset—viz. that the unpaid seller has a right, on the insolvency of the buyer, to stop or reclaim the goods while on their passage; but that the privilege is gone so soon as they have come actually or constructively into the possession of the vendee. It remains then that we proceed to amplify and illustrate the several parts of this rule in the order in which they are here presented.

To be continued.

* We are by no means sure that this change was an improvement. On the one hand it is true that a person, without having goods in his actual possession, may, by the aid of documents and other means, deal with them and obtain credit upon them as effectually as if they were visibly exposed in his warehouse. But on the other hand, this doctrine of constructive possession has introduced many nice and subtle distinctions, which ought above all things to be avoided in a rule of daily and almost hourly application. Broad lines, even though coarse and unphilosophical, are undoubtedly best for practical guidance.

DIGEST OF ENGLISH CASES.

UNSOUNDNESS OF MIND.

Upon the trial of an ejectment against parties in possession under a deed, the question was, whether the deed was void on account of unsoundness of mind in the grantor. The judge told the jury, that 'they were to decide, whether the party was of unsound mind or not: that to constitute such unsoundness as should avoid a deed at law, the party executing must be incapable of understanding and acting in the ordinary affairs of life: that it was not necessary he should be without any glimmering of reason; and as one test of such incapacity, they were at liberty to consider whether he was capable of understanding what he did by executing the deed in question, when its general purport was fully explained to him.' The judge having refused to tell the jury, that in order to avoid the deed at law, the unsoundness of mind must amount to idiocy, according to the strict legal definition of an idiot, a bill of exceptions was tendered and sealed. Held, that this direction was right; and that the objection that the direction was too vague, indefinite, or general, could not then be taken. Such an objection should have been made at the trial and put on the record. —Hall, plaintiff, and Mannin, defendant, (in error,) 3 Bligh. 1.

VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE.

A., having purchased a freehold house, and paid part of the purchase-money, died intestate, leaving two daughters, his co-heiresses. The remainder of the purchase-money was afterwards paid by B. and C., the husbands of the daughters and the premises conveyed to the latter as tenants in common. By indenture in 1806, reciting the conveyance to the daughters, and that no part of the purchase-money there represented as paid by B. and C., and their wives was in fact paid by B. or his wife, but that the whole was the proper money of C. and his wife; and also reciting an assignment of the same date, of certain leaseholds to the separate use of the wife of B., as her share of the intestate's property; a fine was covenanted to be levied, to the use of C. in fee. The fine was not levied, but C. continued in possession until his death in 1825. In 1823, a deed was executed, and a fine levied, by which the estate was settled upon C. for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to their children. A bill to set aside the last settlement as voluntary, and void as against the creditors of C., was dismissed. The fine levied was held to operate to the uses of the last deed, and not to that of 1806; the fact of its having been levied to a different conusee, and in a different term, from the conusee and term mentioned in the latter deed, was sufficient in itself to let in evidence of a new agreement, even if the second agreement were not of so high a character as the first. But the second being, like the first, under seal, would rescind the first, and lead the uses of the fine, even if there had been no variance between the covenant in the first deed and the fine.—Houghton vs. Tate, 3 Y. & J. 486.

WILL.

A testator bequeathed certain stock to A. for life, and after her decease, to the grandchildren of the testator, share and share alike, if they were living at the time of A's decease; but they were not to receive any part till they arrived at the age of twentyone; and if any one, or all of them, should die under that age, the share of those so dying, he bequeathed to B. and C., share and share alike. Held, that the grandchildren took vested interests at twentyone, and on the death of one of them under that age, in the lifetime of A., his share did not lapse, but went to B. and C. A. died in 1787, and the defendant (her executor) having received the dividends of the share in dispute until 1804, when the fund was paid into court, without having invested any part of them, was decreed to pay interest up to the time.—Goodchild vs. Fenton, 3 Y. & J. 481.

MORTGAGE.

We take pleasure in placing before our readers the able opinion of Chief Justice Gibson, in the case of The Corporation v. Wallace, which is interesting, not only on account of its general importance, but as pronouncing the law on a question about which great diversity of opinion, if not a decided inclination the other way, had prevailed in this part of the state, not only in the profession, but among the community. On the 21st of March, the Chief Justice and Judge Huston delivered the opinion of the court on the main point, from which Judge Ross dissented; and Judge Huston the opinion of all the judges but the Chief Justice, on the residue of the case. We have omitted to publish that part of the opinion of the chief Justice which relates exclusively to the particular cause.—Jour. of Law.

CORPORATION V. WALLACE.

Opinion of Chief Justice Gibson.

No prudent judge will disregard an opinion of the bar. During an experience of fifteen years in this court, I have seldom found one of its decisions received with disapprobation at the bar, which did not contain something which called for revision. But professional opinion, though valuable as a test of judicial decision, is not infallible. The principle recognised in Willard v. Norris, was viewed in a particular part of the state, as a portentous novelty: yet a little consideration would have shown it to be a familiar part of the jurisprudence of every civilized people, whether ancient or modern. Of this, as regards the civil law, which with local modifications, is the code of continental Europe, there is not a doubt. 'The principal effect,' says Ferriere 'of an adjudication by decree, (judicial sale) is a transfer of all the rights of property to the highest bidder, so that he cannot be disturbed by lien creditors or mortgagees, who have not made resistance to the decree; nor after sale and confirmation, by any claimant of title to any part of the estate levied, because the decree extinguishes (purge) all rights of property, mortgages, incumbrances, quit rents, (charges reelles et foncieres) in default of opposition (Dict de droit verbo Saisie reelle.') In the language of the law, says Denisart, who says the same thing, 'the word opposition signifies an act by which the execution of a judgment by default is resisted, having for its object the prevention of a sale, till the interests of the opposing party are secured.' (Collect. de jurisp verbo opposition.) 'The resistance being in substance the defence of a terre tenant to a scire facias, is to be of course before the decree of confirmation. The sale is strictly judicial, being pursuant to an adjudication, and the proceeds distributed by the court among the creditors according to the priority of their liens or classes. (Dict de droit verbo ordre.) Thus we have distinctly announced to us a principle of the civil law, by which not only are liens extinguished, but even an estate paramount to the lien of the seizing creditor is divested. Such also is the rule of the maritime law, which distributes among lien creditors the proceeds of a ship sold by order of the Court of Admiralty on a younger lien; an instance of which is found in the case of the Madonna, (6 Robinson, 207.) I certainly do not pretend that the practice of the civil law is to have the force of precedent in the courts here: but in a case like the present, it seems fair to say that it goes far to efface the impression of juridical novelty. At the common law there is no judicial sale of lands, and of course we have no English authorities directly in point. In chancery the practice is to pay off incumbrances, out of the purchase money, which appear on the master's report, and no other is paid, only because as it is said there is nothing to show the court that there is such an incumbrance. (Vide —— a Stretton, 1 Ves. Jr. 266.) But this exception helps to establish the rule, and demonstrates not only the ability of the court to extinguish incumbrances, but its readiness to do so when judicially informed of their existence. When, however, an incumbrance cannot, for any cause whatever, be satisfied out of the purchase money, it of course remains there, as it does here, a charge on the land. But in chancery the process of sale is such, as to admit of exceptions, that have no place in a sale on execution which requires prompt payment by the purchaser, and deprives him of an opportunity to see to the application of the purchase money, and by reason of which the rule is applicable in all its force, to judicial sales of chattels at the common law. As to these, liens created by the act of the parties, require transmutation of the possession, and as goods taken in execution must be actually seized, the reversionary interest of the owner (so to speak) cannot be levied, and for this reason perhaps it is that goods pawned cannot be taken in execution before they are redeemed. But conflicting liens are created by delivering conflicting executions to the sheriff; and it is perfectly settled that a sale on a younger execution divests the lien of the older one, which takes, not the goods in the hands of the purchaser, but their price in the hands of the sheriff. Would it not then have been strange, if our progenitors had not applied the rule of the common law to land when they subjected it to sale on a common law execution AS A CHATTEL. They carried the consequences of the principle further than is demanded here, and held that a judicial sale divests, without compensation out of the purchase money, the wife's inchoate ESTATE of dower—an interest in the land certainly as sacred as that of a mortgagee. At the end of a century, in which the most curious legal antiquarian might be challenged to produce an instance of a sale on an older judgment, after there had been a sale on a younger one, the practice of satisfying the older judgments out of the purchase money received the sanction of a direct judicial recognition; and as far as I have ever heard, with the most perfect acquiescence of the legislature, the bar, and the people. The rule, therefore, having been incontestably established, as regards incumbrances generally, it will require decisive arguments to prove a mortgage to be an exception.

This has been attempted on two grounds: the first, that the mortgagee, is not an incumbrance, but THE OWNER OF AN ESTATE IN THE LAND, has been abandoned by one of the eminent counsel, who have argued for the plaintiff. He has thought proper to occupy the second ground, that the lien of a mortgage is CREATED EXPRESSLY BY THE ACT OF THE PARTIES, while the lien of a judgment is but incidental. Of these in their order.

In form a mortgage is certainly a conveyance; but it is unquestionably treated at law here, in the way it is treated in equity elsewhere, as a bare incumbrance, and the accessory of a debt; as between the parties it is a conveyance, so FAR AS IS NECESSARY TO ENFORCE IT AS A SECURITY. As regards third persons, the mortgagor is the owner, even of the legal estate. This distinction, which, if attended to, will be found to reconcile the apparently jarring dicta of the judges, is as firmly established by the practice and decisions of the courts in Pennsylvania, as any other in the law. If the mortgagee had the title for any other purpose than to afford him a remedy, it would not be easy to account for the absence of all the incidents of his supposed ownership: yet his estate, if such it be, certainly cannot be set up as outstanding to bar an ejectment by the mortgagor, or an action of trespass, or a proceeding to obtain compensation for a privilege under a statutory license; nor is it subject to taxation, or lien by judgment, or sale on execution, or courtesy, or dower. It does not break the descent of the estate, or require a reconveyance to revest the title, or prevent it from vesting in a purchaser, or affect the validity of a second mortgage. In answer to the last remark it has been said, that a second mortgage is always of the equity of redemption, which I admit may be the subject of hypothecation. But that will be said of a third mortgage after the equity of redemption also has been conveyed? Contrary to professional sentiment here, it would be simply void, unless there be equity of redemption the springing from equity of redemption in an infinite series, like certain mathematical quantities, which, though perpetually vanishing, are perpetually in view. Such a mortgage would be incapable of confirmation, even by payment of the preceding ones, unless the vesting of the estate in the last mortgagee were supposed to have awaited that event: a process not at all in unison with our notions of conveyancing. But this qualification of the mortgagee's legal estate, seems to be recognised, in some degree, even in England. 'A mortgagor in possession,' says Mr Powel, 'gains a settlement, because the mortgagee, notwithstanding the form, has but a chattel, the mortgage being only a pledge to him for security of his money; and the original ownership of the land still residing in the mortgagor, subject only to the legal title of the mortgagee, so far as such title is requisite to the end of his security.' (Law of Mortgages, 221.) That the legal effect of the instrument should have been modified by time and circumstances, will not appear incredible to those who are familiar with the change produced by usage in the legal effect of a policy of insurance, which has been fixed, not by the letter, but the course of trade, which with frequent discussion, repeated decisions, and length of time, has reduced the meaning of a very incoherent instrument, to a reasonable degree of certainty.—Marsh on Ins. 304. Again, by the Stat. 7 and 8. W. 3. C. 25. a mortgagor in possession is treated as a freeholder so far as to entitle him to vote for members of parliament. This being a matter of arbitrary enactment, may be said to prove nothing: it discloses, however, the dawn of a sentiment which has been carried much farther by the courts. Even in the state of New York, where the distinction between equity and law is as scrupulously observed as in any part of the world, it has been explicitly declared in Hitchcock v. Harrington,—6 Johns. 290,—to be the settled doctrine of their courts of LAW, that the mortgagor is seized as to all persons but the mortgagee; and the principle thus broadly announced has been carried out in subsequent cases. 'Not only the original severity of the common law,' says the distinguished commentator on American law, 'treating the mortgagor's interest as resting on the exact performance of a condition, and holding the forfeiture or breach of the condition to be absolute by non-payment and tender at the day, is entirely relaxed; but the narrow and precarious character of the mortgagor at law is changed under the more enlarged jurisdiction of the courts of equity. THEIR INFLUENCE HAS REACHED THE COURTS OF LAW, and the case of mortgages is one of the most splendid instances in the history of our jurisprudence, of the triumph of equitable principles over technical rules, and of the homage which those principles have received in THEIR ADOPTION IN THE COURTS OF LAW.'—4 Kent, 151-2. If such, then, be the progress of equitable principles, in courts purely of common law jurisdiction, what might we not expect it to be in courts which are a forum for the joint administration of law and equity. The principle that the mortgagor is seized as to every one but the mortgagee was asserted by this court in the Schuylkill Navigation Company v. Thoburn,—7 Sergt. and R. 411,—and in Rickert v. Madeira, —1 Rawle, 321,—it was applied to the interest of a mortgagee, which was held to be exempt from execution because he had not an estate in the land. In Scott v. Croasdale—1 Yates, 75,—it was determined that dower is barred by a sale on a mortgage executed by the husband without the concurrence of his wife; from which it is clear, that the mortgage was not viewed as the conveyance of an estate (for the estate of the wife passes only by the joint act of herself and her husband) but as a legal incumbrance; like a judgment on which dower may be divested on the principle that the land is sold as a chattel. These cases, with Wentz v. Dehaven,—1 Serg. and R. 312. and M'Call v. Lenox,—9 Serg. and R. 302—in which a mortgage was in all essential respects put on a footing with a judgment, very satisfactorily disclose the judicial sentiment of Pennsylvania; to which may be added Blancharp v. Colburn, —16 Mass. 346—ass howing a similar sentiment in Massachusetts. It is supposed, however, that Simpson's lessee v. Ammons,—1 Binney, 175—in which it was held on the authority of York v. Stone,—1 Salk, 158, that a mortgage by a joint tenant is an act of severance, looks the other way, inasmuch as it is thought to be incapable of producing that effect without operating as a conveyance.

To be continued.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

MARRIAGE.

1. An agreement to marry made between a man and a woman per verba de præsenti, followed by uninterrupted cohabitation for several years, though not solemnized according to the laws of the place where the contract is made, will be deemed a valid marriage. In the case in question the cohabitation had continued about eighteen years. Newburg vs. Brunswick, 2 Vermont Cases, 151.

2. A justice of the peace may solemnize a marriage out of the county for which he is commissioned as a justice. Pearson vs. Hovey, 6 Halst. 12.

MORTGAGE.

1. If several parcels of real estate are mortgaged for the same debt, and a third person becomes interested in one of them, he may call on the mortgagee to have the debt apportioned between the parcel in which he is interested, and the residue of the mortgaged premises, or for an assignment of the mortgage on payment of the whole sum due thereon. Chittenden vs. Barney, 1 Vermont Cases, 28.

2. Where land is mortgaged a person who by taking possession of it disseises the mortgager, disseises also the mortgagee, and so long as the disseisor is in the possession, the deed of the mortgagee will not pass his, the mortgagee's, interest in the land. Poignard vs. Smith, 8 Pick. 272.

3. Where a person, without title, took the possession of the land which was under mortgage, and built on parts of it a carpenter's shop and a blacksmith's shop, and the tenants of the carpenter's shop occasionally used parts of the lot adjacent to their shops, to spread their boards on, and the tenants of the blacksmith's shop used other parts of the lot to run carriages on, and put tires on wheels, it was held, that this was a disseisin of the mortgagee only for the part of the land covered by the shops. Ib.

PARTNERSHIP.

1. The law allowing the creditors of a firm a preference to the creditors of each partner, in attaching the property of the firm, has never been adopted in Vermont. Root vs. Shepardson, 2 Vermont Cases, 120.

2. In Vermont the property of partners is attached as if they were tenants in common. Ib.

3. Though the plaintiff is to receive from the defendant by way of rent, a portion of the profits of a farm and tavern, such agreement does not constitute them partners as between themselves, so as to disable the plaintiff from suing at law. Perrine vs. Hankinson, 6 Halst. 181.

4. A bill drawn upon a partnership, but not accepted until after dissolution of the partnership publicly announced, binds only the partner who accepts it, and not the other partners, who have not consented thereto. Tombeckbee Bank vs. Dumell, 5 Mason, 56.

PLEADING.

1. Upon a a count for money had and received, by S. L. administrator, and S. B. administratix of W. B. deceased, a judgment cannot be rendered against the said S. L. and S. B. in their representative capacity. Sibbit vs. Lloyd, 6 Halst. 163.

2. Neither could judgment be rendered against them individually upon such a count. Ib.

3. Such a count in a declaration is bad on a general demurrer. Ib.

4. So also is a count for money laid out and expended to and for the use of the said S. L. as administrator, and S. B. as administratix of W. B. deceased. Ib.

5. The attempt and failure to prove the special agreement declared on, do not always prohibit a recurrence to the count for use and occupation. Perrine vs. Hankinson, 6 Halst. 181.

6. Repugnancy between a protestation and an averment in a replication, is not a ground of demurrer. Hapgood vs. Houghton, 7 Pick. 451.

SETTLEMENT.

A feme sole, about to be married, conveys real and personal estate to her father, his heirs and assigns, to be held in trust by him, and by any other trustee to be appointed by the Judge of Probate for her separate use, without being liable to the debts or control of any husband she may have during the trust: the income to be paid her during her life, and the residue and remainder to be conveyed to such child or children, his or their heirs and assigns, as she shall leave. She marries, and her husband dying, she takes a second husband, by whom she has issue living. Her father dies leaving several children. The Judge of Probate refuses to appoint a new trustee. Upon a bill in equity by the husband and wife to set aside the settlement, it was held, that the trust estate did not merge in the legal, the equitable estate being only for her life, and she having the legal estate in a portion only of the property as tenant in common with the other children of the trustee: and it was decreed that a new trustee should be appointed. Hildreth vs. Eliot, 8 Pick. 293.

REPLEVIN.

1. The use of the writ of replevin, and the relief afforded by it, are not limited to the taking of goods and chattels by way of distress. Where goods or chattels are so taken as to entitle the owner or possessor to an action of trespass, an action of replevin may be maintained. Bruen vs. Ogden, 9 Halst. 370.

2. If a marshal of the United States by virtue of a fieri facias, issued out of the District Court of the United States against A, B, and C, upon a judgment in favor of the United States against them seizes upon the property of D, replevin may be maintained in a state court by D, against the marshal, though in seizing the property the marshal acted under the direction of the district attorney of the United States; and the state courts are not prohibited by the constitutions of the United States from entertaining jurisdiction of such a case. Ib.

SHIPPING.

1. If the owner of a vessel let her to another person who is to have the sole charge and control of her, and by agreement is to pay the owner one half of the net earnings, after deducting expenses of repairs, the owner cannot join in an action to recover for the freight afterwards earned by the vessel. Boardman vs. Keeler, 2 Vermont Cases, 65.

2. The owner of the ship and cargo has the uncontrolled power of breaking up or changing the voyage. Pawson vs. Donnell, 1 Gill & Johns. 1.

3. A ship-master who was also the supercargo, was directed to proceed with his ship to several ports: his compensation, in addition to monthly wages, was to be a sum certain, with the privilege of bringing home a specific quantity of merchandise from one of such ports. After a part performance of the voyage, the ship owner changed its direction, and shortened it; so that the port at which the privilege might have been exercised was not visited by the ship; before the termination of the voyage the ship-master died. Held, that the privilege was so inseparably connected with the vessel's destination to the particular port at which it was to have been exercised, that upon its ceasing to be one of the termini of the voyage, the privilege of necessity expired, and that the sum certain stipulated to be paid the captain had relation to the voyage as originally contemplated, and was therefore subject to abatement in the discretion of the jury. First, for the alteration of the voyage, if they believed that the ship-master's labor and responsibility were thereby lightened; and secondly, for that portion of his contemplated services, which were lost by his death. Ib.

4. The misconduct of a captain or supercargo which produces neither injury nor inconvenience to his employer, forms no defence to the payment of his wages. Ib.

5. The consignees selected by a ship-master or supercargo in a foreign port, according to the usual course of trade, and in good faith, are so far the agents of the owners of the ship and cargo, that upon the death of the captain or supercargo, his representatives are not responsible for the consequences of the neglect or misconduct of such consignees in the execution of their agency after his death, not imputable to instructions given in the life time of such captain or supercargo. Ib.

6. A shipment of merchandise whose exportation is prohibited, made by a supercargo for account of his principal, is at his own risk, and if seized and condemned at the place of exportation, the supercargo must bear the loss. Ib.

7. The acceptance by a ship owner of the letters and invoices sent to him by the consignees of his ship in a foreign port, is not such a ratification of the acts of those agents, as would throw a loss arising from the seizure of merchandise exported against the laws of the port of shipment by them, for his account, upon such ship owner. Ib.

8. The owner of a ship after she was laden at Baltimore, on the 14th May, 1810, agreed with the shippers of the cargo, in writing, that their goods were 'to be landed in a permitted port on the continent of Europe, (meaning that they were not to be landed at the Island of Sylt,) before the freight should be earned, but should the whole of the continent be shut, the freight, with an addition as arbitrators might determine, would be earned, should the property be landed in England, agreeably to the custom of the country.' On the 25th of April, 1810, a charter party had been entered into for the same ship, by which the owner covenanted to proceed with his ship from Baltimore, north about, for the Island of Sylt, thence to Hamburg or Bremen, if open to American ships, if not, the cargo to be landed at Sylt, if permitted and in case of refusal there thence to such permitted port in the North Sea or Baltic, as the master and supercargo might direct: and should the Baltic be closed against the admission of American vessels, then to such other port as the master and supercargo might again direct. The freight was to be paid agreeably to the bills of lading, provided, that the cargo was discharged at a port in the North Sea; but if delivered at any port in the Baltic, an advance in the freight was covenanted for; and should the Baltic be shut, a further advance in the freight to besettled by arbitration. On the 8th of May, 1810, a bill of lading was also signed for the plaintiff's goods, which stated the ship to be bound from Baltimore for Sylt, and a permitted port in the North Sea or Baltic, the goods to be delivered at the aforesaid permitted port, unto P. of Hamburg, who was not the supercargo of the ship. In an action where the plaintiff claimed under these contracts, he offered testimony to establish that certain ports in Europe, not on the North Sea or Baltic, were open to American vessels, but the court held, that looking to the historical facts and occurrences of the time, it was manifest that the voyage was undertaken, and the charter party, bill, of lading, and agreement entered into, with a view to the then political state of affairs in Europe, and should be construed with a view thereto—that the permitted port on the continent of Europe, in which the goods were by the agreement to be landed, before freight could be earned, was intended to be a permitted port in the North Sea or the Baltic; and also that all the said instruments must be construed in connexion with each other, and the general terms in the agreement of the 14th May, restricted to the North Sea and Baltic; and therefore rejected the testimony offered, as inadmissible and irrelevant. Wirgman's Adm'rs. vs. Mactier, 1 Gill & Johns. 150.

9. Whether ship owners are entitled in equity and good consience, to retain money received on account of freight, is clearly a question not to be left to the jury; but proper only to be decided by the court, under the circumstances of each case. Ib.

10. So, where an action of assumpsit brought by the owner of merchandise shipped in the defendant's vessel, to recover a sum which the defendant had received and retained for freight, it appeared that the shipment was made under the charter party, bill of lading, and agreement above referred to, and that the master was furnished with instructions from the plaintiff, as follows, 'on account of the unsettled state of affairs on the continent of Europe, I have thought proper to request my friends Messrs P. & Co. of Hamburg, in the event of the cargo of the ship being denied entry at their port, to consult with you on the further destination of the ship, and the disposal of my interest on board. In case they have no friend at the port she may proceed for, you will please take charge of it, and advise with them what is best to be done for my interest. On your arrival off Sylt, should the situation of affairs be such as to prevent you from communication with Messrs P. & Co., in that case you will have to proceed with the cargo where you judge it will be most advantageous for all concerned, and when I shall consider my part as entirely under your charge, &c.' The ship sailed on her voyage, was captured before her arrival off Sylt, taken into a port in Norway, but ultimately released. The master, after the restoration of his ship and cargo, without consulting with the consignees about the further destination of the ship, or disposition of the plaintiff's property, although he had the means of communicating with them, proceeded with his ship to England, there delivered his cargo, and received (from the agents who sold the cargo,) as freight, the sum claimed in this action. Held, he was not entitled to retain it. Ib.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1831.

NEW HAMPSHIRE REPORTS,

VOL. V.—PART I.

An insolvent debtor may give a preference to one creditor by paying his debt in full, to the exclusion of all other creditors, provided it be done with good faith.

It is not essential to the valid delivery of a deed, that the grantee be present—a delivery to a third person for his use is good, if he afterwards assent, and the thing granted shall be said to rest in him from the time of such delivery.

The liability of a grantee as a surety for the grantor, is a good consideration to support an absolute conveyance of land against a creditor of the grantor.

If a debtor convey land to his creditor in payment, and the creditor accept the same, it will operate as a payment to the extent of the value of the land, although there was no agreed price for the land.—Buffum vs. Green and al.

The statute of the 3 and 4 W. and M. chapter 14, has been adopted in this state.

But no action lies against a devisee so long as there is any remedy against the executor or administrator.

When the estate of any person deceased has been settled in the insolvent course, there is no remedy against the executor or administrator, even if the estate was not in fact insolvent, and the demand depended upon a contingency that did not happen until the estate was settled.—Judge of Probate vs. Brooks and al.

If a party deliver papers to the jury which he knows have not been read in the cause, the verdict, if in favor of such party, will be set aside, whether the papers were material or not.

But if a paper go to the jury by mistake, and they do not examine it or if it be immaterial, this will furnish no ground for setting aside the verdict.

But if a material paper be delivered to the jury by mistake the verdict must be set aside. A party cannot be permitted in such a case, to show by the testimony of the jurors that they were not influenced by the paper.—Page vs. Wheeler and al.

The privilege of clients to have their communications to counsel kept secret, extends in this state not only to communications made to professional men, but to those made to any other person employed to manage a cause as counsel.

An uncle to a party in a suit is not a proper person to take depositions for such party to be used in the suit.—Bean vs. Quimby.

When a note is signed by a surety, if the creditor, after the note is due, for a valuable consideration contracts to give day of payment to the principal without the consent of the surety, the latter is discharged.

A written contract, not under seal, may be varied by a subsequent parol agreement, and if by such agreement the time of payment be prolonged, no action lies upon the original contract till the expiration of the prolonged time of payment.—Grafton Bank vs. Woodward.

Where an administrator, who has obtained an execution in his favor as administrator for a debt due to the deceased, causes the same execution to be extended upon land, the title to the land vests in the heirs of the deceased, and cannot be sold by the administrator with a license from the judge of probate.—Foster vs. Huntington and al.

When a plaintiff recovers less than $13,33 by reason of set-off, he is not to be limited in his costs, although it appear that the matter of the set-off, might have been given in evidence as payment upon the general issue.—Burbank vs. Willoughby.

A debtor may lawfully assign all his property to pay the debt of a single crditor, or the debts of a set of creditors.

And neither a want of a schedule, or an estimate of the value of the property assigned, nor a stipulation in the deeds of assignment, for a release of the debts of those who become parties to the deed, nor a reservation of the surplus after the payment of the debts of those who assent to the assignment, are conclusive evidence of fraud.

In all grants made by individuals, a general description of the things granted is sufficient.

When a debtor assigns property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, it is not necessary that all the creditors should become parties to the deed of assignment before it is recorded.—Haven and al. vs. Richardson.

A makes a contract, not in writing, with B, to convey land to the latter. B can maintain no action upon the contract, even when he has performed it on his part.

But such a contract is not to be considered wholly void. And B can have no remedy, to recover back what he may have paid under it, until A has disabled himself, or refused to excute the contract on his part.

And if A convey the land to a third person in mortgage, with a power to sell, he is not to be considered as having disabled himself to perform the contract until his right to redeem is gone.—Lane vs. Shackford.

Where a committee appointed by this court to make partition of a mill privilege, made partition by assigning to each of the owners so much water as would run through a gate of certain dimensions, it was held that partition might be legally made in that manner, unless shown to be very injurious to the estate.—Morrill and al. vs. Morrill.

An accord and satisfaction to constitute a legal bar to an action, must be full, perfect, and complete.

Where a party agrees to accept a sum of money in satisfaction of damages he may have sustained, a tender of the sum agreed to be received is without legal effect, and cannot supply the place of an actual satisfaction.

In an action in form, ex delicto, if one of several plaintiffs accept a sum of money in satisfaction of his part of the damages, such accord and satisfaction is no answer to the action.—Clark and al. vs. Dinsmore.

In a writ of entry, a parcel of land, described in the count as an entire tract, was demanded. But only a part of the land demanded was in dispute between the parties, and that part within the tenant's inclosure; the residue being within the inclosure of the demandant. After a plea of an entry by the demandant, pending the suit in abatement of the writ, it appearing that the demandant had only entered upon the parcel of the land which was within his own inclosure; the court permitted the demandant to amend his count so as to confine his demand to the parcel within the tenant's inclosure, upon terms.—Wilson vs. Eaton.

A rule of reference before a justice of the peace, is only an agreement of record by the parties to submit to the decision of referees, matters in controversy between them, and no written application to the justice for the purpose is necessary.

Where a rule of reference made the report returnable to a justice, on or before a day named, it was held that the rule was sufficient, and that the day named must be considered as the day of hearing before the justice as to the acceptance of the report.

And in such a case, it is not necessary that it should be stated in the rule that the controversy is of the value of two hundred dollars or under, the jurisdiction of the justices depends upon the amount of the award and not upon the value of the controversy in any other sense.—French vs. Shackford.

In assumpsit by the indorsee against the maker of a note, if the defendant concludes a plea of usury with an offer to verify it by his own oath, the plea is bad, unless it contains an allegation that the payee of the note is alive.—Plummer vs. Drake.

Parties cannot in any case enter into a rule of reference before a justice of the peace, who is named as a referee in the same rule.—Drew vs. Mulikin.

When a case is to be taken out of the statute of limitations by a new promise to be raised by implication of law from the acknowledgment of the party, such acknowledgment ought to contain an unqualified and direct admission of a subsisting debt, which the party is liable and willing to pay. —Russell and al. administrator vs. Copp.

A tenant in a real action may, for the purpose of disproving the demandant's seizin, show a title in a stranger.—Berry vs. Brown.

E. being the owner of two promissory notes which are payable on demand, deposited them with P. for collection, more than ten months after the date of the notes. P. delivered the notes to C. in payment of a debt, due from P. to C.; and C. received the contents of the notes from the maker—in an action by E. against C. to recover the amount of the notes, it was held that the notes must be considered as discredited when C. took them, and that he was not entitled to retain the money against E.—Emerson vs. Crocker.

At an auction, when one of the conditions of the sales was, that the purchasers should have a credit of ninety days, giving good security, an anvil was struck off to a bidder, who removed it a little distance in the auction room, but afterwards refused to take it, or to give secuity—it was held, that indebitatus assumpsit could not be maintained for the price, until the expiration of the ninety days.—Parker vs. Mitchell.

ACCOUNT OF THE VARIOUS OFFICERS

ATTACHED TO THE FRENCH COURTS.

All persons, whose services are necessary in the prosecution of a law suit, and who are compellable to act when called upon, are called by us 'officers ministeriéls.' These are huissiers, avoués notaires, and greffiers. With the office of greffier, I have at present nothing to do; you are aware that there is one attached to each court, to take notes, take care of the original judgments, and deliver copies when necessary. Notaries receive all acts (actes) of convention between individuals, such as sales, leases, partnership, mortgages, &c; they prepare these acts, and if the case require it, may take the opinion of an advocate. Thus the notaries discharge in part the duties of your attorneys. They moreover keep the originals of all acts that have been executed in their presence, and deliver copies to those who are interested in them; but, it is necessary to inform you that a great number of conventions may be entered into by acts privately executed, that is, signed solely by the contracting parties, and it will easily be understood that if two parties wish to enter into a private agreement, they may consult whom they choose in the drawing up of the final instrument, either notary, advocate, or avoué. The number of notaries is limited; they are divided among the different provinces with reference to population: there may be, perhaps about 4000 of them in France.

'The Huissiers, who in ancient time were called sergents, are the official agents of the parties for all extra-judicial purposes; it is they who at the instance, and in the name of the parties, serve the summonses, make tenders, enter protestations, &c, signify decrees, and enforce their execution; their number is also limited.

'And now we come to the principal topic of this letter—the Avoué. In all civil suits, except before the juges de paix and the commercial courts, the parties can appear only by an avoué—not that the avoué is entitled to address the court; generally speaking, this privilege is positively denied him; he is only permitted to address the court pour prendre des conclusions, that is, to state the claims and objections of his client. But from the moment the avoués are named, they take the whole management of the case; all documents are interchanged between them, and all acts of procedure are signed by them. In all ordinary cases, they unfold the claim by a sort of memorial addressed to the courts, commonly called a requête. When the avoué has notified his requête and had the requête of the adverse party notified in turn, he delivers a summary of all the proceeding to the advocate, which is called le dossier; to this he adds such remarks as may be necessary, and sometimes consultations take place between the counsel, the avoué, and the client. In Paris, it rarely happens that the client communicates with any but the avoué, the avoué selecting the advocate and paying him his fees. Except in very important cases, it seldom happens that a party communicates immediately with the advocate. In many of the towns, the practice is wholly different; the parties know only the advocate; he selects the avoué, and had the general direction of the case. The number of avoués is fixed, and their appointments are private property; which, at their death, devolve on their heirs, and which may be sold, subject to the approval of the government. Partnerships consisting of many members are of rare occurrence, but not without precedent, among the avoués. To qualify a person for the office of avoué, he must have studied civil jurisprudence and procedure for a year, and have undergone an examination; he must, moreover, have been employed as clerk to an avoué for five years at the least, that is to say, two years at least as principal, and the remaining time as inferior clerk. There are 3600 avoués, of whom 400 belong to the courts royals, and 3200 to the courts of first instance. At Paris we have 150 avoués in the court of first instance, and 50 in the court royale; they were formerly more numerous, but throughout France they have been successively reduced, by substituting one avoué in the place of two till the number was definitively fixed. The social rank of the avoué is not the same throughout the whole country; in Paris, as you know, we enjoy a perfect freedom from exclusiveness. Their education is generally good, and yet they often carry into society a tone not the best in the world, which also is not unfrequently the case with the avocat. In the provinces, where the distinction of ranks is much more marked, the avoués have the same rank as the attorneys in England. I should state, however, that the avoués having the privilege of pleading in the courts which have no fixed bar, and which are not of unfrequent occurrence, in that case sometimes rank as advocates. Two of them have been elected members of the chamber of deputies; but it may be stated as a general proposition, that avoués belong to what we term the middle class. The annual receipts of an avoué in the court of first instance at Paris are from 15,000 to 30,000 francs, seldom more, seldom less. An office (etude) of first instance, previous to the late disturbances, fetched, at Paris, from 150,000 to 300,000 francs. There is one instance of the place of avoué selling for 360,000 francs. The offices of avoués of the cour royale of Paris fetch from 60,000 to 200,000 francs. If anything be calculate to throw disfavor upon the profession of avoués, it is the general and pretty well founded opinion of their avidity, and their propensity to create unnecessary expenses, with a view of adding to their incomes. This evil is particularly felt in the sales which are made before the courts.

'We have besides a class of men of a far more dangerous description than the avoués; I mean those whom we term "agens d'affaires." These agents are not ministerial officers, but undertake agencies for individuals in every species of business, judicial, ministerial, or otherwise; they solicit, on behalf of others, pensions from government, undertake the settlement of accounts, place money at interest, make purchases and manage sales. They institute suits, and select advocates and avoués; but they only stand in the place of the parties by virtue of a procuration they obtain from them. These agents are knaves almost to a man, and as it is impossible to express them, it is this cause principally which induces us to retain the avoués, inasmuch as it is better to entrust suitors to men subject to a certain control, and who are compelled to give security to the government, than to abandon them to the discretion of these "agens d'affaires." These agents are considered in France as exercising a calling (industrie), and as such are held liable to the duty to which all callings are liable, and which we term patente. They from partnerships among themselves, &c. Again, the employment of avoués being prohibited in the courts of commerce, the parties empower a class of these agens d'affaires, recognised and approved by the courts; these are called agrèes. They are the avoués of the commercial courts, but their services are not indispensable; a party may conduct his case in person, or employ any one he likes. The agrées are little better than the agens d'affairs. In the courts called Justices de Paix, it is these agens d'affaires, or the huissiers, who usually plead; the avoué cannot be employed there, and the advocate will rarely condescend so low.'—Law Magazine.

---

An Apology.—When John Clerk (Lord Eldin) was at the Bar, he was remarked for the sang froid with which he treated the Judges. On one occasion, a junior Counsel, on hearing their Lordships give judgment against his client, exclaimed that 'he was surprised at such a decision!' This was construed into contempt of Court, and he was ordered to attend at the bar next morning. Fearful of the consequences, he consulted his friend John Clerk, who told him to be perfectly at ease, for he would apologize for him in a way that would avert any unpleasant result. Accordingly, when the name of the delinquent was called, John rose, and coolly addressed the assembled tribunal;—'I am very sorry, my Lords, that my young friend has so far forgot himself, as to treat your Honorable Bench with disrespect; he is extremely penitent, and you will kindly ascribe his unintentional insult to his ignorance. You must see at once that it did originate in that. He said he was surprised at the decision of your Lordships! Now, if he had not been very ignorant of what takes place in this Court every day—had he known you but half so long as I have done—curse me if he would be surprised at any thing you did!'—Aberdeen Chronicle.

---

It is generally understood in the legal circles, that Lord Lyndhurst's appointment to the chief seat on the Exchequer Bench is only a provisional arrangement, his Lordship's ultimate destination being the Chief Justiceship of the King's Bench. The retirement of the venerable and Learned Lord who has so long dignified that high office, is stated, may, in consequence of his Lordship's age and increasing infirmaties, be shortly expected. When that event should happen, nothing will give greater satisfaction to the profession, or to the public generally, than the removal of Lord Lyndhurst to the King's Bench, in which Court it will be recollected that his Lordship's extensive practice when at Bar was almost exclusive ly confined. We believe that we may state, on very excellent authority, that under no circumstances will Lord Lyndhurst consent again to take the Great Seal.—Standard.

---

It has been currently reported at the west end, this morning that Lord Althorp has intimated his intention of withdrawing from the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, and that he will be succeeded by Sir James Graham.—Ib.

---

Judge Peters.—On some occasion, a very fat man and a very slim man stood at the entrance of a door into which the judge wished to pass. He stopped a moment for them to make way, but perceiving they were not inclined to move, and being urged by the master of the house to come in, he pushed on between them, exclaiming, 'here I go, then, through thick and thin.'

VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS, recently received from Europe, and for sale by GRAY & BOWEN, No 141 Washington street.

Browne's Self Interpreting Bible, with notes, references, illustrations, reflections, and a memoir of the author; in one large quarto volume.

The Mirror of Parliament, edited by John Barrow, Esq. This work contains a complete account of the doings and debates in the British Parliament, during the last December session; in eight parts, folio.

Select Views on the River Clyde, engraved by Joseph Swan, with historical and descriptive illustrations; in one quarto volume, with fortytwo splendid engravings.

Select Views of the Lakes of Scotland, from original paintings; in two parts.

Hinton's History and Topography of the United States. This work will be completed in thirty numbers, quarto, with ninety engravings; eight numbers are already received.

History of the sufferings of the Church of Scotland, from the restoration to the revolution; by Rev. Robert Wodrow; 4 vols. 8vo.

History and Antiquities of the Doric Race; by C. O. Müller; 2 vols. 8vo.

History of Scotland, from the Union; by John Struthers; 2 vols. 8vo.

A Selection from the Papers of the Earls of Marchmont; illustrative of events from 1685 to 1750; 3 vols. 8vo.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, complete in two vols. 8vo.

A System of Geography, popular and scientific; illustrated by a complete series of maps and other engravings; by James Bell; 3 vols. 8vo.

McUre's History of Glasgow, with plates and illustrations; 1 vol.

History of Modern Greece; by James Emerson; 2 vols. 8vo.

Rollins' Ancient History, with Life, notes and numerous maps and plates; 3 vols. 8vo.

Thompson's Narrative of an official visit to Guatamala; 1 vol.

Six Years' residence in the United States of America; by Peter Neilson; 1 vol.

Lardner's Cyclopedia; complete set as far as published; 16 vols.

Lardner's Cabinet Library, annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 1831.

Murphy's Treatise on the art of Weaving; with fifteen engravings; 1 vol.

Mackenzie on the Diseases of the Eye; 1 vol.

Spix's Travels in Brazil, with engravings; 2 vols. 8vo.

BYRON'S WORKS—a new and beautiful edition, with a portrait, and other engravings; in 4 vols. 16mo.

Evan's Sketch of the Denominations of the Christian World; 1 vol.

Addison's Works; 4 vols.; a new edition.

Bowring's Poetry of the Magyars; 1 vol.

Constable's Miscellany; vols. 60 to 65 inc.

Family Library.—Lives of British Painters—Lives of Physicians—Life of Bruce—Court and Camp of Buonaparte—Demonology and Witchcraft.

Foreign Tales and Traditions; 2 vols.

The Casquet, or Literary Gem; edited by Alexander Whitelaw; 2 vols.

do do do (2d series) 2 vols.

The Atheneum, an original Literary Miscellany; 1vol.

The Midsummer Medley for 1830; by the author of Brambletye House.

Life on board a Man of War; 1 vol.

Robertson's Parent's Guide to Baptism; 1 vol.

Gospel Truth accurately stated and illustrated; by Rev. John Brown; 1 vol.

Outline of the Scripture Evidence for the Trinity; 1 vol.

The New Testament, translated by Doddridge, Campbell and Macknight; 1 vol. 12mo.

An Essay on Chemical Analysis; by M. Thenard; translated by J. G. Children; 1 vol.

Aids to Reflection; by S. T. Coleridge; 1 vol.

Fabliaux, or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries.

A Help to Professing Christians; by Rev. John Barr; 1 vol.

The Wine Drinker's Manual; 1 vol.

The Shamrock, a collection of Irish Songs.

The National Minstrel; a choice selection of popular songs.

Parochial Psalmody; by J. P. Clarke.

Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History.

Pinnock's Modern Geography and History.

The Caterer; being a selection of pieces in prose and verse; 1 vol.

Johnson's Dictionary, complete in one imperial 8vo.

Morewood's Essay on Inebriating Liquors.

Dibdin's Library Companion; 1 vol.

Biblia Hebraica.

Novum Testamentum Græce.

Aristophanes Comædiæ.

Sophocles Tragædiæ.

Pindari Carmina.

Æschyli Tragædiæ. May 21

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIV. for May, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College.

II. President Wayland's Sermon. The Certain Triumph of the Redeemer. A Discourse. By Francis Wayland, D. D.

III. Meaning of Αἰών. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays.

IV. Grimké's Discourses. 1. An Address on the Expediency and Duty of adopting the Bible as a Class Book. By T. S. Grimké. 2. An Oration of the Advantages to be derived from the Introduction of the Bible and of Sacred Literature, as Essential Parts of all Education. By Thomas S. Grimké.

V. Children's Books. I. The Young Reader. By John Pierpont. 2. Peter Parley's Tales about the Sun, Moon and Stars. 3. Tales of Travels, West of the Mississippi. By Solomon Bell. 4. Cousin Elizabeth. By the Author of 'A Visit to the Sea Side.' 5. The Children's Robinson Crusoe. By a Lady. 6. The Little Girl's Own Book. By Mrs Child.

VI. History of English Baptists. Sermons on Various Important Public Occasions. By Robert Hall, A. M. 3. Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Rev. Andrew Fuller. By J. W. Morris. Edited by Rufus Babcock, Jr. 4. Asiatic Journal for British India.

VII. Sullivan's Political Class Book. The Political Class Book,l By William Sullivan. Counsellor at Law. With an Appendix, by George B. Emerson.

VIII. Dr Waterhouse's Essay on Junius. An Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a Sketch of the life and character of Wm. Pitt, &c.; with reflections relating to the Affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785. By Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

IX. The Way of Truth and Union.

---

JUST published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Language.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

---

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars.

April 9.

---

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

---

SPLENDID BIBLE. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy.

March 19.

---

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

---

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D.

Feb. 19.

---

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. Jusl published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface.

Jan. 8.

---

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

---

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1831. NO. XLV.

MERCANTILE LAW.

Continued.

And first, as it is a right of the seller, it can only, of course, take place where there is a consignment by way of sale. Accordingly, it has been decided that the privilege does not belong to a person having a mere lien upon goods for work bestowed on them—the very notion of a lien, indeed, implying actual possession; * nor to a foreign correspondent of the buyer, standing between him and the seller in the mere relation of an agent, even though he may have become surety for the buyer by accepting bills for the price.† Yet the rule has not always been inflexibly adhered to; for in one case—to be considered, perhaps, rather as an exception than a precedent—an agent abroad who had consigned goods with a charge for commission, purchased, however, on his personal liability from one to whom the consignee was unknown, was regarded as substantially filling the character of a seller, and entitled to the right of stoppage.‡ We should have thought it unnecessary, had not the point been made the subject of a solemn decision, to state that the right of stoppage, in its proper and legal sense, has nothing to do with consignments to a factor for sale; § because in such cases, the property never having passed out of the consignor, he needs not the aid of an extraordinary privilege to enable him to retake the goods on their course. ‖ As little doubt can there be of the right of one who has consigned goods for sale on the joint account of himself and the consignee, to stop them on the insolvency of the latter: ¶ but neither is this an act of stoppage in transitu in its technical sense, but a mere exercise of the right of undevested ownship. Lastly, as it is the right of the seller, so it must be exercised by him, or some one acting for him, adversely against the buyer: a countermand, therefore, by the buyer, though given on behalf, and with a view to the interest of the seller, will not enure to the benefit of the latter as an act of stoppage. **

Secondly, to justify a stoppage, the consignee must be insolvent—not necessarily bankrupt, but in such circumstances as to be unable to honor his draft, or meet the demands of his creditors. Any information, which turns out to be well founded, of such embarrassment in the affairs of the consignee, will entitle the seller to countermand the delivery—much more, therefore, will the actual dishonor of the bills which have been drawn for the price. A question at one time arose, whether the right was defeated by part payment of the price; but the court at once intimated an opinion that it would be dangerous to introduce an exception wherein it might be difficult to draw the line; and after further deliberation decided, that the vendor was entitled to stop, notwithstanding a partial payment—refunding, of course, the sum which he had received. * It is almost needless to add, that neither does the seller forfeit his privilege by taking the buyer's acceptances, that being as we have said, one of the ordinary modes in which credit is given. †

Thirdly, there must be a stoppage. The bankruptcy of the vendee does not of itself remit the vendor to his right of possession, or put an end to the subsisting contract. There must be a positive exertion of the right by the vendor himself, or some one acting in his behalf. It is in fact, a race of competition between the seller and the general credstors of the buyer, in which the most diligent gains the prize. For the manner of exercising the right no specific form has been prescribed: if the transport is by land, a written notice (though a verbal notice will suffice) to the carrier or other middleman in whose hands the goods may be, not to deliver them to the consignee, is the ordinary and recognised mode of stoppage; if by sea, the shipper usually forwards to his agent at the port of destination one of the bills of lading, the presentment of which is a sufficient assertion of the claim, and an authority to the master to deliver accordingly. If the bills of lading expressly make the goods deliverable to the order of the shipper, then, upon the production of one of them duly indorsed, it will be at the peril of the master, if he should refuse to obey the order; and this, therefore, seems the surest and most convenient mode for enabling the consignor to regain the possession.

Fourthly, the right of stoppage over-reaches the goods during the whole period of their passage; so long, therefore, as they continue in the custody of a middleman, whether carrier, wharfinger, or warehouseman, on their way to the destination originally contemplated as between the buyer and seller, they are liable to this privilege of resumption. ‡ And for this purpose it is indifferent, so far as the carrier is concerned, whether he has been specially appointed either by the vendor or by the vendee, or is a general carrier for hire. It may be that he is the agent of the vendee, but he is an agent to carry, not finally to receive and appropriate. Thus, not only may goods on board a general ship be stopped, but the right continues even when the shipment has been made on board a vessel chartered by the consignee for that express adventure. On this point, it is true, a different opinion was at one time entertained; * but the question was subsequently set at rest by a solemn decision of the court. †

But, lastly, the transitus is over and the right of stoppage gone, so soon as the goods have come into the actual or constructive possession of the vendee. Lord Ellenborough, on one occasion, observed that Lord Mansfield's expression of the 'corporal touch,' was to be taken not literally, but figuratively. ‡ And certainly it can never have been thought necessary that the buyer should in his proper person actually handle the goods. Lord Mansfield himself would have considered it enough that they should be delivered into his warehouse whether under his own eye-sight or not. And if this be so, there seems no very sound reason why delivery into the warehouse of another, which the buyer expressly makes his own for the time being, should not be considered equally complete and effectual. Thus to take the instance before cited, of Hunter v. Beale: after the direction given by the clerk of the buyer, it is manifest that the warehouse of the innkeeper became, so far as the custody of the bale was concerned, the warehouse of the buyer. Unless therefore we are prepared resolutely to draw the line of demarcation, by saying that no possession of a third person shall under any circumstances, be deemed to be a possession of the buyer, we must admit that in this case the bale had come into the warehouse, and consequently in the possession, of the person to whom it was consigned. Accordingly this decision of Lord Mansfield, which, as we have seen, determined that the transitus was still incomplete, has been not only questioned by the conrts, § but impliedly, if not in express terms, overruled; and it may be taken as now settled, that one ordinarily acting in the character of a middleman, may be converted into the warehouseman or special agent of the vendee, either

---

* Sweet v. Pym, 1 East, 4.

† Siffkin v. Wray, 6 East, 371.

‡ Fries v. Wray, 3 East, 93.

§ Patten v. Thompson, 5 M. & S. 350.

‖ 'The right of stoppage in transitu does not depend upon a supposition that the property has not passed from the consignor, but on the contrary, is founded on an admission that the property has become vested in some other person. No question can be made upon the right of a man to seize his own goods: but the question in cases of stoppage in transitu generally is, whether under the circumstances the consignor may divest the property which had passed to another, and revest it in himself.' Abbot on Sh. 368.

¶ Newsom v. Thornton, 6 East, 17.

 Siffkin v. Wray, 6 East, 371.

* Hodgson v. Loy, 7 T. R. 440.

† 3 East, 93. 1 Stark. N. P. C. 115.

‡ Stokes v. La Riviere, as cited by Mr Justice Lawrence, 3 East, 397. Hodgson v. Loy, 7 T. R. 440. Mills v. Ball, 2 Bos. & Pul. 457. There the good were in the hands of a wharfinger; and Lord Alvanley says, 'Where there is a contract for the sale of goods, and a delivery has been made to a middleman, who is merely the vehicle between the buyer and the seller, the latter, in case of the insolvency of the former, may stop them at any time before they have arrived in such a state as to be in the actual or constructive possession of the buyer. The only question is whether these goods are to be considered as having been in the hands of a middleman, or as having been taken into the possession of the person for whom they were ultimately intended. I am of opinion that the wharfinger in this case, not having been particularly employed by the vendee, is to be considered as a middleman.' See also Coates v. Railton, 6 B. & C. 422.

* Inglis v. Usherwood, 1 East, 515. In that case the consignment was on board a ship wholly chartered by the consignee; and, on the supposition that by the law of England delivery on board such a ship was a complete and final delivery to the vendee, recourse was had, for justifying an act of stoppage, to the law of Russia. On that law the case was decided; and although Lord Kenyon shrunk from determining the question whether by the law of England transitus was at an end, Mr Justice Grose expressly stated that 'he agreed to the general rule, that a delivery of goods by the vendor on board a ship chartered by the vendee, is a delivery to the vendee himself;' in which opinion he was supported by Mr Justice Lawrence.

† Bothlingk v. Inglis, 3 East 380. The decision of the court proceeded merely on the ground, that there is no substanstial difference whether the contract for carriage be made expressly with the vendee, or not. In either case he is the hirer of the ship, and must pay the freight.

‡ In Dixon v. Baldwin, 5 East, 175.

§ In Dixon v. Baldwin, 5 East, 175.

by express directions, applicable to the particular consignment, or by a general course of employment rendering such particular direction unnecessary. Thus it was stated by Mr Justice Chambre, that, 'If a man be in the habit of using the warehouse of a wharfinger or other middleman as his own, and make that the repository of his goods, and dispose of them there, the journey will he at an end when the goods have arrived at such warehouse;'* and it has been accordingly on this principle decided that goods in the custody of a packer,† and a carrier,‡ had respectively reached there ultimate distination; the vendee in each case having no warehouse of his own, and having been accustomed on other occasions to use the warehouse of the middleman as the temporary repository of goods so consigned. The question in short, seems to be this: in what capacity did the middleman hold the goods at the time when the claim of the vendor was made? If he held them as a mere vehicle between the buyer and the seller, they were still on their passage, and might be stopped: but if they were in his hands as the warehouseman, special agent, or bailee of the buyer, then the transit was at an end.§

Another question, in principle closely connected with this arises, when goods are ordered, as frequently they are, for the purpose of being again consigned elsewhere. In such cases, it may not suit the buyer that the goods should be transmitted directly to himself, and he may consequently order them to be sent to his agent at a particular place, to be by him despatched on their ulterior destination. At what point then, under such circumstances, will the right of stoppage be determined? The answer will readily suggest itself, if we keep steadily in view, that by the transit of goods is meant the course of delivery from the seller to the buyer. Thus, for instance, if goods ordered by an agent in England, on account of a house abroad, are sent to the agent for the purpose of being forwarded to his principal; there can be no doubt, that in general, into whatever intermediate hands they may come, they will remain subject to the right of the vendor until their arrival at the point of ultimate destination.* But if the agent receive them, not as the instrument of transmission to his principal, but either under a general authority to deal with and dispose of them as he may think expedient,† or for the express purpose of re-consigning them on a new adventure, it is equally clear, that in either of these cases, so far as the seller and his contract are concerned, the transit is determined by the possession of the agent. Thus, to take one example; goods were ordered by a firm in London from a house at Manchester, with directions that they should be sent to the buyer's agents at Hull, to be shipped, as usual, for Hamburgh. After the arrival of the goods at Hull, and whilst they were in the possession of the agents there, the vendors claimed to stop them; but the case being brought before the court, it was decided, that they were too late, inasmuch as the transitus was complete by the delivery to the agents.‡ And indeed it is obvious, that the seller in this case had nothing to do with the sudsequent shipment to Hamburg. His contract regarded only the buyer and his possession, and could not therefore be affected either in its rights or liabilities by a new destination given to the goods after they had come into the possession of the buyer, or, which is the same thing, the possesion of an agent specially appointed by him to receive them. The same principle is illustrated in a case cited by Mr Justice Lawrence, under the name of Kymer v. Fowler.§ Goods purchased at a foreign port were put on board the buyer's own ship, hired by him for a certain term, not to be conveyed to the buyer himself, but be sent out to Alexandria on a mercantile adventure, with a view to which they had been bought. And this was considered as a complete and final delivery to the purchaser himself.

In the instances hitherto given, the possession has been that of a person acting for and representing the vendee. But this is not the only sense in which the possession may be said to be constructive. The term comprehends every mode of final appropriation short of an actual taking into the vendee's own possession. Thus, affixing a mark,* tasting,† taking samples,‡ while the goods were yet in the warehouse of the middleman, have severally been considered as acts of appropriation, rendering the delivery complete, and consequently determining the transit. Nay, it has even been said, that if at any time in the course of conveyance from the vendor to the vendee, the latter be allowed to exercise any act of ownership over the goods, he thereby reduces them into his possession and puts an end to the vendor's right to stop them.§ And it seems to be now placed beyond question, that if the consignee, before the goods reach their ultimate destination, postpones the delivery, or does any act equivalent to taking actual possession of them, the transitus is at an end.‖ Lord Kenyon, indeed, in an early case ¶ is reported to have said 'that to give the consignee a right to claim by virtue of possession, it must be possession obtained on the completion of the voyage.' The case which gave occasion to the dictum was as follows: a cargo consigned to a person at Liverpool, was, on the arrival of the vessel, taken possession of (in what manner does not appear) by the assignees of the consignee, who had become bankrupt. The ship, however, was immediately ordered into quarantine, and a claim having been made during the period of quarantine, on behalf of the seller, Lord Kenyon decided in his favor, on the ground that the voyage was not complete when the right was asserted. If this decision can be supported at all, of which it is impossible not to entertain doubts, it must be on grounds, we apprehend, somewhat different from those taken by the court. It may be said, not without plausibility, that the law never raises a constructive possession, while anything remains to be done, without which possesion could not be taken in fact; and that as in this case the actual possession could not have been obtained until the performance of the quarantine, it would have been an inference false in fact, if the law had assumed, from any act of the assignees prior to that time, that possession had been taken by them. For constructive possession, it must be remembered, in the sense in which we are now using it, is but in other words evidence of actual possession; and it has been frequently decided, that where the consignee has yet nothing to do before he is entitled to the absolute possession, no act of ownership, however strong, will countervail the fact, or be sufficient to clothe him with the legal possession. Thus it has been decided, that goods remaining in the king's warehouses, the duties not being paid, are still in their transit, and liable to be stopped by the vendor; and that, even where the consignee has sold them to another.††

To be continued.

* In Richardson v. Goss, 3 B. & P. 119.

† Scott v. Pettit, 3 B. & P. 469. Goods were ordered from a house in Manchester and forwarded to the address of the buyer at the Bull and Mouth, London. From thence they were taken to the house of the defendant, a packer, not in consequence of any orders respecting these particular goods, but in consequence of general orders to that effect from the buyer, who had no warehouse of his own in London. No inquiry was made and no orders given by the buyer, who soon afterwards became bankrupt, respecting the goods in question. The defendant, however, received them as usual, and opened the package for the purposes of examining the contents. They were then claimed by the vendor; but the court was of opinion that the transitus was at an end, when the goods were received into the possession of the packer. 'It seems to me,' said Lord Alvanley, 'impossible to raise a doubt, whether the transitus was at an end or not; for if the bankrupt had no warehouse to receive the goods but that of the packer, the transitus never could be at an end, if it did not end there.'

‡ Rowe v. Pickford, 1 Moore, 526. The buyer in that case was in the habit of purchasing goods from Manchester, for exportation to the continent. Having no warehouse of his own in London, he used that of the defendants, who were carriers, as a place of temporary deposit before shipment. The transitus was therefore held to be determined so soon as the goods reached the warehouse of the defendants. See also the recent case of Foster v. Frampton, 6 B. & C. 107., in which the same doctrine was upheld. In that case, however, there were other circumstances indicating the termination of the transit; for the vendee took away part of the goods, and gave special directions to the carrier to keep the remainder in his warehouse.

§ Foster v. Frampton, 6 B. & C. 109; and see Hodgson v. Loy, 7 T. R. 440.

* See the case of Stokes v. La Riviere, as cited in 3 East, 397. The goods were ordered by Messrs Duhems of Lisle, and were sent first to their agents in London, by whom they were forwarded to their correspondents at Ostend to be sent onward to their destination at Lisle While in their hands waiting for orders, they were stopped. 'No point,' said Lord Mansfield, 'is more clear than that goods may be stopped in every sort of passage to the hands of the buyers.' And see also the late case of Coates v. Railton, 6 B. & C. 422,. which was decided on exactly the same principle.

† Leeds v. Wright, 3 B. & P. 320. Moisseron, the general agent in London of Le Grand and Co. at Paris, purchased goods in their name from a house at Manchester. Moisseron had a general authority to send the goods which he purchsed to La Grand and Co. at Paris, or to Holland, Germany, or such other port as he should think most beneficial. In this instance the goods were sent by his direction to a packer; and a part having been taken ont and sent off, the remainder were repacked, and there were, on the failure of Le Grand and Co., claimed by the vendors. But the court was of opinion that the packer had possession of the goods, not as a middleman between the sellers and Le Grand and Co., but on account of Moisseron, and that delivery to Moisseron was a complete delivery to the buyers, in as much as he had authority from them to give the goods what new direction he pleased.

‡ Dixon v. Baldwin, 5 East. 175. 'Here,' said Lord Ellenborough, after a review of the previous cases, 'the goods had so far gotten to the end of their journey, that they waited for new orders from the purchaser to put them again in motion, and communicate to them another substantive destination, and that without such orders they would have continued stationary.'

3 East, 396. The vessel was in this case the repository or warehouse of the buyer. It was to all intents his own; and in this respect it differs from a vessel chartered only for the particular voyage, the control and management remaining with the owner.

* Ellis v. Hunt, 3 T. K. 464. There the provisional assignee of the buyer put his mark upon the cask while remaining in the wagoner's warehouse.

† Wright v. Lawes, 4 Esp. N. P. C. 82.

‡ Foster v. Frampton, 6 B. & C. 107.

§ Per Lord Alvanley in Mills v. Ball, 2 Bos. & Pul. 461.; and his lordship goes on to say: 'So though it has been said that the right of stoppage coninues till the goods have arrived at their journey's end, yet if the vendee meet them upon the road and take them into his own possession, the goods will then have arrived at their journey's end, with reference to the right of stoppage.'

‖ Per Bailey, J. in Foster v. Frampton.

¶ 6 Halst. v. Pownal, 1 Esp. 240.

 Northey v. Field Esp. N. P. 613.

†† Nix v. Olive. Abbot on Sh. p. 393.

MORTGAGE.

Continued.

We know how eagerly a pretext is sought to elude the odious incident of survivorship, as for instance the execution of an elegit on the joint estate of one of the tenants, which is held to work a severance, (Gilb. on Executions, 41.) yet tenant by elegit has but a chattel. (2 Inst. 396.) An inference has been attempted also from Lancaster v. Dolan, (1 Rawle, 321.) which, it seems to me, it does not warrant. It was held there that a mortgagee is a purchaser within the 27 Eliz. and entitled to all the advantage which the character can give him in a conflict with a volunteer. But that proves nothing which has not already been conceded. The title doubtless passed as far as was necessary to the protection of his security, and so far the mortgagee was a purchaser in the strictest sense of the word. At one time it was doubted whether a judgment creditor is not a purchaser within the true intent of our recording acts, and it has been barely held that he is not; yet no one ever suspected him of being the owner of an estate in the land. As to the other ground of the inference from the position there taken, that a mortgage is a conditional sale, every one the least conversant with the doctrine of powers, knows that in the execution of them, form is substance; and that a mortgage, being in form a conditional sale, may be a valid execution of a power to sell without conveying the estate, to every intent and purpose. The case of Ripple, v. Ripple, (1 Rawle, 386.) has also been cited; but it seems scarcely necessary to say, that the nature of the incumbrance there, was such as to preclude it from being deducted from the purchase money. Finally, it has been dertemined, that the mortgagee may maintain ejectment against the mortgagor; but that is entirely consistent with the principle conceded at the outset, that the mortgagee is the owner, so far as is necessary to enable him to enforce his security. In fact, the only case in which a contrary sentiment has been intimated, is that of Moliere's lessee v. Noe; (4 Dall. 450.) but there the opinion on the particular point to which I allude, was not only an obiter one, (for the point did not arise) but that of a bare majority; and it was beside formed at a time when the professional sentiment was in a state of transition. Although now too late to question it in a case like the one supposed, it is hazarding little to say, that if an expression of judicial opinion on it had been delayed a few years, the result would have been different. Besides, the opinion of the chief justice was founded in some degree on a district provision of the same act.

So much for judicial decision, by which a mortgage has with a single exception been treated as an incumbrance; and the legislature seems to have acted on the same principle as a fundamental one. In the act of 1705, by which the mortgaged premises are subjected to execution, the mortgagee was treated as an incumbrancer, and not as the owner, even at that early day. As an accessory of the former ownership, the equity of redemption, although originally a creature of chancery, was considered to be inherent in the land, even without the existence of a court of equity to protect it; and the estate of the mortgagee, which would, by the terms of the grant, have, become absolute by a breach of the condition continued to be viewed as a contingent one. In truth, the inconvenience of treating the estate as it had stood at law, without a court to give relief on equitable terms, would have been intolerable. Accordingly, the remedy provided was not to enable the mortgagee to foreclose, but to get his money out of the land by a sale or extent, 'as in case of OTHER lands sold or delivered ON EXECUTIONS FOR DEBTS OR DAMAGES.' He was thus put exactly on a footing with a judgment creditor; and it is worthy of notice, that the legislature even then, recognised as applicable to a sale on a mortgage, the principle of judicial sales, subsequently applied in practice to all other cases, by directing that the purchaser hold clear, not only of the equity of redemption, but of all incumbrances whatever; thus disposing of the whole estate at once, instead of the particular interests of the execution creditor. In the act relative to mortgages, passed in 1820, the instrument is treated purely as an incumbrance, its lien being declared to attach, not at the execution of the deed, as it would necessarily have been supposed to do, had it been considered as arising from the vesting of the estate, but from the period of its being entered of record. So, in the acts of 1822 and 1823, the mortgagee is spoken of merely as the holder of a security, and one that may be released in part, or gradually discharged by indorsement of payment, as the intalments become due. These are the earlier and principal acts that seem to bear upon the question. But it is supposed that a different notion is perceptible in the Act of 18th of February, 1824, by which guardians and other trustees are authorized to invest the moneys of the trust 'in real securities,' at such rate of interest as the Orphans' Court may direct: and hence it is supposed that the securities thus spoken of are mortgages; that the legislature deemed it necessary to the purposes of the trust, that the investment should be permanent; and that to protect it from interference by the other creditors, it must have been considered that the mortgagee had an estate in the land. It seems to me this train of suppositions is entirely gratuitous. If the legislature had intended to designate a mortgage, they would have done so specifically insead of using a generic term. Besides, there is no reason to impute an intention to restrain the investment to this species of security, when a bond and warrant, or a redeemable ground rent, or a conveyance in trust with power to sell, would all equally answer the description, and two of them the object supposed to be intended. It cannot be doubted then, that the legislature had no view to the point mooted here. At its last session, however, it must be conceded that the legislature viewed the matter in a light entirely different, and it has been suggested that a due deference to its opinion requires us to retrace our steps. The act which changed the law laid down in Willard v. Norris, was a constitutional exercise of legislative power; and regarding it as furnishing a rule for cases in time to come, it will be executed by this court in good faith even to the letter. But we will never consent to attribute judicial authority to a branch of the government, whose province it is to enact the law, and not to administer it; nor surrender the constitutional franchise of the judiciary, by bowing to every intimation of a judicial opinion that may be supposed to proceed from the legislative halls. I, therefore, do not acknowledge the legitimacy of the argument drawn from a supposed intimation of legislative interpretation, that the opinion held by this court in Willard v. Norris, was an erroneous one. I admit that a prospective intimation by a course of legislation on the basis of a state of things supposed to exist, is a strong evidence that it does exist, inasmuch as it gives rise to rights founded partly in enactment and partly in usage; but here the existence of the law as settled in Willard v. Norris, was taken for granted as the foundation of the act which changed it, and which was a legislative affirmation of the very fact which it is the purpose of the argument to disprove. All other legislative acts, however, are in unison with the judicial sentiment, that a mortgage is purely an incumbrance.

But taking it to be an incumbrance, it is said to differ from a judgment in this, that it is created directly and expressly by the contract, while the lien of the judgment is the effect of the law; and this is the second principal ground of the argument. Admitting for the present this difference to exist, it is not easy to see what objection it furnishes to the application of the general principle. It is said that to discharge the incumbrance against the mortgagee's consent, would impair the obligation of the contract. It is obvious that the argument would not touch the case of a mortgage which is due, inasmuch as payment by the mortgagor or any one in his place as a purchaser of the equity of redemption, would stand with the very letter of the contract. But how would it affect the contract to compel the mortgagee to receive satisfaction even before the day of payment? Even as respects the acts of the legislature, the constitutional inhibition relates only to contracts which exist at the enactment of the law. I believe no one ever doubted the power of the legislature to regulate the obligation of contracts prospectively, or to take it away altogether, as was done some years since, in regard to the contracts of certain unchartered banks. The parties contract subject to the provisions of the law which enter into their stipulations, and thus tacitly become a part of their agreement; and when the law requires that a mortgage be subject to payment, in certain circumstances, before the day, it is as much an original condition of the contract as if it had been expressed in terms. But a decision of the judiciary is so far different from an act of the legislature, that it declares no new law; and consequently can never operate as an ex post facto. It merely recognises a rule so long respected in practice as to authorize a presumption of its having been adopted originally by common consent, and in that aspect is treated as having been the law from the beginning. Such was the origin and growth of the custom which gives the tenant the way-going crop, and impairs the obligation of the contract resulting from its apparent terms, so far as to give the tenant an interest beyond the expiration of his lease. No well advised judge will claim a right of legislation. Independent of the fact that all legislative power is placed by the constitution elsewhere, (a consideration that ought of itself to be decisive) every usurpation of such a right hitherto has proved to be extremely pernicious in its tendency to impair the public confidence in the stability of judicial decision, and subject the rights of the suitors to the prejudices and caprice of the judges. I take it then, that a judicial decision is not to be taken for an act of legislation; and that if the policy of the law, about which I shall have occasion to speak more particularly, should require the contact of hypothecation to be laid under restriction so far as to expose it to casualties, that are incident to every other species of incumbrance, the constitution interposes no bar. But is the proposition that the lien is a matter of formal and express stipulation founded in fact? By the terms of the contract, the mortgagee is to have not a lien, but an estate; and that he has a lien and not an estate, is as much the legal effect of the instrument as lien is the legal effect of a judgment. It must be admitted, however, to be the intent of the parties that the contract shall create a lien, because they know that such will be its legal consequence, and they may therefore be said to stipulate with a view to it. But precisely such is the intent of parties who resort not to a mortgage, but to a judgment with stay of execution. In both cases the object is real security, not by stipulating for it in terms as in the case of recognisance; but by performing an act of which it is in the one case and the other a legal consequence; the difference being that the judgment pledges all the debtor's land within the country, and the mortgage only the lands described in the deed. For this reason a bond and warrant is thought to be the better security; insomuch that no creditor in the country accepts a mortgage except the vendor of land, who is generally content to rely on the security of the estate with which he has parted.

(To be continued.)

ENGLISH.

PUNISHMENT OF SAILORS FOR DISOBEDIENCE.

In another part of our columns will be found a letter from a correspondent, who calls in question the soundness of the decision of the Court of Exchequer in the recent case of Lamb v. Burnett, which was an action to obtain compensation in damages for flogging a sailor on board an Indiaman. The verdict was for the defendant, and the Court refused an application for a new trial, as they considered the verdict was a proper one, and ought not to be disturbed. Our correspondent states that the Learned Barons of the Exchequer held this doctrine—viz. 'That the authority or power of punishment in the king's and merchants' service was the same; and as the plaintiff had been guilty of disobedience, by opposing the infliction of punishment on a sailor, the Master was empowered to inflict such punishment as he thought proper on the plaintiff.' Now, with regard to the latter part of what is here stated as having fallen from the Bench, we are quite confident it has been misreported. It is impossible the Learned Barons could have propounded so monstrous a doctrine as that the Master of a ship, either in the king's or merchants' service, is empowered by law to inflict upon a sailor, for disobedience, such punishment as he thinks proper. Our correspondent denies that the master of a merchant vessel has a right, by law, to inflict any punishment. This is the other extreme. The Master is empowered to inflict some punishment for disobedience; but he must take care that it is not cruel or excessive. If he exceed the bounds of a reasonable authority, it is at his peril; and he is liable to answer either civilly or criminally, as the case may be, for the abuse of a power with which the law invests him for the preservation of good order in all lawful matters appertaining to the navigation of the ship. We are not now discussing the question whether it is necessary that he should have this power in consideration of the safety of the vessel and the lives of those on board—we are only speaking of the law as it is, without reference to its policy; though, at the same time, we cannot avoid saying we have the greatest possible abhorrence and disgust of the degrading practice of flogging, whether on sea or on shore, and hope to see the day when an Act of Parliament will protect both our sailors and soldiers from the slavish and barbarous castigation of the lash. Our correspondent, in support of his opinion that the Master has no power to punish a sailor for disobedience, refers to the Lex Maritima, and says that, from the days of Alfred to the present time, the law in substance is as follows:—'That if a sailor in a trading vessel refuse to do his duty, or be guilty of disobedience, he shall be confined, or put in irons if necessary, such as in the case of mutiny, &c, and forthwith delivered over to the Commander of the first king's ship the vessel shall meet, who shall hear and examine the case, and cause the offender to be dealt with according to law; that is, to take the sailor in charge if the case be for mutiny, and deliver him over to the Court of Admiralty, to be tried for the offence.' He also says that the only power by which the Captain of a king's ship can inflict punishment on any of his own ship's company is by the Articles of War, and not by Lex Maritima. We admit that, in case of serious crimes, which are not to be confounded with mere acts of disobedience, the Master can only exercise the power of putting the person of the offender under restraint, to prevent the repetition of the offence, and to secure him for trial before the competent tribunal, as he has no judicial authority. But in mere cases of disobedience, or disorderly conduct, which is more properly misbehaviour than crime, he has, by an authority long antecedent to the Articles of War, or to any statutory provision—we mean by the common, or unwritten law—the power of inflicting punishment on a mariner in a reasonable manner. His power, in this respect has been compared by ancient writers to the authority which a parent is allowed to exercise over his child, or of a master over his apprentice or scholar, which is derived from the common law. Valin, in his Commentary on the French Ordinance, cites this position from an old authority, where it is laid down that the master is armed by law with this disciplinarian authority ad levem castigationem pro corrigenda insolentia et male morata vita seu licentia nautarum et vectorum, quemadmodum eam tenet pater in filies Magister in discipulos, &c. This power of moderately punishing sailors by the Master, to correct insolence, disobedience, or disorderly conduct, is stated to be 'part and parcel' of the English as well as the French maritime law by Lord Tenterden, who, when Mr Abbot, gave to the commercial law of this country the benefit of his great research and luminous exposition, in his admirable treatise on merchant ships and seamen; and he quotes the case of Watson v. Christie, 2 Bos. and Pull. in support of this doctrine. He says the power in question is absolutely necessary for the safety of the ship and the lives of those on board; but he emphatically adds, 'it behooves the Master to be very careful in the exercise of it, and not to make his parental power a pretext for cruelty and oppression.' He quotes afterwards the French ordinance in allusion to certain modes of punishment which the Master may inflict on drunken, disobedient mariners, and which punishments required the consent of the steersman and mate. He then goes on to say 'By the law of England such consent is not required; nevertheless the Master should, except in cases requiring his immediate interposition, take the advice of the persons next below him in authority, as well to prevent the operation of passion in his own breast as to secure witnesses to the propriety of his conduct; for the Master, on his return to this country, may be called upon by action at law to answer to a mariner who has been beaten or imprisoned by him, or by his order, in the course of a voyage; and for the justification of his conduct he should be able to show not only sufficient cause for chastisement, but also that the chastisement itself was reasonable and moderate, otherwise the mariner may recover damages proportionate to the injury received.' When causeless or excessive punishment by the Master occasion death, he will be liable to punishment for murder or manslaughter, as the circumstances of the case, governed by the established principles of the common law of England, may sustain an indictment for one charge or the other. In the case of Lamb v. Burnett, which has given rise to our correspondent's letter, if we recollect right the question was not as to excess of punishment, but as to the right to inflict any punishment whatever. The Court decided that he had; but, had there been in the pleadings on the part of the plaintiff a new assignment for the excess, perhaps the Court would have been of opinion that five dozen lashes on such an occasion was excessive and unreasonable punishment. We should have thought so;—but it is not the present question.—Morning Herald of Feb. 1831.

---

The Queen's County Assizes have terminated with one capital conviction for Whiteboyism. A Jury who could not agree as to the guilt or innocence of three prisoners given in charge to them on Monday, were subjected to the barbarous and unmeaning punishment of incarceration in a dark room, without fire, food, or covering, during the whole of that inclement night. When the Chief Baron came into Court on the following morning at ten o'clock, one of the unfortunate men was found in a very weak and deplorable condition; and a medical man having been examined, and testified that a further detention might endanger his life, the Jury was discharged. The prisoners were given in charge on Wednesday of another Jury, who had the good fortune not to disagree, but returned their verdict at midnight, and the culprit has been left for execution.

The Chief Justice (Bushe) presided in the Record Court. A case was tried before his Lordship which excited a good deal of merriment. Mr Pigott, of Cappard, brought an action of ejectment against some tenant, in the course of which it came out in evidence that the person for whose life the ground had been leased to the defendants was dead for some years, and that they dressed up an old beggarman, whom they placed, if not in the shoes, at least in the bed, of the deceased, where he shammed Abraham for a length of time. To render the delusion more complete, the room was darkened, the old gentleman's hat and wig laid on a chair beside his bed, and, lest the tongue of the Parvenu might bewray him, he was instructed to grunt 'umh,' as the sole and sufficient response to all the kind inquiries of his neighbors. Mr Cruise improved these circumstances in a speech full of fun and fancy, which delighted the court and the auditory for the best part of an hour.

By reason of the noise and tumult which customarily prevail in this Court, the Chief Justice was in danger, on one or two occasions, of losing that amenity of temper for which he is almost as remarkable as for the higher qualities of his mind. However, by putting a vociferous drunkard into the dock, threatening to send the Sheriff to the same place, and ordering a pair of loquacious Magistrates into custody, his Lordship restored decorum to the Court, and resumed his wonted equanimity. You may judge of the liberties which are taken in our Irish Courts when I tell you, that while a prisoner was on his trial for murder, I saw one of the Counsel for the Crown conversing with a Juryman, who was separated from him only by a partition no higher than his elbow, at the same time that the tipstaff of the Court delivered a letter to another juror on the point of his wand.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

SHIPPING.

11. Where by the municipal regulations of certain ports, a certificate of origin was necessary to the admission of certain merchandise there, a shipmaster having received such goods on board his ship, and signed a bill of lading for their delivery at one of such ports, cannot in the absence of evidence to show it was the duty of the shipper to furnish such a certificate, set up the fact of that document not being on board his ship, as an excuse for not entering the port at which he had agreed to land the property entrusted to him; nor as a justification for his delivering it at another port, and thereby earn freight. Wirgman's Admr's. vs. Mactier, 1 Gill & Johns. 150.

12. Under the 10th section of the act of 1825, ch. 67. [276] the forcing a mariner on shore must be done, not only without justifiable cause, but also maliciously, to justify a conviction. If done under a mistaken sense of duty, it is not a case for conviction. United States vs. Ruggles, 5 Mason, 192.

13. 'Maliciously,' in the statute, means, with a wilful disregard of right and duty, or doing the act against a man's own conviction of duty. Ib.

14. A master of a ship has authority to confine his seamen in a common jail, in a foreign port, for offences and misconduct, in extreme cases, and where the proper correction or punishment cannot be effectual on shipboard. Ib.

15. If the crew combine together not to do duty, it is an endeavor to make a revolt within the crimes act of 1790, ch. 9, [36] § 12, although no orders are actually given afterwards. United States vs. Barker, 5 Mason, 404.

16. If the shipping article are to the final port of discharge, the voyage is not ended until the cargo is wholly unladen. The owner may order the vessel from port to port until the whole is discharged. Ib.

17. To affect the master of a vessel with the penalty provided for his non-delivery of a temporary register, granted under the 3d section of the coasting act of 1793, ch. 52, there must not only be an arrival at the port to which the vessel belongs, but it must be an arrival there, not by accident or from necessity, but intentionally as one of the termini of the voyage. United States vs. Shackford, 5 Mason, 445.

18. To constitute an endeavor to commit a revolt within the crimes act of 1790, ch. 36, it is necessary that there should be some effort to act or stir up others of the crew to disobedience of the master. United States vs. Savage, 5 Mason, 460.

19. To constitute a confinement of the master within the purview of the same act, it is sufficient that there is a personal seizure or restraint of the master, although it may be for the purpose of inflicting personal chastisement upon the master. Ib.

20. The master has authority to displace the mate and all other subordinate officers, during the voyage. If he abuses his authority, he is responsible for the wrong.

Semble, that the mate is a seaman, within the crimes act of 1790, ch. 36, § 12. Ib.

SHIP.

In an assumpsit to recover one quarter of the proceeds of the sale of a vessel and of her earnings previously to the sale, the plaintiff, in support of his title, produced a bill of sale of one quarter thereof from S., who with three others was the first owner of the vessel. The defendant produced a paper, executed previously to the sale to the plaintiff, by all the first owners, whereby they agreed to 'pledge' to the defendant the vessel, then building as security for his advance thereon, and to allow the defendant to buy any part of the vessel, at a certain rate per ton. The vessel was afterwards sold by the defendant; but his advances amounted to more than the proceeds of the sale and earnings. Held, that the last mentioned instrument was not an absolute transfer, nor a mortgage, nor a pledge; and that it was incompetent to avoid the subsequent transfer to the plaintiff. Bonsey vs. Amee, 8 Pick. 236.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

1. Goods shipped on board a vessel, are still in transitu after the arrival of the vessel in which they are shipped, until they are taken possession of on behalf of the consignee. Naylor vs. Dennie, 8 Pick. 198.

2. An attachment of goods on board a vessel, as the property of the consignee does not defeat the right of the consignor to stop them in transitu. Ib.

3. Though the right of stoppage in transitu on the part of the consignor, is adverse to that of the consignee, yet the consignor's right of stoppage is not defeated by his obtaining from the consignee a writing, in which the consignee declares that he revokes the order for the consignment, declines to receive the goods, and requests the master of the ship, or any other person having the goods in his custody, to deliver them to the consignor. Ib.

TOWN.

The selectmen of any town, the inhabitants of which are exposed to the spreading of the small pox among them, may prevent such spread by procuring the inoculation for the kine pox among those exposed, and the town may legally vote a tax to defray the expense of the same. Hazen vs. Strong, 2 Vermont Cases, 427.

TRESPASS.

1. A mortgagee of personal property mortgaged to secure a debt, may maintain trespass against a stranger, who takes it from the possession of the mortgager, although the trespass be committed before the debt becomes due. Woodruff vs. Halsey, 8 Pick. 333.

2. A mortgagee of a building standing not on land of the mortgager, but on that of a third person, may maintain trespass against a stranger who pulls down and carries away the building, the building being unoccupied at the time of the trespass, and the mortgagee not having taken actual possession. Ib.

TRUST.

One receiving trust property, knowing it to be such, in payment of his own debts, is liable to account for the same to the cestui que trust. Towle vs. Mack, 2 Vermont Cases, 19.

VARIANCE.

In an action to recover damages for the non performance of a contract for the sale of lands a variance, in respect to the locality of the land, between the contract laid in the declaration and that proved is fatal. Obert vs. Whitehead, 6 Halst. 293.

WAGER.

One cannot recover for property won of another on a wager, That a certain chaise was the property of A. B. Collamer vs. Dey, 2 Vermont Cases, 144.

WASTE.

1. The court will not grant rules to stay waste in actions of trespass. Leeds vs. Doughty, 6 Halst. 193.

2. The statute of Gloucester, (Ed. 6. c. 5,) giving an action of waste against tenant for life, for the recovery of the place wasted and treble damages, has been adopted as a part of the law of Massachusetts: though in respect to tenant in dower it has been modified by our own statutes. Sackett vs. Sackett, 3 Pick. 309.

3. It is not waste in a tenant for life to cut down timber trees for the purpose of making necessary repairs on the estate, and to sell them and purchase boards with the proceeds, for such repairs, provided this be proved to be the most economical mode of making the repairs. Loomis vs. Wilbur, 5 Mason, 13.

WAY.

1. If the owner of the soil set apart a piece of land for the public use, and it is used and enjoyed by the public for fifteen years, or more, it becomes a highway, and cannot afterwards be reclaimed by the original donor, or by any claiming through or under him; and whoever obstructs the free passage of the public thereon, may be proceeded against by indictment. State of Vermont vs. Wilkinson, 2 Vermont Cases, 480.

2. And a shorter period than fifteen years may, under circumstances, afford sufficient ground on which to found a presumption of right in favor of the public. Ib.

3. A right of way in esse may pass by deed of bargain and sale, duly acknowledged and recorded. Hays vs. Richardson, 1 Gill & Johns. 336.

4. A transfer of way de novo may be by grant or at lease, but cannot be effected by way of bargain and sale. Ib.

5. A right of way may be said to lie in the county where it exists, or is exerciseable. Ib.

6. Where one has a right of way over another's land, and the way is not defined, if the owner of the land stops up the way which is in use, the other party will be justified in going over another part of land. Farnum vs. Platt, 8 Pick. 339.

WILL.

Where G. by his last will devised certain tracts of land to his three sons in fee, and also devised to his daughters, 'the right, privilege, and liberty residing and living in the houses, with, and using and cultivating with themselves and their negroes, stock, and of keeping their negroes, and all their other property thereon with them, in common with my sons, all my lands during the term that my said daughters should remain single and unmarried,' it was held that the daughters did not take an estate for life or any other less estate in common with their brothers, which was susceptible of partition: and that the devise to them was a mere charge for their benefit upon the lands of the testator, and incapable of alienation to a stranger. Per Bland, Chanc. Warfield vs. Gambrill, 1 Gill & Johns. 503.

WITNESS.

A person not named in the suit, but who in point of interest, is the actual defendant, cannot be compelled to testify for the plaintiff in the suit. White vs. Everett, 1 Vermont Cases, 181.

CHANCERY

Principal cases in Paige's Chancery Reports, vol. I.

ASSIGNMENT.

C. held a single bill, or sealed note against H. for $2425, payable to himself in twelve months from the date, with interest. C. borrowed $100 of M., and pledged this sealed note to him to secure the repayment, and indorsed his name in blank on the note. M. being indebted to the Tradesmen's Bank in the sum of $2600, agreed to transfer the note to the bank, as security for $1000, part of the debt he owed the bank, provided the bank would advance to him the remainder of the note. The bank advanced the money and M indorsed his name in blank on the note, and delivered it to the bank. M. afterwards became insolvent, and never paid any part of the $1000, or of the money advanced to him by the bank. Soon after C. delivered the note to M., M. received a larger sum of money belonging to C. than the amount C. owed him. The bank was ignorant of the right of C., and gave H. notice not to pay the note to any one except themselves. C. gave notice to the bank of his title to the note, and demanded it from them. The bank refused to deliver C. the note. Held, that C. having both the prior equity and the legal right was entitled to the note. Covile vs. Tradesman's Bank, 1 Paige, 131.

Had the note been negotiable, and had it been taken by the bank in the usual course of business, the equity of the bank would have been equal to that of C.; and the legal right of the bank to collect the money due on the note in their own name, would have prevailed over the prior equity of C. Ib.

Aliter, if the note, although negotiable, had been transferred to the bank merely as a security for an antecedent debt. Ib.

The assignee of a judgment takes it subject to all the equities which existed against it in the the hands of the assignor. Webster vs. Wise, 1 Paige, 319.

Where the subject of litigation was a fund in the hands of an insolvent assignee, who was a defendant in the cause and had no personal interest therein, but claimed the fund for the benefit of others, the money was ordered to be brought into court, and invested to abide the further order of the court. Haggerty vs. Duane, 1 Paige, 321.

BANKRUPT.

Where a British subject being indebted, left England, and while on his voyage to this country, and before he arrived here, he was, under the laws of great Britain, declared a bankrupt, and provisional assignees were appointed; it was held, that the assignment to such assignees divested the title of the bankrupt to the personal property brought with him to this country. Plestoro vs. Abraham, 1 Paige, 236.

And an injunction will lie, upon the application of such assignees, to restrain a third person from delivering the goods to the bankrupt, and also to restrain the latter from receiving or prosecuting for the same. Ib.

And the commencement of suits against the bankrupt by his creditors in the courts of common law of New York, will not defeat the effect of the assignment to his assignees. Ib.

CITIZEN.

A citizen of one state becomes a citizen of any other state, when he makes such other state the place of his actual residence. Rodgers vs. Rodgers, 1 Paige, 183.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1831.

MUNICIPAL COURT.

While everybody admits the propriety of doing something with regard to the location of this Court, nothing is done, or likely to be, so far as we can learn. If it were to be transferred with its jurisdiction to Middlesex, it could hardly be more completely out of the way of those who are interested in its proceedings and would be disposed to take a part in its business. The officers, lawyers, juries and parties unite in complaining of its condition and praying for a change, and those of the public especially, who have occasion to go into it, join them. Why should the business of so important a tribunal be done in a corner,—in an obscure, crowded, noisy, close, dirty room, in a remote part of the city, where nobody goes, but upon compulsion; while there are convenient unoccupied public rooms, near the centre of business, which may, with little or no expense, be appropriated for its accommodation? The court is, in every way, respectable and worthy the confidence of the public; let it, then, be placed in a respectable position, where the situation of the Judge, counsel, witnesses and juries, may be rendered, at least, something more comfortable and less perilous than that of the prisoners at the bar.

The following case tried in that Court, at the April Term, will be found to contain some points of interest to the profession.

CASE OF AMOS WARREN—A CONVICT

Amos Warren, a convict in the State Prison, was brought into Court by a writ of Habeas Corpus, directed to the Warden, to answer to an Information which had been filed against him by James T. Austin, Esq. the Attorney of the Commonwealth for the County of Suffolk, and to receive an additional sentence pursuant to the act of 1827, c. 118, § 19. The charges contained in the information were, that at the Supreme Judicial Court, in Norfolk County, October, 1811, he was convicted of the crime of Forgery, and sentenced to hard labor in the State Prison for eight years, which sentence was executed upon him there.—That at the Supreme Judicial Court, in the same County, in October 1821, he was committed on two indictments, each of which was for the crime of Forgery, and that he was sentenced upon each to suffer two years of hard labor in the State Prison, which sentences were also executed upon him there. And that at the May Term of this Municipal Court in 1826, he was convicted of the crime of breaking into a shop in the night time, and of committing a Larceny in the same, for which he was sentenced to hard labor in the State Prison for five years, and that he was still remaining there in execution of that sentence. By the record of the convictions in 1821, the party was tried and convicted under the name of James M. Williams, alias James Woodward. And it was averred, that said Amos Warren, the convict, now in the State Prison, was the same person who was named in each of the said convictions.

Upon his arraignment on the 8th of April, he denied the truth of the charges, and his trial was assigned for the 14th. A jury was then empannelled to try the issue. The prisoner's defence was conducted by Samuel D. Parker, Esq. To maintain the issue on the part of the Government, Mr Austin produced copies of the three first convictions, authenticated under the seal of the Supreme Judicial Court, and by the signature of the Clerk of that Court for the County of Norfolk. The original record of the conviction of the prisoner in this Court was read to the Jury.

To prove his identity, Stephen Bennet was sworn as a witness and testified, that he had been an Officer of the State Prison since 1814, that he had known the prisoner from childhood, that he was confined in the prison as a convict in 1814, and for some years afterwards,—that after his discharge from that first confinement, he was again, in 1821, received into the prison as a convict. And that having completed that second confinement, he was again, in 1826, received into the prison as a convict, and was still held under that sentence. During his second period, he was known and called by the name of James Williams. But the witness stated that convicts are always called by the name under which they are committed, but that it was known to him at the time, that his true name was Amos Warren.

Mr Parker rested the defence on the supposed deficiency of evidence to prove the identity. He insisted that the several prosecutors, and the jurors who tried the Defendant at the times mentioned in the records, should have been called to say, whether he was the same man.

But Mr Austin contended, on the part of the Government, that the testimony of Mr Bennett was not only sufficient, but better than any other which could be produced. It was not to be expected, that either the prosecutors or jurors, at the distance of ten and twenty years could identify the Defendant; but it was part of the duty of the officers of the Prison, and it resulted from their daily intercourse with the convicts, to be able to identify their persons at distant periods.

In committing the case to the Jury, Judge Thacher informed them, that the process was founded on the act of 1827, c. 118, § 19, which enacts, that if a party shall be in the State Prison, under a legal conviction for a crime, the punishment of which shall be, by law, confinement to hard labor for any term of years, and shall have been upon a legal conviction, before sentenced to a like punishment; he is liable by that statute to be further sentenced to hard labor for an additional period of time. And in case the said convict shall have been twice before convicted and sentenced in manner aforesaid, he shall be punished by confinement to hard labor for life. The nature of the crime for which the party is, at the time, confined in prison, and the sentence to which he may be liable, and the sentence which was awarded against him upon the former conviction, are therefore material to be considered.

Amos Warren, the convicted Defendant, is now charged to be in the State Prison, under sentence for an aggravated Larceny, and the three former convictions were in each case for the crime of Forgery, which offences severally subjected him, on conviction, to be sentenced to hard labor for a term of years. Two of these convictions, the second and third, were at one and the same term of the Supreme Judicial Court, in Norfolk County, in 1821. But the words of the act are general, not requiring the convictions at different terms of a Court. If the party has committed the two offences, and has been convicted at one and the same term of a Court, it is within the letter and spirit of the law. Formerly, we gave a more lenient construction to the statute, allowing both sentences to constitute but one term of confinement, as they followed each other in immediate succession. But the Supreme Court has not sanctioned it; and every inferior tribunal is bound by their judgment.

The several convictions in the information are proved by the records, which in the estimation of the law are the highest evidence, being absolute verity. *

The records of the several convictions being shown, and it being proved by the testimony of an officer of the Prison, that the Defendant was confined there during the several periods; it will follow, that he was there pursuant to the judgments shown, unless he can disprove the fact; which may be done by proving that he was there for some other cause. But he has made no attempt to do so; and if the Jury believe the evidence, they are bound to find that the charges are true.

For where the law is clear and the facts are proved, the jury are bound in conscience and duty to pronounce verdict a accordingly.

It is not for us to inquire, whether the law is se vere and falls heavily upon a citizen. That would be to leave our sphere of duty, and to intrench upon the prerogative of the Legislature. If any hardship is found in any instance to flow from the regular operation of the Law, there is another department of the government, which can interfere and make things equal.

When the Defendant in this case committed his second, and third and fourth offences, his eyes were open, and he had a full knowledge that by law he would be subjected to a higher degree of punishment for these offences. His crimes were committed not only against all good conscience, but against experience. If therefore he should now by the verdict, be cut off from society, the day of repentance being past, it is because society deems him to be an enemy, and will not again suffer him to go at large.

But before the Jury should render a general verdict against the prisoner, they must be satisfied as to his identity, and that he was the same person who now being confined to hard labor in the State Prison, under sentence for an aggravated Larceny, had been thrice before convicted of the crimes of Forgery as set forth in the Information.

The Jury found, that the charges were true, and he was sentenced to be confined to hard labor in the State Prison, for and during the term of his natural life.

* 'Legally records are restrained to the rolles of such only as are Courts of record, and not the rolles of inferior, nor of any other courts which proceed not secundem legem et consuetudinem Angliæ. And the rolles being the records or memorialls of the judges of the courts of record import in them such incontrollable credit and verite, as they admit no averment, plea, or proofe to the contrarie.' Co. Lit. 260.'

---

NEW HAMPSHIRE REPORTS,

VOL. V.—PART I.

W. being indebted to F. S. agreed to sign a note for the amount as a surety, with K. A note was written, in which W was named as principal and S. and K. as sureties, and was signed by W. and S., and then carried to K., who refused to sign it; but it was without the consent of S., carried to F., who with a full knowledge of the circumstances under which the name of S. had put been on the note, received it. It was held that S. was not bound to pay the note. Hill vs. Sweetser.

Writs of error are judicial writs, and need not be indorsed. Tracy vs. Perry et al.

A justice of the peace may render a judgment upon a confession under the statute of December 20, 1808, for a sum exceeding thirteen dollars and thirtyfour cents. Perry vs. Page.

In an action of covenant broken, if the summons, left with the defendant in the service of the writ, does not set forth what sum in damages is demanded, and for what, it a good cause to abate the writ. Putney vs. Cram.

In the process of foreign attachment, if the trustee, in his answer, admits that money or goods of the principal came to his hands, he is to be charged, unless he clearly discharges himself.

But if the trustee denies that he ever had in his hands any money or goods of the principal, he is to be discharged, unless it clearly appears from what he discloses, that he had money or goods of the principal in his hands, notwithstanding his denial. Wright vs. Foord and his trustee.

It is no objection to the testimony of a witness, that it goes to invalidate a title derived by deed from such witness.

If a man takes a conveyance of land from one, while another is in the open and visible possession of the same land, he will be presumed to have known everything in relation to the title which could have been obtained by the most diligent inquiry.

And if, in such a case, the person in possession has an equitable title to the land, the taking of a conveyance will be deemed the fraud, and nothing will pass to the grantee.

It is not an offence in this state to purchase land of one, while another is in possession adversely. Hadduck vs. Wilmarth.

H. and B. were partners, and the goods of the firm were attached by virtue of writs issued against each of the partners separately, for his own separate debt. Afterwards a creditor of the firm caused the same goods to be attached by virtue of a writ against H. & B. for a partnership debt—it was holden that the officer, who made the attachments, was bound to apply the proceeds of the goods to the satisfaction of the partnership debt, in preference to the debts due from the partner separately. Tappan & Mansfield vs. Blaisdell.'

G. gave to P. an obligation to deliver to the latter, the promissory note of a third person, for a certain sum within sixty days. Before the expiration of the sixty days, process of foreign attachment was served upon G., as the trustee of P., and G. had the note ready to deliver according to his contract, on the day named in the obligation—it was held that G. could not be holden as the trustee of P. N. H. I. F. Company vs. Platt.

Upon a libel for a divorce by a husband against his wife for the cause of adultery, evidence that the wife has sustained the character of a lewd and unchaste woman is inadmissible against her.

And if it be alleged in the libel that she committed adultery with a particular person, the libel is not sustained by proof of adultery with any other person.

Confessions of the wife that she has committed adultery with the person named in the libel are not alone sufficient to justify a divorce. Washburn vs. Washburn.

In an action against one of several makers of a promissory note, another of the makers is a competent witness for the defendant, being released by the latter from all claim to contribution, to prove the consideration of the note to have been an illegal contract for the sale of the office of deputy sheriff.

The office of deputy sheriff cannot be the subject of a sale, and a contract for such a sale is illegal and void.

Where a contract is entire, if a part of the consideration be illegal, the whole contract is void. Carleton vs. Whitcher.

---

CONTEMPT OF COURT; or, blowing hot and cold.—It is said that a late eminent judge, while holding a court on a sultry July day, being oppressed by the heat, directed a door which opened directly on the bench, to be left open. The door was repeatedly shut, and the order as often repeated. At length the judge's patience being exhausted, he committed an unfortunate fellow for shutting the door. Before afternoon the weather changed, a cold easterly storm blew up, and the judge was more annoyed than before, for every man, woman, and child who came in, carefully left the door wide open. Vexed beyond endurance, the judge finally committed a man for leaving the door open. The two delinquents met in prison, and the same room contained two prisoners, both confined for contempt of court; the one in leaving open, the other in shutting the door.—J. of Law.

VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS, recently received from Europe, and for sale by GRAY & BOWEN, No 141 Washington street.

Browne's Self Interpreting Bible, with notes, references, illustrations, reflections, and a memoir of the author; in one large quarto volume.

The Mirror of Parliament, edited by John Barrow, Esq. This work contains a complete account of the doings and debates in the British Parliament, during the last December session ; in eight parts, folio.

Select Views on the River Clyde, engraved by Joseph Swan, with historical and descriptive illustrations; in one quarto volume, with fortytwo splendid engravings.

Select Views of the Lakes of Scotland, from original paintings ; in two parts.

Hinton's History and Topography of the United States. This work will be completed in thirty numbers, quarto, with ninety engravings; eight numbers are already received.

History of the sufferings of the Church of Scotland, from the restoration to the revolution ; by Rev. Robert Wodrow; 4 vols. 8vo.

History and Antiquities of the Doric Race ; by C. O. Müller ; 2 vols. 8vo.

History of Scotland, from the Union; by John Struthers ; 2 vols. 8vo.

A Selection from the Papers of the Earls of Marchmont ; illustrative of events from 1685 to 1750 ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, complete in two vols. 8vo.

A System of Geography, popular and scientific ; illustrated by a complete series of maps and other engravings ; by James Bell ; 3 vols. 8vo.

McUre's History of Glasgow, with plates and illustrations ; 1 vol.

History of Modern Greece ; by James Emerson ; 2 vols. 8vo.

Rollins' Ancient History, with Life, notes and numerous maps and plates ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Thompson's Narrative of an official visit to Guatamala ; 1 vol.

Six Years' residence in the United States of America ; by Peter Neilson ; 1 vol.

Lardner's Cyclopedia ; complete set as far as published ; 16 vols.

Lardner's Cabinet Library, annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 1831.

Murphy's Treatise on the art of Weaving; with fifteen engravings ; 1 vol.

Mackenzie on the Diseases of the Eye ; 1 vol.

Spix's Travels in Brazil, with engravings ; 2 vols. 8vo.

BYRON'S WORKS—a new and beautiful edition, with a portrait, and other engravings ; in 4 vols. 16mo.

Evan's Sketch of the Denominations of the Christian World ; 1 vol.

Addison's Works ; 4 vols. ; a new edition.

Bowring's Poetry of the Magyars; 1 vol.

Constable's Miscellany ; vols. 60 to 65 inc.

Family Library.—Lives of British Painters—Lives of Physicians—Life of Bruce—Court and Camp of Buonaparte—Demonology and Witchcraft.

Foreign Tales and Traditions ; 2 vols.

The Casquet, or Literary Gem ; edited by Alexander Whitelaw ; 2 vols.

do do do (2d series) 2 vols.

The Atheneum, an original Literary Miscellany; 1vol.

The Midsummer Medley for 1830; by the author of Brambletye House.

Life on board a Man of War ; 1 vol.

Robertson's Parent's Guide to Baptism ; 1 vol.

Gospel Truth accurately stated and illustrated ; by Rev. John Brown ; 1 vol.

Outline of the Scripture Evidence for the Trinity; 1 vol.

The New Testament, translated by Doddridge, Campbell and Macknight ; 1 vol. 12mo.

An Essay on Chemical Analysis; by M. Thenard; translated by J. G. Children ; 1 vol.

Aids to Reflection ; by S. T. Coleridge ; 1 vol.

Fabliaux, or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries.

A Help to Professing Christians ; by Rev. John Barr ; 1 vol.

The Wine Drinker's Manual ; 1 vol.

The Shamrock, a collection of Irish Songs.

The National Minstrel ; a choice selection of popular songs.

Parochial Psalmody ; by J. P. Clarke.

Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History.

Pinnock's Modern Geography and History.

The Caterer ; being a selection of pieces in prose and verse ; 1 vol.

Johnson's Dictionary, complete in one imperial 8vo.

Morewood's Essay on Inebriating Liquors.

Dibdin's Library Companion ; 1 vol.

Biblia Hebraica.

Novum Testamentum Græce.

Aristophanes Comædiæ.

Sophocles Tragædiæ.

Pindari Carmina.

Æschyli Tragædiæ. May 21

---

JUST published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Language.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours ; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise ; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII. Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books ; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide ; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIV. for May, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College.

II. President Wayland's Sermon. The Certain Triumph of the Redeemer. A Discourse. By Francis Wayland, D. D.

III. Meaning of Αἰων. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays.

IV. Grimké's Discourses. 1. An Address on the Expediency and Duty of adopting the Bible as a Class Book. By T. S. Grimké. 2. An Oration of the Advantages to be derived from the Introduction of the Bible and of Sacred Literature, as Essential Parts of all Education. By Thomas S. Grimké.

V. Children's Books. 1. The Young Reader. By John Pierpont. 2. Peter Parley's Tales about the Sun, Moon and Stars. 3. Tales of Travels, West of the Mississippi. By Solomon Bell. 4. Cousin Elizabeth. By the Author of 'A Visit to the Sea Side.' 5. The Children's Robinson Crusoe. By a Lady. 6. The Little Girl's Own Book. By Mrs Child.

VI. History of English Baptists. Sermons on Various Important Public Occasions. By Robert Hall, A. M. 3. Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Rev. Andrew Fuller. By J. W. Morris. Editedby Rufus Babcock, Jr. 4. Asiatic Journal for British India.

VII. Sulivan's Political Class Book. The Political lass Book, By William Sullivan. Counsellor at Law. With an Ap pendix, by George B. Emerson.

VIII. Dr Waterhouse's Essay on Junius. An Essay on Junius and his Letters ; embracing a Sketch of the life and character of Wm. Pitt, &c.; with reflections relating to the Affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to1785. By Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

IX. The Way of Truth and Union.

---

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

---

SPLENDID BIBLE. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

---

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals ; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars. April 9.

---

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

---

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

---

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. Jusl published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

---

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

---

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1831. NO. XLVI.

MERCANTILE LAW.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

(Concluded.)

Again, every carrier or wharfinger has a lien on goods which come into his possession, not only for the charges due in respect of these particular goods, but for the general balance owing to him from the consignee; unless, therefore, he chooses to waive his right, it is manifest that no act of the consignee can amount to a taking of possession, until this claim is satisfied. Accordingly, where a carrier had actually begun to deliver, but afterwards, on information of the consignee's insolvency, re-shipped the part already landed, and detained the whole under a claim for a general balance of freight, it was held that delivery had not taken place, that the consignor was entitled to retake the goods by virtue of his right of stoppage.* Subject, however, to this limitation, there can be no doubt, that if the delivery has commenced and a part of an entire consignment has been actually taking possession of by the vendee, the right of stoppage is gone for the whole.†

The transfer of goods in the possession of a wharfinger or a warehouseman, by handing to the purchaser a delivery order or dock-warrant, has been already considered under the general head of delivery. In such cases the can be no doubt, notwithstanding a contrary opinion attributed in one instance to Lord Ellenborough,‡ that until the warehouse-man has done some act indicating an assent to the transfer, the seller has a right to countermand the delivery. This, however, ought to be regarded not so much an act of stoppage in transitu in the proper sense of that term, as a revocation of an unexecuted order.§

But there is one mode of taking constructive possession by an act of ownersnip, too important in its effect on commercial operations, to be dismissed with a cursory notice. It is, as we have more than once had occasion to remark, the invariable practice for the shipper of goods to transmit to the consignee by the first opportunity one of the bills of lading, which therefore usually arrives before the cargo of which it advises the consignment. Now, the mere possession of this document by the consignee himself does not turn the property which he has acquired in the goods by the delivery on board into such an absolute right of possession, as to defeat the consignor's privilege of stoppage. But bills of lading, are, as we have seen, by the custom of merchants, assignable, and the effect of such assignment, accompanied with delivery, to a bonâ fide indorsee for valuable consideration, is to invest him with a full and unqualified property in the goods represented by the document. Suppose then, that the consignee indorses over the bill of lading—that he becomes insolvent—and that the consignor, in consequence, before actual delivery reclaims the goods. In this conflict of rights between the vendor and the indorsee of the bill of lading, which is to give way? A question so important to the interests of commerce was not, as may be supposed, settled without some controversy; in fact, it gave rise to a memorable difference of opinion among the great legal authorities of Westminster Hall. The history of the well-known case of Lickbarrow v. Mason, in which the point was first solemnly raised, is briefly this: Four bills of lading were taken by the shipper to order or assigns; two of them he sent indorsed in blank to the consignee, who transmitted them, together with the invoice, to his agent, for the purpose of enabling him to receive and sell the goods; at the same time drawing upon the latter bills for a considerable sum, which was duly honored. The consignee subsequently becoming insolvent, and the bills which had been drawn on him for the price having been dishonored, the shipper sent the two remaining bills of lading, specially indorsed, to an agent, who thereupon obtained possession of the cargo from the master, and sold it for the benefit of the shipper. An action was consequently brought by the indorsee of the first set of bills, and these facts having appeared, judgment was given in the court of King's Bench for the plaintiff.* The defendant appealed to the Exchequer Chamber, and there, in an elaborate judgment delivered by Lord Loughborough, the decision was reversed.† The case was then carried into the House of Lords, and the judges being called upon to deliver their opinion seriàtim, a most luminous and masterly exposition of the doctrine was given by Mr Justice Buller,‡ supporting the resolution of the King's Bench. The question, however, was not even yet determined, the case being sent back for a new trial, on a mere technical point. On this second trial a special verdict was found, detailing the facts given above, and the case being brought into the King's Bench for judgment, the court satisfied themselves by saying that their former opinion remained unshaken.§ Here the matter rested; and although it is obvious, that the question can hardly be considered as having been conclusively settled by these proceedings, yet has the judgment of the court of King's Bench from that time been explicitly acquiesced in; and it is now an undoubted rule of law, that after assignment by the consignee of a bill of lading to an indorsee for value, without notice, the right of stoppage is gone.‖

We have placed some stress on the words 'for value,' and 'without notice,' because, as the rule was adopted for the protection of the just rights of third persons acquired under a known usage of trade, it is clear, that in the first place, it can have no application where there has been no consideration for the transfer, and consequently, no interest acquired by the assignee; and that, in the second place, it ought to have no application where the assignee is aware, or has good reason to suppose that the vendor is not likely to obtain payment from the consignee. It must not, however, be understood, that the title of the indorsee is affected by the mere fact of his knowing that the goods have not been paid for at the time of the assignment. The 'notice' here spoken of is, to use the words of Lord Ellenborough, 'notice of such circumstances as render the bill of lading not fairly and honestly assignable;'* and therefore, if the indorsee has no reason for doubting the ability of the consignee to settle for the price, it matters not though he be aware that no payment in money has been actually made.† But if any circumstance transpire indicating fraud or collusion between the consignee and the indorsee of the bill of lading—if, for instance, it appears that the latter was aware of the insolvency of the consignee, and knew, moreover, that he was still debtor for the goods—the law in that case will afford him no aid, and his title must yield to the more honest claim of the vendor.‡

Having thus shown by whom, under what cirstances, and within what period, the right of stoppage may be exercised, and when and by what means it is determined, it remains only to consider the effect of the assertion of this claim of the vendor upon the several rights of the vendor himself, the vendee, and the middleman. No point in commercial law is more clearly established than this: that after delivery to a carrier by land, or on board a ship, and before an act of stoppage, the vendee may maintain an action of trover against any one withholding the goods from him.§ And

---

* Crawshay v. Eades, 1 B. & C. 181. The carrier cannot resist the claim of the vendor on the ground of his lien for the general balance owing from the vendee. Oppenheim v. Russel, 3 Bos. & Pul, 42.

† Slubey v. Heyward, 2 H. Bl. 504. Hammond v. Anderson, 1 N. R. 69.

‡ Harmon v. Anderson, 2 Campb. 243.

§ See on this subject, Williams v. Everett, 14 East, 582. Yates v. Bell, 3 B. & A. 643. Scott v. Porcher, 3 Mer. 652. Bailey v. Culverwell, 8 B. & C. 440. Dan. & Lloyd, 176. Winks v. Hassal, 9 B. & C. 272. Dan. & Lloyd, 312. Wedlake v. Hurley, 1 Cromp. & J. 83. Lloyd & Welsby, 330. The point was assumed by Bayley, B. as indisputable in a late case in the exchequer, Melling v. Kelshaw.

* 2 T. R. 63. † 1 H. Bl. 357.

‡ See an excellent report of this in the note to Newsom v. Thornton. 6 East, 23. n.

§ 5 T. R. 683.

‖ Those who wish to acquaint themselves with all which can be said on both sides of this important question, will do well to read the judgment of Lord Loughborough, 1 H. Bl. 357. and the opinion of Mr Justice Buller, 6 East, 23. (n) The controversy was not a new one among jurists. The great commercial lawyers, Valin and Emerigon, espoused opposite sides; the former maintaining that bills of lading were negotiable to all intents, like bills of exchange, and that commodities at sea might be sold even to the prejudice of creditors; the latter, on the other hand, contending that bills of lading were not negotiable instruments, and that the claim of the seller for the price could not be predjudiced by a sale of the commodities at sea.—See Valin, Nouveau Comment sur l'ordonnance de la Marine, vol. i. p. 572. Emerigon, Traite des Assurances, and des Contrats a la grosse, vol. i. p. 319.

* Cuming v. Brown, 1 Campb. 104. 5 East, 506.

† Ibid.

‡ Wright v. Campbell, 4 Burr. 2046. 1 W. Bl. 628. Solomons v. Nissen, 2 T. R. 674. As to the degree of title conferred by the different modes in which bills of lading are made out and transferred, and the consequent obligation of the master to deliver, that, we apprehend, is a subject to be treated of more poperly under the head of shipping. The effect of the indorsement or pledge of a bill of lading by a factor upon the rights of the real owner or consignor, certainly has no reference to the subject at present under consideration, and must be reserved for that of 'Prncipal and Agent.'

§ Snee v. Prescot, 1 Atk. 245. (per Lord Hardwicke Ch.) The Constantia, 6 Rob. Adm. Rep. 322.(per Lord Stowell).

it is equally clear, that after a claim of stoppage duly made by the vendor, he also (subject to the exception which has been made in favor of the holder of a bill of lading) may bring an action of trover for the goods, either against the middleman who detains or has delivered them to the vendee after notice of countermand, or against any other person into whose hands they may have passed.* Now trover, as we have said, can only be brought by one who has both a property and right of possession in the goods. It follows, therefore, that until the stoppage, the property and right of possession is in the vendee, and that after stoppage it is re-vested in the vendor. But there is this difficulty—the delivery of the goods to the carrier or shipmaster is an appropriation by the vendor, or in other words, an execution of the order, which at once transfers the ownership to the orderer or buyer; as a consequence of which, it is well known that the latter is at the risk of loss or accident during the conveyence † —a risk, which in sea-voyages he ordinarily protects himself against by insurance. Now there can be no doubt, because the point has been frequently determined, that neither the bankruptcy of the vendee, nor the stoppage of the goods by the vendor, has the effect of rescinding the subsisting contract.‡ The paramount ownership must consequently remain in the vendee, notwithstanding the re-taking of the goods by the vendor; because, although that act may clothe him again with the right of possession, it cannot do away with the effect of the appropriation once made. Upon the whole, therefore, we apprehend the real condition of the parties to be this; the ownership of the goods, once transferred to the vendee by the execution of the order, still remains in him, and he, or those who represent him, will be entitled (at all events within a reasonable time) to claim the goods from the vendor, on tendering the price originally agreed upon, and to sue him in trover, if he refuse to deliver them; while, conversely, the vender may, if he please, even after the resumption of possession, sue the vendee for the price, on condition that he is himself ready to deliver the goods.§ In the meantime he has, after a legitimate claim of stoppage, a subordinate or special property in the goods in respect of his right of possession, entitling him, as we have seen, to maintain an action of trover against all who withhold that possession from him. And thus, as it seems to us, is the apparent contradiction reconciled.

With respect to the middleman, it must be admitted, that called upon, as he frequently is, to decide a nice question of conflicting rights, he stands in a somewhat perilous situation. For an improper delivery to either party, he is liable to an action at the suit of the other.‖ It seldom, however, happens, that he is really a sufferer, the delivery being usually made under an idemnity from the party receiving. Where the conveyance is by sea, the claim of the shipper, as has been already intimated, is usually made through an agent, to whom one of the bills of lading is indorsed, for the purpose of enabling him to make the demand; and whether, on the refusal by the master to deliver, such an indorsee can maintain an action of trover for the goods in his own name,—in other words, whether the naked indorsement of lading, without a proof of value given, conveys a property in the subject represented by the bill—has been more than once a question before the courts. On the one hand, Lord Ellenborough, not only in one case intimated a strong opinion to the contrary;* but in a subsequent case expressly decided that it did not. His words are these, 'I am decidedly of opinion, that without value, the indorsee has not the legal property in the goods. No case has gone so far as to decide that a bill of lading is tranferable like a bill of exchange, and that the mere signature of the person entitled to the delivery of the goods, primâ facie passes the property in them to the indorsee. Much confusion has arisen from similitudinary reasoning upon this subject. There must be value upon the indorsement of a bill of lading, or no property in the goods is thereby transferred. The right to stop goods in transitu is a personal right of the seller, and cannot be thus assigned to another. In this case, the action should have been brought, not in the name of the agent, but of the consignor himself.†

Nevertheless, in the teeth of this opinion, thus strongly expressed, the Court of Common Pleas have since decided, that such an agent, armed only with his naked indorsement, may in his own name maintain an action of trover for the goods.‡ That this authority may not mislead others in practice, it is right to add, that the decision is supported by no reasoning, and is contrary to the opinion of the very learned and excellent judge before whom the cause was tried at Nisi Prus.§

[We cannot conclude this article without some notice of the case of Clay v. Harrison, 10 B. & C. 49. recently decided in the Court of King's Bench. The important facts of that case were as follows:—A contract was entered into for a quantity of timber of a specified sort and quality, to be shipped on board the chartered vessel of the orderer. The ship was sent, the timber put on board, and advice of the consignment forwarded to the buyer, who thereupon insured for the value. The vessel sailed on her return, but, being cast away on the voyage, notice of abandonment was given to the underwriters. Part of the cargo, however, was saved, and while lying ashore in charge of the captain, was claimed by the vendor, who had in the meantime received intelligence of the vendee's insolvency. An action being now brought by his assignees against the underwriters, the only question was, whether at the time of the loss the bankrupt had an insurable interest, in the goods. If he had any property in the timber, when the vessel was wrecked, he had undoubtedly an insurable interest, otherwise not. Now it is impossible to question that by the delivery on board, he acquired, not only a vested property in the goods but even a right of possession, subject only to the vendor's equitable privilege of stoppage. But the act of stoppage took place after the wreck, and, consequently, unless it had the effect not only of revesting the whole and exclusive property in the vendor, but also of retroactively annulling all which had been done—in other words, of rescinding the contract—it could not effect the interest of the vendee at the time of the loss. If the principles which we have laid down as the unquestionable result of decided cases, be in any degree correct, such a position cannot be maintained for a moment; and yet the court decided that the plaintiff's action could not be supported. Either, therefore, in our humble judgment, the case must be considered as anomalous, or principles, which seem too well settled even for controversy, must be subverted. The reporters of the case in Barn. & Cres. seem to have felt that there was something wrong, and endeavored, therefore, to support the decision by the following notable comment: 'It appears from the special case, that by the contract between the bankrupt and the vendors, the latter were to supply a cargo of timber. There was no bargain for any specific ascertained chattel, but the vendors were at liberty to supply any timber answering the description of that ordered; and, consequently, no property passed till the cargo of timber was appropriated by the vendors to the vendee, by the delivery on board the ship.' So far nothing can be more true; but mark what follows: 'The subsequent stoppage in transitu, supposing it had only the effect of revesting the possession in the vendors, and placing them in the same situation as if they had not parted with the goods, [a tolerably large supposition by the way], 'destroyed the effect of that delivery,' [an admirable consequence, the conclusion being narrower than the premiss!] 'which was the only circumstance which vested the property in the vendee, and, consequently, revested the property in the vendors.' [This used to be called reasoning in a circle—If the effect was to place the vendors in the same situation as if they had not parted with the goods, it revested the property in them: and, conversely, if it revested the property in them, it would place them in the same situation as if, &c. This little word if has other virtues, it seems, besides those of 'a peacemaker.'] They were then exactly in the same condition as if the goods had always remained in their warehouses; and, in that case, the bankrupt would have had no interest in the goods; his rights, if any, would have rested in contract merely.' Now without stopping to controvert the other points brought forward in this very singular note, we will content ourselves with asking, 1st, Was the contract subsisting at the time of the loss? Yes. 2ndly, What was the effect of the contract as it then stood? That the property in the timber was vested in the vendee. 3rdly, Did the stoppage in transitu rescind the contract? No. Then had not the vendee in fact a property, and consequently an insurable interest, at the time of the loss?]—Law Magazine.

---

Fox was one day expatiating to a company, in which Sheridan was present, on the impossibility of paying off the National Debt. 'In fact,' said he, 'the creditors of the nation stand as little chance of being paid as'—he paused for a strong illustration; ere he could find one, Sheridan supplied it—'your own.'

---

* Litt v. Cowley, 7 Taunt. 169.

† 6 Rob. Adm. Rep. 322.

‡ Hodgson v. Loy, 7 T. R, 445. Clay v. Harrison, 10 B. & C. 49. Lloyd & Welsby, 111; and the note on that case, ibid.

§ Kymer v. Suwercrop, 1 Camp. 109.

‖ See Litt v. Cowley, 7 Taunt. 169., and the numerous cases in which such actions have been brought. The vendor cannot, however, obtain the goods from the middleman without first satisfying the charges on them.

* Coxe v. Harden, 4 East, 211.

† Waring v. Cox, 1 Campb. 369. and see Sargent v. Morris, 3 B. & A. 77.

‡ Morrison v. Gray, 2 Bing. 260.

§ Lord Gifford.—Those who are desirous of seeing a philosophical and (we had almost said) an elegant summary of the law of stoppage in transitu, will do well to turn to the 'Code de Commerce, tit. Revendication. Our objection to codification has been already strongly recorded, and we are by no means disposed to retract or qualify the opinions we have expressed. Nevertheless, it must be admitted, that if it consisted merely, as in this instance it does, in a summary of principles generalised from cases of actual occurrence, lucidly arranged and clearly expressed, it would be impossible to dispute its excellence.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

CONTRACT.

Where a parol agreement was made for the purchase of a lot of land for the sum of $21 50 per acre, to be paid in seven equal annual payments, and by the agreement, the grantor was to have the lot surveyed, and to give a conveyance with warranty, on the payment of $300 by the grantee, and upon his executing to the grantor a bond and mortgage for the residue of the purchase money; and the grantee went into possession under the agreement, and continued in possession eight or nine years, making payments from time to time towards the land, for which the grantor gave receipts, specifying therein that the moneys received were in payment for the land, and that, the grantor was to give the grantee a deed therefor; the grantee made a payment of $333 soon after he went into possession; at the expiration of eight years from the time the agreement was made, the grantor tendered a deed to the grantee, and demanded payment or security for the balance of the purchase money; the defendant refused to accept the deed, alleging that it contained too much land, and that the grantor had included too much interest in the balance he claimed to be due; it was held, that neither party could take advantage of the agreement not being in writing; that it was too late for the defendant to object that the grantor had not caused a survey to be made of the lot, and delivered a deed therefor immediately after the first payment; that the defendant could only have put an end to the contract by tendering the balance due and demanding a performance of the contract on the part of the grantor; that a tender and demand, after a bill had been filed by the grantor for a specific performance, was a nullity. Knickerbacker vs. Harris, 1 Paige, 209.

An offer to purchase was made by a letter, and previous to the receipts of the letter by the other party, the party making the offer, died insolvent. The party receiving the letter consented to sell on the terms proposed, and sent an answer to that effect, but without any knowledge on his part of the death of the purchaser. Held, that he was not bound by such acceptance of the offer, and that the title to the property was not changed. Frith vs. Lawrence, 1 Paige, 434.

To make a valid contract, it is not only necessary that the minds of the contracting parties should meet on the subject of the contract, but that fact must be communicated to each other. Ib.

Where an offer to sell is made to a distant correspondent by letter, and he declines the offer, he cannot afterwards assent to it so as to make it a valid purchase without a subsequent assent of the other party also. Ib.

Where there is a contract for the purchase of land, and the person contracting to sell declines executing the contract, upon the ground that he is unable to give a good title, and the purchaser files his bill to compel the defendant to complete the contract, or to rescind it; if the defendant is able to give a good title at the time of the decree the complainant will be compelled to accept. Pierce vs. Nichols, 1 Paige, 244.

---

CORPORATION.

The privileges and franchises granted to a private corporation, are vested rights, and cannot be divested or altered, except with the consent of the corporation, or by a forfeiture declared by a proper tribunal. McLaren vs. Pennington, 1 Paige, 102.

A state cannot pass any law which alters or amends the charter of a private corporation, without the consent of such corporation. Ib.

But a law altering the remedy of one of the parties to a contract, is constitutional and valid. Ib.

Where, however, a state legislature reserves to itself in the very charter it grants to a private corporation, the right of altering, amending, or repealing the act of incorporation, a subsequent repeal of such act of incorporation will be valid and constitutional. Ib.

Such a reservation in the charter of a corporation, upon common law principles, would not be a condition repugnant to the grant, but a limitation of the grant. Ib.

And if such a reservation at common law would be repugnant to the grant, and therefore void, it is competent for a state legislature to alter this rule of the common law; and the reservation of such a power in the legislative grant, would of itself change the law in relation to that particular grant. Ib.

Where, in the election of corporate officers, no particular mode of proceeding is prescribed by law, if the wishes of the corporators have been fairly expressed, and the election was conducted in good faith, it will not be set aside on account of any informality in the manner of conducting the same. Philips vs. Wickam, 1 Paige, 590.

Whether at common law civil and corporate offices are authorised to hold over after the expiration of the time for which they were elected, until successors are appointed. Quære. Ib.

Where the officers of a corporation are not authorized to hold over, if the corporators, without the presence of any officers, or any act to be done on their part, possess the power to assemble and choose officers to carry into effect the objects of the incorporation, a neglect to choose officers at the proper time will not work a dissolution of the corporation, but will merely suspend the exercise of the powers of the corporation until proper officers are chosen. Ib.

But if the corporators have not the power to fill vacancies without the presence of their officers, or something to be done by them preparatory thereto, and such officers do not attend, or neglect to do the act requisite to the validity of the appointment, or there are no such officers, then, as the powers of the corporation cannot be revived, it is virtually dissolved.

The right of voting by proxy is not a general right, and the party who claims such right must show a special authority for that purpose. Ib.

But where property is devised or granted to a corporation, partly for its own use and partly for the use of others, the right of the corporation to take and hold the property for its own use, carries with it as a necessary incident the power to execute that part of the trust which relates to others. In the matter of Howe, 1 Paige, 214.

The court is not bound to decree a dissolution of the corporation, simply because a majority of the directors and stockholders request it to be done. In the matter of Niagara Insurance Company of New York, 1 Paige, 258.

But where the owners of a large proportion of the stock find it for their interest to withdraw their capital, it will be deemed presumptive evidence, that the interest of the stockholders generally will be promoted by a dissolution of the corporation. Ib.

---

COSTS.

Where exceptions are taken to the defendant's answer, some of which are allowed and others are disallowed, and the defendant excepts to so much of the master's report as allowed a part of the exceptions to the answer, and on hearing before the court, the master's report is confirmed, the complainant is entitled to the costs of the hearing, and also of the reference and of those exceptions to the answer which are allowed by the master; and the defendant is not entitled to the costs of the exceptions disallowed by the master. Richards vs. Baslow, 1 Paige, 138.

If any of the exceptions to the answer are well taken, the defendant must submit to answer further as to those exceptions, or he will not have costs of the exceptions which are disallowed by the master. Ib.

Where a judgment creditor having a claim upon the surplus moneys raised by the sale of mortgaged premises, litigates in good faith before the master, on a reference to settle the priority of liens, he will not be charged with the costs of such litigation. Norton vs. Whiting, 1 Paige, 578.

But if he excepts to the master's report, and those exceptions are disallowed, he may be charged with the costs of the hearing on the exceptions. Ib.

On a reference of exceptions to an answer, if part of the exceptions are allowed by the master, the complainant is entitled to costs on the exceptions allowed, and neither party is entitled to costs as to those which are disallowed. Richards vs. Barlow, 1 Paige, 323.

If some of the exceptions are disallowed, and none of them are allowed in full, the defendant is entitled to his costs on the reference. Ib.

On exceptions to a report, each party is entitled to the costs of the hearing as to the exceptions decided in his favor, which costs are to be set-off against each other. Ib.

Where the costs of exceptions on each side would be nearly equal, the usual practice of the court is to give no costs to either party. Ib.

Where in a bill filed for a specific performance of the contract or the sale of land, the complainant insisted upon the defendant's taking two acres more than he was bound to take, and the defendant declined paying interest, which the complainant was entitled to, neither party was allowed costs. Knickerbacker vs. Harris, 1 Paige, 209.

As a general rule a mortgager pays costs to the defendant, on a bill to redeem, although he is successful; but if the defendant has been guilty of improper conduct, he will be deprived of costs, and in some cases will be compelled to pay costs. Broeckway vs. Wells, 1 Paige, 617.

If a mortgager who is entitled to redeem, applies before filing his bill to the mortgagee for that purpose, and the latter refuses to allow him to redeem, the mortgagee will not only be deprived of costs, but may be compelled to pay costs to the complainant. Ib.

Where a party files his bill to redeem, the general rule is, that he must pay costs to the mortgagee, although he should be successful. Slee vs. Manhattan Company, 1 Paige, 48.

There are, however, exceptions to this rule;

as where the mortgagee sets up an unconscientious defence: in such case the mortgagee is not only refused costs, but must pay costs to the other party. Ib.

If a widow makes application for her dower before she files her bill, and it is refused, she will be entitled to costs; but where she neglected to make such application, and in her bill alleged that an outstanding mortgage was paid off, and insisted upon her right to be endowed of the whole premises, and claimed arrears previous to the purchase of the defendant, and the decree was against her upon all these points, no costs were allowed to either party. Russell vs. Austin, 1 Paige, 192.

Where the complainants became insolvent pending the suit, and assigned all their interest therein to a third person, the assignee was not permitted to proceed with the suit in their names, without giving security for costs. Massey vs. Gillelan, 1 Paige, 644.

Where the assignee after notice of the fraud attempted to enforce the judgment against the land, he was decreed to pay costs to the complainant. Webster vs. Wise, 1 Paige, 319.

Where a defendant in a bill of foreclosure knowingly sets up an unjust defence, and thereby subjects the complainant to extra costs and expense, he may be charged personally with the costs. Park vs. Peck, 1 Paige, 477.

ENGLISH.

LEGAL CHRONOLOGY
OF THE YEAR 1830.

January 16.—Lord Redesdale died in the 89th year of his age. His Lordship had been successively Solicitor-General, Attorney-General, Speaker of the House of Commons, and Lord Chancellor of Ireland.

February 5.—Parliament opened by Commission. In the speech read by the Lord Chancellor (Lord Lyndhurst), his Majesty recommended to the consideration of both Houses improvements in the Courts of Law.

9.—Mr M. A. Taylor moved for certain returns from the Court of Chancery.

12.—The Solicitor-General (Sir E. Sugden) brought in four bills to amend the laws relating to illusory appointments, the payments of debts out of real estates, and the property of infants, femes covert, and lunatic and infant trustees and mortgagees.

18.—Mr Peel obtained leave to bring in a bill for regulating the payment of fees to officers in the Courts of Common Law.

March 22.—The Lord Chancellor introduced a bill into the House of Lords for the better administration of justice, abolishing the Welsh judicature, and appointing three new judges.

April 1.—The Solicitor General introduced a bill for amending the law relative to insolvent debtors.—The Lord Advocate brought in a bill for introducing the trial by jury in the Court of Session in Scotland.

8.—Sir C. Wetherell moved for certain returns from the Court of Chancery.

30.—Mr Brougham moved for leave to bring in a bill for the establishment of Local judicatures.

May 10.—The Archbishop of Canterbury introduced a bill into the House of Lords permitting Compositions of Tithes in England.

25.—A bill introduced into the House of Lords to enable his Majesty, in consequence of his indisposition, to dispense with the Sign Manual.—Both Houses of Parliament agreed to an address to the Crown for the removal of Sir Jonah Barrington from the office of Judge of the Court of Admiralty in Ireland.

June 4.—The Solicitor General obtained leave to bring in a bill for regulating certain offices in the Court of Chancery.

17.—Mr Brougham brought into the House of Commons a bill for establishing Local Courts.—Common Law Fees Bill passed the House of Commons.

24.—A debate which lasted till four in the morning took place in the House of Commons on the bill for appointing a New Judge in Chancery. It was carried by 133 to 96.

26.—His Majesty George IV. died at Windsor, in the 68th year of his age, and 11th of his reign—The Privy Counsel assembled and gave orders for proclaiming the Duke of Clarence King, under the title of William the Fourth.

July 12.—Seven Catholic barristers sworn in King's Counsel at Dublin.

24.—Parliament dissolved.

October 26.—The new Parliament met.

November 2.—The King opened parliament in person.

4.—Mr Hope appointed Solicitor General for Scotland.

5.—Mr Doherty (Solicitor General for Ireland) introduced a bill for the better Administration of Justice in Ireland.

9.—The Solicitor-General introduced a bill to amend and extend the statute of Frauds.

10.—Mr Brougham, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a bill for the establishment of Local Judicatures.—Mr M. A Taylor moved for certain returns from the Court of Chancery.

11.—Mr Justice Bayley removed from the King's Bench to the Exchequer.

12.—Lord Tenderden brought into the House of Lords four bills for Reform in the Common Law.—Mr Justice Taunton and Mr Justice Patterson took their seats in the Court of King's Bench, and Mr Justice Alderson in the Common Pleas.

15.—The Lord Chancellor introduced the Regency Bill into the House of Lords.

17.—The three New Judges, Messrs Taunton, Alderson, and Patterson received the honor of knighthood.

18.—The Solicitor-General introduced a bill for amending the law relating to the attestation of Powers.

22.—Lord Lyndhurst resigned the Great Seal, and the Right Honorable Henry Brougham took his seat on the Woolsack in the House of Lords as Lord Chancellor, and afterwards was created Lord Brougham and Vaux.

24.—Thomas Denman, Esquire, was appointed Attorney-General, and William Horne, Esquire, Solicitor-General, and received the honor of Knighthood.

25.—The New Lord Chancellor took his seat in the Court of Chancery.

27.—Special Commissions issued for the trial of the rioters.

December 2.—The Lord Chancellor obtained leave to bring in a bill for establishing Local Courts in England.—Mr Law elected Common Serjeant:—

Numbers: Mr Law 118
Mr Hill 100

3.—Mr Jeffrey appointed Lord Advocate for Scotland.—Mr Cockburn appointed Solicitor-General for Scotland.

16—In the House of Commons Mr Campbell introduced a bill for the General Registry of Deeds.—Sir E. B. Sudgen moved for certain returns from the Court of Chancery.

17.—Common Law Commission renewed, Mr Justice Parke, Mr Justice Bosanquet, Mr Justice Alderson, Mr Justice Patterson and Mr Serjeant Stephen, appointed Commissioners.

21.—Lord Wynford introduced into the House of Lords a bill for preventing Frauds upon Creditors.—Legal Obs.

ON THE LAW OF KEEPING DOGS.

To the Editor of the Legal Observer.

SIR,—I beg to call your attention to a case just reported in Moody and Malkin's reports, in which my Lord Chief Justice Tindal has perspicuously stated the exact terms on which the law permits a man to keep a dog for the defence of his property. I allude to the case of Sarch v. Blackburn, 1 Moo. & Mal. 505. S. C. 4 Car. & P. 297., in which an action was brought by a person who, having endeavored to enter by a back way to the house, had been bitten by a dog belonging to the defendant. The direction of Tindal C. J. to the jury was as follows:—'There is no case which will exactly apply to this; such cases necessarily depend on their own circumstances, and the question that arises is a very nice one. The plaintiff certainly is not entitled to recover in this action if he was injured by his own fault. On this you will have to consider, whether he had a justifiable and reasonable cause for being where he was bit, such as would naturally induce him to go there, and would be a justification in an action of trespass brought against him for being there (as it would be as a license in law, if it was a way by which persons used to pass to the house;) and whether he was there without notice of his danger. There is no evidence to show why the plaintiff was on the spot in question, whether with a lawful or unlawful object. The law, however, would rather presume a lawful object; and there is no improbability in his having one, for he was on one of the ways to the house itself at mid-day, although certainly it was not the most public and usual way. If he was lawfully there, I do not think the mere fact of the defendant having put up the notice relied on would deprive him of his remedy. The mere putting up of the notice is not sufficient for this, unless the party injured is at least in such a condition as to be able to become cognisant of its contents. The plaintiff could not read, the notice therefore furnished no information to him; and there were no circumstance in the way in which the dog was kept to apprise him of his danger. If, therefore, he had a right to be where he was, I see no fault or negligence to deprive him of his remedy. Still the defendant will not be liable unless he is in fault, unless he knows the character of his dog, which he certainly did in this instance, and unless he keeps it improperly with that knowledge. The mere putting up the notice does not in this case, I think, excuse him. But it is said he has a right to keep a fierce dog for the protection of his property. He certainly has so, but not, in my opinion, to place it in the approaches to his house, so as to injure persons exercising a lawful purpose in going along those paths to the house. If the dog was placed in such a situation that he could injure the plaintiff, ignorant of the notice, and going to the house for a lawful purpose, by a way which he was entitled to use, I think that the defendant would not be protected from this action.

On the whole, the only question which I can leave to the jury is, on which side was there negligence? If the plaintiff was negligent, if he was where he ought not to have been, or if he neglected means of notice, he cannot recover; if the defendant was negligent, if he placed the dog where he might injure persons not themselves in fault, he is responsible.'

Yours obediently,
A SPECIAL PLEADER.

---

From the Legal Observer.

LORD KENYON ON THE STUDY OF THE LAW.

The following letter contains some important questions which every young man about to enter on the profession of the law, would most gladly propose to such an exalted character as Lord Kenyon. This is a task which has been already accomplished; and in Lord Kenyon's reply, the young student will not make any great mistake, if he should imagine the letter addressed to himself.

'MY LORD—I am a young man about to enter into the profession at the head of which you preside with such distinguished eminence, and am desirous of moving in the sphere I am placed in, with as much credit as it will admit of. To gain a competent knowledge of the spirit and principles of the law, must be most essentially necessary to the pure practice of it; and I am now induced by the accounts I have always heard of your lordship's goodness, humbly to request that you will be pleased to honor me so much as to communicate to me the course of reading necessary to be perused in order to attain so desirable an end.

'The mind without a guide to direct its exertions is like a traveller on a pathless desert, bewildered and confused; it proceeds without knowing whither, and perhaps sinks in the pursuit of that which, by timely assistance, it might have attained with pleasure.

'Your lordship will certainly be astonished at my presumption, yet I trust you will not wonder at the reason of it. It is natural for a man eager after knowledge, to wish to take it from the purest source. Common sense pointed out your lordship.

'If your lordship should not consider it beneath your dignity to take notice of this letter, I should have reason to consider it the happiest circumstance of my life, to have experienced your condescending goodness. If, on the contrary, you should smile at my folly, or be offended at my presumption, I shall be sufficiently punished by silence and neglect.

'Humbly entreating your lordship's forgiveness for having thus long obtruded on your valuable time, I beg leave to subscribe myself

'Your lordship's
Most devoted and obedient humble servant,
ROBERT CRABTREE.

'Halesworth, Suffolk.'

---

The following is Lord Kenyon's answer.

'SIR,—I am afraid you have concluded before this time I decline to answer your letter. To say the truth, I had some suspicion that the letter did not come from a real person; but being convinced of that, I do not delay to write to you. I wish it was in my power to propose any plan that you could rely on. The truth is, that, in the study of the law, a mass lies before the student enough to deter young minds, and they are left to hazard in which road to proceed.

'I would advise you to read very carefully Blackstone's Commentaries, and if you have the perseverance to go through it two or three times, I believe it would be of great use. After this, you may, perhaps, with some advantage, read Serjeant Hawkins' Abridgment of Coke's Littleton, and then proceed to Coke's Littleton, accompanying that arduous task with reference to the Abridgment I have mentioned, which will point out to you those points of that vast work which are now rather obsolete. When you have done this, you will read the more modern reports; Sir James Burrows', Mr Douglas', Mr Cowper's, and the Term Reports; and in Equity the 1st vol. of Equity Cases Abridged, Mr Cox's edition of Pere Williams, Hawkin's Reports in the time of Lord Talbot, and Precedents in Chancery. By the time this is done, you will be as good a judge as I am how to go on. If you mean to come to the bar, I would advise you to go to some able special pleader; but you will inform yourself who answers that description, as much ignorance now mixes in that profession. Conveyancing will be learned in the office you are placed in, and by referring to Horsman's or other books of precedents; and the poor law and sessions business from Mr Const's late book and Burn's Justice.

'I heartily wish you success, and that you may deserve it by acting honorably in the prosecution of your profession.

'Your humble servant,
'May 13th, 1795.' 'KENYON.

---

ESSEX SPRING ASSIZES.

Attorney.—Client's Privileged Communication.

In an action of ejectment, the attorney for the plaintiff being called by the plaintiff, was on cross examination asked by

Platt, whether a certain deed of conveyance belonging to the lessor of the plaintiff was in his possession?

The witness refused to answer the question, on the ground that he was not obliged to state anything affecting his client, which he knew merely from his client.

Platt submitted, that the witness must answer the question, as this case was different from one in which an attorney was called upon to state some fact, which he had learned from his client by means of a confidential communication with him, or to produce the title deeds of his client. It was merely inquired here, whether a certain deed of the client was in possession of the attorney.

Dowling, for the plaintiff, contended that the witness was not bound to answer the question. The answer in the negative or the affirmative might be exceedingly important to the lessor of the plaintiff. This might be a mere fishing question, to learn with certainty whether a particular deed was or was not in the possession of the witness, in order to carry on further proceedings at law or in equity. The capability which the witness might possess of answering the questions, was derived from his connexions with his client, and therfore must be viewed as privileged.

Garrow B. thought that the question came within the rule as to privileged communications between attorney and client, and therefore, if the witness declined answering, he could not say that he was obliged so to do. Doe d. Cook v. Barrett.

MORTGAGE.

Continued.

It seems to me, that the preceding remarks dispose of the principal grounds of the argument: but we have ample evidenee that no distinction between mortgages and judgments was ever made in practice. The doubt in the case of an older judgment was, whether anything but the clear resulting interest of the debtor could be sold; and on the theory of those by whom it was entertained, it is singular that it should have arisen. It was a postulate of that theory, that the interest of the older judgment creditor did not pass by the sheriff's deed, and in that view it is clear that he would not be entitled to satisfaction, out of what was paid, not as the price of his interest, but of that which had become the fund of the younger judgment creditor by virtue of his lien. To suppose that he might resort to the purchase money or the land at his pleasure, was an evident inconsistency; and an admission of his right to take the purchase money, which seems never to have been doubted, ought at once to have settled the question. The purchase money could be substituted for the land, and distributed among the lien creditors only on the supposition that the sale had divested their right to everything else. At present, however our business is with the evidence which we have, of the earlier practice; and this appears by the manuscript of Mr Justice Shippen, to have been fully developed in Febiger's lessee vs. Craighead, which was tried at Carlisle in 1793. David Hoge, who had been the sheriff of Cumberland county from 1769 to 1772, testified 'that the usage had been for thirty years, that when the sheriff knew of a mortgage, he sold subject to it: but that where he had no such knowledge, and the mortgage was not recorded, he sold ABSOLUTELY, and paid off judgments AND MORTGAGES according to their priority. That it was considered that when the land was sold absolutely, it discharged ALL former incumbrances as to the purchaser, and that the sheriff looked to the payment of judgments according to their order.' Samuel Postlethwaite, who had been the sheriff of the same county from 1783 to 1786, testified 'that he had sold land subject to a mortgage, in which case the mortgage money was to be paid first.' This short note of his evidence is evidently imperfect, the meaning being that the mortgage was to be paid first, when a clear title was sold; and in this aspect his evidence is consistent with that of sheriff Hoge. Now it is in vain to question the sheriff's right to prescribe the conditions of the sale: if a practice which, according to the account of it there given, has prevailed for seventy years, may not confer it, we have no foundation for many of our most important laws of domestic origin. Mr Hoge's representation of the practice was at the same time corroborated by the testimony of Colonel Hartley, Mr Bowie, and Mr Charles Smith, all professional gentleman of great experience in one or more of the counties of Lancaster, Berks, Cumberland, York, Franklin, Bedford, Mifflin, Huntington, and Northumberland, which then comprised that part of the state which is east of the Alleghany mountains, and west of a line midway between the Susquehanna and Delaware. In addition, when the cause came up in bank, the practice was asserted by Mr Lewis to be general, and this without contradiction from Mr Ingersoll, retained on the other side, or from the judges, who undoubtedly had ample opportunity to become acquainted with it on their circuits, in every part of the state. No man was better acquainted with the earlier practice and tradition of the law, than Mr Justice Yeates; and it is easy to discover from Keene v. Swaine, (3 Yeates, 561.) what he supposed it to have been in the matter before us. In the counties west of the Alleghany mountains, I am informed by my brother Kennedy, whose experience there reaches thirty years back, that a different impression had been made on the professional mind by the late president Addison, whose opinions were held in deserved respect; yet no one in that part of the state supposed there was a difference between mortgages and judgments, the supposition being that the sheriff could not in any case sell more than the resulting interest of the debtor. This impression was, however, gradually effaced by the influence of the judges of this court, on the western circuit, and the matter came to be viewed there as it was elsewhere. That it was the practice in the eastern counties to sell clear of mortgages, appears satisfactorily from Petry v. Beauverlet, (1 Binney, 97.) in which the sheriff of Bucks was allowed poundage for paying judgments and mortgages. To say that the point was not presented to the court, the matter having passed sub silentio, is to say nothing. What we want is the fact that an instance of the practice passed in this city, unchallenged by the debtor, or the younger lien creditors, who are usually as sharp sighted and true to their interests, as any other parties litigant in our courts. Certainly it would not have passed as a thing of course, had it been considered as great a phenomenon then, as it has been since; nor will it do to say, the payment may have been with the assent of the mortgagee; he had no right to assent to an arrangement that would enable him to pocket the money of the younger lien creditors. A pretence of right on his part to take satisfaction out of the land or purchase money at his pleasure, and thus throw the burden on the purchaser, or younger lien creditors, as his interest or caprice may dictate, would be monstrous; such a right would put him in a situation to make terms that would give him more than his debt. How this pretence, which involves the same inconsistency of opinion that I have already noticed in the case of a prior judgment, came to receive countenance, I know not. The difficulty might have been solved by a simple inquiry into the extent of the interest which passed by the sheriff's deed. The whole drift of the argument here, has been to prove that a sale on a younger judgment passes, not the estate of the older mortgagee, for that is supposed to be reserved, BUT THE EQUITY OF REDEMPTION; in other words, the clear interest of the mortgagor which the judgment bound, and which the mortgage did NOT bind. It is not easy to see then, how the mortgagee could make pretence of right to what did not pass by his deed; and which being the subject of subsequent hypothecation by the debtor, constituted no part of his security. To give him the benefit of that, would be a gratuity at the expense of the mortgagor and the younger lien creditors. As well might the general creditors of a partnership demand the proceeds of a separate execution of the interest of one of the partners which consists of what may remain after payment of the joint debts; but however inconsistent with the scope of the argument such a right of election would be, it is not more so than the modern practice which is said to prevail here. According to this, the sheriff sells, neither subject to, nor altogether free from, prior mortgages, but subject, where less than the amount of the mortgage is bid, to affirmance or disaffirmance of the sale by the mortgagee; according to which the premises are returned sold or unsold, for want of bidders. The uncertainty of result consequent on this, must necessarily have an unfavorable influence in preventing the attendance of purchasers; but the practice admits the whole converse of the plaintiff's argument. It admits, that when a sale is effected, the whole estate, and not the equity of redemption merely, is sold, and that the mortgagee is bound to take satisfaction out of the purchase money. It may be reasonable that a younger lien creditor should not be at liberty to disturb an older incumbrance, where there is no surplus to be got at; and at one time an idea prevailed in the country, on what authority I know not, that the sale might be set aside, if no part of the proceeds were found to reach the execution of the seizing creditor. We give no opinion about that, but it is evident that the same idea has given rise to the practice here, else the mortgagee would be consulted in all cases, whether the proceeds were more than adequate to satisfy his debt or not. But if the land were sold subject to his mortgage, the matter would not depend on his volition, more than it would on that of a stranger: he would be bound to look to the land exclusively, and not take satisfaction in a way to disappoint those who have no fund, but the equity of redemption; and that he may look to the price proves that his estate has been sold, for undoubtedly he can be compensated for nothing else out of the purchase money. A practice then, which has prevailed in every part of the state for more than seventy years, probably from the foundation of the province, ought, one would think, to be received as conclusive evidence of the law. It is said that practice, to be available, ought to be preceded by judicial decision: it seems to me, however, that this would be an inversion of the usual process of formation, judicial decision not being in any case a nucleus for the increment of the law, but, as in the case of the tenant's right to the way-going crop, the recognition of it as a thing already established by the custom of the country.

To be concluded.

SIR THOMAS MORE AND THE PRESENT MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

SIR Thomas More, when lord chancellor, succeeded in disposing of all the causes that were ready for hearing; and on his desiring the registrar to call the next cause, he was told that none remained on the list, which fact he ordered to be recorded. This event was also commemorated in doggerel, as follows:—

'When More some years had chancellor been,
No more suits did remain;
The same shall never more be seen,
Till More be there again."

The poet was wrong, however. We need not go far for an instance of a living judge to whom the same merit may be as justly ascribed; and a correspondent has enabled us to celebra the circumstance as melodiously:—

'A judge sat on the judgment seat,
A goodly judge was he;
He said unto the registrar,
"Now call a cause to me."
'"There is no cause," said registrar,
And loud laughed he with glee,
"A cunning Leach hath despatched them all,
I can call no cause to thee."'

Legal Observer.

CHANCERY REFORM BILL.

Last night Lord Chancellor Brougham brought forward his promised motion, in the House of Lords, respecting the Court of Chancery and its jurisdiction in bankruptcy cases. The motion excited an amazing deal of interest, and, consequently, below the bar was much crowded. His Lordship dwelt at great length on the abuses of the Court, and on the general character of the remedies for them which he proposed to provide. He said he contemplated first a change in the constitution of the Court; but the details of which would be more satisfactorily seen in the Bill. Secondly, to keep apart the administrative Judges and the judicial functionaries. And, thirdly, to substitute vivavoce evidence, where practicable, for depositions. One distinguishing feature of his plans would be, the payment of Judges, Masters, and their dependants by salaries, instead of fees. The evils of fees, he considered as almost indescribable, especially as far as dependants were concerned. The fees to Masters and others, and particularly fees and 'gratuities' to the Masters, clerks (which the public called 'bribes') his Lordship proposed wholly to abolish. He declared that these matters were only to be corrected by the vigorous and uncompromising interference of the head of the Court; and, therefore, so long as he sat on the woolsack, there should be no gratuities, or, what the public called 'bribes;' and while he was on the Bench there should be no sleep, till the grievous abuses of the Court of Chancery were corrected. He admitted that he might fail in his endeavors to achieve what he thought ought to be accomplished, but at all, events, it should not be recorded of him that he had not attempted correction. In speaking of the abuses in the Masters' offices, his Lordship mentioned that as much as fifty pounds 'gratuity' had been given to a clerk for a report, where the usual fees did not exceed 7*l*. His Lordship's plan embraces reform of the practice in lunatic cases; among other improvements, to provide that questions respecting the soundness of an individual's mind should be tried before the Judges and a Jury in Westminster Hall, and not by a commission. Another reform is the extinction of the fourteen lists of Bankrupt Commissioners; and providing in their stead ten Judges, which would be of three descriptions. The cases were to be heard before them sitting in banco, or before the Chief Judge (or President) and juries, but reserving a power of appeal to the Lord Chancellor. The unsatisfactory character of the present system, and the advantages to be derived from the establishment of Judges in their stead, in will be seen, his Lordship particularly described. His Lordship in the course of his speech, stated that by separating the bankruptcy business from the Court of Chancery, he calculated that the Lord Chancellor's income would be diminished between 7,000 and 8,000*l*. besides losing the patronage of 70 offices and that there would be a reduction of fees receivable by individuals from suitors, &c, to the amount of 73,000*l*. a year. After some remarks from Lord Lyndhurst, who opproved generally of the proposed changes, the Lord Chancellor brought in the first of the three Bills which there will be to effect his projected Chancery reform.—Morning Herald, Feb.

---

Judge Lomax, who was recently the professor of law at the University of Virginia, intends to open a law school at Fredericksburg.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1831.

Reports of Cases argued and ruled at Nisi Prius in the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas and on the Western and Oxford Circuits, from the Sittings after Hilary Term 11 Geo. 4. to the Sittings after Trinity Term 1 Will. 4. By William Moody and Benjamin Heath Malkin. London, J. and W. T. Clarke; and Saunders and Benning.

Lord Redesdale, four years ago, in a pamphlet upon the Chancery Commission, gave it as his opinion, that one great evil of the present state of the law was the number and length of the present law reports. He referred, he said, with pleasure, to Atkyns and Pére Williams, where he found that the exact point decided was stated shortly and correctly; but when he opened the reporters of the present day, he was confused and wearied by long and useless statements of deeds and wills, and the real points of the case overlaid by all the verbiage which the Judges had uttered. His Lordship ascribed this unfortunate change in the manner of reporting to law-book-selling being a more profitable trade than formerly. Now, we are not inclined to go the whole length of the learned Lord; we think that there are some reports now published which display great ability and judgment; but we regret to say that there are many which richly deserve the censure which his Lordship passed on them. When it is recollected that the reports of common law alone occupy more than 60,000 pages, we think it is full time that some end should be put to it; and we have long intended to turn our full attention to the subject, and expose what appears to us the most prominent evils of the present system. It would be no difficult matter to show that many of the cases reported are mere specimens of book-making; that they might be conpressed within a quarter of their present space; that the interest of the profession are greatly affected by the present system, not merely in being made to pay four times as much as they should pay, but, what is more important, in not having the knowledge which these works contain presented to them in an accessible form, and the consequent loss of valuable time. These are evils of which we complain, they are universally felt and lamented; and we could, if we pleased, bring together so numerous a list of extracts showing the truth of what we state, that the whole over-grown pile of modern reports would totter to its foundation. We are inclined, however, for the present, to spare ourselves this somewhat painful task: we have now stated the grievances of which we complain; we think we owe it to the profession to do our best to remedy them; we, moreover, promise to do so, having both the power and the will to carry our intention into effect. But we are unwilling to do this without due notice to the parties concerned; we are willing to pass an act of oblivion which shall obliterate from our minds all offences of this nature up to the present day. But, in future, we shall hold any such feelings to be mere signs of weakness: we should abandon the charge that has been committed to our care—the interests of the profession—if we acted otherwise; and we promise, if occasion should require, that we shall not be slow in following up this announcement, be the offender who he may.

We have great pleasure in stating that the reports of Messrs Moody and Malkin do not come in any degree within the limits of our censure. They are models for the nisi prius reporter, and are deserving of considerable praise; they are, with some few others, the Abdiels of the host;

——'Among the faithless, faithful only they;
Among innumerable false, unmoved,
Unshaken, unseduced;——
Nor number nor example with them wrought
To swerve from truth, or change their constant mind.'

The points decided are given neatly and correctly; the opinions of the Court condensed and clearly stated; and the subjects well selected. The whole of the cases in this Number will be found shortly stated under their proper heads in the Quarterly Digest. We shall here mention more fully the most important cases.

The first decision which we shall notice, is the case of Obbard and another v. Betham, p. 483., which establishes an important principle. Where bills are given in payment for goods, if the goods turn our to be worth much less than the estimated price, a doubt arose, whether the whole amount of the bills could be recovered. It is well known that great frauds are frequently committed on distressed persons in this manner. They consent to accept bills, and receive, instead of money, goods which prove to be worth about half the amount of the bills they have accepted. Lord Tenterden, however, ruled in this case, that the full amount of such bills may be recovered. 'The cases cited for the plaintiff*,'' said his Lordship, 'have completely established the distinction between an action for the price of the goods, and an action given for the security for them. In the former, the value only can be recovered; in the latter, I take it to have been settled by those cases, and acted upon ever since as law, that the partly holding bills given for the price of goods supplied can recover upon them, unless there has been a total failure of consideration. If the consideration fails partially, as by the inferiority of the article furnished to that ordered, the buyer must seek his remedy by a cross action.' There was a warranty that the goods were 'of good quality;' but Lord Tenterden thought that did not alter the case.—Legal Obs. of Feb.

Morgan v. Richardson, 1 Camp. 40. n. Tye v. Gwynne, 2 Camp 346. Heming v. Simpson, Ib. 40. n.

---

If the members of the profession might be allowed to utter and publish their own complaints, as well as to set forth those of their clients, the present times would become resonant, even unto redundance and surplusage, with averments and allegations of the want of business in their vocation.

Amid the general and joyous prosperity, which is giving a healthful activity to the community about them, they languish of ennui and inaction, and languishingly do live.

A few favored and gifted ones sail buoyant and prosperously on the current of business, while the thousand and one, who serve to swell the list of Practising Attornies, barely make out by sculling their boats against wind and tide, to avoid the snags of poverty, and to keep from swamping.

There is no profession where labor and talent are so poorly rewarded. The industry and capacity, which are found in it, if applied to any other department of business, in our country, would receive a hundred fold more fruits. The harvest is not rich and plenteous enough for the laborers. The material is not equal to the skill and intellect which are brought to operate upon it. Giants would multiply in the profession, if there were giants' labors to be performed.

When we shall have the business of Westminster Hall to be done, we shall have a Brougham, Scarlet, Denman and Chitty, with a host of others such, to do it. But while the business doing can as well be done by moderate men, moderate will do it. And it is a truth which every day makes more painfully apparent, that where there are a hundred Lawyers, who want business, and there is only enough for ten, the remaining ninety must either contrive to live by their wits, turn Politicians, or famish in a land of plenty. It seems to us that, on the whole, the last alternative is the least objectionable. It is incontestably the most respectable 'taking of'—; and, although, mayhap a little more sudden, not a whit more certain 'fine of fines' and 'end of 'quiddits and quillets' in articulo mortis.

---

Tennessee.—The Penal laws of this state have recently been revised and amended. According to the new code, murder in the first degree is alone punishable with death—and in the second degree, by imprisonment from ten to twentyone years. The crime of stealing a free person of color, or selling a free person as a slave, is liable to from five to fifteen years' imprisonment—stealing slaves the same penalty, and horse stealing from three to ten years' imprisonment.

---

We are glad to learn that the Lord Chancellor intends to hold two or more levees annually. We confess a partiality for these professional gatherings, and could wish them even more frequent. During the time of Lord Hardwicke's Chancellorship there were weekly levees on Sunday evenings, which were, of course, numerously attended. They were retained, although given less frequently, by succeeding Chancellors, until the time of Lord Eldon, who after holding one or two during the first years of his Chancellorship discontinued them. Lord Lyndhurst revived the custom in the first year in which he held the great seal, having three levees, but thought proper not to continue it. We hope that the present Chancellor will hold them regularly. They tend greatly to promote a good feeling and better acquaintance between the Chancellor and the bar, which it is very important should subsist. The Lord Chancellor is generally too much removed from the profession. He is different from all other judges; he moves in a different sphere, and is too apt to get separated and isolated from the profession. We think that frequent levees would tend to prevent this, and are therefore anxious for their continuance.—Legal Observer.

---

M. Lavisse, a wholesale wine-merchant, who died a few days ago at Clermont, left a will containing the following singular clause:—'It is my particular wish that the persons who attend my funeral, on their way to the burial-ground, should stop before the coffee-house kept by M. Marchand,— that there one of them should call me by name three times, and knock on my coffin to know if I am still alive; if I do not answer, it will be certain that I am no longer of this world. Thereupon they shall enter the coffeehouse, and drink 100 bottles of wine, to which biscuits or macaroons may be served, according to the wishes of the attendants. On returning, they shall again enter my house, and empty as many bottles as the attendants may require, commencing by No. 20 to 120, inclusive. They have all etiquettes (labels), which I myself put on the bottles; for it should be observed that, although I hated ceremony, I liked etiquette.'—French Paper.

VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS, recently received from Europe, and for sale by GRAY & BOWEN, No 141 Washington street.

Browne's Self Interpreting Bible, with notes, references, illustrations, reflections, and a memoir of the author; in one large quarto volume.

The Mirror of Parliament, edited by John Barrow, Esq. This work contains a complete account of the doings and debates in the British Parliament, during the last December session; in eight parts, folio.

Select Views on the River Clyde, engraved by Joseph Swan, with historical and descriptive illustrations; in one quarto volume, with fortytwo splendid engravings.

Select Views of the Lakes of Scotland, from original paintings; in two parts.

Hinton's History and Topography of the United States. This work will be completed in thirty numbers, quarto, with ninety engravings; eight numbers are already received.

History of the sufferings of the Church of Scotland, from the restoration to the revolution; by Rev. Robert Wodrow; 4 vols. 8vo.

History and Antiquities of the Doric Race; by C. O. Müller; 2 vols. 8vo.

History of Scotland, from the Union; by John Struthers; 2 vols. 8vo.

A Selection from the Papers of the Earls of Marchmont; illustrative of events from 1685 to 1750; 3 vols. 8vo.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, complete in two vols. 8vo.

A System of Geography, popular and scientific; illustrated by a complete series of maps and other engravings; by James Bell; 3 vols. 8vo.

McUre's History of Glasgow, with plates and illustrations; 1 vol.

History of Modern Greece; by James Emerson; 2 vols. 8vo.

Rollins' Ancient History, with Life, notes and numerous maps and plates; 3 vols. 8vo.

Thompson's Narrative of an official visit to Guatamala; 1 vol.

Six Years' residence in the United States of America; by Peter Neilson; 1 vol.

Lardner's Cyclopedia; complete set as far as published; 16 vols.

Lardner's Cabinet Library, annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 1831.

Murphy's Treatise on the art of Weaving; with fifteen engravings; 1 vol.

Mackenzie on the Diseases of the Eye; 1 vol.

Spix's Travels in Brazil, with engravings; 2 vols. 8vo.

BYRON'S WORKS—a new and beautiful edition, with a portrait, and other engravings; in 4 vols. 16mo.

Evan's Sketch of the Denominations of the Christian World; 1 vol.

Addison's Works; 4 vols.; a new edition.

Bowring's Poetry of the Magyars; 1 vol.

Constable's Miscellany; vols. 60 to 65 inc.

Family Library.—Lives of British Painters—Lives of Physicians—Life of Bruce—Court and Camp of Buonaparte—Demonology and Witchcraft.

Foreign Tales and Traditions; 2 vols.

The Casquet, or Literary Gem; edited by Alexander Whitelaw; 2 vols.

do do do (2d series) 2 vols.

The Atheneum, an original Literary Miscellany; 1vol.

The Midsummer Medley for 1830; by the author of Brambletye House.

Life on board a Man of War; 1 vol.

Robertson's Parent's Guide to Baptism; 1 vol.

Gospel Truth accurately stated and illustrated; by Rev. John Brown; 1 vol.

Outline of the Scripture Evidence for the Trinity; 1 vol.

The New Testament, translated by Doddridge, Campbell and Macknight; 1 vol. 12mo.

An Essay on Chemical Analysis; by M. Thenard; translated by J. G. Children; 1 vol.

Aids to Reflection; by S. T. Coleridge; 1 vol.

Fabliaux, or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries.

A Help to Professing Christians; by Rev. John Barr; 1 vol.

The Wine Drinker's Manual; 1 vol.

The Shamrock, a collection of Irish Songs.

The National Minstrel; a choice selection of popular songs.

Parochial Psalmody; by J. P. Clarke.

Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History.

Pinnock's Modern Geography and History.

The Caterer; being a selection of pieces in prose and verse; 1 vol.

Johnson's Dictionary, complete in one imperial 8vo.

Morewood's Essay on Inebriating Liquors.

Dibdin's Library Companion; 1 vol.

Biblia Hebraica.

Novum Testamentum Græce.

Aristophanes Comædiæ.

Sephocles Tragædiæ.

Pindari Carmina.

Æschyli Tragædiæ. May 21

---

JUST published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Language.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII. Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIV. for May, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College.

II. President Wayland's Sermon. The Certain Triumph of the Redeemer. A Discourse. By Francis Wayland, D. D.

III. Meaning of Alων. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays.

IV. Grimké's Discourses. 1. An Address on the Expediency and Duty of adopting the Bible as a Class Book. By T. S. Grimké. 2. An Oration of the Advantages to be derived from the Introduction of the Bible and of Sacred Literature, as Essential Parts of all Education. By Thomas S. Grimké.

V. Children's Books. 1. The Young Reader. By John Pierpont. 2. Peter Parley's Tales about the Sun, Moon and Stars. 3. Tales of Travels, West of the Mississippi. By Solomon Bell. 4. Cousin Elizabeth. By the Author of 'A Visit to the Sea Side.' 5. The Children's Robinson Crusoe. By a Lady. 6. The Little Girl's Own Book. By Mrs Child.

VI. History of English Baptists. Sermons on Various Important Public Occasions. By Robert Hall, A. M. 3. Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Rev. Andrew Fuller. By J. W. Morris. Editedby Rufus Babcock, Jr. 4. Asiatic Journal for British India.

VII. Sulivan's Political Class Book. The Political Class Book, By William Sullivan. Counsellor at Law. With an Appendix, by George B. Emerson.

VIII. Dr Waterhouse's Essay on Junius. An Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a Sketch of the life and character of Wm. Pitt, &c.; with reflections relating to the Affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to1785. By Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

IX. The Way of Truth and Union.

---

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

---

SPLENDID BIBLE. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

---

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars. April 9.

---

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

---

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

---

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

---

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

---

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1831. NO. XLVII.

SHAKSPEARE A LAWYER.

Though great obscurity hangs over the life of Shakspeare, it is certain that his early days were marked by considerable vicissitude. When he left school, it seems probable that he for some time assisted his father in his trade, either of a woolstapler or a glover. But, before he quitted his native country for the metropolis, it has been conjectured and with great plausibility, that he passed some time in the office of an attorney, or the seneschal of some manor court. This conjecture rests principally on the frequent use which Shakspeare makes of legal terms and phrases, his familiarity with which appears to be so great as to indicate a professional acquaintance with the law. Had Mr Malone, with whom the conjecture originated, been content to depend upon the evidence of the poet's works, he would have established a case of great probability; but, he rather weakened than added strength to his cause, by endeavoring to fortify it by something like testimony. Unable to find any directly to his purpose, he sought to avail himself of a tradition that Shakspeare had once been engaged as a schoolmaster; and arguing that such floating traditions, though not perfectly accurate, usually contain 'an adumbration of the truth,' he imagined that Shakspeare having in the manner just mentioned acquired a knowledge of the law, employed himself in teaching it to others. It is strange that this wild fancy should not only have satisfied Malone, but that it should have been adopted by Mr Whiter and Dr Drake. The latter writer supposes that Shakspeare, on his marriage, finding his income insufficient to meet his wants, adopted this method of 'making the pot boil.' The inconsistency of Malone is extreme. Aubrey, from whom the report is borrowed, says —and in the same sentence in which he states Shakspeare to have been a schoolmaster—that he understood Latin pretty well. Malone contends with Dr Farmer that Shakspeare knew so little of Latin that he could not have taught that language; therefore, he must have taught law. But the assumption is perfectly unnecessary: Shakspeare must previously have acquired the knowledge which he is supposed to have communicated—and the question is, not what use did he make of his legal learning, but how did he obtain it. The supposition is improbable, as well as useless, since there is not the slightest reason to believe that there existed such a class of teachers as that to which Shakspeare is supposed to have belonged. The knowledge of the law was obtained then as it is now, in the office of a professional man: and we have no right, without evidence, to assume the existence of seminaries for sucking lawyers. The question must be determined upon other grounds; and it may be presumed that Malone became ashamed of his monstrous conjecture, since, in his life of the poet, prefixed to the edition of 1821, he does not revert to it.

The following passage is quoted by Malone, from an epistle to the gentlemen students of the two universities, by Thomas Nashe, prefixed to Green's Arcadia, which was published in 1589.

'It is a common practice now-a-days among a sort of shifting companions, that run through every art and thrive by none, to leave the trade of Noverint, whereto they were born, and busie themselves with the endeavors of art, that could scarcely Latinize their neck verse if they should have the neede; yet English Seneca read by candle light yeelds many good sentences, as bloud is a beggar, and so forth; and if you intreat him fair in a frosty morning he will affoord you whole Hamlets, I should say, Handfuls of tragical speeches.'

Malone says, 'Nashe seems to point at some dramatic writer of that time who had originally been a scrivener or attorney:

'A clerk foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
Who penn'd a stanza when he should engross;'

who, instead of trancsribing deeds and pleadings, chose to imitate Seneca's plays, of which a translation had been published many years before.'

The allusion is unquestionably to a person educated to the law—Noverent referring to the commencement of deeds Noverint Universi—Know all men, &c. In some respects it is not inapplicable to Shakspeare, as in the alleged want of scholastic learing. The writer also appears to sneer at the play of Hamlet, which word, in the original, is printed in a different character from the rest. Malone, however, decides that it does not apply to Shakspeare, principally because Shakspeare borrowed nothing from Seneca. The commentator is somewhat annoyed by the word HAMLET, but he is relieved by conjecturing that some one had written a play on the story of Hamlet previous to Shakspeare. And he not only satisfies himself of the play having been written, but even fixes on the author, and speculates on what will probably be found in it, should 'the old play of Hamlet ever be recovered.' To affirm positively that Shakspeare was the writer alluded to by Nashe, would be to imitate Malone in the facility with which he converts fancy into fact; but, perhaps, it would be equally rash to decide, dogmatically, that Shakspeare was not meant; especially as we have no knowledge of any play on the story of Hamlet previous to that of Shakspeare. At any rate it is more reasonable to apply this passage to our great bard, than to conclude that he was a lawyer, because it had been said that he was a schoolmaster.

The question of Shakspeare's connexion with the law must, after all, be decided by the internal evidence afforded by his writings; and in them we find the author recurring continually to the language of the law. He uses it with minute propriety, and like a man accustomed to it. The passages which might be produced to prove this are almost innumerable, and those which have been brought forward are neither few nor inclusive. The following are given by Malone.

'—— For what in me was purchased,
Falls upon thee in a much fairer sort.'
K. Hen. IV. P. ii.

'Purchase is here used in its strict legal sense in contradistinction to an acquisition by descent.

'Unless the devil have him in fee simple with fine and recovery.' Merry W. of Win.

'He is 'rested on the case.' Comedy of Er.

'—— With Bills on their necks,
Be it known unto all men by these presents.'
As you Like it.

'—— who writes himself Armigero,
In any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation.'
Merry W. of Win.

'Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your single bond,' Mer. of Venice.

'Say for non-payment that the debt should double.'
Venus and Adonis.

On a conditional bond's becoming forfeited for non-payment of money borrowed, the whole penalty, which is usually the double of the principal sum lent by the obligee, was formally recoverable at law. To this our poet here alludes.

'But the defendant doth that plea deny;
To 'cide his title, is impannelled
A quest of thoughts.' Sonnet xlvi.

'In Much ado about Nothing, Dogberry charges the watch to keep their fellows' counsel and their own. This Shakspeare transferred from the oath of a grand juryman.

'And let my officers of such a nature
Make an extent upon his house and lands.'
As you Like it.

'He was taken with the manner.'
Love's Labor Lost.

'Enfeoff'd himself to popularity.'
K. Hen. IV. P. 1.

'He will seal the fee-simple of his salvation, and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.'
Alls's Well that Ends Well.

'Why, let her accept before accepted.'
Twelfth Night.

'—— Which is four terms, or two actions; and he shall laugh without intervallums.'
K. Hen. IV. P. ii.

'—— Keep leets and law-days. K. Richard II.

'Pray in aid for kindness.' Ant. and Cleo.

No writer but one who had been conversant with the technical language of leases and other conveyances, would have used determination as synonymous to end; Shakspeare frequently uses the word in that sense. See vol. xvii. p. 188, n. 3; and vol. xx. p. 235, n. 8; 'from and after the determination of such a term;' is the regular language of conveyancers.

'Humbly complaining to your highness.'
K. Richard III.

'Humbly complaining to your lordship, your orator,' &c, are the first words in every Bill in Chancery.

'A kiss in fee-farm! In witness whereof these parties interchangeably have set their hands and seals.' Troilus and Cressida.

'Art thou a feodary for this act?' Cymbeline.

See the note on that passage, vol. xiii. p. 100, n. 6.

'Are those precepts served?' says Shallow to Davy, in K. Henry IV.

Precept in this sense is a word only known in the office of a justice of peace.

'Tell me what state, what dignity, what honor,
Canst thou demise to any child of mine.,
K. Richard III.

'—— hath demised, granted, and to farm let,' is the constant language of leases. What poet but Shakspeare has used the word demised in this sense ?

'This fellow migh be in his time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his fines, his double vouchers, his recoveries.' Hamlet.

The references are made to Boswell's edition of Malone's Shakspeare, 21 vols. n. 1821.

The following are referred to, but not quoted by Malone :

'So should beauty which you hold in lease
Find no determination.' Sonnet xiii.

'Now where is he that will not stay so long,
Till his friend sickness hath determined me.'
K. Henry IV. P. ii.

'O twice, my father! twice am I thy son ;
The life thou gavest me first, was lost and done,
Till, with thy warlike sword, despight of fate,
To my determined time thou gav'st new date.'
K. Henry VI. P. i.

Mr Chalmers, who made it a point of conscience to dissent from Malone in everything, contends that the passage adduced proves nothing, inasmuch as Shakspeare might have acquired all the knowledge which he displays of legal language, from the perusal of three books, 'Totell's Presidents, 1572;' 'Pulton's Statutes, 1578;' and 'Abraham Fraunce's Lawier's Logike, 1588.' Granted, that he might—granted that he had read those books—a question arises, why did he read them? People seldom read such books for amusement, and Shakspeare was not a man to acquire knowledge for the mere purpose of displaying it. His genius placed him above the necessity of such expedients, and the noble simplicity of his mind would have disdained them. He was of those who 'write what they think,' not of those who 'sit down to think what they shall write.' Malone has on this subject expressed himself with culpable carelessness. Speaking of Shakspeare's knowledge of legal terms, 'It has,' says he, 'the appearance of technical skill, and he is so fond of displaying it on all occasions, that there is, I think, some ground for supposing that he was early initiated in at least the forms of law.' Shakspeare indeed displays the knowledge ascribed to him, but he is not fond of displaying it. He writes on these, as on all other occasions, from the fulness of his mind. He uses legal language, because early impressions had given his mind a bias which it would have required an effort to control. No one was ever more free from petty vanity. He was not only one of the greatest, but one of the most unpretending of men. His carelessness of his literary reputation attest this. Such a man was not likely to read for the mere purpose of display. He had perhaps read the books named by Mr Chalmers, but if so, he had read them in the course of professional study. Mr Chalmers did not come to the controversy free from prejudice—he was one of the luckless individuals who were deceived by the Ireland forgeries. Malone, either from better judgment, or better fortune, stood aloof; and, when the imposture was exposed, enjoyed his triumph somewhat beyond the bounds of moderation. Mr Chalmers could not bear this, and published an octavo volume, to show, that although the Ireland papers were now proved to be forgeries, he, and his brethren in misfortune, had been quite right in believing them to be genuine. It was in this volume that he sought to account for Shakspeare's legal knowledge in opposition to the opinion of Malone. Anger may sometimes make a man eloquent, but it seldom makes him impartial, and Mr Chalmers was too much irritated to discuss the matter fairly ; not to mention that his belief in the authenticity of the Ireland manuscripts is not peculiary favorable to his character for critical discrimination. It is remarkable, too, that although Malone had published his opinion as early as 1790, Mr Chalmers did not think of disputing it, until he found it necessary to apologise for his credulity seven or eight years afterwards. But dismissing the personal quarrels of Mr Malone and Mr Calmers, it will be useful to advert to two other writers who have maintained the claims of Shakspeare to legal education.

The Rev. Walter Whiter published, in 1794, 'A Specimen of a Commentary upon Shakspeare,' in which he proposed to illustrate the works of the poet by a reference to the doctrine of the association of ideas. His general principle will be found in the following quotation.

'I define therefore the power of this association over the genius of the poet, to consist in supplying him with words, and with ideas, which have been suggested to the mind by a principle of union unperceived by himself, and independent of the subject to which they are applied.

Malone conjectured that Shakspeare had passed a part of his early life in the office of the seneschal of some manor court. Some of this critic's conjectures were extravagant enough, but this was certainly a most happy one, and is sustained by the evidence of a great number of passages. The words 'suit and service' are continually combined in the language of the feudal law, and those two words seem to have been associated by some recondite principle in the mind of Shakspeare. They do not always occur in immediate succession, but the former word seems almost constantly to suggest the latter, which follows it within a line or two.

'How in his suit he scorn'd you ; but your loves Thinking upon his services'—— Coriolanus.

'I know thee well, thou hast obtained thy suit.
Shylock, thy master, spoke with me this day,
And hath preferr'd thee, if it be preferment,
To leave a rich Jew's service, to become
The follower of so poor a gentleman.'
Mer. of Venice.

'Princess. Biron did swear himself out of all suit.
Maria. Dumain was at my service, and his sword.'
Love's Labor Lost.

'What humble suit attends thy answer there ;
Impose some service on me for thy love.'
Love's Labor Lost.

Mr Whiter's criticisms may be thought somewhat refined, but they emanate from an acute and cultivated mind, and open a new vein of inquiry which deserves to be followed up. Mr Whiter adopts generally the opinion of Malone, and expresses surprise that he had not adduced a greater number of passages in proof of it. The opinion had also the support of Ritson and Stevens.

Dr Drake follows on the same side ; and, without discussing the question, gives the following passages in addition to those furnished by his predecessors :

'Immediately provided in that case.'
Midsummer Night's Dream.

'Royally attornied.' Winter's Tale.

'That doth utter all men's ware-a.' Ibid.

Thy title is affeered.' Macbeth.

'Keep leets and law days, and in sessions sit,'
Othello.

Why should calamity be full of words,
Windy attornies to their client woes.'
K. Richard III.

'But when the heart's attorney once is mute,
The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.'
Venus and Adonis.

'So now I haveconfest that he is thine ;
And I, myself am mortgaged to thy will.'
Sonnett cxxxvi.

'He learn'd but surety-like to write for me
Under that bond, that him as fast doth bind
The statute of thy beauty.' Sonnet cxxxiv.

The two following are pointed out by Stevens :

'As it [the hailstone] determines, so
Dissolves my life.' Anthony and Cleopatra.

'Our high plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature.' Macbeth.

These which follow, may properly be added to the list :

'I am still
Attornied at your service.' Meas. for Meas.

'Shall I be charg'd no farther than this present ?
Must all determine here.' Coriolanus.

'An I were so apt to quarel as thou art, any man should buy the fee-simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.' Romeo and Juliet.

'By the next new moon
The sealing day betwixt my love and me
For everlasting bond of fellowship.'
Midsummer Night's Dream.

'And seal the title with a lovely kiss.'
Taming the Shrew.

'Now must your conscience my acquittance seal.'
Hamlet.

Such is the present state of the evidence on the subject, and the weight of it clearly inclines to the conclusion, which gives to the law the honor of so illustrious a disciple as Shakspeare. The establishment of this point might be beneficial in dispelling a very foolish prejudice, that the study of the law has a tendency to narrow the mind. Did it narrow the mind of Shakspeare who probably received a legal education? Did it narrow the mind of Bacon, who certainly did? The study of the law upon enlarged principles must tend to expand and invigorate the mind, and the contrary position is either the dictate of prejudice, or the refuge of indolence.—Legal Observer.

---

From the Legal Observer.

ON THE RIGHT OF AN ATTORNEY

TO WITHDRAW FROM A SUIT.

SIR—Much misunderstanding apparently exists in the profession, as to the circumstances under which an attorney may decline further conducting an action or suit wherein he was once engaged.

The reading to be met with in the books on the subject certainly must be open to some qualification. It cannot be taken literally ; otherwise the law is, that an attorney cannot withdraw himself until the proceedings are determined ; that he must proceed, though his client will not furnish him with money! That if he quit his client before trial, an attorney cannot bring an action for his bill : and in chancery, that a solicitor proceeding to a certain length in a cause, shall not leave it there, but shall go on. (Vide Tidd's Prac. vol. i. p. 86., 9th ed.)

Why this feverish anxiety of the law to lash attorneys to their post? Are they notoriously apt to desert professional business? Do the interests of clients require this extraordinary protection? What? it must be asked with surprise, cannot an attorney quit all, or any, of the several suits or actions in which he may have engaged, if his clients will not furnish him with the necessary money wherewith to proceed? Must an attorney, who, on an implied, if not an actual, promise by his clients, to supply him with the needful cash, becomes concerned in their suits, proceed with them until they are determined, at his own expense, and consequently, in very many cases, at his personal risk? for he is not permitted to indemnify himself by taking security for future cost. Jones v. Tripp, 1 Jac. 322. Let it for a moment be considered how long an action or suit, notwithstanding all possible expedition is used, may be pending; how many contemporary actions or suits an attorney in moderate practice may be concerned in; the necessary disbursements in their various stages; and who can conjecture the amount of capital such an individual must embark, and place very much at hazard? What scale of fees would remunerate an attorney under such circumstances? Would it be politic in the law; is it favorable to honorable practice, thus in effect to make his own all the proceedings in which an attorney may be concerned, by transferring all risk, from the very moment he commences them, from the clients to himself? What is there unreasonable in the supposition that an attorney being called upon to proceed with various suits, may not have the necessary cash immediately required to be disbursed? How MUST he 'go on' in such a case?

If an attorney cannot withdraw from an action or suit, but must proceed till it is determined, what becomes of his undoubted right, at any time, on his mere request, to withdraw his name from the roll? The affidavit necessary for such purpose only states that 'no proceeding or application is then pending against him, and that he does not expect that any application will be made against him as an attorney.' And why does not the court require information as to whether all his actions and suits are determined?

The client it is well known, may, by leave of court, or by a judge's order, which is never refused, repudiate his attorney ad libitum, on payment of his bill. Surely then, the rule that an attorney cannot quit a suit must be susceptible of a qualified interpretation, that he cannot vexatiously, or merely to harass his client, who has been guilty of defection, abandon him and his proceedings. But certainly, under any circumstances, a court or judge would, on his application, permit an attorney to withdraw himself, without imposing any such condition as that he shall not bring an action for his costs then incurred, or depriving him of any lien, or other mode by which, had he concluded the proceedings, the law would authorise him to pay himself.

I would pursue this inquiry with reference to his liability in an action for negligence, when an attorney will not proceed with a cause because his client withholds his assistance in the article of cash.

Blackstone (quoting Finch L. 188.) says, an advocate who betrays the cause of his client, or, being retained, neglects to appear at the trial, by which the cause miscarries, is liable to an action on the case for a reparation to the injured client. By 'being retained' is doubtless meant paid his fees. Then the advocate's absence from the trial would certainly be actionable negligence.

When an attorney neglected to fee counsel, whereby his client was nonsuited, the court ordered an attachment against him. Say, 50. To have been guilty of negligence, must not the attorney be supposed to have been supplied by his client with the money to pay the fees? Have we any right to presume the attorney possessed sufficient of his own moneys for that purpose? And certainly an attorney, no more than any other person, cannot be said to neglect to do that which he has no means to do. Correct language will not express such an idea.

Supposing a client is assured by his attorney, that he really has not sufficient money to pay the fees; a situation not necessarily suppositious, as the most respectable practitioner may have experienced, particularly on such an emergency as the preparation for a heavy assize; and the client, exulting on the reading in Tidd, replies, 'You must go on, if you don't I'll bring an action against you for negligence!' Would the law so militate against the plain principles of common honesty and fair dealing as to sanction so palpable a hardship?

These observations were more immediately induced by Mr Justice Bosanquet's decision in the case of Hoby v. Built, gent. one, &c, tried at Hereford last assizes. It was an action for alleged negligence on the part of the defendant, by reason of his not having delivered briefs with fees to counsel, in a case in which he was concerned for Hoby, whereby Hoby was nonsuited. On the present trial, for the defendant Built, Mr Serjt. Russel* almost ridiculed the idea that an attorney is bound to deliver briefs with counsel's fees, or go on with a suit when his client will not provide him with money for the purpose, which the serjeant stated, and it was not denied, was the defendant's situation when he was concerned for the plaintiff. On the other hand Serjt. Ludlow contended that an attorney under such circumstances is bound to proceed. The learned judge observed, that without saying which of those propositions was correct, he thought that if an attorney went on with a cause, and brought the record to an assize town, he was not at liberty, immediately before trial, to say, 'I won't deliver the brief unless I receive some money,' and the verdict was for the plaintiff.

Now, it was admitted that the defendant had applied to the plaintiff for money wherewith to deliver his briefs, and that the plaintiff did not furnish that money, or pretend that the defendant had previously been supplied with sufficient. On that case then, I humbly submit the reasonableness of the request, or in other words, the immediate necessity for 'some money,' and not the particular moment at which the request was made, was the material consideration, and that such was the question his Lordship should have left to the jury. Who can doubt the reasonableness of the request for 'some money,' if it were, as appears to have been the case, immediatly required to be disbursed for witnesses, counsel, and court fees? Could it be expected that the defendant should, under these circumstanses, at his own immediate expense, hazard the result of a trial? Could the plaintiff reasonably complain of neglect, or that he was betrayed, or deceived, when he was told by the defendant that without some money the cause could not be tried? Was not the plaintiff bound to know that the disbursements immediately preparatory to the trial must be considerable? And did he not also know that he had not contributed a mite towards those expenses? Then what possible right, either legal, equitable, or in foro conscientiæ, could the plaintiff have to compel the continuance of the defendant's services and command his cash?

*The learned Serjeant said he believed it had been decided that an attorney may give notice to his client that he will not proceed.

The general principles which regulate all engagements between principal and agent, not particularly specific, must apply to the relation of attorney and client; and in all such engagements if the principal will do that which is clearly reasonable on his part, the agent is absolved, the consideration on which he engaged having failed by the default of the principal.

It is a fact reputable to the profession, that there are very few actions for negligence against attorneys, recorded in the books. But it is therefore important that a decision which may become a precedent, should be strictly investigated, and have an indisputable principle for its basis.

Let this very reasonable rule be remembered: It is not every neglect which will subject an attorney to an action for negligence. He is only bound to use reasonable care and skill in managing the business of his client. He is only liable for crassa negligentia, (Selwyn, N. P. vol. i. p. 169., 6th ed.)

Quære then, whether the defendant Built, was, under the circumstances, guilty of 'gross negligence.'

I am Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
T. P.

MORTGAGE.

Concluded.

The argument ab inconvenienti, did the matter rest in discretion, would be inconceivably strong. I have heard with surprise an expression of regret that the law had not been so settled originally, as to subject the land in the hands of the purchaser, even to prior judgments. This must surely have been said without consideration. If each lien creditor were separately permitted to carve for himself, by selling just what might be sufficient to get his money out of the land, a great part of the estate would go among the retainers of the law. Full costs and poundage on every sale, would be just so much taken out of the pockets of the younger lien creditors, who would have come in for a share, had the land been turned into money, by one operation for the benefit of all. Besides, no one would be found willing to purchase except at a prodigous undervalue, with the certainty of being annoyed by a series of executions to enforce the prior liens; and thus the younger lien creditors would be kept at bay: and the same consequences, or one as bad, would result from the sale on the oldest lien. The principle insisted on is, that a creditor can sell no more than he holds by his lien: on no other hypothesis than that all beyond what is necessary to satisfaction belongs to the debtor, could there be a resulting interest in him to answer subsequent incumbrances. What right then would an older incumbrancer have which a younger one has not, to divest the security of any one else farther than may be necessary to produce satisfaction of his debt? The abstract principle fairly carried out would require him to sell an undivided interest to the value of his incumbrance, and to strike it down as soon as enough were obtained to satisfy the debt and costs. This preposterous but necessary consequence of the principle, has been put out of view by the legislature, who foreseeing the inconvenience and confusion that would ensue from selling the estate piecemeal, have invested the purchaser with title to it, as it was held by the debtor. But a most oppressive consequence of the doubt generated by the principle of the argument, and communicated to the public mind by the imperfect report of Febiger's lessee v. Craighead, in the 4th volume of Mr Dallas' reports has been a sacrifice of property to an incredible amount. It is not too much to compute this at ten per cent on every judicial sale of land that has since been made. Instances are within my knowledge of 30 per cent on the purchase having been offered in confidence of the purchaser's skill, by those who, at the sale, refused to hazard a dollar on their own. Is it not equally the interest of lien creditors, whether by mortgage or judgment, as well as of the debtor himself, and indeed of all but those who speculate in bargains, that the land should go for its value? The public interest at stake is immense; and even if a temporary hardship from the principle of Willard v. Norris were experienced in a particular quarter, it would be greatly more than counterbalanced by the permanent benefit that would result to the community at large. Public convenience, however, is supposed to require that this species of property be set apart and consecrated to investment by those who may be prevented by absence or other causes from attending to their property. If this consideration were imperative, its requirements might be satisfied by the public stocks, which afford all proper facilities; but even if they did not, there is no species of investment that ought to be so sacred as to control the maxim that the public good is the supreme law. But the inconvenience that would have resulted to mortgage creditors from the decision in Willard v. Norris, would have been neither permanent nor great. They would have ceased to invest in lands at a distance; and as to defrauding them by a sham sale at an undervalue, that would have become impracticable the moment it was ascertained that the purchaser was to have an unincumbered title. But they would have suffered no more in this respect, or by reason of the apprehended insecurity of the purchase money in the sheriff's hands, than judgment creditors do at present; and I have heard no complaints by these, of losses from collusive or surreptitious sales by younger judgment creditors. Even if there were just ground of apprehension on this score, further precaution might be taken by the courts. Mortgage creditors have certainly not been treated as having peculiar claims to protection in other matters; as in cases of injury to the premises, under the road law, for which the mortgagor receives compensation, without notice to the mortgagee; and I am unable to see why his interest should be preferred to that of every one else in the matter of a judicial sale.

It will be seen that the preceding remarks are intended for a mortgage not due. As between the mortgagee and purchaser, who, as owner of the equity of redemption, stands in the place of the mortgagor, it is impossible to conceive of an objection to a payment which consists with the letter of the contract; and whatever might be the right of the mortgagor or the intermediate lien creditors to demur to performance of the condition out of the money in the sheriff's hands, it is certain the mortgagee himself could not: but standing in every respect as a judgment creditor, he cannot object to payment even before his debt is due; as has already been determined in the Commonwealth v. Alexander, (16 Sergeant and R. 257.) and intimated in Barnet v. Washabaugh, (id. 410.) and this disposes of the general question which a respect for the opinion of counsel who have doubted the soundness of the principle of Willard v. Norris, has induced to have re-argued on its original ground. It is unnecessary to say that the result is a firm conviction of its solidity. It remains to inquire how far it affects the plaintiff's lien on the whole, or any part, of the mortgaged premises. As to this, my opinion happens not to concide with that of the majority; and the judgment of the court on this part of the case will be pronounced by my brother HUSTON.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

COVENANT.

A covenant on the part of the lessor to renew a lease for years at the expiration of the term, is a covenant running with the land. Piggot v. Mason, 1 Paige, 412.

Covenants of warranty and to convey, contained in a lease of real estate, run with the land, and are binding upon the heirs and assignees of the lessor. Van Horn v. Crain, 1 Paige, 455.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Where property is subject to an execution, and a fraudulent obstruction is interposed to prevent the sale, a creditor may file his bill here to remove the obstruction as soon as he has obtained a specific lien upon the property by the issuing of his execution. Beck v. Burditt, 1 Paige, 305.

But if the property is not a subject of levy and sale on execution, the creditor must show his remedy at law exhausted by an actual return of the execution unsatisfied, before he can file a bill in this court to reach the equitable property of the debtor. Ib.

When a debtor in failing circumstances assigns an unreasonable amount of property to satisfy a single creditor, it is evidence of fraud; but if no more than is supposed to be sufficient to satisfy the debt is assigned, a mere hypothetic reservation of the surplus, if any there should be, to the debtor, would not render the asignment void. Ib.

A creditor whose execution at law has been returned unsatisfied, may file a bill to reach the equitable estate of the defendants, either in his own name and for his own benefit, or he may join with other creditors standing in the same situation with himself, or he may file a bill in behalf of himself and all others, being judgment creditors, whose executions have been returned unsatisfied, and who may choose to come in under the decree and contribute to the expenses of the suit. Edmeston v. Lyde, 1 Paige, 637.

Where property has been fraudulently assigned by the debtor, so that he has no legal or equitable rights as against the assignee, it will be necessary to make the assignee a party, to enable the court to reach the property in his hands. Ib.

The debts, choses in action, and other equitable rights of the defendant, may be assigned or sold under the decree of this court and the purchaser will be protected both in equity and at law. Ib.

Under the act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1799, the United States are not entitled to a preference in the payment of bonds given for duties, over the general creditors of the debtor, unless the debtor is actually insolvent, and his insolvency it manifested by some notorious or public act. Marshall v. Barclay, 1 Paige, 159.

To entitle the United States to this preference, on account of a voluntary assignment of the property of the debtor for the benefit of his creditors, it must appear that the assignment was of all the property of the debtor, or was made with a view to defeat the claim of the United States. Ib.

Where, however, a debtor is actually insolvent, and intending to assign his whole property, first makes an assignment of part for the benefit of some of his creditors, and afterwards makes another assignment of the residue of his property for the benefit of his remaining creditors, the two assignments will be considered as one transaction, and the United States will be entitled to a preference. Ib.

The depositors of money in a bank are only general creditors of the corporation, and in case of a failure of a bank, they are not entitled to a priority of payment over bill holders or other creditors. In the matter of the Franklin Bank, 1 Paige, 249.

When a bank becomes insolvent, the cashier has no lien upon the money in the bank for his deposits therein, or for the payment of his salary. Bruyn v. Receiver of the Middle District Bank, 1 Paige, 584.

Where the right to a debt due from a third person is in litigation, it cannot with safety be paid to either party after notice; but the debtor will be permitted pending the litigation, to pay it into court to the credit of the cause. Mills v. Pittman, 1 Paige, 490.

Where a creditor has a lien upon two funds for the payment of his debt, chancery will not compel him first to exhaust the fund which a junior creditor cannot reach, if the senior creditor will thereby be injured, or if he offers to substitute the junior creditor in his place, on being paid the amount of his debt. Woolcocks v. Hart, 1 Paige, 185.

Where a judgment is given by the principal debtor, to his indorser, to secure the payment of the debt for which they are responsible, and they become insolvent, the creditor is entitled to the benefit of the security. Heath v. Hand, 1 Paige, 329.

DOWER.

If the owner of the legal estate purchase in a mortgage executed by both husband and wife, with the intention of protecting himself against the claim of dower to the extent of that incumbrance, the widow can only be endowed of the equity of redemption, and she is bound to contribute her share towards the payment of the mortgage. Russell v. Austin, 1 Paige, 192.

A defendant continues seized of his real estate sold under a judgment and execution, until the time for redemption expires; and where he dies before the time for redemption expires, his widow will be entitled to arrears of dower. Ib.

Where there is an outstanding mortgage upon the premises, the arrears of dower will be computed by deducting from one third of the rents and profits, over and above the necessary repairs, taxes, &c, one third of the interest on the amount due on the mortgage at the time the defendant acquired title to the premises. Ib.

Where a mortgage has been executed by husband and wife, she can only be endowed of the equity of redemption. Ib.

To entitle the wife to dower, the husband must have been seized during the coveture of a present freehold as well as of an estate of inheritance in the premises. Dunham v. Osborn, 1 Paige, 634.

Seizin of a vested remainder is not sufficient where the husband dies, or aliens his interest in the premises, during the continuance of the particular estate. Ib.

Where lands descend to the son, on the death of the father, and dower is assigned to the mother, if the son dies during the life of the mother, his widow can only be endowed of the remaining two thirds. Ib.

Where the estate has been sold on an execution against the husband, who afterwards died leaving a widow entitled to dower, the widow of the purchaser will be entitled to dower in the whole premises, subject to the dower right of the first widow in one third thereof. Ib.

---

ESCROW.

It is essential to an escrow that it be delivered to a third person to be delivered to the obligee or grantee upon the happening of some event, or upon the performance of some condition. James v. Vanderheyden, 1 Paige, 385.

Where a bond and mortgage and deed were delivered to a third person, to be kept by him during the pleasure of the parties, and subject to their further order, held, that the papers were not escrows, and that he was a mere depositary. Ib.

---

EVIDENCE.

A receipt is always susceptible of explanation. Van Rensselaer v. Morris, 1 Paige, 13.

Where the purchaser of mortgaged premises had admitted the existence of the lien within twenty years, and promised to discharge the mortgage, it was held sufficient to rebut the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of time. Peck v. Peck, 1 Paige, 477.

Where the subject of the devise or legacy is described by reference to some extrinsic fact, extrinsic evidence may be resorted to, to ascertain that fact. Pritchard v. Hicks, 1 Paige, 270.

So where the words of a will are equally applicable to two persons or two things, parol evidence is admissible to show which person was the object of the testator's bounty, or which article he intended for the legatee. Ib.

Where a testator made a bequest to a person by a wrong christian name, parol evidence was admitted to show what person was intended. Connolly v. Pardon, 1 Paige, 291.

A record cannot be read as evidence in a suit, unless both parties, or those under whom they claim, were parties to the suit in which the record was filed. Dale v. Rosevelt, 1 Paige, 35.

The laws of other states must be proved, otherwise the courts of this state cannot take notice of them. Hosford v. Nichols, 1 Paige, 220.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that a deed, absolute in its terms, was intended by the parties as a mortgage. Whittick v. Kane, 1 Paige, 202.

---

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Where a testator directed his executors to pay to one of his sons annually $200, and also one fifth of his estate, in case of his reformation from vicious habits, it was held, that the executors acted correctly in not paying over the one fifth of the estate, until they were satisfied of the son's complete reformation. Dustan v. Dustan, 1 Paige, 509.

---

FRAUD.

Where a judgment was entered on a bond and warrant, and a specification was filed under the act of April 21st, 1818, and it appeared no such consideration as that stated in the specification existed, the judgment was declared fraudulent and void as against other judgment creditors. White v. Williams, 1 Paige, 502.

If a judgment is void as against a subsequent judgment creditor, it is also void as against a purchaser under the subsequent judgment. Ib.

Pending a treaty of purchase, a third person took a confession of judgment from the vendor, and fraudulently concealed the fact from the vendee until after the sale, for the purpose of enforcing the judgment against the land in his hands. On a bill filed against the judgment creditor and his assignee, they were decreed to release the land from the lien of the judgment. Webster v. Wise, 1 Paige, 319.

If a purchaser who is insolvent, concealing his insolvency from the vendor, obtains goods from him without intending to pay for them, it is a fraud upon the vendor, and the property in the goods will not be changed. Durell v. Haley, 1 Paige, 492.

But if the goods have been resold by the fraudulent vendee to a bona fide purchaser, who has actually paid for the same without notice of the fraud, such purchaser will be protected. Ib.

Where an insolvent confessed a judgment to his friend, on which an execution immediately issued, and then purchased goods for the purpose of subjecting them to the execution, it was held to be a fraud upon the vendor and the judgment, creditor was not permitted to retain the goods which had been purchased in by him upon his execution. Ib.

Thomas L. and J. L. were owners of a farm in Orange County, which, in 1811, was, by a fraud upon them, mortgaged to R. The mortgage was foreclosed in chancery, and the farm advertised for sale by a master. Before the sale, B., by an arrangement with Thomas L. and J. L., agreed to purchase in the farm for their benefit, for which he was to receive a stipulated compensation. R., the mortgagee, in order to favor Thomas L. and J. L., agreed with B. that he might bid off the property at $1500, about half the amount of the mortgage. B. at the sale, prevented others bidding, by representing that he intended to buy for Thomas L. and J. L. B. purchased the farm at the master's sale for $1540, about $1000 below its value. Afterwards B. refused to convey the farm to Thomas L. and J. L., or to account to them for the value. although they tendered to him the amount of his bid, with interest, and the sum agreed to be paid for his services. It was held, that B. was a trustee for Thomas L. and J. L., and had no other interest in the farm than that of a mortgagee to secure the repayment of the purchase money and the payment of the sum agreed to be allowed him for his services. Brown v. Lynch, 1 Paige, 147.

Where S. being indebted to several persons, was in September, 1817, sued for a default in paying over moneys received as a commissioner of loans, and judgment was recovered against him on the 31st of January, 1818, and on the 1st of January, 1818, S. conveyed, to L. his farm, and all his personal property for the nominal consideration of $8501 25, $4000 of which was paid in Virginia lands which had been purchased by L. twenty years before, but which he had never seen or possessed, and there was no proof of the payment of the residue of the consideration, and S. continued in possession of the property so conveyed to L. It was held, that this conveyance was fraudulent and void as against the creditors of S. Lee v. Hunter, 1 Paige, 519.

Where the defendant, by a fraudulent over drawing, obtained the complainant's money, and deposited it to his own credit in another institution, held, that the title to the property was not changed, and might be reclaimed by the owners. The Tradesman's Bank and the Chemical Bank v. Merritt, 1 Paige, 302.

A court chancery relieve against a fraud, by converting the person guilty of it into a trustee for those who have been injured thereby. Brown v. Lynch, 1 Paige, 147.

---

PATCH THE MURDERER.

We are indebted to Mr Hobler, Jun. for the following anecdote :—' The incident mentioned by Professor Amos (inserted in the last number) reminds me of a conversation I had a few years since on Patch's case, with the late Mr Charles Humphreys, well known for his great skill in Crown practice, and who conducted the prosecution against Patch. He related the circumstance nearly in these terms :—He (Mr H.) had examined the premises of Mr Blight who was murdered ; and he had the chair in which he was sitting, and the other things in the room, placed exactly in the positions they were in at the time of the murder : and from the manner, it occurred to him that the pistol must have been fired with the left hand. With this idea, he obtained an interview with Patch at a time when he was at dinner : Mr Humphreys then observed that Patch used the knife with his left hand, which at once confirmed the opinion he had formed, that Patch was the murderer, notwithstanding his protestations of innocence.'—Legal Obs.

---

A well-known brow-beating barrister was last week cross-examining a witness on Circuit. The man was rather pert and flippant in his answers, which provoked the Counsellor to say, ' If you do not cease your impudent remarks I shall claim the protection of the Court!' ' Humph !' rejoined the other, ' from the language I heard from you, I thought I could not be far from some court or Alley !' This was too much ; a laugh resounded through the Court, in which even the Judge participated, although he comes from the refined neighborhood of the Park.

---

During the time when Swing was in all his glory, a country Justice actually committed a poor ploughman for ' being found' under suspicious circumstances, near a hay-rick, ' with intent to set it on fire ;' when the whole of the evidence against the poor man was, that he had been seen near the stack, not with a lighted candle, but with a pail of water ! This is a fact. The sapient Magistrate still holds the Commission in the county of Berks, where he is as likely as ever to set the Thames on fire!

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1831.

LAW REPORTING.

Reports of Cases argued and determined in the Vice Chancellor's Court. Vol. II. Part 4. By N. Simons, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law. Clarkes, 1831.

Our readers will probably remember the observations which we had occasion to make in a recent Number, on the subject of law reporting.* We are not inclined to abandon the task that we there prescribed to ourselves; and we shall from time to time reiterate the objections, which we then made to the present system, and occasionally illustrate our observation by specimens of the mode in which reports are 'got up.' To show that we have not formed a hasty or inconsiderate opinion of the impropriety of the modern practice we shall shortly advert to the former customs in this respect, and if we do not entirely approve of them we infinitely prefer them to the present system.

It is well known that at the earliest period of our legal history, certain persons were appointed by the court to report the decisions. Chief Baron Gilbert, and Mr Justice Blackstone both inform us that the Year Books were thus composed. Their number was limited, and they were at first paid by the king as officers of the court. These official reports seem to have been discontinued about the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII. although they were afterwards revived for a short period. Subsequently to these official reports, the profession had not to depend on the spare time of any gentleman who might choose to give an account of what was passing in the courts, but, on the notes made by the judges themselves. Thus Dyer's Reports consist of the notes made by Sir James Dyer himself, and were published after his death by his executors. Keilwey's Reports were edited by Serjeant Croke, who was afterwards created a judge. Coke's Reports, as is generally known, were the reports of that most learned and eminent person himself, and consisted, as he tells us himself, of 'cases adjudged upon mature deliberation,' and he was requested to continue them by the king. Hobart's Reports have the same authority: they were compiled by that able judge. The subsequent reports were all more or less of the same character, although not of the same authority. They all were, or purported to be notes actually made by judges. They were however so numerous that in the reign of James II. it was thought proper to prohibit the publication of law books, without the license of the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, and Chief Baron, or one or more of them. This lisense appears, with one or two exceptions, in all the reports down to Douglas; when the judges refused to grant it any longer. It became at last indeed a mere form, and was therefore useless.

The new æra of law reporting was commenced in 1786, by the reports known by the name of the Term Reports. From this time any person who chooses to employ his time in reporting cases, however inexperienced and unqualified he may be, may, by the assistance of a bookseller send forth his 'reports' of the decisions of the judges. Now this appears to us manifestly absurd and improper. It tends greatly to confuse, and unsettle the law. There is no security for the practitioner. In many cases he cannot be certain that the report is correct, and yet he has no power to act contrary to it. It can only be nullified by the court itself. These are, among others, our reasons for objecting to the present system. We think there should be some persons especially appointed to hand down the decisions of the court. Every facility should be afforded to him and he should devote his time entirely to this important duty. At present the reporter, although properly qualified, may, or may not be in court: he may or may not have it in his power to procure all the papers in the cause; he may or may not have the most ample information on everything connected with it; he may or may not be favored with the judge's notes of his judgment; it is left to accident. The most important case of the Term or Sitting may thus be imperfectly reported or entirely omitted. This state of things should no longer exist. It is one of those practical grievances that may be easily and speedily remedied, and we sincerely hope that it will be attended to.

Mr Simons' reports are, as every one knows, in continuation of those edited by himself and Mr Stuart. We have always considered these last as some of the ablest reports of the present day, and we have no reason to complain of any falling off in them since the whole labor has devolved on Mr Simons.

Some few of the cases are perhaps more fully stated than is necessary, as for instance the Attorney-General v. Mayor &c. of Carlisle, p. 37., but they are always well selected and accurate. We shall notice some of the most important decisions in this Number, none of which, however, are very striking. Most of the cases are on points of practice and pleading, which we shall not now discuss, but shall pass to those which relate to the principles of equity.

The first of these which we shall notice is the case of Lear v. Leggett, p. 479., in which a testator bequeathed a certain sum of stock to trustees upon trust for A. for life, and after his death in trust for his children, and declares that the interest of A. should not be subject to any alienation or disposition by sale, mortgage, or otherwise, or by anticipation of the receipts; and if he should make or attempt to make any alienation of it, then it was limited to other persons,—in this case to the children of A.—A. became a bankrupt, and the question was whether his interest passed to his assignees, or devolved on his children. The Vice Chancellor held, that it passed to his assignees, and not to his children, and he thus discussed the former cases on the point.

'This is not a case in which I can hold, on the words of this proviso, that the limitation over took effect; and it appears to me that the cases which have been cited in support of the children's claim do not warrant the argument in their favor.

'The words of this will must, as in all cases of the like nature, be construed with great strictness. In Dommet v. Bidford, 6 T. R. 684., the annuity on which the question arose was given by reference to the annuity given to the niece. There the testator gave the said annuity to his niece, Anne Ireland, and declared that the same should, from time to time, be paid to herself only; and that a receipt under her hand, and no other, should be a sufficient discharge for the payment thereof; his intent being that the said annuity, or any part there of, should not be alienated for the whole term of her life, or for any part of the said term; and that if the same should be so alienated the said annuity should immediately cease and determine. The testator does not say, that if the annuity was alienated by the act of the party it should cease, therefore that is not a case in which the benefit was to go over on an act done by the party. The case of Cooper v. Wyatt, 5 Madd. 482. is totally different from the one now before me. The Vice Chancellor, in giving judgment, calls in aid his construction of the proviso, the mode in which the benefit is given to the nephew, and says, here is no gift to the nephew, other than a direction that the payment should be made into his proper hands, but not to his assigns, and for his own use and benefit, which expressions naturally import an intention of personal enjoyment by the nephew, and the exclusion of all who attempt to claim through him; and in this sense the words 'his assigns' will as well comprehend the assignees by operation of law as the assignees by his own act; the judgment therefore did not rest on the proviso alone, but on the proviso taken in connexion with the limited words of the gift. [His Honor here read the part of the will in this case in which the trusts were declared, and then proceeded.] Now 'here is a gift totally unlike the gifts in Dommet v. Bidford, and Cooper v. Wyatt. The testator there directs that the gifts shall not be subject to any alienation or disposition by sale, mortgage, or otherwise, in any manner whatsoever. Now these words alone do not create any forfeiture. The testator then declares, that in case his son or daughters should charge, or attempt to charge, affect, or encounter, &c. Now all these words refer to a voluntary act of the party, and point at a voluntary alienation; and I am of opinion that no act has been done, in this case, which can be said to be a voluntary alienation, or an attempt to alienate; and I must therefore declare that the assignees are entitled to the life interest of Alexander Goudge, the son, in the fund in question.'

The next case which we shall present to our readers is Hodson v. Murray, p. 515. which we shall give more fully.

'The bill prayed that a promissory note for 8000*l.*, which had been given by the plaintiff to Rowland Stephenson, and which the latter, after it became due, had delivered to the defendant as a security for a debt to a greater amount, due from him to the defendant might be delivered up to be cancelled, and that the defendant might be restrained from proceeding in the action which he had commenced against the plaintiff upon the note. The bill alleged that Stephenson had agreed to advance the 8000*l.* to the plaintiff, to enable him to pay for an estate which he had contracted for; that the contract failed, and consequently that nothing was ever advanced upon the note, and that the note was, from inadvertence, left in Stephenson's hands. The defendant by his answer denied any knowledge of the tranactions between Stephenson and the plaintiff: he admitted, that when Stephenson produced the note to him, Stephenson's indorsement on it was cancelled; that the reason assigned by Stephenson for the cancellation was to prevent the amount being recovered in case the note should be lost, and that Stephenson afterwards reindorsed it.

Mr Sugden and Mr Ching, for the plaintiff, said, that a person who took a note when it was over-due held it subject to all the equities that it was liable to in the hands of the original holder : that, although he, the plaintiff, might avail himself of that defence in a court of law, this Court was not ousted of its jurisdiction.

* See Jurisprudent, No. 46.

'Mr Horne, Mr Burge, and Mr Swann, for the defendant, said, that the Court could not direct that the bill should be delivered up to be cancelled, as the defendant might sue Stephenson, if he could not sue the plaintiff for the amount ; that the principle on which the plaintiff sought relief was originally established in the courts of law, and was not adopted by them from this court : that the bill sought to oust the courts of law of their jurisdiction in a case where they did complete justice ; and that therefore the plaintiff had no right to apply to this court for its extraordinary interference: that the answer did not show that there was nothing due on the note, as between the plaintiff and Stephenson, but stated that the defendant knew nothing of the transactions between the plaintiff and Stephenson ; and therefore the plaintiff had not proved, as he ought to have done, that there was nothing due from the one to the other : that the plaintiff, by suffering the note to remain in Stephenson's hands, had enabled the latter to commit a fraud upon the defendant, and been guilty of greater negligence than the defendant had : that the defendant, if permitted to go to trial, might be able to prove facts, from which a judge would infer that the plaintiff suffered Stephenson to retain the note for the purpose for which it had been applied, and would thereby get rid of the equity arising from the defendant's having taken it when it was over-due.

'The Vice chancellor said :—This is a very suspicious case on the part of the defendant. Although a court of law may not allow a defendant to recover upon this note, it is no reason that this court should be deprived of its jurisdiction. It appears to me to be a question that ought to be further inquired into in this court.—Motion granted.'

The case of Porter v. Clark, p. 520., is of some importance to Dissenters.

'A chapel and buildings were vested in trustees, upon the following trusts : to permit and suffer the said messuage, meeting-house, buildings, and premises, to be used as and for a place for the worship of Almighty God, by the congregation of protestants dissenting from the church of England, under the denomination of particular baptists, holding the doctrine of personal election, imputation of original sin, effectual calling, free justification, and final perseverance of the saints, and by the members and successors of the same congregation of protestants holding the same doctrines. Shortly before the filing of the bill, difference had arisen in the congregation ; some of the members being desirous of appointing Owen Clark to be co-pastor with Porter, while others were averse to such appointment. However, on the 13th of March, 1828, a church meeting was held, at which it was resolved to invite Clark to preach at the chapel for three months, as a probationer to be co-pastor with Porter. Clark came accordingly, and at the end of that period was elected joint minister with Porter. To this election Porter refused to consent, alleging that the congregation had not the power to appoint a co-pastor without such consent ; further disputes and differences were the consequences of this refusal, and eventually, on the 6th of November, 1828, a church meeting was held, at which it was resolved that Porter should be no longer pastor, and that the defendant Clark should, from that time, be sole pastor ; and on the following Sunday Porter was forcibly prevented from entering the pulpit, and Clark, the defendant, took possession of it.

'There was no endowment for the minister, nor any trust property, except the chapel and premises, nor was the ministers paid by the pew-rents, but solely by the voluntary contributions of persons attending the chapel.

'The bill was filed by Porter, by the trustees of the chapel, and by two of the members of the congregation, on behalf of themselves and all others the members, except such as were made defendants, against Clark and nine of the members, by whose orders Porter had been forcibly expelled. It prayed that the trusts upon which the premises were held might be ascertained and declared, and carried into execution, by and under the direction and decree of the court, so far as it might be deemed proper or necessary ; and that a sufficient number of proper persons might be appointed new trustees, in the room of such as were dead, or desirous of being released from the burden of their trusts ; and that it might be declared that Porter was the lawful pastor and minister of the chapel and congregation, and that he might be quieted in the possession of such rights as appertained to him in that capacity ; and also, that the defendant Clark might be restrained by the injunction of the court from performing the duty of pastor or minister of the chapel and congregation, or officiating or performing divine worship in the chapel, that he and the other defendants might be restrained, in like manner, from impeding, or in any manner interfering with Porter in the exercise of his duties as pastor and minister thereof.

'A motion was now made for an injunction in the terms of the prayer. In support of the motion numerous affidavits, made by dissenting ministers of this denomination, were read, who all agreed, that when a minister has been duly elected to be pastor of a congregation, and has been ordained according to the form usual amongst them, he held this office until he thinks fit to decline it ; and that no person, or body of persons, has power to remove him, or to appoint a co-pastor with him, without his consent.

'The Vice Chancellor said, that he had looked into the deed creating the trusts, and that he could find no directions as to the mode of electing ministers, or as to the duration of their office, when elected ; neither could he find that there was any provision made for the minister by the trust deed ; but that he was dependent entirely on the voluntary contributions of the members of the congregation : and he, therefore, could not see that the plaintiff, Porter, had made any case for the interference of the court.

'His Honor added, that independently of the want of jurisdiction, he was of opinion that it was very reasonable that a minister who depended entirely upon voluntary contributions, should be dismissible at will by the persons so voluntary contributing.'—Legal Observer.

---

LAWYERS IN NAPLES.

'In the kingdom of Naples there are 20,000 lawyers, most of them younger branches of the nobility ; and there is no nation, however large in which so many lawsuits are carried on.'—Michael Kelly's Memoirs.

QUALIFICATIONS OF A CHIEF JUSTICE IN HAYTI.

The Grand Judge, Mons. Freshnell, is an infirm man of color, nearly eighty years of age. Until he arrived at middle age, he had been actively and successfully employed in the marauding career of a pirate. His legal knowledge is just what might have been expected from his previous avocation. He is a modest old man, it is true, for when his present appointment was offered to him he declined it, as he said himself, from his incompetency to fill it, and to perform the duties which it required. Boyer, however, insisted on his accepting it, and remarked, 'that it did not require talent or legal knowledge to execute the duties of it ; that he had only to do as he was directed by such orders as he might receive from the bureaus of goverment.'—Franklin's Present State of Hayti.

---

LOCAL COURTS IN HAYTI.

The proceedings in the lower courts are somewhat extraordinary in civil cases. If a creditor institute a suit against a debtor in one district and obtain a verdict, the defendant is permitted to appeal from the sentence to the court of the adjoining district, and so on in succession throughout the whole series of district courts ; and if the last confirm the judgment of the first, the defendant can then move it into the Court of Cassation ; and in the event of that court confirming the judgments of the courts below, he may appeal from it to the president, and apply for a new trial in those courts, so that the contest proceeds ad infinitum.—Franklin's Present State of Hayti.

---

It is said that the excellent Chief Justice of England is about to retire from his station. His Lordship's infirm state of health is of course the only cause of his retirement. Lord Lyndhurst, it is supposed, will succeed to the vacant seat.

---

The Lord Chancellor has added four new commissioners to the Common Law Enquiry. They are Messrs Pollock, Starkie, Evans and Wightman.

His Lordship has also appointed four of the present Commissioners of Bankrupts, Messrs Montagu, Beames, Fonblanque, junior, and Fane, to consider the subject of the Bankrupt laws and to report to him thereon.

He has also appointed four other gentlemen to consider the subject of reform in the court of Chancery, and report thereon. The selection is a very proper one, as it is understood that they are the Solicitor General, Mr Courtenay, Cler. of Par, Mr Merivale, and Mr Spence.

Mr Justice James Allan Park, it is said, is about to retire from the Bench.

---

During the last two Terms, 219 Attorneys have been admitted on the Rolls of the Court of King's Bench, and 5 additionally in the common Pleas. There were 343 who gave notices of application ; but it seems that of these 116 abandoned their intention.

It is supposed that nearly 800 Attorneys are yearly admitted, or 200 each Term. It has been said deemed material, by a careful search of the original Rolls of the several courts, to correct this mistake. Those who are not admitted within four Terms after notice must repeat it. Many of the applicants renew their Notice at an earl period ; some at a distant one ; and others form a change of views, never apply again.

VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS, recently received from Europe, and for sale by GRAY & BOWEN, No 141 Washington street.

Browne's Self Interpreting Bible, with notes, references, illustrations, reflections, and a memoir of the author; in one large quarto volume.

The Mirror of Parliament, edited by John Barrow Esq. This work contains a complete account of the doings and debates in the British Parliament, during the last December session ; in eight parts, folio.

Select Views on the River Clyde, engraved by Joseph Swan, with historical and descriptive illustrations; in one quarto volume, with fortytwo splendid engravings.

Select Views of the Lakes of Scotland, from original paintings ; in two parts.

Hinton's History and Topography of the United States. This work will be completed in thirty numbers, quarto, with ninety engravings; eight numbers are already received.

History of the sufferings of the Church of Scotland, from the restoration to the revolution ; by Rev. Robert Wodrow; 4 vols. 8vo.

History and Antiquities of the Doric Race ; by C. O. Müller ; 2 vols. 8vo.

History of Scotland, from the Union ; by John Struthers ; 2 vols. 8vo.

A Selection from the Papers of the Earls of Marchmont ; illustrative of events from 1685 to 1750 ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, complete in two vols. 8vo.

A System of Geography, popular and scientific ; illustrated by a complete series of maps and other engravings; by James Bell ; 3 vols. 8vo.

McUre's History of Glasgow, with plates and illustrations ; 1 vol.

History of Modern Greece ; by James Emerson ; 2 vols. 8vo.

Rollins' Ancient History, with Life, notes and numerous maps and plates ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Thompson's Narrative of an official visit to Guatamala ; 1 vol.

Six Years' residence in the United States of America ; by Peter Neilson ; 1 vol.

Lardner's Cyclopedia ; complete set as far as published ; 16 vols.

Lardner's Cabinet Library, annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 1831.

Murphy's Treatise on the art of Weaving; with fifteen engravings ; 1 vol.

Mackenzie on the Diseases of the Eye ; 1 vol.

Spix's Travels in Brazil, with engravings ; 2 vols. 8vo.

BYRON'S WORKS—a new and beautiful edition, with a portrait, and other engravings ; in 4 vols. 16mo.

Evan's Sketch of the Denominations of the Christian World ; 1 vol.

Addison's Works ; 4 vols. ; a new edition.

Bowring's Poetry of the Magyars ; 1 vol.

Constable's Miscellany ; vols. 60 to 65 inc.

Family Library.—Lives of British Painters—Lives of Physicians—Life of Bruce—Court and Camp of Buonaparte—Demonology and Witchcraft.

Foreign Tales and Traditions ; 2 vols.

The Casquet, or Literary Gem ; edited by Alexander Whitelaw ; 2 vols.

do do do (2d series) 2 vols.

The Atheneum, an original Literary Miscellany ; 1vol.

The Midsummer Medley for 1830 ; by the author of Brambletye House.

Life on board a Man of War ; 1 vol.

Robertson's Parent's Guide to Baptism ; 1 vol.

Gospel Truth accurately stated and illustrated ; by Rev. John Brown ; 1 vol.

Outline of the Scripture Evidence for the Trinity ; 1 vol.

The New Testament, translated by Doddridge, Campbell and Macknight ; 1 vol. 12mo.

An Essay on Chemical Analysis; by M. Thenard; translated by J. G. Children ; 1 vol.

Aids to Reflection ; by S. T. Coleridge ; 1 vol.

Fabliaux, or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries.

A Help to Professing Christians ; by Rev. John Barr ; 1 vol.

The Wine Drinker's Manual ; 1 vol.

The Shamrock, a collection of Irish Songs.

The National Minstrel ; a choice selection of popular songs.

Parochial Psalmody ; by J. P. Clarke.

Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History.

Pinnock's Modern Geography and History.

The Caterer ; being a selection of pieces in prose and verse ; 1 vol.

Johnson's Dictionary, complete in one imperial 8vo.

Morewood's Essay on Inebriating Liquors.

Dibdin's Library Companion ; 1 vol.

Biblia Hebraica.

Novum Testamentum Græce.

Aristophanes Comædiæ.

Sophocles Tragædiæ.

Pindari Carmina.

Æschyli Tragædiæ. May 21

JUST published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Language.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours ; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise ; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII. Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books ; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide ; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book ; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIV. for May, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College.

II. President Wayland's Sermon. The Certain Triumph of the Redeemer. A Discourse. By Francis Wayland, D. D.

III. Meaning of Alων. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays.

IV. Grimké's Discourses. 1. An Address on the Expediency and Duty of adopting the Bible as a Class Book. By T. S. Grimké. 2. An Oration of the Advantages to be derived from the Introduction of the Bible and of Sacred Literature, as Essential Parts of all Education. By Thomas S. Grimké.

V. Children's Books. 1. The Young Reader. By John Pierpont. 2. Peter Parley's Tales about the Sun, Moon and Stars. 3. Tales of Travels, West of the Mississippi. By Solomon Bell. 4. Cousin Elizabeth. By the Author of 'A Visit to the Sea Side.' 5. The Children's Robinson Crusoe. By a Lady. 6. The Little Girl's Own Book. By Mrs Child.

VI. History of English Baptists. Sermons on Various Important Public Occasions. By Robert Hall, A. M. 3. Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Rev. Andrew Fuller. By J. W. Morris. Editedby Rufus Babcock, Jr. 4. Asiatic Journal for British India.

VII. Sulivan's Political Class Book. The Political Class Book, By William Sullivan. Counsellor at Law. With an Ap pendix, by George B. Emerson.

VIII. Dr Waterhouse's Essay on Junius. An Essay on Junius and his Letters ; embracing a Sketch of the life and character of Wm. Pitt, &c.; with reflections relating to the Affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to1785. By Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

IX. The Way of Truth and Union.

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

SPLENDID BIBLE. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars. April 9.

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1831. NO. XLVIII.

DISSERTATIONS ON CONVEYANCING.

NO. I.

DIRECTIONS FOR THE STUDY OF THE LAWS OF REAL PROPERTY.

BLACKSTONE commences his Commentaries by an Introductory Lecture, showing the great importance of the study of the law, not merely to lawyers, but also to all other classes of the community; and it would be easy to prove, that if this be more correct in any particular branch than in the others, it is in the study of the laws of property, or that portion of legal learning which is comprised under the general term conveyancing. A man may never bring an action at law or file a bill in equity, during the course of his life, but he is always the possessor of some portion of property, large or small, which he or his relatives have acquired, and which he wishes to enjoy with comfort and security during his life, and to hand down to others on his death. He will probably, without passing through a very eventful or busy existence, become a party to most of the transactions common in conveyancing. He generally either becomes the purchaser of lands, or he rents a house; in the one case a purchase deed, in the other a lease, will be wanted; he is desirous of raising a sum of money, and a mortgage is the security demanded from him; he marries and a settlement for the mutual benefit of himself, his wife, and his children, becomes expedient; he is anxious to transmit his property according to his own notions of the manner in which it should be enjoyed, and he finds it necessary to make a will.

The importance therefore, of every one possessing some knowledge of all these common-place transactions, will readily be seen and admitted; but if an acquaintance with the laws of property is an agreeable and useful accomplishment to the man of the world, to the legal practitioner, of whatever class, it is indispensable. The principles of the law of property are derived from well known and intelligible sources, and their application in practice is constantly demanded.

At least one half of all the causes which are tried in the courts of justice in England, whether in equity, at common law, or in ecclesiastical courts, arise entirely from disputed questions on the laws of property; and two thirds of the causes so tried involve indirectly some point relating to them. To the barrister, therefore, and to the student for the bar, whether practising, or intending to practise, in the upper or the lower end of Westminister Hall, a familiarity with these laws is absolutely necessary. To the solicitor and attorney, and to those who are qualifying themselves for that branch of the profession, it is at least as requisite. In the difficulties and intricacies of pleading, in the strife and turmoil of a court, the attorney can call in the assistance of others, and may rely almost devotedly on them. So also, on many embarrassing questions depending on the laws of real property, he may obtain the advice of counsel. The abstruse case, the voluminous abstract, the perplexing conveyance, may all be laid before the conveyancer, and the responsibility thrown upon him. But there are many duties, not less important than these, for the discharge of which the attorney must solely rely upon himself and his own sources of information. If employed for a vendor or mortgagor, he must prepare the abstract of the title-deeds, wills, and other documents; if employed for a purchaser or mortgagee, he must compare the abstract delivered, with the original deeds, and other documents abstracted. These duties alone, to be efficiently discharged, require no inconsiderable knowledge of the laws of property, and the formal language of legal instruments; and the solicitor must remember, that he is positively responsible to his client for fulfilling this portion of his labors faithfully and correctly, and that he can in no manner avoid the penalties to which his neglect or ignorance in these particulars will expose him. Thus, where an attorney acts for a client who advances money on the security of legacy given under a will to the borrower, the attorney is not justified in relying upon a partial extract from the will furnished by his client, but must consult the whole of the original will, unless the latter agrees to take the responsibility on himself. Wilson v. Tucker, 3 Sark. N. P. C. 154, S. C. 1 Dow. and Ry. N. P. C. So also, where an attorney was employed by a purchaser to inspect the title of an estate, and an abstract was delivered to him on behalf of his client. The attorney laid an abstract before counsel for his opinion, containing only some of the deeds, and omitting others contained in the abstract delivered to him. The opinion of counsel (Mr Preston,) on the abstract delivered to him, was, that the vendor had a good title; but that opinion would not have been given, if the deeds omitted had been stated to him in his abstract; and it was held, that the attorney was personally liable for the damage which the purchaser sustained from the invalidity of the title, Mr Justice Bayley observing, that 'It was the duty of an attorney to take care not to draw wrong conclusions from the deeds laid before him, but to state the deeds to the counsel whom he consults, or he must draw conclusions at his peril.' 3 Barn. and Cress. 799.

Now, in these cases, no fraud, no desire to deceive was imputable to the attorney. He was merely held liable from his neglect of the duties of his profession, and they are cited for the purpose of showing how easily a man who will not give himself the trouble of acquiring the proper knowledge, may not only injure the most important interests of his client, but may himself be forced to make good the damage arising from his neglect.

The importance of the knowledge of the laws of property to the professional man being admitted, the next inquiry is into the means of obtaining it. And let it not be supposed that these are very distressing or laborious. The principles of conveyancing, if the student will only enter heartily and earnestly into the inquiry, may now speedily be acquired. At a former period his difficulties were much greater; he had himself to explore, without any guide, the vast but undigested stores contained in Lord Coke's Commentary on Littleton, or Roles' Abridgment. He had to dig his learning himself out of these mines. His task at the present day is much more easy. Elementary books have been written by some of the most eminent men; treatises on every subject abound: he has now nothing to disgust or frighten him in the study; the folio volume has been superseded by the octavo; the black letter has entirely disappeared; the important difficulties are done away; and all that is wanted for the pursuit, is a moderate portion of industry, ability, and perseverance. The blame if the student did not advance, might formerly have fairly been laid to the dryness of the study and its varied and numerous difficulties; at the present day the blame can only attach to himself.

In recommending a course of study upon the laws of property, we shall choose that which we have found answer best in practice; other courses recommended by several eminent men will be pointed out,* but the one to which we shall call the reader's attention will be found to be more short and simple than any of these, and we know that it has been found very extensively serviceable, and has answered the end designed.

In the first place we should advise the student to devote at least six hours daily to reading; 'seven hours at law,' was Sir William Jones' translations of Lord Coke's 'sex horas,' and the student may so translate it if he will; but six hours, properly employed, are, we think, at first sufficient. They must, however, be given at the best time of the twentyfour, when the mind is most fresh, and most susceptible of acquiring information; they need not be six consecutive hours: they had better, in fact, not follow each other, but they must be actually devoted to study. It will not be sufficient that the student shall pass the time in company with his books; he must make himself certain that he has actually acquired some knowledge during the intercourse; before commencing his day's study, he must inquire whether he recollects anything of his yesterday's. He should be satisfied that he is in the right course, that he is daily obtaining information: he must reflect on his legal pursuit in his leisure hours, and in his walks; nay, it will not be amiss if he dream a little about them, for that will prove, that his mind is thoroughly engaged in the study.

We have been thus minute, because we know how useless and tiresome mere general rules are; and we shall throughout this course of dissertations, continue to be as minute and particular in our directions and details as possible, because we know it will be of service to the student.

The first book which the student of the laws of real property should take up, is the second volume of Blackstone's Commentaries. Since this work was written, the principles of conveyancing have undergone some variation; the author, moreover, was not a practical conveyancer; and in reducing the large mass of learning contained in the earlier writers into a system, he was occasionally led into error; but, notwithstanding these disadvantages, the second volume of Blackstone will still be the best first book for the student. He will find the principles of the laws of property clearly stated and arranged; he will get a general view of the information which he is to obtain; he will meet with definitions and explanations of all techical phraseology, and he will find the whole written in a language so beautiful and harmonious, that it will be singular if he be not delighted with the study. Besides, on many points, the information which he obtains from Blackstone will be all that he will need.

*The recommendations of different learned persons as to the study of the law, will be given in our next number.

To the study of this volume, then, the student must devote himself. A modern edition will of course answer better than an old one, but the notes generally appended will not be found of much service,—the text must be the great object of his study. He will go through it chapter by chapter, and master every sentence: the slowness of his progress through the volume is immaterial—let him only fully understand and reflect upon everything he reads; if he cannot fully comprehend it, let him look at the authorities referred to, if there be any, although they will not always help him much; if he is still in doubt, let him ask some competent person the meaning of the passage, but let him never leave it until he is satisfied he fully understands.

Blackstone's second volume should always be read twice, and it depends on the manner of the second reading whether it should not be read a third time. If, on a second reading, the student finds he is perfectly familiar with its contents, he may then leave it; but if he finds the subject still fresh to him, and that he does not remember much of it, he should read it again and again, until he almost knows it by heart. The great rule with Blackstone, and other good books, is, that you should never leave them without carrying away all they contain, and making it a portion of your own stock of knowledge.

If the student follows these directions, he will have gained this great advantage, that, if he takes up any other work on the laws of property, he will know, before reading it, some portion of its contents. He will be already the proprietor of a little stock of knowledge and he will be continually adding to the head. He will carry with him to the consideration of a fresh branch of the subject, some knowledge of the other branches, which will afford him the greatest assistance. His notions will be precise and accurate. and not mere floating generalities.

The next work to be taken up is Mr Butler's Notes to Lord Coke's Commentary on Littleton, particularly the long and able note upon uses and trusts. Here he will find the most important practical information presented to him clearly and correctly. We think that Lord Coke's Commentary may safely be passed over except as a work of reference. We are thoroughly convinced that it is not the book to be put into a student's hands: the quaintness of the style, the mass of useless matter, the diffusiveness on unimportant points, the entire omission of others now rendered important; all these faults, of which this celebrated work is undoubtedly guilty, disqualify it in our opinion from being a student's book. All the useful information it contains may now be much more easily and readily obtained in other works. We therefore are happy to remove this heavy obstacle from the path of the conveyancing student.

Having fully mastered Mr Butler's notes, we next recommend Mr Sanders' Essay on Uses and Trusts, in which this important learning is ably and perspicuously treated. The following works should then be most attentively read in their order: Cruise's Digest; Sugden's Powers; Fearne on Contingent Remainders; Preston's Treatise on Conveyancing; Powell on Devises; Roberts on Wills; Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry; and the first edition of Preston on Estates. All these are excellent works, and cannot be too well known.

If the student is master of these volumes, he will be now well acquainted with the theory of conveyancing. He will have a competent knowledge of one great branch of property law, and he should then turn his attention to the other great branch, the practice. He must endeavor to get a competent knowledge of abstracts of titles and of deeds. Here he will meet with more difficulty in obtaining his information merely from books. The chambers of a conveyancing counsel, or the office of a solicitor, will be the best places for acquiring this knowledge. These however, may not be open to him; or, if they are, some preparatory information may still be useful, and he may derive benefit from the following observations.

Let him read with the greatest attention Sugden's Vendors, a work repiete with the most useful practical information. He may also peruse more cursorily Preston on Abstracts, a book containing some valuable matter. The fourth vol. of Cruise's Digest should also be carefully perused a second time. The student may also consult with advantage the works containing Precedents in Conveyancing, and make himself master of the legal phraseology, and the usual forms employed in legal instruments. There are now several very valuable collections of these before the profession.

Having mastered all these works, the student will have attained a very tolerable knowledge of conveyancing. His progress will not depend on the number of books read, but on knowing a few good books well, and with the help of those already named, he will be prepared for all ordinary transactions. He may safely add many other modern treatises, which are considered of authority.

At his leisure he may take up the reports, but here he must exercise some discretion. He may, we think, safely leave the elder reporters, and keep them merely as works of reference, but he should read all the cases upon the law of property, in the more modern reporters, beginning with Atkins in the courts of equity, and Lord Raymond in the courts of common law. This of course will be a work of time, and this must be necessarily much disturbed by business, but we should advise its steady pursuit.

We shall now bring our observations to a close. In the first part of his studies the greatest endeavors should be made to acquire clear and precise ideas on the nature and kinds of property, the estate for which it may be granted and held, and the usual manner of alienating property. We shall, in an early number, direct our attention to these subjects, and in the course of these dissertations we shall, from time to time, apply ourselves practically to the difficulties of conveyancing, and endeavor to remove them.

It will, we think, be no slight incentive to the earnest consideration of the subject, for the student to reflect that it will make him master of a science which will be of practical importance in almost every great event of his life, the knowledge of which, to any extent, will be shared with him by a very limited class of persons; and that he will thus acquire a decided and well earned superiority over his fellow citizens.—Legal Observer.

---

REMEDY OF ATTORNEYS IN PARTNERSHIP.

To the Editor of the Legal Observer.

Sir—A case involving a question of considerable importance to the profession recently came before the Court of Common Pleas*, to which I would beg to call your attention. I allude to the question as to the right of an attorney, or of attorney partners, after dissolution, to commence an action for the recovery of costs for business done in a suit still pending. The circumstances were these:—The defendant, Brown, a personal friend of Vansandau during his partnership with Tindale, employed him to conduct a suit in Chancery, which was carried on by V. and T. down to the time of their dissolution of partnership, afterwards by Vansandau alone, and then continued by the new partnership of Vansandau and Brown till they dissolved, and then again by Vansandau alone. At the time of the dissolution of the second partnership of Vansandau and Brown, a special case had been directed by the Court of Chancery, and up to that period the defendant had paid a considerable sum on account to Vansandau. Signed bills were delivered to the defendant separately by V. and T. and V. and Brown, with a cash account as between the defendant and the partnerships.

V. and T. and V. and B. arrested the defendant in separate actions, for the amount of each bill, and both causes came on before Gaselee J., when a special case was directed for the opinion of the Court.

The objections raised on the part of defendant were, 1st, that he was not liable to be sued until the termination of the suit:—2dly, he denied a joint retainer, and insisted that he was indebted only to Vansandau solely;—and, 3dly, as to the action at the suit of V. and B., he contended that there was no business charged for therein, which had been transacted by Vansandau alone, after his dissolution with Tindale, and prior to the partnership of V. and Brown, and therefore, as to that part, the latter partnership were not entitled to recover.

The defendant gave notice to produce the joint retainers. The plaintiffs' clerks proved that the defendant called repeatedly at the offices of the partnership, and that their names were painted in a conspicuous place upon the door: but on cross examination, the plaintiffs' clerks stated that the defendant had always inquired for Mr Vansandau, and that he had not on any occasion seen Mr Tindale. The defendant's correspondence appeared also to have been always addressed to Mr V. and, not to the partnerships.

On the part of the defendant it was said, that the client had nothing to do with a partnership between attorneys—that a separate retainer could not be converted into a joint one against his consent—and that, as it could not be shown he had ever recognised the partnerships, the plaintiffs could not maintain their joint actions against him. It appeared too, on the trial, that Vansandau was still proceeding with the special case directed in the suit. It was attempted to distinguished partnerships between attorneys, and between others carrying on a trade, and that the names of the firm, in the case of attorneys, did not appear upon the Roll, &c.*

---

* Vansandau and Tindal v. Brown.

It should seem that the defendant had the benefit of the advice and exertions of the partnerships; and it may be observed, that solicitors cannot dissolve as against their client, he being entitled to their united exertions. Cholmondely v. Clinton, 19 Ves. 273. Cook v. Rhodes, ib. in note.

And it is questionable, whether the defendant would not have been entitled to sue the partnership for negligence, if any had been committed; and the production of the papers marked in the name of the firm, by the attorneys themselves, would probably have been evidence against them of joint employment. See Hill v. Tucker, 1 Taunt. 9. Hellings v. Gregory, 1 C. & P. 627; and Carne v. Legh, 6 B. & Cres. 124.

As to an attorney's right to withdraw his services, the cases, which are principally in equity lay it down that he cannot do so. I have always thought that such a general rule, under all circumstances, was a hard one: for suppose the attorney to quarrel with his client, because he will not act improperly, as the client may require; or the client otherwise misconducts himself; it would be very unjust that the attorney should be obliged to continue to act against his inclination.

I understand, however, that Lord Tenterden has, at nisi prius, in more than one case, decided that an attorney may withdraw where the client misconducts himself. Here there is one exception to the general rule, and I apprehend other circumstances might arise, which would justify the attorney in declining to act any longer; and wherever he would be so justified, I should think he might clearly sue for the amount of his bill, in whatever stage he might quit the proceedings. Messrs How and Hepinstall were concerned in an action, wherein Lord Tenterden held that an attorney might withdraw his services.

X. D.

* A party can only appoint one attorney, and cannot appear, or plead, in the name of a firm. 4. East, 195. Ellenborough C. J.

DIGEST OF ENGLISH CASES.

EVIDENCE.

A. was indicted for the murder of H. It was opened that A., having malice against P., hired H. to murder him, and that H. did so, and that H. being detected, A. had murdered H. to prevent a discovery of his (A.'s) guilt respecting the murder of P. Evidence was given of expressions of malice used by A. towards P.; and it was held that the prosecutor might also give evidence to show that H. was in fact the person by whom P. had been murdered.

A person charged with murder made confession before the coroner. It appeared that before he made this confession, B., who was both a clergyman and a magistrate, had had an interview with him. Held, that the prosecutors were not bound to call B. before they put in the confession, but that it would be fair for them to do so; and that if the prosecutor did not call B., the prisoner might call him before the confession was read to prove that some inducement was held out.

A., a prisoner charged with murder, was visited by B., who was both a clergyman and a magistrate. B. told him that if he was not the person who struck the fatal blow, and he would tell all he knew, he (B.) would use his endeavors and influence to prevent anything from happening to him: and if he (A.) did not make a disclosure, some one else would probably do so. After this B. wrote to the secretary of state, who returned answer that mercy could not be extended to A.; which answer was communicated by B. to A. After this A. sent for the coroner, and wished to make a statement. The coroner told him that if he did so it would be used as evidence against him. The prisoner made a confession. Held, that this confession was admissible.

If a prisoner in a confession made before a coroner, which is taken down in writing, mention the names of two or more persons who are also charged with the same offence, the confession, when read in evidence, must be read with these names in it just as it is, and the officer of the Court must not say 'another person' and 'a third person,' instead of reading the names.

If a prisoner charged with murder say in his confession, which is read in evidence against him, that he was present at the murder but took no part in the commission of it, this is evidence for him as well as against him; but the Judge will not direct an acquittal, as the jury may believe one part of the confession and disbelieve the other; however, if it is meant to be charged that the prisoner did more than is stated in the confession, there ought to be some evidence to show that. Rex vs. Clewes, 4 Car. & Pay. 221.

On an indictment for robbery, the declaration in articulo mortis of the party robbed, is not admissible in evidence. Rex vs. Lloyd and others, 4 Car. & Pay. 233.

A prisoner being under examination before a magistrate on a charge of felony, a statement was made in his presence by the solicitor for the prosecution which the witness called to prove it said he believed had been taken down in writing: Held, that under these circumstances, parol evidence of the statement was not admissible on the trial of such prisoner. Rex. vs. Holingshead, 4 Car. & Pay. 242.

FREIGHT.

A ship-owner having effected a policy on freight, may, in the event of loss, recover from the underwriter the value of the benefit he (the ship-owner) would have derived (if there had been no loss) by carrying his own goods on the voyage insured. The risk on freight does not attach until goods are either actually shipped on board, or until there is an actual contract for shipping them. Flint vs. Flemyng, 1 B. & Ad. 45.

An indorsee of a Spanish bill of lading to whom the goods have been delivered under it, is liable in assumpsit for the freight, although the bill of lading is for delivery to the consignees without saying 'or their assigns,' such bill of lading appearing by evidence to be usually passed by indorsement. (Per Lord Tenterden.) Beuteira vs. Ruding and another, 1 Moo. and Mal. 511.

INDEMNITY.

A promise to indemnify a co-surety need not be in writing. Thomas vs. Cooke, 3 M. & R. 444.

INDICTMENT.

1. If on an indictment for stealing 'one sheep,' it appear that the animal stolen was under a year old, the prisoner must be acquitted, as he ought to have been indicted for stealing 'one lamb.' If an ewe be stolen, it must be so called in the indictment; and so a lamb must be called a lamb; and the term sheep is only proper where the animal stolen is a wether. Rex vs. Birket, 4 Car. & Pay. 216.

2. An indictment on the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. §§ 2 & 17., for setting fire to a barn and a stack of straw, charged the offences to have been committed 'feloniously, voluntarily, and maliciously,' instead of 'feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously.' Held, bad. The prisoners had set fire to a stack of stubble, (which in Cambridgeshire is called haulm); they were indicted on the first indictment for setting fire to 'a stack of straw.' Held, that this was not straw. And on their being again indicted for setting fire to 'a stack of straw, called haulm,' the judge intimated, that to convict upon such a count would not be safe; and the verdict in consequence was taken upon other counts, charging the setting fire to a barn and a wheat stack. Rex vs. Reader and another, 4 Car. & Pay. 245.

LEGACY.

Swinburn's Treatise is a very useful compilation, giving a compendious view of the civil law from the text writers; but he is not to be considered as an authority by our courts of equity.

The distinction between voluntary and compelled payments has been exploded in our courts for more than a century past.

The civil as well as the ecclesiastical law use a latitude in admitting parol evidence, which is wholly repugnant to the genius of our law.

It is of more importance to the public that the rules of construction when settled by solemn decisions should be adhered to by succeeding judges, than that those rules should have been originally adopted on incontrovertible reasons. Ashe vs. Berry, 1 Beat. 255.

In an abstract of a will bequeathing legacies bequeathed by will made by the testator, he added in the outer margin to his daughters' legacies, 'I intend to make this up British money.' Held, this is an immediate gift in argumentation of the legacies, and not merely a memorandum indicating intention to argument them by future acts. Mason vs. Mason, 1 Beat. 322.

LIBEL.

1. In an action for libel, where the language is ambiguous, and it is doubtful whether it imputes any injurious matter to the plaintiff, the proper question for the jury is, not whether the intention of the publisher be to injure the plaintiff, but whether the tendency of the matter published be injurious to him. Fisher vs. Clement, 10 B. & C. 472.

2. Though a letter written confidentially by the correspondents of a foreign mercantile house contains very strong expressions concerning third persons engaged in mercantile transactions, imputing to such persons 'notoriety for everything but fair dealing and a strict adherence to their engagements,' yet semble that these expressions will not, per se, take away the privilege which attaches to such a communication, and make the letter a libel. Ward and another vs. Smith, 4 Car. & Pay. 302.

LUNATIC.

In an ejectment against parties in possession under a deed, the question was whether the deed was void on account of unsoundness of mind in the grantor. The Judge directed the jury that they were to decide whether the party was of unsound mind, or not: that to constitute such unsoundness as should avoid a deed at law, the party executing must be incapable of understanding and acting in the ordinary affairs of life: that it was not necessary he should be without any glimmering of reason; and as one test of such incapacity, they were at liberty to consider whether he was capable of understanding what he did in executing the deed in question, when its general purport was fully explained to him. But he refused to tell the jury, that in order to avoid the deed at law, the unsoundness of mind must amount to idiocy; and a bill of exceptions was accordingly tendered to him. Held, that the direction was right, and that the case could not be argued or decided upon an objection that the direction was too general and vague, because such objection was not taken at the trial, and did not form part of the bill of exceptions. Ball vs. Mannin, 3 Bli. 1.

---

NEGLIGENCE.

1. Where notice was given to the occupier of adjoining premises of an intention to pull down and remove the foundations of a building, on part of the footing of one of the walls of which, one of the walls of such adjoining premises rested; It was held, that the party giving the notice was only bound to use reasonable and ordinary care in the work, and was not bound in any other way to secure the adjoining premises from injury, although, from the peculiar nature of the soil, he was compelled to lay the foundation of his new building several feet deeper than that of the old. Massey vs. Coyder, 4 Car. & Pay. 161.

2. A tradesman who has a cellar opening upon the public street is bound, when he uses it, to take reasonable care that the flap is so placed and secured as that, under ordinary circumstances, it shall not fall down; but if the tradesman has so placed and secured it, and a wrongdoer throws it down, the tradesman will not be liable in damages for any injury occasioned by it. In an action for an injury to the person, occasioned by the negligent and careless placing of such flap, the declaration of one defendant, who has suffered judgment by default, cannot be used as evidence against the other defendants. Daniels vs. Potter and others, 4 Car. & Pay., 262.

---

NEW TRIAL.

1. The judge, in summing up a case, directed the jury, if they came to a certain conclusion, to give the verdict for the plaintiff; but if they came to either of two other conclusion, which he pointed out, to find for the defendant, and state on which ground their judgment was formed. The plaintiff then chose to be nonsuited. Held that he was not entitled to a new trial on the ground of misdirection, if either of the two latter points was rightly put to the jury. Vacher vs. Cocks, and others, 1 B. & Ad. 145.

2. The court will not grant a new trial, even on payment of costs, where the defendant or his attorney, having an opportunity of trying, permits a verdict to be taken against him as in an undefended cause. Breach vs. Casterton and others, 7 Bing. 224.

3. Where a defendant omitted to appear in an action for crim. con. with his sister-in-law, and the jury gave more damages than were laid in the declaration, the defendant assigning no good reason for not appearing to defend, the court refused to grant a new trial on any terms. Masters vs. Barnwell, 7 Bing. 224. n.

---

LIABILITY OF AGENTS.

KING'S BENCH.—GUILDHALL.

Before the Lord Chief Justice and a Special Jury.

Ridgway v. Milne and another.

Sir James Scarlet stated that this was an action to recover a sum of money of the defendants, Messrs Milne and Parry, solicitors of the highest eminence and respectability. In seeking to obtain payment from them of this sum, he was ready to admit that there was not the slightest ground of imputation against them for withholding it. It was a mere question of legal right, whether under the circumstances, they were bound to sustain a loss, occasioned by their having paid a sum of 500*l.* to a person of the name of Kay, an attorney at Bolton, who had since his receiving it become a bankrupt. Some years ago the plaintiff, a gentleman residing in Lancashire, having a sum of 4000*l.* to invest in securities, transmitted it for that purpose, by a bill specially indorsed to the defendants who accordingly advanced a portion to the Duke of Gordon and part to another gentleman. These securities were subsequently redeemed, and the sums so advanced, respectively returned by the defendants to Mr Ridgway, with the exception of 500*l.* which they had delivered over to Mr Kay, without the authority of the plaintiff for so doing. Kay had become bankrupt and the plaintiff now called upon the defendants, to account to him for the money they had so paid, in their own wrong. This was the whole of the case, and having proved it, he should of course be entitled to a verdict.

Several witnesses were called upon the part of the plaintiff who proved the general features of the case, but upon their cross-examination it appeared the transaction was conducted through the medium of Mr Kay, who was the friend and confidential solicitor of the plaintiff, and that Messrs Milne and Parry were the agents of Kay, it appeared that Kay being in London, the plaintiff transmitted the 4000*l.* to Kay, by whom it was delivered to the defendants, that the defendant paid the balance of 500*l.* remaining in their hands to Kay, as the accredited agent and immediate solicitor and friend of the plaintiff.

Mr Frederick Pollock, upon the facts thus elicited in cross-examination, addressed the jury in favor of the defendants, contending against their liability. He observed that his learned friend had done no more than strict justice, when he admitted, that more respectable and honorable gentlemen were not to be found in the profession; they certainly would be the last men to refuse the payment of any demand for which there was the least pretence. In this case there was none; they considered Kay as the party in whom the plaintiff confided, and to whom he had intrusted the control and management of his pecuniary transactions, not merely upon this occasion, but upon many others; considering Mr Kay in that point of view, they conceived, when they paid the balance in their hands, that they were paying the money to the plaintiff himself. It was three years and upwards before the bankruptcy of Kay, when the payment had been made to him, Kay; and if the plaintiff had not been perfectly satisfied at his having received it, he would undoubtedly have remonstrated with the defendants upon the subject, and insisted upon having it paid to himself, but he had done nothing of the kind; he had acquiesced for a period of three years and upwards; it was not till after this lapse of time, and when Kay had become insolvent and bankrupt, that he turned round upon the defendants, unjustly, to fix them with this sum, which he well knew they had paid, with his own approbation, to the person in whom he reposed confidence at the time, and so continued to do till his bankruptcy.

The Learned Judge shortly addressed the jury, drawing their attention to the points in question in the cause; and the jury, after deliberating a short time, returned their verdict for the defendants.

---

CONSISTORY COURT.

CONDONATION.

Dr Lushington pronounced sentence. After detailing the suit, as instituted originally by Mr William Bramwell against Fanny his wife, for restitution of conjugal rights, which had been met by a suit of divorce, on the ground of adultery and cruelty, alleged by Mrs Bramwell against her husband, he proceeded to observe, that though there had been great familiarity and intimacy between Mr Bramwell and Elizabeth Jeffery from the year 1821; and although there was sufficient room for suspicion, in his placing a young woman of 26 or 27, who had been in his service, in charge of the Castle Inn, Tunbridge, to which he was in the habit of resorting; yet up to a certain period his conduct might be explained in a manner consistent with innocent intentions. But the motive assigned for his resorting there, namely, business, offered no excuse for the improper familiarities which had passed between him and Elizabeth Jeffery, and which were accompanied by circumstances demonstrative of a criminal attachment. In the paper in which Mr Bramwell pledged himself in the most solemn manner to abandon his connexion with Elizabeth Jeffery, the term connexion must have one of two meanings; either it was an admission of the adultery, or not. If it was not an admission, it would be difficult to say that the adultery had been condoned at all. Taking the correspondence in conjunction with the familiarities which had been proved and the whole conduct of the parties, he was of opinion that adultery had been consummated between the parties. Upon this a condonation followed; but this was always a conditional pardon, providing there was no repetition of the improper conduct, and the wife possessed a perfect knowledge of all the offences she pardoned. Now it was not difficult to show that Mrs Bramwell was not then aware of the circumstances which came to her knowledge in the letter of the 10th of May, and that, in fact, she was not cognisant of the adultery at all. But, supposing the condonation complete, what was the subsequent conduct of the husband. He undertook to separate himself entirely from Jeffery, and never, 'if possible,' to carry on the least correspondence with her. Shortly after, however, she clandestinely returned to the Castle Inn, was kept concealed in a bedroom, and this fact was desired by Mr Bramwell to be concealed from his wife. If these meetings were for the purpose, as it had been alleged, of settling accounts, it was the duty of Mr Bramwell to have communicated the fact to his wife, and to have had a third person present. But there was a subsequent return of Miss Jeffery to the Castle Inn; and if the court was to come to a conclusion on that point, what could it conclude but that Mr Bramwell brought her there himself? and where there was so much clandestinity and fraud, guilty intentions must be inferred. He (Dr Lushington) was satisfied that adultery had been committed before May 26th; that it was repeated subsequently and that the condonation was no bar to the suit of the wife.— Bramwell v. Bramwell. Consistory Court of Rochester.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

CHANCERY.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

An adult husband is entitled to the guardianship of the person of his wife during her minority. Kettletas v. Gardener, 1 Paige, 488.

The court will protect the rights of infants where they are manifestly entitled to something, although their guardian ad litem neglects to claim it in their behalf. Stephens v. Van Buren, 1 Paige, 479.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

A wife may compromise a suit brought against her husband for a divorce; and the court will only interfere so far as to see that she is not overreached or imposed upon in the settlement. Kirby v. Kirby, 1 Paige, 565.

The solicitor for the wife cannot insist upon proceeding with the suit against her consent, upon the ground that his costs are not paid. Ib.

An adult husband may file a bill in chancery for the partition of his wife's estate, although she in an infant. Sears v. Hyer, 1 Paige, 483.

The service of a subpœna upon the wife is only necessary where the proceeding is against her in respect to her separate estate. Leavitt v. Cruger, 1 Paige, 421.

In a suit brought by either husband or wife for a divorce, on the ground of adultery, the wife prosecutes and defends without a guardian or next friend, as a feme sole; and her affidavit is admissible against the husband, as to any matter or proceeding in the cause. Kirby v. Kirby, 1 Paige, 261.

An injunction, a receiver, and a writ of ne exeat, may all be resorted to in the same suit, to aid the court in doing justice between the parties. Ib.

A husband, by committing adultery, subjects himself and his property to the jurisdiction of the court of chancery, so far as to enable the court to order his property to be applied to the support of his family, both during the litigation and afterwards. Ib.

And the power of the court extends to compelling the husband to apply a portion of his daily earnings to the same object, during the pendency of the suit. Ib.

INFANT.

A suit may be commenced in the name of an infant without his knowledge or consent. The court, however, on a proper application, will refer it to a master, to ascertain whether such suit is for the benefit of the infant; and if the master reports that it is not for his benefit, will stay the proceedings. Fulton v. Rosevelt, 1 Paige, 178.

INJUNCTION.

An injunction is not waived by a delay in applying for an attachment for its violation. Dale v. Rosevelt, 1 Paige, 35.

Where executors obtained a decree for a perpetual injunction, restraining R. from suing or prosecuting any action at law against such executors or other representatives of their testator, for the recovery of the arrears of an annuity; held, that the prosecution of a suit at law against the heirs of the testator, who were not parties to the suit in this court, to recover the same annuity, was not a breach of the injunction. There is no privity between an executor and the heir or devisee of the land. Ib.

Where the complainant suffered three years to elapse without compelling an answer from one of several defendants, and the other defendants, in their answer charged collusion between the complainant and the defendant who had not answered; it was held, that under such circumstances, the fact that all the defendants had not answered, could not be urged as an objection to the dissolution of an injunction, unless the complainant denied upon affidavit, all collusion, and stated sufficient reason for not compelling an answer from all the defendants. Ward v. Van Bokkelen, 1 Paige, 100.

Where hydraulic works are erected on both banks of a stream, the owners of the works are each entitled to an equal share of the water. If the owner of the mills on either side attempts to deprive the other of the use of his share of the water, of which he has been in the quiet enjoyment, and thus to destroy his mills, a preliminary injunction will be granted, as the injury might be irreparable. Arthur v. Case, 1 Paige, 447.

JUDGMENT.

Where certain lands upon which a judgment is a lien, are advertised for sale under such judgment, part of which lands have been previously sold by the debtor, and there are other lands of the debtor unsold, but the lien of the judgment would expire before such other lands could be advertised and sold, the owner of the judgment in such case would not be bound upon the requisition of the purchaser from the debtor to abandon the sale of the lands so advertised. James v. Hubbard, 1 Paige, 228.

The proper course for such purchaser would be to offer to pay the amount of such judgment and to take an assignment of the same; and then by filing a bill against all the parties in interest before the expiration of the lien of the judgment, it seems such purchaser would be able to preserve the lien so far as to compel contribution upon equitable principles. Ib.

A judgment creditor cannot enforce his judgment against the land of a subsequent purchaser, so long as there are other lands of the debtor sufficient to satisfy the judgment. Ib.

Where there are successive purchasers there is no contribution, and their lands are chargeable with the judgment against the debtor in the inverse order of alienation; that is, the lands last sold are to be first charged. Ib.

A bill filed in the court of chancery against heirs or devisees, has the same effect as the commencement of a suit at law, in preventing the alienation of the estate. But if a judgment at law is obtained before the decree in the court of chancery, the plaintiff in such judgment thereby obtains a prior lien on the legal estate in the hands of the heirs or devisees. Purdy v. Doyle, 1 Paige, 558.

Where a suit is commenced against five heirs for the debt of their ancestor, and the writ is only served upon three, but the plaintiff proceeds and takes judgment against all as joint debtors, he obtains a lien only upon the estate of those upon whom the process was served. Ib.

Where a creditor has obtained a lien upon real estate by a judgment at law, if he subsequently brings an action of debt on his judgment and recovers a new judgment, he will lose his first lien. Ib.

In chancery a judgment recovered in a court of law is considered as binding upon the real parties in the suit, although not the nominal parties on the record. Southgate v. Montgomery, 1 Paige, 41.

JURISDICTION.

Although a person has a perfect remedy at law to recover for the breach of an agreement connected with a note, if he cannot avail himself of it as a defence to an action on the note, he can come into chancery to have the note cancelled, and to recover the balance, if any, which may be due him. Reed v. Bank of Newburgh, 1 Paige, 215.

Where a sheriff, after collecting money on an execution, died insolvent without paying over the same, and no person administered upon his estate, it was held that no suit could be sustained in chancery against the sureties of the sheriff upon his bond, to enforce the payment of the amount so collected by him. Bank of Utica v. Dill, 1 Paige, 466.

Where there existed mutual accounts between M. and E.; and E. sued M. in a foreign court for a settlement, and judgment was rendered against E., and afterwards a suit pending in the Supreme Court of New York, commenced and prosecuted by the assignees of M. in the name of M. against E., was referred to referees, who reported a balance due to E. from M., on which report judgment was entered in favor of E., it was held, that the judgment against E. in the foreign court was not binding upon E. as between him and the assignees of M., and that if that judgment was binding upon E., as it was known to the assignees previous to the hearing before the referees, it should have been insisted upon by them at that hearing, and could not afterwards be a ground of relief in this court. Southgate v. Montgomery, 1 Paige, 41.

This court has jurisdiction to set aside and cancel deeds and other instruments fraudulently obtained, and which are attempted to be set up inequitably. Thomson v. Graham, 1 Paige, 384.

A court of chancery has jurisdiction to correct mistakes in policies of insurance as well as in all other written instruments. Phœnix Insurance Company v. Gurnee, 1 Paige, 278.

Where there are difficulties in relation to an offset at law, relief will be granted to the party claiming the off-set in chancery. McClaren v. Pennington, 1 Paige, 102

LEGACY.

Where a testator devised his real and personal estate to two of his sons, provided they should pay certain legacies given in the will, and the legatees filed their bill against them and obtained a decree for the sale of the real estate to pay the legacies, which, upon being sold, proved insufficient ; and no decree having been asked in that suit, charging the devisees personally with the payment, held that the legatees could not file a new bill against them for that purpose. Cook v. Grant, 1 Paige, 407.

It is a general rule that legacies chargeable upon the real estate and payable at a future day, are not vested, and lapse by the death of the legatee before the time of payment arrives. Birdsall v. Hewlett, 1 Paige, 32.

But this rule has never been extended to a case where the estate was given to a stranger upon condition that he paid the legacy charged thereon; and the rule has been much limited, even as between the legatees and heirs at law. Ib.

---

LIEN.

A grantor of lands has an equitable lien on the estate sold for the payment of the purchase money ; and this lien is not waived by the grantor's taking the mere personal security of the purchaser only, unless there is an express agreement between the parties that the equitable lien be waived. But wherever any security is taken on the land sold, or otherwise, for the whole or a part of the purchase money, the equitable lien will be waived, unless there is an express agreement that it shall be retained. Fish v. Howland, 1 Paige, 20.

So the lien is waived where a note or bond is taken of the vendee for the purchase money, in which a third person joins as security. Ib.

Likewise if the vendee sells to a third person, without notice, the lien is lost. Ib.

Where upon the sale of lands the negotiable note of the purchaser is given for the purchase money, the vender retains an equitable lien upon the land ; but an indorsee is not, from the mere transfer of the note, entitled to the benefit of such lien, where the indorser has not been made liable upon his indorsement. White v. Williams, 1 Paige, 502.

---

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Where a legacy to a daughter was payable on her marriage or when she became of age, and she married before arriving at full age, in a suit brought by her and her husband for the legacy. after the lapse of six years, it was held, that the statute of limitations did not run against her, she coming within the exception in the statute in favor of femes covert. Wood and Wife v. Ex'rs. of Riker, 1 Paige, 616.

Where the statute of limitations is a good defence to only a part of the complainant's demand, if pleaded as a bar to the whole, the plea will be bad. Ib.

The statute of limitations is a good plea in bar in equity as well as at law. Stafford v. Bryan, 1 Paige, 239.

---

MORTGAGE.

An assignment of a land contract for the security of a debt due the assignee, upon the condition, that if the debt was paid at the time stipulated, the assignee should re-assign the contract, is, in equity, a mortgage, and the assignor has a right of redemption. Brockway v. Wells, 1 Paige, 617.

Bona fide purchasers without notice, who have actually paid the purchase money, cannot be disturbed in their title to the premises purchased, where the deed intended as a mortgage is absolute on its face. Whitlick v. Kane, 1 Paige, 202.

In such case, the remedy of the mortgager is personal against the mortgagee and his legal representatives for the moneys received on the sale of the mortgaged premises. Ib.

Where the owner of the legal estate takes an assignment of an outstanding mortgage, there will be no merger of the mortgage, unless the owner of the legal estate so intended when he purchased the mortgage. Russell v. Austin, 1 Paige, 192.

Where a mortgagee obtains a renewal of a lease, or any other advantage in consequence of his situation as such mortgagee, the mortgager coming to redeem, is entitled to the benefit thereof. Slee v. Manhattan Company, 1 Paige, 48.

If the prior mortgage should not be due, the junior mortgagee will be entitled to a decree for a sale of the mortgaged premises, subject to such prior mortgage. The Western Ins. Co. v. The Eagle Fire Ins. Co., 1 Paige, 284.

---

NE EXEAT.

If the party against whom the final decree is made, intends to remove beyond the jurisdiction of the court before the decree can be enforced by execution, a ne exeat will be granted. Dunham v. Jackson, 1 Paige, 629.

A ne exeat is in the nature of equitable bail, and may be applied for in any stage of the suit. Ib.

---

NOTICE.

Where a party has sufficient to put him on inquiry, it is equivalent in equity to actual notice. Pitney v. Leonard, 1 Paige, 461.

---

PARTIES.

As a general rule, a mere witness cannot be made a party defendant. Fulton Bank v. Sharon Canal Company, 1 Paige, 219.

But suits against corporation are exceptions to this rule. As they do not answer upon oath, the only means of obtaining a discovery from them is to make their officers and agents parties, and to compel such officers and agents to answer the bill. b.

The former as well as the present officers of a corporation can be made parties to a suit against such corporation, and compelled to make discovery of facts within their knowledge. Ib.

Where a trustee prosecutes a claim for the benefit of the cestui que trust, the latter must be made a party. Fish v. Howland, 1 Paige, 20.

One of two devisees cannot file a bill for an account against one of two executors, where the executors, by the will, have the charge of the real estate, without making the other devisees and executors parties. Fabre v. Colden, 1 Paige, 166.

---

PARTNERSHIP.

A surviving partner has the legal right to the partnership effects. Case v. Abeel, 1 Paige, 398.

But in equity he is considered merely as a trustee to pay the partnership debts, and to dispose of the partnership property for the benefit of himself and the estate of the deceased partner. Ib.

SHERIFF'S RETURN OF 'LANGUIDUS.'

Jeremy showed cause against a rule calling on the Sheriff of Berkshire to show cause why his return to a writ of latitat should not be quashed. The return was, that he had gone to the lodgings of the defendant, on the 5th of August ; that the lodging consisted of but one room ; that the defendant was then confined to his bed with illness ; that he took him into custody ; that he received a certificate of his illness from the medical man attending him, which declared him to be so ill that it would be dangerous to his life to remove him that on this statement he relinquished the custody of the defendant's body; that he went, a second time, on the 7th of August, when he found that the defendant had removed himself out of the bailiwick. He submitted that it was clear from all the authorities that 'languidus' was a good return. It appeared on the face of this return, that the defendant was so sick, that the Sheriff would not keep him in custody for fear of the dangerous consequences of removal. That rendered the return sufficient. He cited Cavenagh v. Collett,* and Baker v. Davenport,† in support of his argument.

Steer, in support of the rule, contended that it was the duty of the Sheriff to keep a defendant in custody, although he might not have him in Court at the return of the writ. He had no right to let him escape, as in the present instance he had. If it were true that the medical man told him that the removal of the defendant from his lodging would be the cause of peril to him, it was not therefore true, that it would have been the cause of peril that the officer should remain there, and keep him in custody. He certainly ought not to have allowed him to remain two days out of custody. In both the cases cited by the other side, the return stated the illness of the defendant at the return of the writ. Here it was not stated how long the illness lasted, and, therefore, it was quite distinguishable.

J. Parke J. The return here does not account for the defendant up to the period when the return is made. Now, all returns of 'languidus' are excuses, not for not taking and keeping the defendant in custody, but for not having him in Court at the return of the writ. Therefore, the illness of the defendant stated in the return is no excuse for not keeping him in custody. But, supposing it was an excuse for not keeping him in custody, yet it was no excuse for not going at an earlier period. Certainly the officer ought to have gone there as soon as it might be reasonably supposed the defendant could be removed with safety. The return must therefore be quashed.—Rule absolute.—Perkins v. Meacher, K. B. H. T. 1831.

---

* 8 D. & R. 606.
† 4 B. & A 279.

---

CHEAP LAW IN THE UNITED STATES.

I visited the high court of justice, where but little talent seems necessary, and where the judge upon the bench, and the counsel, and crier below, all seem upon an easy familiar footing of equality, consulting together tete-a-tete about the time of opening court next day.

* * * *

The judges here have not legal knowledge enough for their station, and of course not weight of character, or dignity sufficient, to fill it well. Counsellors Jones and Key, of 'star bespangled banner' fame, influence and carry their honors almost as they please. The bar is greater than the bench ! Litigation frequently arises here from the imaginary independence which one man has, or fancies he has, of others, to show which, on the least slip, a suit is the certain result. It is bad for the people that law is cheap, as it keeps them constantly in strife with their neighbors, and annihilates that sociability of feeling which so strongly characterizes the English. From the constant litigation amongst the people of this country, arise that universal apathy, and the want of those kindly feelings of the heart, which show themselves on all occasions in the conduct and character of the people of the old country. There were more suits for debt in Washington county court, in a late Term, (seventeen hundred,) than perhaps in all England. Further comments are left to the reader.—Faux's Memorable Days in America.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1831.

LAW SUMMARY.

By B. L. Oliver, Esq.

The design of this work is 'to furnish a concise view of the law, in relation to certain subjects of frequent occurrence in ordinary business.' The selection of the subjects has been made with reference 'to their practical utility and general application.' It is apparently intended, not so much as a text book for the profession, as to meet the wants of men in business, and make every man, in some sort, 'his own Lawyer.' This effort, as well as many other of a similar character, to place the knowledge of the common and plain principles of law within the reach of the community in general, is entitled to commendation. There is no good reason why every citizen should not understand and become familiar with the general principles of the law under which he lives and acts. They should not be locked up in the grasp of any number or class of individuals. There is no mystery about the law or its teachers, which is not to be approached. It may and it should be open as day to the public mind. If ignorance, credulity or dishonesty have thrown barriers around it, they should be broken down. It should neither be written so high that men cannot read it, nor kept so dark that they cannot see it and learn it.

The obstacle to a general intelligence upon these subjects, heretofore, has not been found so much in a want of books, which were calculated to impart it, as in the prices, which have confined their sale almost entirely to the members of the profession. It has been cheaper to pay a lawyer for such information as was wanted than to buy the books necessary to give it. It is vain to make books to enlighten the public mind, unless the public can buy them. The law may be made as clear as light to every citizen of ordinary capacity, and yet it will avail him nothing, if he must sacrifice more to get at the knowledge than the knowledge is worth.

While the principles of every other science are brought within the ability and means of the humblest citizen, in our community, the first elements of this are unattainable but at an expense which few can bear.

With all the improvements in the art of printing and the increased sales, not one iota is abated in the price of Law Books from Coke to the Law Summary. Everybody, who has anything to do with their manufacture or sale, complains of the poverty of their profits. The author gets nothing for his labor, the printer for his work, nor the seller for his trouble, and yet the buyer pays double, at least, what the article costs.

By what process of addition or multiplication; by what new principle in arithmetic, is it, that these books sell for two or three times the price of any other publications, and yet nobody is the gainer?

The Massachusetts Reports sell at 4,50 or $5, —the New York and United States at 6 or $7, per volume; while any other books, of the same matter and number of pages, are marked at $2 or $2,50, and sell for less.

The little volume of Mr Oliver is marked at $2,50 and sold at that price, while it contains only about as much, as a volume of Scott's Novels —or the First Book of History, for which but seventyfive cents are asked.

It is said that the editions are small and the sale slow. This is comparatively true, but not strictly so. Probably fifteen hundred copies of the Massachusetts Reports are sold annually; and any work of merit will bear an edition of 1000 copies, and readily sell so as to meet the necessary advances.

Every member of our community should have, at least, a copy of our Laws; and yet how few can afford to give 4 or 5 dollars a volume for them. Other citizens than Lawyers would be glad to know the opinions of the courts. They are public property and should be known; but it is vain to suppose the Reports will be generally bought at their present extravagant prices.

If the evil cannot be otherwise remedied, the competent authorities should interfere, and while they exact obedience to the Laws, should furnish a cheap and practicable way of learning and understanding them.

The following table of the subjects discussed in the Law Summary will give some idea of the plan and object of the author.

PART I.

Of Contracts in General.

Chapter I.—Definition and essential requisites of all Contracts.

II.—The construction, the performance, and the rescinding of Contracts.

III.—On Contracts with Minors.

IV.—On Contracts with married women, and the liability of their husbands.

V.—Of the Statute of Frauds.

VI.—The Statute of Frauds, continued.

VII.—Of Sales.

VIII.—Of Stoppage in transitu.

IX.—Of Liens.

X.—1. Of the effect of an alteration of written contracts. 2. Of payment. 3. Of acquittances, receipts and releases. 4. Of tender of payment or performance.

PART II.

Containing an Abstract of the Law on various subjects, viz:

Chapter I.—Agents and Factors.

II.—Partnership.

III.—Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes, Checks, Drafts, &c.

IV.—Of insurance against Marine Risks; against Fire; and Life Insurance.

V.—Law of Shipping;—Owners; Masters; Mariners; Bills of Lading; Charter Parties.

VI.—Bottomry and Respondentia.

VII.—The Law of Carriers; of Inns and Travellers.

CHIEF JUSTICE SAUNDERS.

His character and his beginning were equally strange. He was at first no better than a poor beggar boy, if not a parish foundling, without known parents or relations. He had found a way to live by obsequiousness, (in Clement's Inn, as I remember,) and courting the attorneys' clerks for scraps. The extraordinary observance and diligence of the boy made the society willing to do him good. He appeared very ambitious to learn to write, and one of the attorneys got a board knocked up at the window, on the top of a staircase, and that was his desk, where he sat and wrote after copies of court and other hands the clerks gave him. He made himself so expert a writer that he took in business, and earned some pence by hackney writing; and thus, by degrees, he pushed his faculties, and fell to forms, and by books that were lent him became an exquisite entering clerk; and by the same course of improvement of himself, an able counsel, first in special pleading, then at large; and, after he was called to the bar, had practice in the King's Bench court equal to any there * *. As for his parts, none had them more lively than he; wit and repartee in an affected rusticity, were natural to him; he was ever ready, and never at a loss, and none came so near as he to be a match for Sergeant Maynard. * * With all this, he had a goodness of nature and disposition in so great a degree, that he may be deservedly styled a philanthrope* *. As to his ordinary dealing, he was as honest as the driven snow was white: and why not, having no regard for money, or desire to be rich? and for goodnature and condescension, there was not his fellow. I have seen him for hours and half-hours together, before the court sat, stand at the bar with an audience of students over against him, putting of cases and debating so as suited their capacities, and encouraged their industry. * * While he sat in the court of King's Bench, he gave the rule to the general satisfaction of the lawyers.—North's Life of Lord Keeper Guilford, ed. 1826, p. 41-5.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH.

Erskine having been bred to the sea, was thought to have the advantage over Law in cases of shipping and insurance, which the latter by no means liked. Erskine having vaunted his knowledge in a shipping case at Nisi Prius, Law asserted his superiority in the words of Neptune, in the first Æneid, 1, 138.

> 'Non illi imperium pelagi sævumque tridentum,
> Sed mihi sorte datum: tenet ille immania saxa,
> Vestras, Eure, domos: illa se jactet in aula
> Æolus, et clauso ventorum carcere regnet—

Claiming to himself the empire of the sea, allowing his antagonist the dominion of the winds only.—Legal Observer.

MR DUNNING.

The following anecdote confirms the statement that Mr Dunning's early diffidence gave place in after years to assurance. One of the choristers of Exeter cathedral was cross-examined by this celebrated advocate, who put several questions which the witness considered impertinent. At length the witness had occasion to mention the Lord Mayor. Dunning said, 'will you please to give us the gentleman's name, sir?' 'His sir-name,' retorted the witness, 'is Crosby, and if the judge and the jury wish to know his Christian name, they have only to look in your face, where they may read it.' The name was Brass Crosby.—Ib.

VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS, recently received from Europe, and for sale by GRAY & BOWEN, No 141 Washington street.

Browne's Self Interpreting Bible, with notes, references, illustrations, reflections, and a memoir of the author; in one large quarto volume.

The Mirror of Parliament, edited by John Barrow Esq. This work contains a complete account of the doings and debates in the British Parliament, during the last December session ; in eight parts, folio.

Select Views on the River Clyde, engraved by Joseph Swan, with historical and descriptive illustrations; in one quarto volume, with fortytwo splendid engravings.

Select Views of the Lakes of Scotland, from original paintings; in two parts.

Hinton's History and Topography of the United States. This work will be completed in thirty numbers, quarto, with ninety engravings; eight numbers are already received.

History of the sufferings of the Church of Scotland, from the restoration to the revolution ; by Rev. Robert Wodrow; 4 vols. 8vo.

History and Antiquities of the Doric Race ; by C. O. Müller ; 2 vols. 8vo.

History of Scotland, from the Union; by John Struthers ; 2 vols. 8vo.

A Selection from the Papers of the Earls of Marchmont ; illustrative of events from 1685 to 1750 ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, complete in two vols. 8vo.

A System of Geography, popular and scientific ; illustrated by a complete series of maps and other engravings; by James Bell ; 3 vols. 8vo.

McUre's History of Glasgow, with plates and illustrations ; 1 vol.

History of Modern Greece ; by James Emerson ; 2 vols. 8vo.

Rollins' Ancient History, with Life, notes and numerous maps and plates ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Thompson's Narrative of an official visit to Guatamala ; 1 vol.

Six Years' residence in the United States of America ; by Peter Neilson ; 1 vol.

Lardner's Cyclopedia ; complete set as far as published; 16 vols.

Lardner's Cabinet Library, annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 1831.

Murphy's Treatise on the art of Weaving; with fifteen engravings ; 1 vol.

Mackenzie on the Diseases of the Eye ; 1 vol.

Spix's Travels in Brazil, with engravings; 2 vols. 8vo.

BYRON'S WORKS—a new and beautiful edition, with a portrait, and other engravings ; in 4 vols. 16mo.

Evan's Sketch of the Denominations of the Christian World ; 1 vol.

Addison's Works ; 4 vols. ; a new edition.

Bowring's Poetry of the Magyars; 1 vol.

Constable's Miscellany ; vols. 60 to 65 inc.

Family Library.—Lives of British Painters—Lives of Physicians—Life of Bruce—Court and Camp of Buonaparte—Demonology and Witchcraft.

Foreign Tales and Traditions ; 2 vols.

The Casquet, or Literary Gem ; edited by Alexander Whitelaw ; 2 vols.

do do do (2d series) 2 vols.

The Atheneum, an original Literary Miscellany; 1vol.

The Midsummer Medley for 1830; by the author of Brambletye House.

Life on board a Man of War ; 1 vol.

Robertson's Parent's Guide to Baptism; 1 vol.

Gospel Truth accurately stated and illustrated ; by Rev. John Brown ; 1 vol.

Outline of the Scripture Evidence for the Trinity; 1 vol.

The New Testament, translated by Doddridge, Campbell and Macknight ; 1 vol. 12mo.

An Essay on Chemical Analysis; by M. Thenard; translated by J. G. Children ; 1 vol.

Aids to Reflection ; by S. T. Coleridge ; 1 vol.

Fabliaux, or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries.

A Help to Professing Christians ; by Rev. John Barr; 1 vol.

The Wine Drinker's Manual ; 1 vol.

The Shamrock, a collection of Irish Songs.

The National Minstrel ; a choice selection of popular songs.

Parochial Psalmody ; by J. P. Clarke.

Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History.

Pinnock's Modern Geography and History.

The Caterer; being a selection of pieces in prose and verse; 1 vol.

Johnson's Dictionary, complete in one imperial 8vo.

Morewood's Essay on Inebriating Liquors.

Dibdin's Library Companion ; 1 vol.

Biblia Hebraica.

Novum Testamentum Græce.

Aristophanes Comædiæ.

Sophocles Tragædiæ.

Pindari Carmina.

Æschyli Tragædiæ. May 21

---

JUST published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

I. Origin and Progress of the French Langue.—1. Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours ; par M. Raynouard. 2. Second Mémoire sur l'Origine et les Revolutions de la Langue Françoise ; par M. Duclos.—[In Vol. XVII. of the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.] 3. Les Poètes François depuis le XII. Siècle jusqu' à Malherbe.

II. Foreign Relations of Mexico. 1. Memoria de la Secretaria de Estado y del Despacho de Relaciones Interiores y Exteriores, leida por el Secretario del ramo el dia 13 de Febrero, de 1830. 2. Memoria del Secretario de Estado y del Despacho universal de Justicia y Negocios Eclesiasticos el dia 22 de Marzo, de 1830.

II. Economy of Athens. 1. Die Staatshaushaltung der Athener, vier Bücher. Von August Boeckh. Mit einundzwanzig Inschriften. 2. The Public Economy of the Athenians. Four books ; by Augustus Boeckh.

IV. Character and Abuses of the Medical Profession. Rules and Regulations of the Boston Medical Association.

V. Waverly Novels. Parley's edition.

VI. British and American Shipping. 1. The Merchant, Ship-Owner, and Ship-Master's Import and Export Guide ; by Charles Pope. 2. Speech of Right Honorable William Huskisson in the House of Commons.—May, 1827.

VII. The Art of Preserving Beauty. L'Art de conserver et d'augmenter la Beauté. Par L'Ami.

VIII. Memoirs of Oberlin. Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche.—Compiled from authentic sources, chiefly in French and German.

IX. Geology. Geological Text Book ; by Amos Eaton, A. M.

X. Imprisonment for Debt. Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Prison Discipline Society.

XI. The Water Witch. The Water Witch, or the Skimmer of the Seas—a tale, by the author of the Pilot, Red Rover, &c.

XII. Bank of the United States. April 9.

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLIV. for May, 1831.

CONTENTS.

ART. I. Theological School in Harvard University. Dr Codman's Speech in the Board of Overseers of Harvard College.

II. President Wayland's Sermon. The Certain Triumph of the Redeemer. A Discourse. By Francis Wayland, D. D.

III. Meaning of Αἰων. Professor Stuart's Appendix to his Exegetical Essays.

IV. Grimké's Discourses. 1. An Address on the Expediency and Duty of adopting the Bible as a Class Book. By T. S. Grimké. 2. An Oration of the Advantages to be derived from the Introduction of the Bible and of Sacred Literature, as Essential Parts of all Education. By Thomas S. Grimké.

V. Children's Books. 1. The Young Reader. By John Pierpont. 2. Peter Parley's Tales about the Sun, Moon and Stars. 3. Tales of Travels, West of the Mississippi. By Solomon Bell. 4. Cousin Elizabeth. By the Author of 'A Visit to the Sea Side.' 5. The Children's Robinson Crusoe. By a Lady. 6. The Little Girl's Own Book. By Mrs Child.

VI. History of English Baptists. Sermons on Various Important Public Occasions. By Robert Hall, A. M. 3. Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Rev. Andrew Fuller. By J. W. Morris. Editedby Rufus Babcock, Jr. 4. Asiatic Journal for British India.

VII. Sulivan's Political Class Book. The Political Class Book, By William Sullivan. Counsellor at Law. With an Appendix, by George B. Emerson.

VIII. Dr Waterhouse's Essay on Junius. An Essay on Junius and his Letters ; embracing a Sketch of the life and character of Wm. Pitt, &c.; with reflections relating to the Affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to1785. By Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

IX. The Way of Truth and Union.

---

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

---

SPLENDID BIBLE. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

---

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals ; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars. April 9.

---

REV. MR. MAY'S LETTERS.—Just received by GRAY & BOWEN, Letters to the Rev. JOEL HAWES, D. D. in Review of his Sermon on the Memory of the Pilgrims. By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the First Church in Brooklyn, Conn. March 19.

---

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

---

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

---

AMERICAN ALMANAC, Second Edition. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge, Vol. II., for the year 1831. Jan. 1.

---

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1831. NO. XLIX.

THE STUDY OF THE LAWS

OF REAL PROPERTY.

In our last number we made some observations on the importance of the study of the law, more particularly that part of it termed conveyancing. We showed that a minute acquaintance with this branch of the law is essential to the practitioner, and that some knowledge of it is advantageous to every man who inherits, purchases, or alienates property. That the student might not be deterred by the appearance of insuperable difficulty, we displayed the means which modern science has provided for facilitating his progress; and to enable him to use those means beneficially, we pointed out a course of study founded on practical experience. In bringing forward our own plan we adverted to others which have been laid down at different times by persons eminent for legal learning. These we now present to our readers, and we trust that they will be perused with interest. They exhibit the various opinions which have prevailed at different periods of our history, of the steps to be taken to insure a knowledge of the subject; and we give them the more readily, as we differ from most of them, and wish, at the same time, to afford the student the fullest information.

Lord HALE'S advice is as follows. See Pref. Roll. Abr. It is of a more general description than the remarks we have given.

'Touching the method of the study of the common law I shall say thus much. It is necessary for the student to observe method in his reading and study; for though his memory be ever so good, he will never be able to retain all, or even the greatest part, of what he reads to the end of seven years, or even a much shorter time, without the assistance of use or method. Yea, what he has read seven years since, will without that help appear new to him as if he had never read it: this method may be varied according to fancy. I shall therefore propound that which, by some experience, has been found useful; and it is this. 1st. It is proper for a student to spend about two or three years in the diligent reading of Littleton, Perkins, Doctor and Student, Fitzherbert, and especially my Lord Coke's Commentary, and possibly his reports; this will fit him for exercise, and enable him to improve himself by conversation and discourse with others, and to attend the courts of Westminster. After two or three years thus spent, let him get a large commonplace book, and divide it into alphabetical titles, which he will easily gather by observing the titles of Brooks' Abridgment: or of this book (Roll. Abridg.) Afterwards (among the year books) he may read Edward III., the second part of Henry VI. Edward IV. Henry VII. and so down to Plowden, Dyer, and Coke's Reports, the second time.

'What he gathers in his course of reading, let him enter (in the abstract) under the proper titles, in his commonplace book.'

The advice of Chief Justice REEVE is as follows:

'First read Wood's Institutes in a cursory manner, to understand the general divisions of the law, and obtain precise ideas of the terms used in it, for such terms as Wood does not explain, 'L. Termes de la ley,' should be consulted, and for the most full and modern explanation, Jacob's Dictionary; but the authority of this last must not be too implicitly relied on. To understand Wood's Chapter of Conveyancing, call in some practitioners, or consult Bohun's Institut. Legalis, or Jacob's Attorney Companion.

'This done, read Littleton's Tenures, without notes, consider it well and abridge such parts as the books inform you are now law. Thus armed venture upon Coke's Comment on Littleton, which, being well understood, the whole is conquered, and without it a sound common lawyer can never be made; to this all the faculties of the mind must be applied with the heartiest attention: it will not be found very difficult, with the preparation already prescribed; abridge it throughout, and see Hawkins' Abridgment, which will afford much light to my Lord Coke.

'This finished, I would recommend a second careful review of Wood's Institute, in order to digest the several heads of the law for the help of memory, and consult the references, &c.

'During the second stage of study, many books may be brought in for variety, which will be very useful, and not interrupt the main scheme, as Doctor and Student, Noy's Maxims, Office of Executors, Hale's History of the Common Law, and Rolle's Abridgment. It will about this time, and not much sooner, be proper to give diligent attendance on the courts of Westminster, and to begin reading in order the several reports, which must be read and commonplaced as you will find best by considering the nature of the study.

'My whole scheme, without naming the books, is this:

'1st. Obtain precise ideas of the terms or general meaning of the law.

'2d. Learn the general ideas of the terms, and general meaning of the law.

'3d. From some authentic system, collect the great leading points of the law in their natural order, as the first heads and divisions of your future inquiry.

'4th. Collect the several particular points as they occur, and range them under their generals, and as you find you can best digest them.

'And, whereas law must be considered in a twofold light:

'1st. As a rule of action.

'2d. As the art of procuring redress.

'When this rule is violated, the study in each of them may be easily regulated by the foregoing method, and the books so recommended will so carry on the joint work, that with this course, so finished, the student may pursue each branch of either to its utmost extent, or return to the centre of his general knowledge without confusion, which is the only way of rendering things easy to the memory.'

The course of reading recommended by the celebrated Mr DUNNING was as follows:

Hume's History of England, particularly observing the rise, progress, and declension of the feudal system; minutely a tend to the Saxon government that preceded it and dwell on the reigns of Edward I., Henry VI., Henry VII., Henry VIII., James I., Charles I., Charles II., and James II., Blackstone's Commentaries,—on the second reading turn to the references; Wright's Treatise on Tenures; Coke on Littleton, especially every work of Fee Simple, Fee Tail, and Tenant in Tail; Coke's Institutes, more particularly the 2d of Sergeant Hawkins' Compendium; Coke's Reports; Plowden's Commentaries; Bacon's Abridgment, and First Principles of Equity; Piggott on Recoveries: Reports of Croke, Burrows, Raymond, Saunders, Strange, and P. Williams; Paley's Maxims, and Lord Bacon's Elements of the Common Law.

Mr CHITTY'S advice in a lecture, delivered December 14, 1813, in Lincoln's Inn Hall, is as follows:

'The student must labor to acquire a regular established system of legal knowledge, and not depend on accidental fragments and scraps. The study of the law is much less complex and difficult than has been represented. It will be proper to employ as much as ten hours daily in study, but of these, six hours are sufficient for law; the remaining four must be usefully employed in general study, as it will promote habits of regular application. But the student must not flag, or become irregular in this course of study. The vacation, in particular, must be devoted to study, reserving the Terms for acquiring practical knowledge.'

Mr Chitty recommends common placing and refers to a method in North's Life of Lord Keeper Guilbert, p. 20. The following are the books he recommends:

I. Preparatory Reading; 1st, Blackstone's Commentaries; 2. Woodeson's Vinerian Lectures: 3. Sullivan's Lectures; 4. Eunomus; 5. Brown's Civil Law; 6. Hale's History of the Common Law. II. Reading with a view to Practice; 1. Butler's Nisi Prius; 2. Espinasse's Nisi Prius; 3. Selwyn's ditto. N. B. read Butler's Nisi Prius and the same heads in Espinasse and Selwyn's concurrently, and after reading all the heads in Butler, with those in Espinasse and Selwyn, read the remaining heads in the latter work. III. Then proceed to particular branches of the law, as Rights of Persons, Holt, Starkie, and George on Slander: information on other heads by retracing Blackstone's Commentaries, 119 to 143; Buller's Nisi Prius, 3 to 24, and Selwyn's Nisi Prius, titles Assault, Imprisonment, and Adultery; and read the appropriate titles in Bacon's Abridgment and Comyn's Digest.

II. Personal Property and Commercial Law; 1. Blackstone's Commentaries, from chap. 23 to the end; 2. Powell's Law of Contracts; 4. Newland on Contracts; 4. Roberts on Statute of Frauds 104 to 240; 5. Jones' Law of Bailments; 6. Bayley on Bills of Exchequer; 7. Chitty on ditto

8. Abbot's Law on Shipping; 9. Park on Insurances: 10. Marshall on ditto; 11. Chitty on Apprentices; 12. Watson on Partnership; 13. Paley's Law of Principal and Agent. 14. Whittaker on Stoppage in Transitu and Liens; 15. Cullen's Bankrupt Laws examined with Cooke's and Montague's Bankrupt Laws; 16. Kyd on Awards; 17. Kyd on Corporations: 18. Toller's Laws of Executors; 19. Roper on Legacies.

III. Real Property, and Landlord and Tenant Law. 1. Blackstone's Commentaries, 2d vol. to the end of chap. 23: 2. Cruise's Digest; 3. Coke on Littleton, parts not obsolete; 4. Watkins on Copyholds; 4. Woodfalls' Law of Landlord and Tenant; 6. Roberts on statute of Frauds, 241 to 287; 7. Gilbert's Distresses, by Hunt; 8. Bradby on Distresses; 9. Sugden's Law of Vendors and Purchasers; 10. Sanders on Uses and Trusts; 11. Preston on Estates, &c; 12. Adams on Ejectment; 13. Runnington on ditto.

IV. Pleading. 1. Blackstone's Commentaries, vol. 3. ch. 8. to 21; 2. Summary of Pleading; 3. Lawes on ditto; Chitty on ditto; 5. Saunders' Reports and Notes.

V. Evidence. 1. Peake's Law of Evidence; 2. Gilbert's ditto, old edit.; Philipps' ditto.

VI. Practice of Common Law Courts. 1. Crompton's Introduction; 2. Tidd's Practice with the Forms; 3. Sellon and Impey, together with the Rules; 4. Gilbert's History of the Court of Exchequer.

VII. Criminal and Poor Laws. 1. Retrace 4 Blackstone's Commentaries; 2. Hale's Pleas of the Crown; 3. Hawkins' ditto: 4. East's ditto; 5. Foster's Crown Law; 6. Hand's Practice; 7. Introduction to Crown Circuit Companion; 8. Nolan's Poor Laws, examined with Bott.

VIII. Equity Law, Pleadings, and Practice. 1. Retrace 3 Blackstone's Commentaries, chap. 27; 2. Fonblanque's Treatise on Equity; 3. Mitford's Pleadings; 4. Newland's Chancery Practice.

Mr Butler's advice is as follows: (see Reminiscences, p. 60.)

'The student should begin by reading Littleton's Tenures with extreme attention, abstaining from commentary, but perusing Gilbert's Tenures. After this, Wright's Tenures and Watkins' Treatise on Descents; and then Littleton a second time, then a third time, with Coke's Commentary; afterwards read Sheppard's Touchstone, Preston's edition. Then the notes on feuds, uses, and trusts, in the last edition of Coke upon Lyttleton; and then, once more, Coke upon Lyttleton, and the notes of the last edition. Then, with profound attention, Sander's Treatise on Uses and Trusts, and Preston on Fines and Recoveries. Fearne's Essay on Contingent Remainders, and Sugden on Powers. Then Plowden's Commentaries for Equity; the article 'Chancery' in Comyn, comparing it with P. Williams' Reports.'—Obs.

MR DUNNING'S LETTER

ON THE STUDY OF THE LAW.

Designed as our work is, in a considerable degree, for the benefit of the junior part of the profession, we have been urged by several correspondents to devote a due proportion of our space to articles on the study of the law. Some of our readers, probably, may think that we have been already sufficiently attentive to this part of our duty; but, having received from two several correspondents, a copy of Mr Dunning's celebrated letter to a student of the law, who had requested the favor of his advice upon the most eligible course of reading, we insert it as an appendix to the memoir of that distinguished individual. It will be found replete with valuable suggestions. The list of works to which reference is made in the letter, is comprised in the article 'on the Study of the Laws.' —Legal Obs.

Lincoln's Inn, March 3, 1779.

Dear Sir,

'The habits of intercourse in which I have lived with your family, joined to the regard which I entertain for yourself, make me solicitous, in compliance with your request, to give you some hints concerning the study of the law.

'Our profession is generally ridiculed as being dry and uninteresting, but a mind anxious for the discovery of truth and information will be amply gratified for the toil in investigating the origin and progress of a jurisprudence which has the good of the people for its basis, and the accumulated wisdom and experience of ages for its improvement. Nor is the study itself so intricate as has been imagined, more especially since the labors of some modern writers have giving it a more regular and scientific form: without industry, however, it is impossible to arrive at any eminence in practice: and the man who shall be bold enough to attempt excellence by abilities alone, will soon find himself foiled by many who have inferior understandings, but better attainments. On the other hand, the most painful plodder can never arrive at celebrity by mere reading; a man calculated for success must add to a native genius, an instinctive faculty in the discovery and retention of that knowledge only, which can be at once useful and productive.

'I imagine that a considerable degree of learning is absolutely necessary; the elder authors frequently wrote in Latin, and the foreign jurists continue the practice to this day. Besides this, classical attainments contribute much to the refinement of the understanding, and the embellishment of the style. The utility of grammar, rhetoric, and logic, are known and felt by every one. Geometry will afford the most apposite examples of close and pointed reasoning; and geography is so very necessary in common life, that there is less credit in knowing, than dishonor in being unacquainted with it. But it is history, and more particularly that of his own country, which will occupy the attention and attract the regard of the great lawyer. A minute knowledge of the political revolutions and judicial decisions of our predecessors, whether in the more ancient or modern eras of our government, is equally useful and interesting. This will include a narrative of all the material alterations in the common law, and the reasons and exigencies on which they were founded. I would also recommend a diligent attendance on the courts of justice, as by that means the practice of them (a circumstance of great moment,) will be easily and naturally acquired. Besides this, a much stronger impression will be made on the mind by the statement of the cause, and the pleadings of the counsel, than from a cold uninteresting detail of it in a report. But, above all, a trial at bar, or a special argument, should never be neglected. As it is usual on these occasions to take notes, a knowledge of short-hand will give such facility to your labors, as to enable you to follow the most rapid speaker with certainty and precision.

'Commonplace books are convenient and useful, and, as they are generally lettered, a reference may be had to them in a moment. It is usual to acquire some insight into real business under an eminent special pleader, previous to actual practice at the bar; this idea I beg leave strongly to second and indeed I have known but few great men who have not possessed this advantage. Wishing that you may add to a successful practice that integrity which can alone make you worthy of it,

I am, dear Sir,

Your most obedient humble servent,

John Dunning.

THE UNIVERSITY OF LONDON,

LAW CLASS.

LECTURES OF MR THEOBALD ON THE LAW OF PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

In the first Lecture, beginning with the definition of the contract of surety, and a brief notice of the corollaries that result from it, the lecturer proceeded to notice the different modes in which the obligation of surety may be contracted. These, he observed, are three: 1. By acknowledgment made before a Judge or other public officer. Acknowledgments so made are commonly called recognizances, and in some cases statutes, and when enrolled of record, the obligation raised by them has the force of res judicata. 2. By deed. 3. By simple contract, or parol. The class of simple contracts includes written as well as verbal agreements; but by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3. & 4., a simple contract of guarantee is required to be in writing.

Postponing the consideration of the peculiar consequences which take place when the obligation of surety is contracted by record, or by deed, the requisites of a simple contract of guarantee were next considered. 1st, with reference to the common law; 2d, with reference to the statute. 1. By the common law a consideration is necessary for the validity of a parol agreement; whatever would be sufficient as a consideration in the case of any other kind of parol agreement would be so in the case of a parol agreement of guarantee. In general, said the lecturer, any act by which the person who promises, or any other person at his request, has benefit, or by which the person to whom the promise is made has trouble or detriment, is sufficient; and the amount of benefit or trouble, or its comparative value in relation to the promise, is immaterial. But the act intended to be the consideration of a promise must be of some legal value. Of this qualification on the previous rule the lecturer gave the following illustration: — forbearance to sue is an act of no legal value, if the person to whom suit is foreborne is not liable in an action, and therefore, in that case, would not be a sufficient consideration; as for instance, forbearance to sue an heir on the bond of his ancestor, in which the heir is not named, is not a sufficient consideration to support a promise to pay the bond, made either by the heir himself, or by any other person as his surety. Definiteness and certainty, as opposed to the vague and general, were also stated to be requisite in every consideration. Therefore forbearance to sue for a time, for some time, for a little time, are insufficient considerations, although any time however short, would be sufficient, were its duration specified. The consideration, also, must be either wholly or in part executory at the time the promise is made, unless the act which constitutes the consideration was done at the request of the promiser, in which case, though past, and executed when the promise is made, it is sufficient. Each of these rules were illustrated by examples appropriate to the contract of surety, and for other illustrations, and a fuller statement of cases on this subject, practical treatises were referred to and finally the lecturer remarked, that a minute attention to the consideration was pre-eminently necessary in respect of guarantees, two out of three of which he stated from his experience, to be bad in this particular. 2. With reference to the statute of frauds, the lecturer said, it had been decided, that the promise alone being in writing is not sufficient. The statute requires the agreement to be in writing; and as the promise and consideration together constitute the agreement, both must be in writing; for which Wain v. *Walters, Saunders v. Wakefield†, Jenkins v. Reynolds‡, Britten v. Webb§, and Lush v. Whitcomb‖, were cited. The rule contained in these cases was a departure from the interpretation which had prevailed for nearly a century; and from its remoteness from the appprehension of men of business was likely to occasion extensive practical mischief, in which view it had been repeatedly censured in the courts of equity; but the mischief anticipated had been lessened by the laxity with which the courts enforce it. 'If,' said Mr Theobald, 'a shadow of a consideration is expressed, it is sufficient.' In illustration of which position he reviewed Stadt v. Lill¶, Borlem v. *Campbell, Marley v. Boothby††, Newbury v. Armstrong.‡‡ In the last case, Tindal Ch. J. said, 'If by fair construction we can, as it were, spell out from the contract the consideration, it is enough. The dictum contained in Wain v. Warlters, and the other similar cases, has been carried to the extreme edge of the law.'

Next, as to the writing. There is no prescribed form: but a note or memorandum is sufficient, if it contains all the terms of the agreement. A letter containing the terms is sufficient; or if it does not itself contain them, but refers to an insignia paper, alleging that that does, the letter and paper together are sufficient. From these decisions it appears the courts regard the writing, not as a constituent part of the agreement, but merely as necessary evidence, and therefore it is immaterial whether the writing takes place at the same time as the agreement, or whether it is made with the view of authenticating the agreement. A letter addressed by the party to his own agent, or to a stranger, is sufficient. An agreement once in writing, but afterwards receded from, may be revived by parol; as also might an agreement which was bound by the statute of limitations,§§ previous to Lord Tenterden's act, 9 Geo. 4. c. 14.

'The statute,' the lecturer proceeded, 'requires a writing signed either by the party himself, or by his agent thereunto lawfully authorised. With respect to agents under this provision, the law prescribes no particular mode of authorisation; an agent, therefore, may be appointed verbally; but an express authorisation is not necessary. The existence of an authority to act as an agent, either for general or particular purposes, may be inferred; and from the inference results as complete a liability on the side of the principal, as if he had made an express appointment. In an action upon a guarantee it appeared that the guarantee was in the handwriting of the defendant's son, who was a minor, evidence was given of the son having, in three or four instances, signed for his father, and this Lord Ellenborough thought sufficient evidence of the son being authorised, and the plaintiff had a verdict.*'

The ratification of the act of another is equivalent in effect to a prior authority. In its application to a guarantee this rule is illustrated in Busby v. Culvinnatt.† Persons incapacitated from contracting on their own account are competent to be agents. Several cases were next referred to, in which persons contracting under the style of agents were held to be liable as principals. The rules respecting guarantees given by and to one of several partners were also considered. A guarantee given by one of a firm, in the course of a transaction which had been adopted by the firm, or of which the firm was cognisant, would bind the firm, though the transaction was not within the regular scope of the partnership business, and though the guarantee itself was not actually known to have been given.‡ The converse of this proposition was illustrated by Duncan v. Lowndes.§ With respect to guarantees given to one of several partners, the lecturer referred to Garrett v. Handley.‖

In the above sketch we have chiefly wished to follow the delineation of topics pursued by the lecturer; more our limits will not allow our attempting, and in our next Number we hope to be able to give the second lecture.—Legal Observer.

* 5 East 10.; † 4 Barn. & Ald. 595.
‡ 7 T. B. Moore, 86.
§ 2 Barn. & Cres. 483. ‖ 5 Bing. 34.
¶ 9 East. 348.  3 T. B. Moore 15.
†† 3 Bing. 107. ‡‡ Moody & Mal. N. P. C. 389.
§§ Gibbons v. M'Casland, 1 Barn. & Ald. 660.

* Walkins v. Vince, 2 Stark. N. P. C. 368.
† 8 Barn. & Cres. 448.
‡ Sandilands v. Marsh, 2 Barn. & Ald. 673
§ 3 Camp N. P. C. 477.
‖ 3 Barn. & Cres. 462.; and 4 Barn. & C res. 664.

From the Legal Observer.

ATTORNEYS.

It has been the fashion of late years to decry attorneys—to attribute to them every mischief and evil arising from the mal-administartion of the law.—Is the expense of law proceedings the subject of discourse? the extortion of attorneys is pronounced to be the cause.—Is the delay of justice spoken of? it arises, say one and all, from the interested motives of lawyers.—Does a man lose an action which he has, against the advice of his attorney, carried to trial, and for the institution of which he had no earthly ground? again, it is the lawyer's fault. Thus manifold are the sins imputed to attorneys. Every fresh conversation begets new sbujects of complaint, and each day strengthens the unjust prejudice. What was at first doubted, is, by dint of continual repetition, looked upon as unquestionably true; and the lawyer is considered by many as evil personified. This prejudice has been carefully fostered and disseminated by those whose duty it was to disabuse the public mind—and why? to keep in the back ground the real offenders. The consequence has been, that attorneys have been considered as the originators of those very abuses, of which they, in common with their clients, have been the victims, and which they could neither prevent nor control.

Had the curse pronounced against the descendants of Ishmael extended to them, they could not be a more persecuted race. If they happen to complain of their grievances, they are met with scorn and derision; and the expression of honest indignation is denounced as hypocritical and groundless. Attorneys are not placed in elevated and influential situations, where they may peculate with impunity, abuse their trusts in the most perfect security, and complain, with a studied appearance of innocence, of well founded accusations, which they possess the power of voting frivolous and untrue. They have, however, the satisfaction ever attendant upon the discharge of their duty—the approbation of their own consciences, in spite of the vexations which meet them at every step. Unhappily for them, they are the only persons with whom the public has to do. They are the only persons consulted—the only persons on whom care, and anxiety, and responsibility devolve. The client knows nothing, and will not be informed, of the idlers who batten on the spoil to which accidental circumstances have entitled them—who receive their money at all events, for the attorney pays at the time, and runs the risk of being reimbursed. No! the client only knows his attorney in the matter: if the business in which he employs him should end successfully, it is only justice done—the services of the attorney are considered nothing;—if otherwise, the attorney is the cause of the failure.

The bill of cost is paid, if the parties be solvent, by his own client, or by the adverse party, as the case may be:—if by his own client, he looks at its gross amount, and remarks that it is 'a good deal of money;' if the professional man attempt to explain how little of it comes into his own pocket, though he has had all the work to do, how much is paid to indolence,—he is heard with incredulity, and his statement considered as an ingenious excuse for his own rapacity,—as an attempt to blind his client to the enormity of professional profits. On the other hand, if the costs are paid by the adverse party, the attorney is stigmatized as a trickster, and a perverter of justice. Thus he who is often forced to conduct actions and defences against his decided conviction, and which he has expressed to his client, becomes after the trial, the object upon which all the revengeful and bad passions are let loose. The hostility which existed between the parties to the suit is directed into a new channel, and the lawyer has to stand the brunt of the most false and malignant attacks. Add to this, that in the conduct of the business he has, as I have shown, to advance considerable sums out of his own pocket, which, if both plaintiff and defendant happen to be insolvent, he irrecoverably loses. Nor is this all, for he is subjected to an action for negligence, if he commit any error. Consider these circumstances, and I think you will feel satisfied that his is not an enviable situation.

Consider, too, the confidence which persons are obliged to place in attorneys, and the valuable property they feel it necessary to entrust to their care. Consider that all men are frail, and extremely liable to fall into temptation;—note the few instances of betrayal of confidence, abuse of trust, and fraudulent appropriation of their clients' property, which the utmost efforts of the most determined hostility can produce,—and then pronounce upon the moral character of attorneys.

I am, sir,
Your most obedient servant,
AN ATTORNEY.

December 9th, 1830.

From the Legal Observer.

PLEASANTRIES OF THE LAW REPORTS.

In Mr Matthew's entertainment called 'A Trip to America' he relates that a tall, grave, thin old person was constantly following him, and asking him with great solemnity, 'Pray, Mr Matthews, what do you think of American fun?' I dare say that the readers of the Legal Observer will think that the connexion between fun and the Law Reports is as preposterous, as between this old gentleman and fun in America. I intend however, to undeceive them on this point: I am a joker by birth, and look upon everything in the world as capable of affording fun. Life is altogether a joke, and law one of its subdivisions; and the Law Reports, if rightly understood, are, in fact mere supplements to Joe Miller. I do not care what they are, ancient or modern, Coke or Vesey, Law or Equity, you may extract fun from them all. An apothecary views mankind merely as so many empty medicine bottles, which are to be filled as full as they can hold. Every man's mind is tinged by his occupation; and my occupation being to make jokes it is of no consequence to me whether I take up Rabelais or the Term Reports. I shall, therefore, from time to time, produce a few samples of fun from the Law Reports. The next, I dare say will be better than the present, which are not, by any means, the best of the sort. However, I have set down a few of them.

The rules as to the legal measure of abuse which you may give a person may be first mentioned.

It is actionable to call a counsellor 'a daffy-down-dilly,' 1 Rol. Ab. 55., if there be an averment that the words signify an ambidexters; or to say of an attorney, that he hath no more law, than Mr C.'s bull,' Sid. 327., S. C. 2 Keb. 202. even although Mr C. actually have no bull; for if that be the case, as Keeling C. J. observed, the scandal is the greater.' And it is quite clear that to say that a lawyer has 'no more law than a goose,' is actionable, Sid. 127.; and the reporter adds a quære, Whether it be not actionable to say a lawyer 'hath no more law than the man in the moon!'

So also to say to a man, 'You enchanted my bull,' Sid. 424., or 'Thou art a witch' or that 'a person, bewitched my husband to death,' Cro. Eliz. 312., is clearly actionable. Quære, Whether it be not actionable to say to or of a young lady, 'You enchanted me,' or 'She enchanted me,' or, as the case may be, , She enchanted my brother, my dog,' &c, or 'She's a bewitching creature, or to put the exact point, 'She's quite bewitched poor Tom.'

On the other hand, you may say, if you please, of another, 'That he is a great rogue, and deserves to be hanged as well as G. who was hanged at Newgate:' because this is a mere expression of opinion; and perhaps you might think that G. did not deserve hanging. T. Jones. 157. So also you may say of any Mr Smith, that you know, 'Mr Smith, struck his cook on the head with a cleaver, and cleaved his head; the one lay on the one side, and the other on the other;' because it is only to be inferred that thereby the cook of Mr Smith died and this in the reported case was not averred. Cro. Jac. 181. A fortiori, you may say, 'Mr Smith threw his wife into the Thames, and she never came up again;' or 'Mr Smith cut off Tom's head, and walked with it to Worcester;' because this is all inference; and his cook, wife, or Tom, as the case may be, for all that the Court knows, may be still alive.

Wills and testaments are a great source of fun. There is a case in 6 Vesey, p. 194., Townley v. Bedwell, in which the Lord Chancellor (Eldon) held that the trust of real and personal estate by will, for the purpose of establishing a Botanical Garden, was void, for a rather singular reason, as it appears in the report, viz. because the testator expressed that 'he trusted it would be a public benefit!' The Solicitor-General (Sir William Grant) and Mr Romilly compared it to the case of a gift of a piece of land for the purpose of erecting monuments of the naval victories of this country. The Lord Chancellor said in that case the heir might pull them down, and in this he might destroy the garden; but his Lordship thought, upon the expression of the testator, that he trusted it would be a public benefit, he might venture to declare it void! The reason was of course, that it was within the statutes of mortmain. In the case of Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves. 38., we are told of a maiden lady of the name of Ann Cam, who desired her trustee to dispose of the residue of the property 'in recommending poor clergymen who have large families and good characters,' and a reference was made to the Master by Lord Thurlow, to approve of the scheme.

In the case of Isaac v. Gompertz, cited 7 Ves. 61., Lord Thurlow declared an annuity given for the support and maintenance of the Jewish synagogue in Magpie Alley, to be void,—a highly proper decree. A similar fate was awarded to a bequest for the dissemination of Baxter's Call to the Unconverted. Ves. 52.

Swinburne, part 4, sect. 6. art. 2. mentions a bequest of a legacy to a person, on condition of his drinking up all the water in the sea; and it was held, that, as this condition could not be performed, it was void. The condition to go to Rome in a day, which Blackstone mentions in his Commentaries as void, as impossible to be performed, may soon, perhaps cease to be so, and consequently become good, if rail-roads are introduced upon the Continent.

In 1 Rol. Ab. 45. it appears that in the country, when men passed cattle, it is usual to say, 'God bless them!' otherwise they are taken for witches. This reminds me of the salutation in Bohemia, where, if you meet a peasant, you pass for a heathen unless you say to him 'Gesegnet sey der Herr!' * or, in case he salutes you thus, unless you answer, 'In wigkeit, Amen!' †

I shall soon be able to give a further specimen of this sort of pleasantry.

JEKYLL JUNIOR.

* 'Blessed be the Lord!'
† 'In eternity, Amen!'

DIGEST OF ENGLISH CASES.

POLICY OF ASSURANCE.

1. A merchant resident at Sydney shipped goods for England on board the ship C., and, by another ship that sailed after her wrote to an agent in England and desired him if he received that letter before the C. arrived, to wait for thirty days in order to give every chance for her arrival, and then effect an insurance on the goods. The letter was received; and the agent having waited more than 30 days, employed a broker to effect an insurance and handed the letter to him. The broker told the underwriters when the C. sailed, and when the letter ordering the insurance was written; but he did not state when it was received, nor the order to wait thirty days after the receipt of it before the insurance was affected. The C. never arrived. In an action on the policy, no fraud was imputed to the plaintiff; but several underwriters were called for the defendant, who stated, that in their opinion, the matters not communicated were material; and the jury being of opinion that a material part of the letter had been concealed, found a verdict for the defendant. Held, that the evidence of the underwriters' opinion was properly received, and that even without it, the jury would have been bound to find that the part of the letter not communicated to the underwriters was material, and that, consequently, the policy was void. Rickards vs. Murdock, 10 B. & C. 527.

2. A policy duly stamped was effected on a voyage at and from Liverpool to Quebec. The ship being detained beyond the intended time of sailing, the following memorandum was indorsed on the policy: 'The Hebe being unavoidably detained beyond the intended time of sailing to Quebec, the voyage is changed, and the vessels proceeds from Liverpool to St John's, New Brunswick, at and from thence back to London; and, in consideration of one guinea per cent additional, the underwriters agree to continue on the risk until the vessel should be arrived back in London or her port of discharge in the United Kingdom.' Held, that the changed destination of the ship provided for by the memorandum, was an alteration in the terms and condition of the policy, within the meaning of the 35 G. 3. c. 63. § 13.; and therefore, the policy so altered by the memorandum did not require a new stamp. Brocklebank vs. Sugrue, 1 B. & Ad. 81.

3. An assignment of a policy of assurance without notice to the office will not take it out of the disposition of the assignor, and it will therefore pass to his assignees. Ex parte Colville, 1 L. O. 174.; and see acc. Williams vs. Thorp, 2 Sim. 257.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

An attorney having been employed to purchase an estate for his client, entered into a contract in his own name, and insisted upon holding it in his own right. Decreed to convey to his client the plaintiff. Lees vs. Nuttall and another, 1 Russ. & Myl. 53. Tam. 282. 1 L. O. 13.

SHIP.

The captain of an insured ship, which has been injured by perils of the seas, is not justified in selling the ship instead of repairing it, unless he either has not the means of getting the repairs done at the place where the vessel is obliged to put in; or cannot get them done, except at such an expense as would render it undoubtedly improper to repair if the ship were not insured; or has not money in his possession sufficient to pay for the repairs, nor is in a situation to raise it by loan or otherwise, except at such an extravagant rate as would prevent a prudent man, in the exercise of a sound and vigorous judgment, from undertaking the repairs under such circumstances. Somes vs. Sugrue, 4 Car. & Pay. 276.

SHIP OWNER.

In an action against one of the owners for work done to a vessel by the order of the ship's husband, such owner will be liable, unless it be shown that the person who directed the work to be done should be looked to exclusively. Thompson vs. Finden, 4 Car. & Pay. 158.

WARRANTY.

A party selling a horse, and saying that the horse is sound to the best of his knowledge, is liable on a promise that he is so, although he adds the words 'but I will not warrant.' (Per Lord Tenterden.) Wood vs. Smith, 1 Moo. & Mal. 539.

If a witness give evidence of a conversation with a prisoner in which that prisoner says something implicating another prisoner, the witness in giving his evidence must not omit the name of such other prisoner, and say 'another person,' but must give the conversation exactly as it occurred, and the Judge will tell the jury that it is not evidence against such other prisoner. Rex vs. Hearne and others, 4 Car. & Pay. 215.

In a criminal case, a person who is present in the court, when called as a witness, is bound to be sworn and give evidence, although he has not been subpœnaed. An indictment for stopping a way is a criminal case for this purpose.' Rex vs. Sadler and others, 4 Car. & Pay. 218.

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

CHANCERY.

PLEADINGS.

Where three kinds of relief are prayed for in the bill, and the complainant is entitled to one of them, the defendant cannot demur. The Western Ins. Co. v. The Eagle Fire Ins. Co., 1 Paige, 284.

A bill of discovery will be sustained to aid the prosecution or defence of a civil suit in a foreign tribunal. Mitchell v. Smith, 1 Paige, 287.

If it appears upon the face of the supplemental bill that all the matters alleged therein arose previous to the commencement of the suit, and might have been inserted in the original bill by way of amendment, the defendant may demur. But if this irregularity does not appear upon the face of the supplemental bill, the facts may be brought before the court by plea. Stafford v. Howlett, 1 Paige, 200.

In a bill of discovery against a corporation, the corporation ought to be permitted to put in a separate answer, in order to make offers and admissions, and to deny facts which the officers may suppose do exist. Vermilyea v. The Fulton Bank, 1 Paige, 37.

Where matters charged in the bill, as the acts of the defendant himself, are of such a nature that he can be presumed to recollect them if they ever took place, a positive answer is, in general, required. Hall v. Wood, 1 Paige, 404.

But where the facts are such that it is probable he cannot recollect them so as to answer more positively, a denial of the facts, according to his knowledge, recollection, and belief, will be sufficient. Ib.

Where one of two defendants denies in his answer all knowledge of the facts alleged in the complainant's bill, the complainant in order to give such defendant an opportunity to litigate his rights, must file a replication to his answer. Elliot v. Pell, 1 Paige, 263.

PRACTICE.

If an original bill is wholly defective, and there is no ground for proceeding upon it, it cannot be sustained by filing a supplemental bill founded upon matters which have subsequently taken place. Candler v. Petit, 1 Paige, 168.

Facts which existed before the filing of the original bill should be inserted therein by way of amendment. Ib.

But if the original bill was sufficient for one kind of relief, and facts afterwards occur which entitle the complainant to other or more extensive relief, he may have such relief by setting out the new matter in a supplemental bill. Ib.

A party must be an object of charity, otherwise the privilege of prosecuting in forma pauperis will not be granted to him. Isnard v. Casseaux, 1 Paige, 39.

No exceptions can be taken to a master's report, which are not founded upon objections distinctly taken before the master. Byington v. Wood, 1 Paige, 145.

In the case of a reference to state an account, the objections to the report are taken and argued after the draft of the report is prepared. Ib.

A party, who cannot be presumed to have positive knowledge of a fact, may swear according to his information and belief; and if it be not denied by the adverse party, who can swear positively upon the subject, it will be deemed as admitted. Attorney General v. Bank of Columbia, 1 Paige, 511.

Where a defendant in his answer only denies a fact charged in the bill, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, a single witness on on the part of the complainant is sufficient to establish the fact. Knickerbacker v. Harris, 1 Paige, 209.

If the complainant wishes to compel the defendant to state the new matter set up by way of defence with more particularity, he should amend his bill and state the matter by way of pretences, and call upon the defendant to answer as to the particulars. Spencer v. Van Duzen, 1 Paige, 555.

If the complainant wishes to prove any fact on the hearing, and not admitted by the answer, he must file a replication to the answer. Mills v. Pittman, 1 Paige, 490.

A decree can only be questioned by a bill of review. Elliott v. Pell, 1 Paige, 263.

A suit cannot be brought in the name of a feme covert without her consent; and when brought with her consent the prochein amy may be changed on her application, the person substituted giving security for the costs already accrued. Fulton v. Rosevelt, 1 Paige, 178.

SALE.

Where a merchant contracted for goods, the price to be secured by his note indorsed by B. and C., and the goods in the meantime were forwarded to his residence, held, that the property was not changed until the delivery of the note, and that B. and C. to whom he had assigned the goods to secure an antecedent debt, could not hold them against the vendor. Keelor v. Field, 1 Paige, 312.

SET OFF.

Where bills of a bank are obtained by one of its debtors after it stops payment, they cannot be set off by such debtor against the debt he owes the bank. In the matter of the Receiver of the Middle District Bank, 1 Paige, 585.

A party cannot set off a judgment, unless he is the beneficial, as well as the nominal owner of it. Aikin v. Satterlee, 1 Paige, 289.

TRUST AND TRUSTEE.

Where money was awarded by the Florida commissioners upon the memorial of one of two joint owners, and the applicant claimed in his memorial the whole to himself, without naming his joint owner, it was held that the joint owner not named was not bound to put in his claim and contest his right before the commissioners; that the person who received the money awarded was a trustee, and accountable in equity to the real parties interested in the fund. Delafield v. Colden, 1 Paige, 134.

WILL.

Where there is a limitation over of an annuity upon the failure of issue, at the death of the annuitant, the limitation over is good, being in the nature of an executory devise. Bradhurst v. Bradhurst, 1 Paige, 381.

Where A. by his will devised the use of his farm to his son and nephew for three years, and directed his executors at the expiration of the term to sell the farm and divide the proceeds among his five children; and also declared in his will that if any one of his children died before him, leaving no children, or should die after his decease, leaving no children, without having disposed of his or her share, that the share of such child should go the survivors; but if any of the testator's children should die leaving children, then such children were to have the share of their parent in the same manner as such parent, if living, would have taken the same, and the son died within the three years, leaving children: it was held, that the children took under the will and not as heirs of their father, and that their mother was not entitled to dower in the farm, and that the creditors of the son had no claim upon that share of the estate for the payment of their debts. The death of the son, before the expiration of the three years, and before the executors were authorized to sell, divested his interest, and the executory limitation over to his children immediately took effect. Adams v. Beekman, 1 Paige, 631.

A person to be capable of making a will, must be possessed of a sound and disposing mind and memory, so as to be able to make a testamentary disposition of his property with sense and judgment in reference to the situation and amount of such property and the relative claims of the different persons who are or might be the objects of his bounty. Clark v. Fisher, 1 Paige, 171.

Where the derangement or loss of the powers of mind some time previous to the making of the will, is established, it devolves upon the party who seeks to maintain the will, to show that such incapacity had ceased at the time it was executed. Ib.

In forming an opinion of the state of the testator's mind, it is proper to take into consideration the reasonableness of the will in reference to the amount of his property and the situation of his relatives. Ib.

WITNESS.

Where M. purchased the interest of C. in certain mortgaged promises under a judgment and execution, in a suit by M. against H. who pretended to hold a subsisting mortgage against the premises given by C it was held, that C. on being released by M. was a competent witness to prove that the mortgage had been paid. McClaren v. Hopkins, 1 Paige, 18.

A purchaser with full knowledge of the claim of third persons, is an incompetent witness for the vendor in a suit between him and such persons. Brown v. Lynch, 1 Paige, 148.

WOUNDING WITH A BLUNT INSTRUMENT.

To the Editor of the Legal Observer—

MR EDITOR—You are, no doubt, aware that a man was convicted at the late Special Commission, holden at Salisbury, on an indictment under the 9. G. 4. c. 31. s. 12., for wounding a magistrate with a hammer, intending to do him some grievous bodily harm. The case was referred to the Judges for their opinion, whether the wounding with such an instrument as a hammer was sufficient to sustain an indictment on that statute. The Judges were of opinion that wounding with any blunt instrument was sufficient.

Sir,—I live in a country where people are not so cool and collected as they are in yours, and, therefore, the effect of this decision will be felt more strongly here than with you. 'Any blunt instrument' will include an appalling restriction on the laudable disposition to punish impertinence. If I just beat a man with a cudgel; if I knock down an insolent rascal who has affronted a female; if I even pull his nose, and the skin be in the least removed; since that is a wounding, and my stick, or finger and thumb, are blunt instrument, then there is 'a wounding with a blunt instrument,' and therefore I am liable to be hanged! Why, Sir, can such things be? They talk of the laws of Draco, and the Black Act, but this construction of the 9. G. 4. c. 31. is infinitely more merciless. If this could have been the intention of Lord Lansdown, when he brought in the bill, he ought to be called Lord Moloch! Sir,—when once such a construction is admitted, there is no knowing how far it will go. 'Blunt instrument!'—why, sometimes Mr O'Connell's speeches are blunt instruments, and inflict wounds: so he is liable to be hanged, according to this construction.

Though I am only a poor Irishman, perhaps, Sir, you will have no objection to put this in your very clever publication, to oblige

Your obedient servant,

Sackville Street, Dublin. O'M.

HOW A NAME MAY BE CHANGED.

To the Editor of the Legal Observer—

SIR,—As the circulation of your journal is not confined to the legal branches of the community, I think I shall at least serve the general reader, by calling his attention to a little point of law, which may be particularly interesting to him. We all know, that by the accident of birth, or by some other capricious circumstance, many persons undergo much mortification and annoyance, from bearing some absurd or unpronounceable (if there be such a word) surname. There are some of these which are sometimes a decided hindrance to the advancement of a man in the world, and were I inclined to do so, it would be easy to relate some whimsical proofs of this; but no doubt the truth of what I assert is well known to most of your readers.

Now, Sir, the purpose of this letter is to point out to this class of persons a remedy for the annoyance, I might almost say misfortune, to which they are subject without any fault of their own. It has sometimes been thought that an act of parliament, or at least a license from the crown is necessary, in order effectually to change a name. This is a mistake. An act of parliament or license may be necessary in certain cases, where it is distinctly directed by deed or will to be obtained; but in all other cases a person may change his name at his own pleasure without any expense whatever. Thus, if a person inherit by birth a particular name, it is quite clear he may change it whenever he pleases. I shall only notice two of the authorities on the point. In the case of Barlow v. Bateman, 3 P. Will. 66: Sir Joseph Jekyll, M. R., says, 'Surnames are not of very great antiquity, for in ancient times, the appellation of persons were by their christian names, and the places of their habitations, as Thomas of Dale; viz. the place where he lived.* I am satisfied the usage of passing acts of parliaments, for the taking upon one a surname, is but modern, and that any person may take upon him what surname and as many surnames as he pleases without an act of parliament.' The same opinion has been lately expressed by Lord Tenterden in the case of Doe v. Yates, 5 Barn. & Ald. 544.: 'A name assumed by the voluntary act of a young man,' said his Lordship, 'at his outset into life, adopted by all who know him, and by which he is constantly called, becomes, for all purposes that occur to my mind, as much and effectually his name as if he had obtained an act of parliament.' It is proper to observe that the case of Barlow v. Bateman, 2 Bro. Parl. Ca. 272., although it reversed Sir Joseph Jekyll's decision, does not interfere with this principle, but was decided upon its special circumstances. See Leigh v. Leigh, 15 Ves. 100. 111.; 1 Roper on Legacies, 725.

It may therefore be laid down, that any person who chooses to change his name may do so; and if he do it when young, so much the more complete will be the alteration.

Under these circumstances, I seriously suggest to all persons whose surnames are not either to their own liking, or the liking of the world, which is rather fastidious in such matters, that they should change them, which they may do by writing to all their friends and acquaintances, and informing them of their intention, and constantly signing the name which they may think proper to select.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

And subscriber,

A CHANCERY BARRISTER,

Lincoln's Inn, Feb. 1 1831.

* See Camden's Remains, ed. 1637, 141.; 3 B. & A. 552. n. A singular custom exists to this day in Wales amongst the lower orders. If John Thomas have a son named David, he is called David John, (and not David Thomas,) after the Christian name of his father.

LORD ERSKINE AT HOLKHAM.—'I had frequently had an opportunity of meeting with Lord Erskine at Holkham, and other agricultural fetes, where, though he knew nothing of husbandry, his wit and eloquence insured him a cordial reception. At one of those meetings; he pleasantly said "that he had formerly studied Coke at Westminster, and that he was now studying Coke at Holkham; that Coke, the agriculturist was as great in his line as Coke the lawyer in judicial questions."' Sir John Sinclair.

SIR WILLIAM JONES ON SPECIAL PLEADING.—I shall not easily be induced to wish for a change of our present forms, how intricate soever they may seem to those who are ignorant of their utility. Our science of special pleading is an excellent logic, it is admirably calculated for the purposes of analysing a cause, of extricating, like the roots of an equation, the true points in dispute, and referring them, with all imaginable simplicity to the court or the jury: it is reducible to the strictest rules of pure dialectic, and if it were scientifically taught in our public seminaries of learning would fix the attention, give a habit of reasoning closely, quicken the apprehension, and invigorate the understanding, as effectually as the famed Peripatetic system, which, how ingenious and subtle soever, is not so honorable, so laudable, or so profitable, as the science in which Littleton exhorts his sons to employ their courage and care. It may unquestionably be perverted to very bad purposes; but so may the noblest arts, and even eloquence itself which many virtuous men have for that reason decried; there is no fear, however, that either the contracted fist, as Zeno used to call it, or the expanded palm, can do any real mischief, while their blows are directed and restrained by the superintending power of a court.—Prefatory Discourse to the Speeches Isæus, by Sir William Jones, p. xxv.

The opinion of this able and accomplished man, on the science of special pleadings, seems to have differed widely from that of some modern authorities.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS, CONDITIONAL PROMISE.

Money had and received,—plea, statute of limitations,—replication, promise in writing. The promise was contained in a letter, by which the defendant promised to pay the debt as soon as he was able. The plaintiff was nonsuited at the trial, on the ground that there was a conditional promise, and that the defendant's ability to pay should have been proved. The court on motion to set aside the nonsuit, held the promise to be conditional, and after argument discharged the rule. Eden, assignee, v. Williams, Com. Pl. M. T. 1830.

EVIDENCE OF SLAVES.

Both in Greece and Rome nothing was so common in all trials, both civil and criminal, as to resort to the evidence of slaves, which was always extorted by the most exquisite torments. Demosthenes says, (in Oratorem, orat. i.) that when it was possible to produce for the same fact either freemen or slaves as witness, the judges always preferred the torturing of slaves as a more certain evidence. Cicero, however, seems to think this evidence not so certain as the testimony of free citizens. Orat. pro. Cælio.

JUDGE ROOKE.

Judge Rooke, in going the Western circuit, had a large stone thrown at his head; but from the circumstance of his stooping very much, it passed over him. 'You see,' said he to his friends, 'that had I been an upright judge, I might have been killed.'

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1831.

A practical Treatise on the Law of Partnership, with an Appendix of Precedents. By NEIL GOW, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law. The 3d Edit. With considerable Alterations and Additions. London, 1830.

THE Law of Partnership has of late years become so important and interesting, that there are now no want of treatises on the subject. The first systematic publication was by Mr Watson. In 1815, Mr Montagu published his treatise, and this subject has been further elucidated by the present writer; and there is another treatise by Mr Cary.

We have no hesitation in saying that Mr Gow's treatise is the best of all these. We have examined it with very considerable attention; and although in one or two points we are inclined to disagree with the learned author, yet as a whole we have found it accurate, well arranged, and perspicuous. We are not entirely satisfied with the precedents which he has appended to his treatise:—we think there are better forms in print before the profession.

We consider Mr Gow incorrect when he says that one partner may by an action of assumpsit enforce from his co-partner contribution towards a debt which he might have discharged, but to which they were jointly liable; p. 79. Now the general rule as to this is that one partner cannot maintain an action of assumpsit against his co-partners for money expended on account of the partnership. Per Abbot C. J. Holmer v. Higgins, 1 B. & C. 76.; and see also Milburn v. Codd and another, 7 B. & C. 419.; and we do not think, on a close examination, that the cases cited by the learned author sufficiently support his position, or make out an exception. But these are almost the only points on which we can object to the work, of which we shall now give some account.

The first chapter is devoted to the consideration of the contract of partnership. The learned author thus considers the question whether partners can depart from the original objects for which their partnership was formed.

'When the object or purpose the partners have in view, in forming a partnership, is clearly and distinctly defined, and the contract of partnership does not expressly or impliedly confer upon some the power of binding all to the adoption of different projects, it is not competent to any number of the partners, short of the whole of them, to engage the partnership in adventures which are incompatible with the declared object or purpose; because, if it were so, an individual, by engaging in one specified concern, might be implicated in any other concern whatever, however different in its nature, against his consent. Each partner, therefore, has the power of insisting that the original contract of partnership shall not be contravened by an extension of its purposes; and he is not deprived of that power, notwithstanding the other partners offer to indemnify him against the loss that may be sustained by their embarking in transactions which were not, in the first instance, intended to form a part of the partnership concern: for, whilst the partnership continues, the right of a partner is to hold his co-partners to the specified purposes of their association, and not to rest upon indemnities, with respect to what he has not contracted to engage in.* And this principle (upon which a court of equity will act in the case of a common partnership) applies with equal force to all companies or societies whose objects are, at the time of their institution, defined, and who are not purposely invested with a power of binding the body by a majority, or any select part of it. Such companies, if there be one dissentient member, cannot embark in undertakings not originally contemplated; nor can they compel that member to retire from the company on receiving his subscribed capital and interest, in order thereby to leave them at liberty to pursue their extended operations. And it is not a sufficient answer to the requisition of the shareholder who calls upon the company to observe the objects for which the company was formed, to urge, that he may dispose of his shares at a price considerably beyond what he gave for them; because, for that very reason, coupled with having the partnership concern carried on according to the contract, he may expect augmented improvement in the value of his shares.† A covenant, in articles of partnership, that none of the partners shall carry on, for their respective private benefit, that branch of commerce in which they are jointly engaged, is not only allowed, but is the constant course.‡ Indeed, the principles of a court of equity will not permit that parties bound to each other, by express or implied agreement, to promote an undertaking for their common benefit, should any of them engage in another concern, which necessarily gives them an interest directly adverse to their original undertaking.'§

The interest of partners in the stock of trade is then treated of, and the rules clearly and concisely stated; but as these rules have been considered as settled for some time past, little novelty could be introduced into their discussion.

'The author next enters upon the important and numerous classes of cases relating to the acts, by which one partner may bind the firm; and we cannot give a better specimen of Mr Gow's labors than the portion of this chapter in which he considers the power of one partner to bind the firm by note or bill.

The signature of one partner, as the maker of a joint promissory note, or the drawer of a bill of exchange in respect of a joint transaction, is therefore binding upon his co-partner,‖ and equally binding is his acceptance of a bill of exchange¶; for, the bill being drawn upon them jointly, the acceptance of a single partner, in the names of both, is in legal effect a joint acceptance. So primâ facie, the indorsement of a bill or note by one partner, in the name of the partnership, binds all the firm.†† Even where one partner indorses a bill in a different name from that of the actual firm, such an indorsement will be binding, if it be proved that the partner was in the habit of issuing bills into the world indorsed under the former designation: because such evidence would establish an acting by procuration, and there seems to be no doubt but that one partner may so act for the whole firm.* Nor in the case of a note or bill does it form any valid objection to their enforcement against a firm, that the former is made, or the latter accepted, by one partner in his individual name, if it appear from the securitiies themselves that it was intended they should have a joint operation: in such cases the holder may, at his election, enforce payment either jointly against the firm, or separately against the party whose signature is attached.† Thus, a promissory note, by which the maker individually, but on the behalf of himself and his partners, engaged to pay a stipulated sum, has been held to affect the whole firm; and it is not to be considered as a mere personal undertaking, by the individual partner, to pay a debt due from himself and his co-partners.‡

[To be continued.]

* Natusce v. Irving, Appendix, post. † Id. Ibid.

‡ Morris v. Coleman, 18 Ves. 438.

§ Glassington v. Thwaites, 1 Sim. & Stu. 133. And see Burton v. Woolley, 6 Mad. 367.

‖ Smith v. Baily, 11 Mod. 401. Lane v. Willams, 2 Vern, 277. B. C. 16 Vin. Abr. 243.

¶ Anon. Styles, 370. Bull, Nisi Prius, 279

 Anon. Holt. 67. Pinkney v. Hall, 1 Salk. 126. S. C. 1 Ld. Raym. 175.

†† Wells v. Masterman, 2 Esp. N. P. C. 731. Swan v. Steele, 7 East, 210. Ridley v, Taylor, 13 East, 175. Where a bill or note is payable to several persons, not in partnership, the right to transfer it is in all collectively, not in any individually; and an indorsement by and in the name of one only will not give the indorsee a right to sue. Carvick v. Vickery, Dougl. 653. n. So, where a bill is drawn on two persons, who are not partners, if it is only accepted by one it must be protested. Holt, 297. Mar. 64. Beawes, pl. 228.

*Williamson v. Johnson, 1 B. & C. 146.

†Hall v. Smith, 1 B. & C. 407. See Clark v. Blackstock, Holt's N. P. C. 474. March v. Ward. Peake's N. P. C. 130. Wilks v. Back, 2 East, 264.

‡ Lord Galway v. Matthew, 1 Campb. 403. In Hall v. Smith, 1 B. & C. 497., it was held that a promissory note beginning 'I promise to pay,' signed by one member of a firm for himself and his partners, was binding upon the party signing as a several note, or as a joint note was binding upon the firm.

---

The President has appointed R. B. TANEY, Esq. of Baltimore, Attorney General of the United States, to succeed John Macpherson Berrien, Esq. Mr T. has accepted the appointment.

---

CONTENTS of the Law Magazine or Quarterly Review of Jurisprudence, No 12, for April, 1831, London.

Art. I.—FORENSIC ELOQUENCE OF FRANCE—TRIAL OF THE EX-MINISTERS:
Art. II.—LIFE OF LORD KEEPER WILLIAMS.
Art. III.—MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.
Art. IV.—THE LAW OF HOMICIDE.
Art. V.—THE ADMISSIBILITY OF PAROL EVIDENCE IN EQUITY TO DISCHARGE AGREEMENTS IN WRITING RESPECTING LAND.
Art. VI.—ANNUITIES GIVEN BY WILL.
Art. VII.—CHARGES ON CHURCH LIVINGS.
Art. VIII.—NOTES ON THE GENERAL TURNPIKE ACT.
Art. IX.—DEVOLUTION OF EXECUTORSHIP.
Art. X.—LEGAL EDUCATION.
Art. XI.—WORKS ON THE LAW OF ATTORNEYS.
Art. XII.—LIFE OF LORD NORTHINGTON.
Art. XIII.—REPORT OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.
DIGEST OF CASES, &c, &c.

---

Mr Harvey, during his canvass, was asked, whether he was not a supporter of taxation. 'Sir,' replied the worthy candidate, 'I am an attorney, and I defy you to point out one of the profession to whom the very word "taxation" is not hateful!'

---

LORD THURLOW AND LAVATER.

Lavater, on being shown a picture of Lord Thurlow, examined it for a moment, and said, 'Whether this man be on earth or on hell, I know not; but wherever he is, he is a tyrant and will rule if he can.'—Lardner's Cyclopedia.

VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS, recently received from Europe, and for sale by GRAY & BOWEN, No 141 Washington street.

Browne's Self Interpreting Bible, with notes, references, illustrations, reflections, and a memoir of the author; in one large quarto volume.

The Mirror of Parliament, edited by John Barrow Esq. This work contains a complete account of the doings and debates in the British Parliament, during the last December session ; in eight parts, folio.

Select Views on the River Clyde, engraved by Joseph Swan, with historical and descriptive illustrations; in one quarto volume, with fortytwo splendid engravings.

Select Views of the Lakes of Scotland, from original paintings ; in two parts.

Hinton's History and Topography of the United States. This work will be completed in thirty numbers, quarto, with ninety engravings; eight numbers are already received.

History of the sufferings of the Church of Scotland, from the restoration to the revolution ; by Rev. Robert Wodrow; 4 vols. 8vo.

History and Antiquities of the Doric Race ; by C. O. Müller ; 2 vols. 8vo.

History of Scotland, from the Union; by John Struthers ; 2 vols. 8vo.

A Selection from the Papers of the Earls of Marchmont ; illustrative of events from 1685 to 1750 ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, complete in two vols. 8vo.

A System of Geography, popular and scientific ; illustrated by a complete series of maps and other engravings; by James Bell ; 3 vols. 8vo.

McUre's History of Glasgow, with plates and illustrations ; 1 vol.

History of Modern Greece ; by James Emerson ; 2 vols. 8vo.

Rollins' Ancient History, with Life, notes and numerous maps and plates ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Thompson's Narrative of an official visit to Guatamala ; 1 vol.

Six Years' residence in the United States of America ; by Peter Neilson ; 1 vol.

Lardner's Cyclopedia ; complete set as far as published; 16 vols.

Lardner's Cabinet Library, annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 1831.

Murphy's Treatise on the art of Weaving; with fifteen engravings ; 1 vol.

Mackenzie on the Diseases of the Eye ; 1 vol.

Spix's Travels in Brazil, with engravings; 2 vols. 8vo.

BYRON'S WORKS—a new and beautiful edition, with a portrait, and other engravings ; in 4 vols. 16mo.

Evan's Sketch of the Denominations of the Christian World ; 1 vol.

Addison's Works; 4 vols.; a new edition.

Bowring's Poetry of the Magyars; 1 vol.

Constable's Miscellany ; vols. 60 to 65 inc.

Family Library.—Lives of British Painters—Lives of Physicians—Life of Bruce—Court and Camp of Buonaparte—Demonology and Witchcraft.

Foreign Tales and Traditions ; 2 vols.

The Casquet, or Literary Gem ; edited by Alexander Whitelaw ; 2 vols.

do do do (2d series) 2 vols.

The Atheneum, an original Literary Miscellany; 1vol.

The Midsummer Medley for 1830; by the author of Brambletye House.

Life on board a Man of War ; 1 vol.

Robertson's Parent's Guide to Baptism ; 1 vol.

Gospel Truth accurately stated and illustrated ; by Rev. John Brown ; 1 vol.

Outline of the Scripture Evidence for the Trinity; 1 vol.

The New Testament, translated by Doddridge, Campbell and Macknight ; 1 vol. 12mo.

An Essay on Chemical Analysis; by M. Thenard; translated by J. G. Children ; 1 vol.

Aids to Reflection ; by S. T. Coleridge ; 1 vol.

Fabliaux, or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries.

A Help to Professing Christians ; by Rev. John Barr; 1 vol.

The Wine Drinker's Manual ; 1 vol.

The Shamrock, a collection of Irish Songs.

The National Minstrel ; a choice selection of popular songs.

Parochial Psalmody ; by J. P. Clarke.

Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History.

Pinnock's Modern Geography and History.

The Caterer ; being a selection of pieces in prose and verse ; 1 vol.

Johnson's Dictionary, complete in one imperial 8vo.

Morewood's Essay on Inebriating Liquors.

Dibdin's Library Companion ; 1 vol.

Biblia Hebraica.

Novum Testamentum Græce.

Aristophanes Comædiæ.

Sophocles Tragædiæ.

Pindari Carmina.

Æschyli Tragædiæ. May 21

THIS DAY published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

Art I. The Laws of Population and Wages.

1. Two Lectures on Population, delivered before the University of Oxford in Easter Term, 1828. By Nassau William Senior, late Fellow of Magdalen College, A. M. Professor of Political Economy. To which is added a Correspondence between the Author and the Rev T. R Malthus.

II. Poetry and Romance of the Italians.

1. Della Letteratura Italiana, Di Camillo Ugoni.

2. Storia della Letteratura Italiana. Del cavaliere Giuseppe Maffei.

3. Storia della Letteratura Italiana nel secolo XVIII di Antonio Lombardi.

III. Origin and Progress of the Useful Arts.

The Frugal Housewife. By the Author of Hobomok.

IV. Pennsylvania Biography.

Memoirs of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Part II.

V. Defence of Mechanical Philosophy.

Signs of the Times.—Article VII. in the Ninety-eighth Number of the Edinburgh Review, for June, 1829.

VI. The Cherokee Case.

1. Opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on an Application made by the Cherokee Indians for a Writ of Injunction against the State of Georgia, delivered by Mr Chief Justice Marshall, at the January Term held at Washington, 1831.

VII. The Prospect of Reform in Europe.

L'Avenir. Par M. J. L. Sismondi. Extrait de la Revue Encyclopedique.

VIII. Popular Sports and Festivals.

The Sports and Pastimes of the people of England. By Joseph Strutt. A New Edition, with a Copious Index. By William Hone.

IX. Harvard University

Letter to Governor Lincoln in relation to Harvard University. By F. C. Gray. Second Edition, with an Appendix.

X. Life and Character of Henry Brougham.

1. Speech of Henry Brougham, M. P. on the Present state of the Law.

2. Practical Observations on Popular Education. By H. Brougham, Esq. M. P. F. R. S.

3. Publications of the society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.

XI. North Eastern and Northern Boundary.

1. Decision of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, on the Questions submitted to him by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, for determining the Boundary Line between the United States and the British Provinces. July 2.

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars.

April 9.

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141; Washington Sreet, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLV.

CONTENTS.

I. Religion in France. Vues sur le Protestantism en France. Par J. L. S. Vincent, l'un des Pasteurs de l'Eglise Reformee de Nismes.

II. May's Letters to Hawes. Letters to the Rev. Joel Hawes, D. D. in Review to his 'Tribute to the memory of the Pilgrims.' By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the first Church in Brooklyn, Connecticut.

III. Life and Writings of Origen. Origenis Opera Omnia, quæ Græce vel Latine tantum extant, et ejus Nomine circumferuntur. Opera et studio Caroli Delarue.

IV. On the morality of our Political situation.

V. German Rationalism. The Biblical Repository, January, 1831. Conducted by Edward Robinson, Professor Extraordinary in the Theological Seminary at Andover.

VI. Harmonies of the Gospels. A Harmony of the Gospels, on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D.

VII. Mr Whitman and his Reviewers.

1. Review of Mr Whitman's Letters to Professor Stuart on Religious Liberty. [From 'The Spirit of the Pilgrims.'] With an Appendix not before published.

2. A Reply to the Review of Whitman's Letters to Professor Stuart in 'The Spirit of Pilgrims' for March 1834. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Translation of the Scriptures at Serampore.

IX. Books on Practical Religion. On the Formation of the Christian Character. Addressed to those who are seeking to lead a religious Life. By Henry Ware, Jr. Professor of Pulpit Eloquence, and the Pastoral Care in Harvard University. July 2.

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

SPLENDID BIBLE. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 9, 1831. NO. L.

MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

PRESUMPTION OF SURVIVORSHIP.

Disputed identities, like appearances of ghosts, have grown more rare as knowledge and civilization have advanced, and the taste for what is true, superseded the preference for what is marvellous. Some stories of this kind, however, which puzzled the wisest judges of the time, are so curious and well authenticated, as to deserve a short consideration. France, fertile in other physical marvels, appears pre-eminent for this species of anomaly. The case of Martin Guerre, decided by the parliament of Tholouse, in 1560, is the most curious, perhaps with one exception, to be met with of the kind.

Martin Guerre, was compelled by circumstances to remain absent from his home for the space of eight years. An adventurer, Arnauld Dutille by name, formed the bold design of representing him, and actually succeeded in imposing himself on the wife of Martin, as her husband, and took unopposed possession of the property. By this union he had children, and continued resident for three years in the family, with four sisters and two brothers-in-law of the absent man, without any suspicion of his identity arising. At length some doubt was thrown on the real character of the impostor, and the question was referred to the courts. Of several hundred witnesses examined, thirty or forty swore that Dutille was the true Martin Guerre, about the same number that he was Arnauld Dutille, and the remainder deposed that the resemblance between the two men was so great, that they felt it impossible to decide between them. The perplexity of the judges was extreme on this occasion, and they were on the point of deciding, from some preponderence, as they esteemed it, of evidence, in the impostor's favor, when the real Martin Guerre appeared. Even when they were confronted, so great was the resemblance, and such the effrontery and composure of Dutille, that many remained in doubt, until the brothers and sisters of the long absent person fully and decidedly recognised him.

The more recent tale of Francis Noiseu, presents a case of gross deceit, rather than of extraordinary similarity between two persons, but it was otherwise decided by the courts who reviewed it, and is therefore worth our notice.

Francis Noiseu, was born at Paris, on the twentysecond of December, 1762, and put to nurse in Normandy. Three years and eight months after his birth, this child was lost, until the 15th of June, 1768, when his godmother, seeing two children pass by, was struck with the voice of one of them. She called him to her, and after a careful observation became convinced that she had found her godson. On the other hand, the widow Labrie, claimed the boy as her son. The reasons for allowing the godmother's claim were, besides general resemblance, a mark in the right arm, and a cicatrix on the inner side of the left knee, both of which had existed in the lost child, who had been bled when about sixteen months old, and undergone an application of caustics for a gathering in the leg. These two resemblances, the widow Labrie, accounted for as accidental abrasions received in nursing, but she denied that bleeding or caustics had ever been employed. It was also contended for her, that the child was marked with the small pox, whereas the other claimant never maintained that her lost godson had suffered that disease. Many witnesses also swore that it was the young Labrie. The courts so decided, certainly not with the wisdom of Solomon.

Foderé, who has collected most cases on this subject, impugns this judgment with much justice. He points out how easy it would have been for surgeons to decide, whether the cicatrices in question were the effect of bleeding and caustics, or the result of slight tumor or abrasion. Yet those examined, contradicted one another on this point. Again, the circumstances that a child lost for two years, should have the smallpox in the interval, appears by no means improbable.

In our country, a dispute respecting identity, far more wonderful than these, or any other, occurred in the proceedings against Elizabeth Canning, for perjury, which are recorded at length in the state trials. That superlatively interesting inquiry, arose, as our readers may remember, from an accusation of kidnapping and robbery, previously brought by Canning, against one Wells, who kept a house of no extraordinary reputation at Enfield Wash, some gipsies of the name of Squires, and others, unknown. We have no space to enter into the details of this long and complicated case, which as much, perhaps as any upon record, will reward attentive perusal. It is sufficient to state here, that certain circumstances having thrown a doubt upon the statements of the prosecutrix, she was indicted for perjury, at the Old Bailey. One of the chief facts endeavored to be proved against her was, that these Squires, whom she swore to have seen on the first of January, in the house at Enfield Wash, to which she was conveyed, were then, and for long after in a different part of England. For this purpose thirtyeight witnesses, against whose character no exception was taken, appeared and swore, that from the latter end of December, to the twentyfourth of January, the whole family of the Squires were travelling gradually from Dorsetshire to London. Their progress was proved in evidence from day to day, without one omission, and their place of rest for every night accounted for. On behalf of Elizabeth Canning, came twentyseven respectable witnesses, quite unconnected with, and uninterested for her, who deposed to having seen the mother, Mary Squires, and some of them the whole party, both shortly before and after the first of January, in the neighborhood of Enfield Wash. The wonder of this conflicting testimony was much heightened by the fact that Mary Squires was a woman of most singular and frightful aspect, so that many of the witnesses who swore to her identity declared, 'That they did not believe God had made two such objects in the world,—that they should know her among ten thousand,—that those who had once seen her could not forget her until their dying day,' and similar strong expressions. The balance of credibility seems to incline against the thirtyeight, who appeared in favor of the Squires, but the case still remains a most doubtful and perplexing one. Elizabeth Canning was convicted and sentenced to transportation, but there were other stronger grounds of suspicion against her. There was probably perjury on both sides.

Of another but equally marvellous description is that difficulty which sometimes has occurred in ascertaining the identity of an individual quite changed by time and hardships. The learned Paolo Zacchia, the compiler and augmenter of all the knowledge extant in his time on those subjects of medical jurisprudence, which are most obscene and least profitable, has preserved one or two strange cases of this sort, once submitted to his much revered arbitrament. He thus analyses and sums up the causes of the difficulty in his sixtyfirst Consilium: 'Causæ igitur tantæ mutationis restringi possunt ad ætatem, ad insignes aeris mutationes, ad vitæ genus maxime a consueto diversum, ad animi vehementes, improvisas, ac repentinas, vel etiam longo tempore detinentes passiones, ad morbos aut maximé acutos, aut malignos, aut maxime diuturnos.' One of his narratives much abridged will satisfy our present object.

Andrea Cassali, a noble Bolognese, left his country at an early age to engage in military enterprises. It was generally supposed that he had fallen in battle; but after the lapse of thirty years from his departure, he returned and claimed his property, which his heirs had already appropriated. Although some marks appeared to identify him, the change in his appearence was so great, that none who remembered the youth were able or willing to acknowledge the man. He was seized and imprisoned as a fraudulent impostor. The judges in their perplexity applied to Zacchia to inform them, whether the human countenance could be so changed as to make it impossible to recognise. He decided in the affirmative, for the reasons above stated. The judges, on receiving this reply, called on the heirs of Cassali to produce evidence of his death, and they being unable to prove it, a restoration of his titles and estates was decreed to him.

Inquiries regarding the presumption of survivorship may seem at first rather amusing than profitable or important, and, as such, little deserving of serious attention from us. Yet they have not been thought unworthy of care and consideration in all countries highly civilized, while, from their difficulty, they have baffled the wisdom of legislators, and puzzled the ingenuity of lawyers. Notwithstanding this research, no great benefit has resulted to society, as there seem insuperable difficulties to prevent the attainment of any definite and rational regulations on this perplexing subject. An extract from the 'Code Napoléon' will give the best idea of the pains that have been taken, and, we think, of their futility. Under the title, 'De l'ouverture des saisins, et de la saisine des héritiers,' we find the following enactments:

Art. 720.—'Si plusieurs personnes respectivement appellées à la succession l'une de l'autre, périssent dans une méme evénement, sans qu'on puisse reconnâitre laquelle est décédée la premiére la présomption de survie est déterminée par les circonstances du fait, et â leur défaut par la force de l'âge et de sexe.'

Art 721. 'Si ceux qui ont pèri ensemble avaient moins de quinze ans, le plus âgé sera présumé avoir survécu.'

'S'ils étaient tous au dessus de soixante ans, le moins âgé sera présumé survècu.'

'Si les uns avaient moins de quinze ans et les autres plus de soixante, les premiers seront présumés avoir survécu.'

Art. 722. 'Si ceux qui ont péri ensemble avaient quinze ans accomplis et moins de soixante, le mâle est toujours présumé avoir survécu, lorsqu'ily a égalité d'âge, ou si la différence qui existe n'exceda pas une année.'

'S'ils etaient du même sexe la présomption de survie qui donne ouverture à la succession dans l'ordre de la nature doit être admise ; ainsi le plus jeune est présumé avoir survécu au plus âgé.'

These provisions are clearly founded on principles of correct physiology, and yet how easy is it to find just fault with them. Beck following Fodéré points out the high absurdity of the seven hundred and twentyfirst article, in giving to infants of a month or even day a preference before all persons above sixty. But his further criticism is trifling and unfair, when he objects that the code takes no notice of the case in which persons under fifteen and under sixty perish together; for though we find no express clause to that purport, the others imply it beyond the possibility of mistake.

The old French law, before the construction of the code Napoleon, followed the simpler provisions of the digest in giving the benefit of presumption of survivorship to the eldest of the deceased up to the age of puberty, and to the youngest afterwards. The French system, however, gave one addition and, indeed, improvement to the Roman, by admitting its application in those cases only where the disputed property passed by descent. If the parties who perished were the possessor and his next heir, the legal tribunals were willing to entertain the hypothesis of survivorship : but if the one was legatee only of the other, the estate of the testator passed to his heirs without dispute. Thus, where the captain and lieutenant of a vessel perished together at sea, and the latter before sailing had bequeathed to his superior officer a considerable sum of money, the courts refused to listen to the claim made for the legacy by the heirs of the captain. It seems no irrational distinction to show greater favor to heirs than legatees in such circumstances, but the rule, if enforced in this country, might press very severely on remaindermen, for whose benefit the testator might frequently have been more solicitous to provide by his will than for that of the devisee for life who perished with him. Although not recognised by English judges, this principle was much urged on one side in the case of Mason and Mason,* of which some account will presently be given.

Zacchia is as laborious and as fanciful as elsewhere on this perplexing sort of hypothesis. Two cases recorded in his Consilia will give the best notion of his mode of judging. The first is that of a father and son who were overwhelmed by the fall of a building, their respective ages being sixty and thirty at the time. The bodies were found about ten hours afterwards. That of the father was uninjured, but there was a severe wound on the head of the son. The heirs of each put forward their claims, and Zacchia was appointed referee by the judges. After a long and diligent investigation of the parties' strength and state of health, he came to the conclusion that the son survived the father. He put the wound on the head out of the question, on the ground that it would not necessarily have proved mortal, and at any rate was not of a nature to produce immediate death, while suffocation, on the other hand, must have taken place so speedily, that the father, old and valetudinarian, in all probability first perished.

His other tale is of a man and his family who had eaten very copiously of mushrooms, which proved poisonous. They were all taken violently ill, and the domestics sent to procure assistance. Before their return with medical aid, the husband and wife had expired. Two years previous, this couple had agreed that the survivor should possess the sum of two thousand crowns, and the heirs of each contested the right to it. Zacchia, when consulted, gave his opinion that the man had lived longest. His reasons were, the robust and healthy state of the husband, although sixty years old, and the fact deposed to by his servants, that he had eaten fewer of the mushrooms. The wife, on the contrary, was asthmatic, and subject to stomachic complaints: it appeared, too, that she had partaken largely of the fatal dish, besides other indigestible food. She was, however, only forty. But a poison, he thought, which acted violently on the respiratory organs, must sooner destroy one already diseased in those parts. This theory respecting the operation of such poisons, it must be observed, is altogether fanciful, but the learned schoolman seems right on the whole.

We hope the reader will not deem us tiresome or puerile, if we mention two more foreign cases, before coming to the most remarkable that have occurred in our own country. The one is curious from its facts, and the other from the theories which it gave rise to. We are indebted for the first to the Advocate Ricard, a celebrated pleader of the seventeenth century.

'At the famous battle of Dunes, in 1658, there fell together a father and son. On the same day, at noon, the daughter and sister took the vail, and become thereby dead in law. This was the hour at which the battle commenced. In the inquiry respecting survivorship, it was soon settled, that the nun died first, for her vows were consummated in a few minutes, whereas the father and the son might linger long after receiving their mortal wounds. Between the last, the Roman law then recognised in France, furnished easy means of decision, and the younger man was declared the survivor.'

In 1751, the celebrated Dr Lorry was called on to give an opinion in the following case. A merchant, aged fiftyeight, his wife, fifty, and his daughter, twentyseven, were drowned, whilst attempting to cross the Seine in a small boat. No other fact having transpired respecting their death, the heirs contested the property. That the daughter died first, was sought to be established by Lorry. Three causes, he observed, would conspire to accelerate death, namely, the fright, the extreme coldness of the water, and the presence of certain diseases. His whole argument assumes the rather curious supposition, nowhere stated in the case, that the younger female was menstruating, and that the cold water would hasten her dissolution by checking the discharge. Supposing that he had private means of knowing her state, it seems very questionable whether the presence of such a disorder would accelerate suffocation. And that such a hypothesis should counterbalance the important difference of age between the parties with a sensible man, is so absurd, that we can scarcely give him credit for having dealt fairly with the subject. The parliament of Paris very properly admitted the presumption of survivorship to rest with the daughter, by their decree of the seventh of September, 1752, and ordered a disposition of the property accordingly.

[To be continued.]

* 1 Merivale Rep. 308.

ORIGINAL LETTER OF JUSTICE BLACKSTONE.

The following letter of Chief Justice Blackstone, appears to have been addressed to a relation, soon after the young candidate for legal honors had commenced his professional studies in London, and exhibits, if I mistake not, the germ of that singularly beautiful style which afterwards adorned his Commentaries.—Legal Obs.

Dear Sir,—You have been so kind as to tell me, yt. a Line now & then from me wd. not be unacceptable to you. 'Tis this that has drawn upon You ye. present Trouble, for wch. You have Nobody but Yourself to blame.

I have been in Town about ten Days, & am tolerably well settled in my new Habitation (wch. is at Mr Stokes's a Limner in Arundel-Street.) The People of ye. House seem honest, civil, & industrious ; & my Lodgins are in themselves chearful, retired, &, as every Body tells me, extremely reasonable. Nor do I want Opportunities of Gallantry (if I have inclination to improve them) there is lodging in ye. same House a young Lady of extraordinary Accomplishments & a very ample Fortune ; but alas ! She has, together with ye. Riches, ye. Complexion also of a Jew. So that She is not like to prove a very formidable Rival to — — Coke upon Littleton.

Coke I have not yet ventured to attack, but have (according to Ch. J. Reeves's Plan) begun with Littleton only. Two together wd. be too much for a Hercules, but I am in great Hopes of managing them one after ye. other. I have stormed one Book of Littleton, & opened my Trenches before ye. 2d ; and I can with pleasure say I have met with no Difficulty of Consequence ; There is one thing indeed, & but one, I cd. not understand in ye. first Book, wch. is a mere matter of Speculation: & is in short this. The Donees in Frank-Marriage shall do no Service (but that of Fealty) to ye. Donor or his heirs till ye. 4th Degree be past. Of wch. 4 Degrees ye. Donee shall be said to be yc. first. § 20. To prove wch. last Assertion, Littleton produces a Writ of Right of ward (as you may see Pag. 23. b.) Now with me ye. Question is, how the Writ wch. he produces proves ye. Point he wd. have it do, viz. that ye. Donee in Frank-Marriage is ye. first of ye. four Degrees. You will observe that this is a Point of mere Curiosity, Frank-Marriage being now out of Use. But I don't love to march into an unknown Country, without securing every Post behind me : & it is a greater Slur upon a General to leave a slight Place untaken, than one more hard of Access. Besides, in my apprehension, and I shd. be glad to know your opinion of ye. matter) ye. Learning out of use is as necessary to a Beginner as that of every Day's Practice. There seems in ye. modern Law to be so many References to ye. ancient Tenures & Services, that a Man who wd. understand ye. Reasons, ye. Grounds & Original of what is Law at this Day must look back to what it was formerly ; otherwise his Learning will be both confused & superficial.

I have sometimes thought that ye. Common Law, as it stood in Littleton's Days, resembled a regular Edifice : where ye. Apartments were properly disposed, leading one into another without Confusion, where every part was subservient to ye. whole, all uniting in one beatiful Symmetry : & every Room had its distinct Office allotted to it. But as it is now, swoln, shrunk, curtailed, enlarged, altered, & mangled, by various & contradictory Statutes, &c ; it resembles ye. same Edifice, with many of its most useful Parts pulled down, with preposterous Additions in other Places, of different Materials and coarse workmanship : according to ye. Whim, or Prejudice, or private Convenience of ye. Builders. By wch. means the Communication of ye. Parts is destroyed, and their Harmony quite annihilated ; & now it remains a huge, irregular Pile, with many noble Apartments, tho' awkwardly put together, & some of them of no visible Use at present. But if one desires to know why they were built, to what End or Use, how they communicated with ye. rest, and ye. like ; he must necessarily carry in his Head ye. Model of ye. old House, wch. will be ye. only Clew to guide him thro' this new Labyrinth.

I have trespassed so far on yr. Patience, that I am almost afraid to venture any farther. But I happen'd t'other day upon a Case in a Civil Law Book, wch. I should be glad to know how you imagine Chancery wd. decide. A Man dies & leaves his Wife with Child : & by his Will ordains that, if his Wife brought forth a Son ; ye. Son shd. have 2 3ds. & ye Mother one 3d of the Estate : If a Daughter, then ye. Wife to have 2, & ye. Daughter 1 3d. The Wife brought Twins, a Boy & a Girl. Qu. How shall ye. Estate be divided ? N. B. We must suppose a Jointure, or something, in Bar of Dower.

We are quite in ye. Dark as to Intelligence here in Town; You must observe what strange, perplexed, incoherent Accts. ye. Gazette affords us. I fear our Loss in Scotland was greater than they care to own. But at ye. same time, even Victory must lessen ye. Number of ye. Rebels, while we are continually recruiting. There is a Talk of assessing all personal Estate, & raising thereby 3 millions. If so ye. Assessment must run high.

I was sensibly concerned at hearing of Mar. Richmond's Illness ; but hope, by not hearing lately any thing further, that all is well again. My hearty Good wishes attend him, & my Cousin, who I shd. think might take a Trip to Town this Spring. My Aunt of Worting will be at Lincolns inn-fields about Easter ; and probably wd. be glad of a companion to partake of some of ye. gay Diversions.

Excuse, Sir, this tedious Length, wch. I promise never to be guilty of again, & when You have an idle hour, be so good as do think of, Sir,

Your most obliged humble Servant.

WILL. BLACKSTONE.

Arundel-Street, Jan. 28, 1745.

(Superscribed)

To MR RICHMOND,

at Sparsholt, near Wantage, Berks.

THE UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

LAW CLASS.

LECTURES OF MR THEOBALD ON THE LAW OF PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

The chief subject announced for consideration in this lecture was, the extent or meaning of the words 'special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person,' with the view to determine in what cases a compliance with the enactment relative to that description of promise is necessary.

From a review and minute critical examination of several of the earlier cases Mr Theobald inferred, that at first the words quoted were understood by the courts to apply to promises of guarantee exclusively. Thus in Buckmyr v. *Darnell, the defendant's promise, namely, that if the plaintiff would lend his horse to A. B., A. B. should return it safe, was held to be within the statute 'because, (says Salkeld, abridging the reasoning of the court) the promise came in aid only (that is, he was an accessory or surety, and not a principal) to procure a credit (that is, loan of the horse) to the party, and there is remedy against both according to their distinct engagements.' In Read v. Nash†, on the contrary, where it appeared that no other person was obliged as principal debtor, and therefore that the defendant was a surety, the case was held not within the statute. Now, said the lecturer, had it not been previously determined that the statute applied to guarantees only, the consideration that the promise in the former case was a guarantee, and that that in the latter was not, would not have been decisive of the question, whether those promises were within the statute. The lecturer next adverted to the recent cases of Kirkham v. Martyr.‡ There the defendant's son was alleged to have ridden to death the plaintiff's horse, and the defendant promised him a sum of money in compensation. The material facts in this case were identical with those in Read v. Nash. In both cases an injury had been, or was alleged to have been, committed ; in both, a third person promised a compensation ; in neither was the person who committed the injury a party to the agreement for a compensation ; yet, in the latter case (Kirkham v. Martyr) the court decided the defendant's promise to be within the statute, on the ground that it was a promise to answer for a 'miscarriage.' Read v. Nash therefore is overruled, and in future, not only promises of guarantee, but promises to answer for the torts of others, must be in writing.

We have not space for more than an illustration of Mr Theobald's views respecting the policy of this decision. While, said he, the words alluded to were understood in their most probable sense as applicable to guarantees only, principle and harmony prevailed in the decisions ; but, from giving the word 'miscarriage' a literal interpretation, without regard to the context, the question arises, whether a literal interpretation should not be applied to the rest of the enactment ; and if not two inconsistent rules of interpretation exist concurrently, according to one of which many cases which have been excluded from the statute ought to be included, and according to the other, many included which ought to be excluded. For instance, upon a literal interpretation of the words, 'promise to answer for the debt of another,' Goodman v. Chase§, and many analogous cases which have been excepted from the statute, would be within it ; because, although the defendant was not a surety by reason of the effect of his agreement in extinguishing the liability of the principal debtor, still, at the time his promise was made, the debt was not his own, but strictly and literally, the debt of another.'

Mr Theobald next reviewed the cases taken by judicial decision out of the statute. Goodman v. *Chase, Browning v. Stallard†, Tomlinson v. Gill‡, Anstey v. Marden§, Williams v. Leper‖, Bampton v. Paulin¶, Burrell v. *Trussell, Houlditch v. Milne††, and Castling v. Aubert‡‡, were the chief of those cited ; and the results of which he stated to be that the following agreements are not within the statute : 1. Agreements, by the express terms of which the creditor lose his right to recover against this original debtor. 2. Agreements, by the legal operation of which the creditor loses his right to recover against his original debtor. 3. Agreements, accompanied with a relinquishment by the creditor to the surety or promiser of any securities of any kind, on which he has a lien for the sum promised. 4. Wherever the creditor sells his debt, the promise of the purchaser to pay the price is not within the statute.

Referring to Gall v. Comber§§, and Grove v. Dubois‖‖, Mr Theobald next discussed, whether the guarantee of a broker on a delcredere comission was within the statute, and he concluded by announcing for his next lecture, the subject of the extent and the construction of the obligation of surety.

*1 Salkeld, 27.
† 1 Wils. 305.
‡ 2 Barn. & Ald. 613.
§ 1 Barn. Ald. 297.

* 1 Barn. & Ald. 297.
† Ambler, 330.
‡ 3 Burr. 1887.
§ 4 Taunt. 118.
‖ 2 East ,325.
¶ 1 Term R. 115.
 5 Taunt. 450.
†† 1 New R. 127.
‡‡ 4 Bing .264.
§§ 3 Esp. N. P. C. 86.
‖‖ 1 J. B. Moore, 279.

CASES IN POINT.

'CAN you produce any authority for that position ?' inquires his lordship of the learned counsellor X., who, conscious of the unfavorable aspect of the cases, is indulging in a few ipse-dixits, with an emphasis proportioned to the badness of his cause, and spinning some distinctions so ingenious, subtle, and refined, that it is quite a pity they they are not to be found in any of 'the books.'

'Please your ludship,' replies Mr X., 'I confess that I am not prepared with a bead roll of cases at my fingers' ends : but, my lud, I argue upon principle ;' whereby the learned gentleman merely means, that it is his principle to decry the cases to the extent of his abilities and his lungs, whenever they happen to make against the cause which he advocates, though he is always a great stickler for them if they are favorable to his clients.

But the 'simple laity,' as the old lawyers were wont politely to designate all the rest of the world except themselves, not being in the secret of the learned gentleman's distaste for the authorities, will be apt to applaud so liberal and enlightened a disavowal of the narrow prejudices of his profession ; and the young apprentice of Themis, just entered into a solicitor's office, or commencing his status pupillaris in chambers, having already had a slight taste of the horrors of looking up cases in point, sympathizes with so convenient a disregard of black-letter law, as he scornfully designates all law which has had the misfortune to be printed. Indeed, inexperi ence or indolence will generally be found at the bottom of the vulgar outcry against precedent: inexperience, which is not aware that a strict adherence to foregoing decisions is the landmark of property, and indolence, that would fain jump to conclusions, instead of arriving at them by the more tedious, but safer route, provided by the stepping stones of established authorities.

In the profession itself there are put few principle-mongers; for a diligent study of the law will almost infallibly lead to a conviction of the vital importance of certainty, so far as it can be attained, in the rules by which the multifarious transactions between man and man are to be regulated, and the general mischief and confusion that must ensue, if such rules might be altered or modified in order to suit individual notions of natural equity in particular cases. But, no doubt, it is a very prevalent notion with that part of the public whose avocations have not led them to pay particular attention to the subject, that the reverence for precedent is carried by lawyers to an absurd and mischievous extent; and that, in submitting a question to the test of judicial rules and decisions, the essence of justice often evaporates in the process. It is supposed that there is the common-sense view of a case, (such is the popular phrase,) as distinguished from the light in which that case is placed by the refined subtleties of the law. The error consists in a party's assuming, as a matter of course, that his own particular opinion is necessarily the only one compatible with common sense; much in the spirit of the learned divine, who defined orthodoxy to mean his own doxy, and heterodoxy the doxy of any other man. If the suffrages of those who profess to be guided by the dictates of common sense alone were to be collected on any complicated question, common sense would be found strangely inconsistent with itself. On the other hand, where, after a full, deliberate, and impartial investigation, of all the circumstances of a case, and after everything has been stated, pro et con, which ingenuity or experience can suggest, a decision has been pronounced by a competent person, whom the nature of his pursuits has peculiarly fitted for giving the proper weight to every fact and every argument which is urged upon his attention, is there any thing absurd or unnatural in being guided by such a decision, in preference to listening to the crude and self sufficient dicta so complacently referred by their authors to reason and principle, though they will generally be found, on a strict examination to be opposed to both? As for the niceties and refinements ascribed to the law, they spring out of circumstances; and it is as unfair to charge them upon the members of the profession, as it would be to taunt an astronomer for descending into the minute and intrinsic calculation rendered necessary by the nature of the sublime science to which he is devoted.

The young student at the commencement of his noviciate, is naturally impatient of the restraint which is imposed by a continual reference to the opinions of others, and irritated at the nice and troublesome scrupulosity which exacts a case in point for every position. But, upon consulting the authorities to which his attention is directed he finds the question on which he is inclined to come to a hasty conclusion placed in so many new and important points of view, so many difficulties to be encountered, and consequences to be obviated, which had never suggested themselves to his inexperience, that, if he be possessed of any degree of intelligence, he begins at length to suspect his own infallibility, and to entertain some respect for opinions which are the result of knowledge and experience. He gradually becomes expert in applying the principles of former decisions to every case which is brought under the notice, and the habit of investigation will moreover enable him to consider a subject in all its bearings, and to grapple with its difficulties even where the authorities fail him: his judgment becomes matured, and he has laid in all the elements of a sound lawyer. The 'enlightened public,' or that class of persons who styles themselves such, will probably represent him as having now become thoroughly imbued with the prejudices of his profession: but he will be consoled by the consciousness of having qualified himself to discharge the most important and responsible duties of that profession with credit to himself and advantage to the community.—Ib.

THE LAW INSTITUTION.

The Inns of Court and Chancery, which constituted a species of law university, where the members possessed the advantage of extensive libraries, and the means of improving themselves, by legal and forensic exercises, were anciently not confined to the graduates of the bar, but included the attorneys at law, who like the rest of the members, assembled in commons at stated parts of each term.

Amongst the alterations which time has wrought in the legal profession, we may notice the disuse of the ancient regulations with regard to attorneys, by which they were required 'to come into commons, according to the custom and orders of those societies, to their great ease in transacting causes one with another.'*

The circumstances under which these rules were permitted to be disregarded, it is needless in this place to investigate; but it appears that the profession soon felt the importance of establishing a substitute for those venerable associations; and accordingly, in the year 1739, the Law Society was formed expressly, for the purpose of supporting the honor and independence of the profesion, promoting fair and liberal practice, and preventing unnecessary expense and delay to suitors.' About ten years ago, another association for similar objects was instituted, called the Metropolitan Law Society, and numerous clubs of solicitors, both in London and in different parts of the country, have also, from time to time, been established for the furtherance of the respectability of the profession. These at length have been followed by the Law Institution, which has been framed upon a larger scale of utility.

The following is an account of its origin, and in a future number we shall detail its various important objects and advantages.

The plan of the Institution originated with some individuals in the profession, who were desirous of increasing its respectability, and promoting the general convenience and advantage of its members.

It appeared to them singular, that whilst the various public bodies and commercial classes in the metropolis, and indeed in many of the principal towns in the kingdom, had long possessed places of general resort, for the more convenient transaction of their business; and while numerous Institutions for promoting Literature and Science amongst all ranks of society had been long established, and others were daily springing up, the attorneys and solicitors should still be without an establishment in London, calculated to afford them similar advantages.

To supply this desideratum, and afford other professional facilities, the present Institution was suggested. The outline of it having been in the first instance submitted to the consideration of the more immediate friends of the parties with whom the plan originated, and from whom it received the most unequivocal proof of approbation, measures were adopted for submitting the plan to the profession at large. A meeting accordingly took place, at which the subject was discussed and referred to the consideration of a provisional committee, who having made their report, a general meeting was held, at which the measure was finally approved, and a Committee of Management appointed to carry it into execution.

For effecting the purposes of the Institution, it was considered necessary to raise a fund of £50,000, in shares of £25 each, payable by instalments, no one being permitted to take more than twenty shares. The plan having been generally announced to the profession, a large proportion of the shares were immediately subscribed for, so that no doubt remained of the success of the design, and the committee therefore directed inquiries to be made for a site for the intended building, and succeeded in obtaining an eligible one in Chancery lane, nearly opposite to the Rolls Court, and extending to Bell yard; thus having the advantage of two frontages, and, from its contiguity to the Law Offices and Inns of Court, being peculiarly adapted to the objects of the Institution.—Legal Obs.

* The last rule of court on this subject was in 1704.

SLANDER—SPECIAL DAMAGE—VARIANCE.

Action for slander. The words were, 'he is a rogue and a swindler.' The declaration alleged special damage, as occasioned by the uttering of these words by the defendant. Brier was called to prove that in consequence of having heard these words, he refused to trust the plaintiff. Brier heard these words from Brice, in whose presence they had been spoken by the defendant. Brice gave up the name of the defendant.

Mr Justice Bosanquet, who tried the cause nonsuited the plaintiff, on the ground that, as the words were not actionable in themselves, but are alleged to have been uttered by the defendant, and thereby to have been the cause of special damage, the plaintiff should have shown that they were spoken to Brier either by the defendant or by his authority. The repetition of them by Brice was the act of that person, and not of the defendant, and the latter could not therefore be answerable. A rule was obtained to set aside the nonsuit, and it was contended that if an action had been commenced against Brice, his proof that he had uttered the words on the credit of the defendant, would have been a sufficient answer to it as he would thereby have given the plaintiff an action against the original slanderer. The resolution in Lord Northampton's case was cited in support of the argument.

The Court, however, discharged the rule. The special damage was not proved as laid, for the words which prevented Brier from trusting the plaintiff, were uttered by Brice of his own accord, and not by the authority of Brier. As to the resolution in Lord Northampton's case, it had often been doubted, but, might now be considered as overruled by the decision in M' Pherson v. Daniel. —Warde v. Weekes, Com. Pl. M. T. 1830.

APPEALS IN GERMANY.

The judicial faculty in every German university forms a court of appeal for the whole confederation. In all the states the losing party in a cause had the right of appealing to a university: this right was confirmed by the act of confederation; and even the native form, if it find difficulties which require the assistance of more profound jurisconsults, may send the case for judgment to an university. In all these appeals the members of the juridical faculty become judges; receive no salary for this part of their duty, but they are entitled to certain fees paid by the litigants, which at Jena I have heard estimated as at least equal to the professional salary. To this union of the bench with the chair are undoubtedly to be ascribed in some measure the distinguished legal talents which have at all times adorned the German universities, and which in the present day are far from being extinct. The theoretical studies of the academician are thus daily brought to the test of practice, and he sees at every moment how his logical deductions work in the affairs of ordinary life.—Russell's Tour in Germany.

---

ANCIENT LECTURES ON JURISPRUDENCE.—In the fourteenth century, lectures upon the science of jurisprudence were given in the University of Bologna, in Itaty, by Giovanni Andria, a celebrated professor. His daughter, the accomplished Novella, was often prevailed upon by her father to take his chair; but in order that her consummate beauty might not distract the attention of the pupils, a veil was drawn before her, which, concealed her from the public gaze.

This interesting incident is thus related by Christina of Pisa:—'In regard to his amiable and beautiful daughter, whom he so affectionately loves, she is so thoroughly skilled both in letters and law, that when he is himself engaged she pronounces her lectures, with a light curtain drawn before her.'—Citta del Donne.

---

BARRISTERS AND ATTORNEYS.

A Bill, 'for the better management of the Poor in the several parishes and hamlets of the city of Norwich, and county of the same city,' was lately presented to the House of commons and has been printed. The principal objects appear to be, to get rid of the corporation guardians * * * * * The disfranchising principles of the bill however, do not stop there: among the persons who are not to be eligible to the office of Guardian are the mayor, recorder, steward, the justices of the peace, sheriffs, aldermen, the several officers of the corporation, and practising Barristers, attorneys, and solicitors!! Now the gentlemen of the legal profession generally live in good houses and are large payers to the rates; and what in the name of wonder has the whole body done that they may not be trusted to act in the guardianship of the poor?—Norfolk Chronicle, March 29.

---

BISHOP WARBURTON ON LAW AND LAWYERS.

To suppose that consummate knowledge of the laws by which civilized societies are governed, can give no one good quality to the mind, is making Ethics, of which public laws are so considerable a part, a very unprofitable study. The best division of the sciences is that old one of Plato, in Ethics, Physics, and Logic. The severe philosophers condemned a total application to the two latter, because they have no tendency to mend the heart, and recommended the first as our principal study, for its efficacy in this important service. And sure, if any human speculations have this effect, they must be those which have man for their object, as a reasonable, a social, and a civil being. And these are all included under ETHICS, whether you call the science morality, or law. With regard to the common law of England, we may justly apply to it what Tully says of the law of the twelve tables. 'Fremont omnes licet, dican quod sentio: bibliothecas mehercule omnium philosophorum unum mihi videtur pandectarum volumen et authoritatis pondere et utilitatis ubertat superare. But the best evidence of its moral efficacy, is the manners of its professors: and these, in every age, have been such as were the first improved, and the last corrupted.—Pope.

---

LAW AND POPULAR FEELING.

The law, in all vicissitudes of government, fluctuations of passions, or flights of enthusiasm, will preserve a steady undeviating course: it will not bend to the uncertain wishes, imaginations, and wanton tempers of men. To use the words of a great and worthy man, I mean Algernon Sidney, who, from his earliest infancy, sought a tranquil retirement under the shadow of the tree of liberty, with his tongue, his pen, and his sword; 'The law,' says he, 'no passion can disturb: it is void of desire and fear, lust and anger; it is mens sine affecen, written reason; retaining some measure of the divine perfection. It does not enjoin that which pleases a weak, frail man, but, without any regard to persons, commands that which is good, and punishes evil in all, whether rich or poor, high or low. It is deaf, inexorable, inflexible. Yes; on the one hand, it is inexorable to the cries and lamentations of the prisoners; on the other, it is deaf, deaf as an adder, to the clamors of the populace.'—From a speech by President John Adams.

---

ANCIENT NUMBER OF JUDGES.

Formerly the number of judges in each court appears to have been uncertain. From the special commission granted by Henry III. in the forty-second year of his reign, to the justices of the King's Bench, to hold that court at Westminster till he should otherwise determine, it would appear that the number of judges of that court was then three; namely, Roger de Thurkelby, Gilbert de Preston, and Nicholas Handlo. Dugdale's Orig. Jurid. c. 17.

The number of judges in the Common Pleas varied considerably. Previous to the reign of Edward II. the number was three. At the commencement of his reign the number was increased to six, on account of the increase of business. They sat in two separate places, but for how long this practice continued is uncertain. Three years after, 6 Edward II. there were seven; but no more than six in any subsequent year of that reign, nor until 7 Edward III; then the number of seven was resumed. In 11 and 12 Edward III. they were increased to eight, and by 14 Edward III. Trinity term, they amounted to nine. This appears by the fines levied before them. Afterwards, during the remainder of Edward III., Richard II. Henry IV. and Henry V. there were only five. Henry VI. increased them to seven. After that, the number was reduced, and there were seldom more than five, until 27 Henry VI; then they were increased to six, and that number remained till 29 Henry VI. In that year, and till 32, they were seven, and then eight. In 33, six; then, and until the latter end of the reign of Edward IV., seven. Then they were reduced to four; and so they remained till the end of Henry VII. It is to be observed, that some of these justices were, at the same time, chief barons of the Exchequer. Dug. Orig. Jur. c. 18.

In the Exchequer, under Henry III. three spiritual and three temporal barons sat with Ranulph de Glanvill, at that time justice of England. Dug. Orig. Jur. c. 19.

The power to increase the number of judges is new, as a legislative enactment. It, however, appears to have been exerted as a matter of prerogative by James I. during the greater part of his reign, for the benefit of a casting voice, in case of a difference of opinion, and that the circuits might at all times be supplied with judges of the superior courts. In subsequent reigns, upon the permanent indisposition of a judge, a fifth has been sometimes appointed. (Bl. Com. vol. 3, p. 41, note n.) Sir Thomas Raymond mentions the death of Sir Thomas Twisden, one of the justices of the King's Bench, in the first week in January, 1682, grandævus senectute. He continued judge till his death, but was dispensed with from sitting in court by reason of his age and infirmity. T. Ray. Rep. p. 475.

---

VULGAR ERRORS.

That leases are made for 999 years, because lease for 1000 years would create a freehold.

That deeds executed on a Sunday are void.

That in order to disinherit an heir-at-law it is necessary to give him a shilling by the will, for that otherwise he would be entitled to the whole property.

That a funeral passing over any place makes it a public highway.

That the body of a debtor may be taken in execution after his death.

That a man marrying a woman who is in debt, if he take her from the hands of the priest clothed only in her shift, will not be liable for her engagements.

That those who are born at sea belong to Stepney parish.

That second consins may not marry though first cousins may.

That a husband has the power of divorcing his wife by selling her in open market with a halter round her neck.

That a woman's marrying a man under the gallows will save him from execution.

That if a criminal has been hung and revives, he cannot afterwards be executed.

That the owners of asses are obliged to crop their ears, lest the length of them should frighten the horses.— Barrington's Observations on Ancient Statutes (1775) p. 474-5, note.—Retrospective Review, Vol. p. 265-3.

---

LIABILITY OF TRUSTEES.

The members of the profession are so frequently appointed trustees and executors in important matters, that it may be useful to notice the following case, which is liberal construction of their responsibility.

A bill was filed to make executors liable for a sum produced by the sale of £3000 Navy 5 per cents, which had been deposited with country bankers, who had failed.

It appeared the testator had kept large sums in the hands of the same bankers till the time of his death, and had employed one of the banker's clerks as his confidential agent. The executor employed the same person. In the execution of their trust they contracted for the purchase of an estate, and believing it would be immediately completed they sold stock, and deposited the money with the bankers. Delays occurred in the investigation of the title, and before it was perfected, the bankers failed.

It was urged that the stock was sold out before it was wanted, and that the executor's agent, the banker's clerk, must have known the insolvency of the house. However, the executors were wholly unacquainted with it. A reference had taken place to the master, and he had reported in favor of the executors. Exceptions were taken to his report.

The Master of the rolls said that nothing would be more injurious to the interests of society than the allowance of these exceptions. The notice to the agent must be in the character of agent, in order to render the principal liable. The trustees having received satisfactory answers to most of the inquiries, and in order that no time might be lost, sold the stock in August. From circumstances, the conveyance was not completed till February, and before that time the bankers had failed. It would prevent persons from becoming trustees were he to allow the exceptions.

He therefore overruled them. 1 Tamlyn, 172.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 9, 1831.

A practical Treatise on the Law of Partnership, with an Appendix of Precedents. By Neil Gow, Esq. of Lincoln Inn, Barrister at Law. The 3d Edit. With considerable Alterations and Additions. London, 1830.

(Concluded.)

In like manner, a bill of exchange drawn upon a firm, but accepted by one in the name of the other partner, is binding upon the firm, because the mere acceptance, as indicating an intention to be bound by the terms of the request in the bill, would be sufficient to give the bill validity, and the effect of that acceptance cannot therefore be controlled by the addition of the name of an individual partner.* And although the indorsement of one partner, which cannot be treated as the indorsement of the firm, will not render the firm liable notwithstanding the money thereby raised be applied to partnership purposes †; yet it is clear that a firm, consisting of several, may carry on business in the name of an individual partner, and then the whole firm will be bound by acts done by him as representing the firm.‡ Thus, where one partner of a firm in England proceeded to a foreign country for the purpose of establishing a branch concern, to be carried on in his individual name, with strict instructions that the names of the firm should appear as little as possible on paper, and that no greater than a stated sum should at any time be risked on partnership speculations; he, however, against those instructions, entered into risks greatly exceeding that sum, and indorsed bills in the course of such dealings in his own name, the firm in England subsequently sanctioning them, and the transaction being for the benefit of the partnership; it was determined that such indorsements were to be deemed the indorsements of the firm, in the name used by them for the purposes of the foreign business, and that they were liable upon those bills.* And it is indisputable, that in every case in which a firm becomes, through the instrumentality of a single member, a party to a negotiable security, and the transaction which occasioned the giving the security was bona fide, and fairly referable to the partnership concerns, the act of the single partner, in pledging the joint credit, will have a conclusive binding operation upon all the partners collectively. And cases exist in which one partner may enter into a joint engagement in a transaction not relating to the partnership, and it will be binding upon the firm if it have received either their express or implied sanction. In many cases of partnership it is frequently necessary for its salvation, that the private demand of one partner should be satisfied at the moment, as the ruin of the one might affect the other partners; and therefore the firm, to avert such a possible evil, would rather allow the individual partner to liberate himself by dealing with it than expose themselves to the consequences which might ensue from their non-acquiescence.† In these cases the joint liability depends upon the degree of evidence adduced to prove the authority, the mere relation of partners not of itself being sufficient to confer upon each the power of binding the firm in separate transactions.‡ The nature of the entries in the books, or the appropriation of the money to the partnership or to a separate account, or the privity and silence of the firm, would be evidence of an authority delegated to the single partner.§ Previous authority is not the only criterion by which to determine the joint liability of the partners under such circumstances; subsequent approbation being for this purpose of equal efficacy: for a strong case of subsequent approbation by all the partners raises an inference of their previous positive authority having been given to the particular partner to sign the partnership name to a bill, or to negotiate it, and will subject the partners to liability in a transaction where they would not have been chargeable without such subsequent assent.‖ In instances of this description, the act of the partner must be ascribed rather to his character of agent than of partner: and, the agency being established, of course the partnership would be as firmly bound by his separate acts, as they would have been had they expressly and personally concurred in them. But where no such agency exists, and a joint security is pledged in a transaction unconnected with the partnership, if it be manifest to the person advancing money upon it that it is sent into circulation upon the separate account of the individual partner, and, consequently, that it is against good faith that he should in such a case pledge the firm, it must be shown that he had authority to bind them; for the law does not imply an authority in individual partners over the joint fund, except in matters which affect the partnership concerns.* In the hands of a person aware of, and collusively partaking in the fraud committed upon the partnership by the individual partner pledging the firm in a separate transaction, the joint security would not be available. In such a case it would be the same as if the debtor had pledged the fund of a stranger for his own debt, on his own assertion that he had authority to do so: if he had such authority the pledge would be good, but the creditor would take it at the peril of proving that authority, if it were afterwards denied. The power possessed by one partner of binding his co-partners in joint transactions, without their knowledge or consent, bears in many instances sufficiently hard upon them; but it would be carrying their liability for each other's acts to most unjust extent, if it were suffered that, in a separate transaction, one partner could pledge the credit of the firm. This subject has frequently fallen under judicial consideration, and the doctrine stated has uniformly received the sanction and support of the different judges before whom it has been questioned. It is indeed indisputably settled, that if a creditor of one of the partners collude with him to take payment or security for his individual debt out of the partnership funds, knowing at the time that it is without the consent of the other partner, it is fraudulent and void.† Therefore, if a man, who has dealings with one partner only, draws a bill of exchange upon the partnership on account of those dealings, he is guilty of a fraud; and in his hands, the acceptance made by the partner on the behalf of the firm would be void.‡ So, where a bill was drawn by one partner, in the joint name, to the order of his separate creditor, it was held that the latter could not recover in an action upon the bill against the firm, notwithstanding that he had not notice of the non-con-

*Mason v. Rumsey, 1 Campb. 384. Wells v. Masterman. supra. In the case of Thomas v. Clarke, 2 Stark. N. P. C. 451., Lord C. J. Abbott held, that a partner who executed a charterparty of affreightment, and in the commencement of it professed to contract for himself and his co-partner, thereby bound the latter, although all the stipulations and obligations in remaining part of the instrument were made in the name of the said freighter.

†Ex parte Emly, 1 Rose 61. Emly v. Lye, 15 East 7.

‡ Ex parte Bolitho. Buck, 100.

* South Carolina Bank v. Case, 8 B. & C. 427, S. C. 2 Man. & Ryl. 459.

† Per Lord Eldon, Ex parte Bonbonus, 8 Vesey, 580.

‡ Ex parte Peele, 6 Vesey, 600. 'If a man gives a partnership engagement, in the partnership name, with regard to a transaction not in its nature a partnership transaction, he who seeks the benefit of that engagement must be able to say, that though in its nature not a partnership transaction, yet there was some authority beyond the mere circumstance of partnership, to enter into that contract, so as to bind the partnership. Per Lord Eldon, Id. Ibid.

§ Ex parte Bonbonus, supra.

‖ Id. Ibid.

‡ Ex parte Agace, 2 Cox's Ca. 312. In transactions unconected with the joint trade, no liability will be entailed upon a dormant partner, where his responsibility was not originally regarded, and the fact of his being a partner was unknown at the time the claim arose. Therefore, where one partner accepted a bill in the name of his firm, but not in a partnership transaction, it was held that an indorsee could not maintain an action on such acceptance against a dormant partner whose name did not appear, and who was not known to be a partner, nor the bill taken on his credit. Lloyd v. Ashby, 2 Carr. & Pa. N. P. C. 138.

* Per Lord Ellenborough, Swan v. Steel, 7 East 210. S. C. 3 Smith, 109.

† Wells v. Masterman, 2 Esp. N. P. C, 731. In Ex-parte Goulding, in the matter of O'Neil and Martin bankrupts, before the Vice Chancellor, sittings after Trinity term, 1826, a question arose whether the joint estate of the bankrupts was liable for a bill accepted by one of them, in the name of the firm, but for his own individual debt, and without the knowledge of his co-partner. The Vice Chancellor, on account of the importance of the question, took time to consider it; and afterwards said, 'I am of opinion, that where one partner gives an acceptance in the name of the firm in satisfaction of his own private debt, and without the knowledge of his co-partner, such an acceptance cannot bind the joint estate.' MSS. S. C. 2 Glyn & James, 118.

currence of the co-partner, and was not apprized that the consideration would be disputed.'*

The power to bind the firm by simple contract, by a guarantee, by deed, by a release, by a receipt, in legal proceedings, by a submission to arbitration, and in bankruptcy, are then severally and ably considered.

Mr Gow next mentions the legal and equitable remedies between partners. It has been thought that a partner cannot file a bill against another for an account, without also praying a dissolution. Per Forman v. Homfray, 2 Ves. & Bea. 329.; and Waters v. Taylor, 15 Ves. 10. Mr Gow, however, p. 95., says, that this doctrine has been denied, and cites a contrary decision of Sir John Leach, V. C. in Harrison v. Armitage, 4 Madd. 143.; and we confess we have always thought the principle a very strange one, as in many cases, it would leave the parties entirely without remedy; and in addition to the case mentioned by Mr Gow, we may also refer to Glassington v. Thwaites. 1 Sim. & Stu. 124. In chapter iii. the legal and equitable remdies for partners against strangers are amply considered, and all the late decisions stated: and in chapter iv. the legal and equitable remedies against partners are discussed. We must find room for a short extract from this chapter.

'Actions of tort may likewise, in some cases, be effectually sustained against partners. Their responsibility in actions of this description may be exemplified by the familiar instances of action brought against them for driving against carriages or running down ships. In those cases, if the carriage or ship occasioning the injury be the joint property of partners it is immaterial whether it be under the direction or guidance of one of the partners or of their servant, because the maxim of law is qui facit per alium facit per se; and partners, like individuals, are responsible for the negligence of their servants.† And where it appeared that A and B were partners in the business of public carriers, and that by agreement between them A provided horses and drivers for certain stages, and B for the remainder; it was holden, that, notwithstanding this division of the concern between them, they were responsible for the misconduct and negligence of their drivers and servants throughout the whole distance: and that it was not any defence to B that the servant, through whose negligence an injury had been committed, had been hired and was paid by A alone.* So, in an action of trover, it is not necessary that there should be a joint conversion in fact, in order to implicate all the partners; for such a conversion may arise by construction of law. Thus, an assent by some of the partners to a conversion by the others will make them wrong-doers equally with the rest, provided the conversion was for their use and benefit, and that they were in a situation to have originally commanded the conversion: in such a case, the rule of omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato æquiparatur applies.† And if co-partners are engaged in smuggling, which is a species of tort, on an information filed for the penalty, they are jointly as well as separately liable.‡ Indeed, in the instances of libels, an anomalous case, a bookseller or the proprietor of a newspaper is answerable for the acts of his agent or co-partner, not only civilly but criminally.§ But, except in these cases, partners are not generally responsible for the wrongs of each other. If they all join in one trespass or tort, of course they may all be sued and compelled to make compensation for the injury they have committed; but an action for such a misfeasance would arise from their personal misconduct, and not from the relation of partnership subsisting between them. With regard to matters quite unconnected with the partnership trade or business, there cannot be a doubt but that a joint responsibility would not be incurred for a tort committed by an individual partner. And, in general, acts done in the course of the partnership trade or business, in violation of the law will only implicate those who are guilty of them. If one of two bankers in partnership should commit usury in discounting bills, or if one of two surgeons in partnership should wantonly ill-treat a patient, the innocent copartners would not be liable to an action for penalties or damages. But if an attorney be in partnership with another who has not taken out his certificate, and their joint names are put on their papers in causes in their office, it has been ruled that either of them is liable to the penalties imposed ‖ for practising as an attorney without obtaining a certificate; though it appear that, by a private arrangement, the party sued was to derive no benefit from the suit, in respect of prosecuting which the qui tam action for the penalty is brought. ¶ The consequence is, and it has accordingly been determined, that two attorneys or proctors cannot be sued together, as for one offence, for practising without certificate.

In the fifth and last chapter the legal and equitable principles relating to the dissolution of partnerships are given, and the subject is divided into four sections. 1. The cause of the dissolution of a partnership. 2. The general consequences of a dissolution. 3. The particular consequences of a dissolution by bankruptcy: And, 4. The consequences of a dissolution by death. We shall give a short portion of the last section, with which we must conclude our extracts.

'It seems to be doubtful whether the good will of a commercial trade, carried on in partnership survives, or forms a portion of the partnership stock. Lord Rosslyn, on the one hand, has determined* that in such a case the good will of a trade carried on without articles survives, and is not to be considered partnership stock to which the representatives of a deceased partner have any right. On the other hand, Lord Eldon has expressed his doubts of the propriety of that determination, considering it difficult to draw any solid distinction between the lease of the partnership premises, which is clearly a part of the joint stock, and the good will, which consists in the habit of the trade being conducted on those premises. † But whatever doubts may, in this respect, exist as to the good will of a mercantile trade, a very intelligible distinction has been suggested between a commercial and a professional association. Sir John Leach has intimated, that where a partnership is formed between professional persons, surgeons for instance, and one dies, it would be difficult to maintain that the other is obliged to give up his business, and sell the connexion for the joint benefit of himself and the estate of his deceased partner. His Honor added, that when such partnerships determine, unless there be stipulation to the contrary, each must be at liberty to continue his own exertions; and where the determination is occasioned by the death of one, the right of the survivor cannot be affected.' ‡

We must now take leave of this very excellent work, which we can safely recommend as the best treatise on the important subject of which it treats.—Legal Obs.

---

* Green v. Deakin, 2 Stark. N. P. C. 347. In Henderson v. Wild, 2 Campb. 561., Lord Ellenborough held that if two persons are in partnership, and a third individual owes them a sum of money on the partnership account, a receipt for this given by one partner upon setting off a private debt due from himself to that third person will be a bar to an action by the partners for the debt due to the partnership. See Skaif v. Jackson, 3 B. & C. 421.

† Mitchell v. Tarbutt, 5 T. R. 649. Where damages are sought to be recovered against partners for an injury sustained through the negligent conduct of their servant, the proper remedy is an action on the case. Morley v. Gaisford, 2 H. Bl. 442. Hugget v. Montgomery, 2 N. R. 446.; and, if the cause of the mischief be negligence, such an action will lie against all the partners, although one of them be personally present and acting in that which occasions it. But where the injury is inflicted by the wilful act of one of the partners, tresspass is the proper form of action against him; and if under the circumstances any action will be against the other partners, case only can be sustained. See Leame v. Bray, 3 East, 593. Ogle v. Barnes, 8 T. R. 188. Rogers v. Imbelton, 2. N. R. 17. Moreton v. Harden, 4 B. & C. 223.

* Weyland v. Elkins, Holt's N. P. C. 227. S. C. 1 Stark. N P. C. 272.

† 4 Instit. 317, Com. Dig. Tit. Trespass, C. 1. And see Nicoll v. Glennie, 1 Mau. & Selw. 588.

‡ Attorney-General v. Burges, Bund. 223. See also Rex. v Manning, Com. Rep. 616.

§ Rex. v. Almon, 5 Burr. 2686 Rex. v. Pearce. Peak's N. P.C. 75. Rex. v. Topham, 4. T. R, 126. Per Littledale J., Rex v. Marsh. 2 Barn. & Cres. 723.

‖ See 37 G. 3. c. 90. s. 26.

¶ Edmonson v. Davis, 4 Esp. N. P. C. 14.

 Barnard v. Gostling, 1 New Rep. 245. S. C. 2 East, 569.

* Hammond v. Douglas, 5 Ves. 539.

† Crawsha v. Collins, 15 Ves. 227. If partners become bankrupts, the good will of their trade passes to their assignees, who may sell it for the benefit of the creditors. Such a sale, however, will not operate to prevent the partners setting up the same trade again, and in the same place. Crutwell v. Lye, 17 Ves. 335. S. C. 1 Rose, 123.

‡ Farr v. Pearce, 3. Madd . 74.

---

THE FIRST LAW BOOK.

MACKLIN at first designed his son for the law, and for this purpose entered him in the Temple, where he procured him chambers, a library, &c. rather above what he could afford, considering the casuality of his income. 'And what book, sir,' said the veteran, in telling this circumstance, 'do you think I made him begin with? Why, sir, I'll tell you,—the Bible—the Holy Bible.' 'The Bible, Mr Macklin, for a lawyer!' 'Yes, sir, the properest and most scientific book for an honest lawyer, as there you will find the foundation of all law, as well as all morality.'

Memoirs of Charles Macklin, 1804, p. 308.

---

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Reports of cases adjudged in the courts of Common Pleas, Quarter Sessions, Oyer and Terminer, and Orphans Court of the First Judicial District of Pennsylvania, with notes and references, by John W. Ashmead. Vol. I.

A Digest of the Law of Pennsylvania, from the year 1710, to the 7th of April, 1830, by John W. Purden.

Reports of cases adjudged in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, by Wm. Rawle, Jr. Charles B. Penrore and Frederick Watts, Counsellors at Law, Vol. 1st.

VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS, recently received from Europe, and for sale by GRAY & BOWEN, No 141 Washington street.

Browne's Self Interpreting Bible, with notes, references, illustrations, reflections, and a memoir of the author; in one large quarto volume.

The Mirror of Parliament, edited by John Barrow Esq. This work contains a complete account of the doings and debates in the British Parliament, during the last December session ; in eight parts, folio.

Select Views on the River Clyde, engraved by Joseph Swan, with historical and descriptive illustrations; in one quarto volume, with fortytwo splendid engravings.

Select Views of the Lakes of Scotland, from original paintings ; in two parts.

Hinton's History and Topography of the United States. This work will be completed in thirty numbers, quarto, with ninety engravings; eight numbers are already received.

History of the sufferings of the Church of Scotland, from the restoration to the revolution ; by Rev. Robert Wodrow; 4 vols. 8vo.

History and Antiquities of the Doric Race ; by C. O. Müller ; 2 vols. 8vo.

History of Scotland, from the Union ; by John Struthers ; 2 vols. 8vo.

A Selection from the Papers of the Earls of Marchmont ; illustrative of events from 1685 to 1750 ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, complete in two vols. 8vo.

A System of Geography, popular and scientific ; illustrated by a complete series of maps and other engravings; by James Bell ; 3 vols. 8vo.

McUre's History of Glasgow, with plates and illustrations ; 1 vol.

History of Modern Greece ; by James Emerson ; 2 vols. 8vo.

Rollins' Ancient History, with Life, notes and numerous maps and plates ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Thompson's Narrative of an official visit to Guatamala ; 1 vol.

Six Years' residence in the United States of America ; by Peter Neilson ; 1 vol.

Lardner's Cyclopedia ; complete set as far as published ; 16 vols.

Lardner's Cabinet Library, annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 1831.

Murphy's Treatise on the art of Weaving; with fifteen engravings ; 1 vol.

Mackenzie on the Diseases of the Eye ; 1 vol.

Spix's Travels in Brazil, with engravings ; 2 vols. 8vo.

BYRON'S WORKS—a new and beautiful edition, with a portrait, and other engravings ; in 4 vols. 16mo.

Evan's Sketch of the Denominations of the Christian World ; 1 vol.

Addison's Works ; 4 vols. ; a new edition.

Bowring's Poetry of the Magyars ; 1 vol.

Constable's Miscellany ; vols. 60 to 65 inc.

Family Library.—Lives of British Painters—Lives of Physicians—Life of Bruce—Court and Camp of Buonaparte—Demonology and Witchcraft.

Foreign Tales and Traditions ; 2 vols.

The Casquet, or Literary Gem ; edited by Alexander Whitelaw ; 2 vols.

do do do (2d series) 2 vols.

The Atheneum, an original Literary Miscellany; 1vol.

The Midsummer Medley for 1830 ; by the author of Brambletye House.

Life on board a Man of War ; 1 vol.

Robertson's Parent's Guide to Baptism ; 1 vol.

Gospel Truth accurately stated and illustrated ; by Rev. John Brown ; 1 vol.

Outline of the Scripture Evidence for the Trinity ; 1 vol.

The New Testament, translated by Doddridge, Campbell and Macknight ; 1 vol. 12mo.

An Essay on Chemical Analysis; by M. Thenard ; translated by J. G. Children ; 1 vol.

Aids to Reflection ; by S. T. Coleridge ; 1 vol.

Fabliaux, or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries.

A Help to Professing Christians ; by Rev. John Barr ; 1 vol.

The Wine Drinker's Manual ; 1 vol.

The Shamrock, a collection of Irish Songs.

The National Minstrel ; a choice selection of popular songs.

Parochial Psalmody ; by J. P. Clarke.

Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History.

Pinnock's Modern Geography and History.

The Caterer ; being a selection of pieces in prose and verse ; 1 vol.

Johnson's Dictionary, complete in one imperial 8vo.

Morewood's Essay on Inebriating Liquors.

Dibdin's Library Companion ; 1 vol.

Biblia Hebraica.

Novum Testamentum Græce.

Aristophanes Comædiæ.

Sophocles Tragædiæ.

Pindari Carmina.

Æschyli Tragædiæ. May 21

---

THIS DAY published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

Art I. The Laws of Population and Wages.

1. Two Lectures on Population, delivered before the University of Oxford in Easter Term, 1828. By Nassau William Senior, late Fellow of Magdalen College, A. M. Professor of Political Economy. To which is added a Correspondence between the Author and the Rev T. R Malthus.

II. Poetry and Romance of the Italians.

1. Della Letteratura Italiana, Di Camillo Ugoni.

2. Storia della Letteratura Italiana. Del cavaliere Giuseppe Maffei.

3. Storia della Letteratura Italiana nel secolo XVIII di Antonio Lombardi.

III. Origin and Progress of the Useful Arts.

The Frugal Housewife. By the Author of Hobomok.

IV. Pennsylvania Biography.

Memoirs of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Part II.

V. Defence of Mechanical Philosophy.

Signs of the Times.—Article VII. in the Ninety-eighth Number of the Edinburgh Review, for June, 1829.

VI. The Cherokee Case.

1. Opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on an Application made by the Cherokee Indians for a Writ of Injunction against the State of Georgia, delivered by Mr Chief Justice Marshall, at the January Term held at Washington, 1831.

VII. The Prospect of Reform in Europe.

L'Avenir. Par M. J. L. Sismondi. Extrait de la Revue Encyclopedique.

VIII. Popular Sports and Festivals.

The Sports and Pastimes of the people of England. By Joseph Strutt. A New Edition, with a Copious Index. By William Hone.

IX. Harvard University

Letter to Governor Lincoln in relation to Harvard University. By F. C. Gray. Second Edition, with an Appendix.

X. Life and Character of Henry Brougham.

1. Speech of Henry Brougham, M. P. on the Present state of the Law.

2. Practical Observations on Popular Education. By H. Brougham, Esq. M. P. F. R. S.

3. Publications of the society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.

XI. North Eastern and Northern Boundary.

1. Decision of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, on the Questions submitted to him by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, for determining the Boundary Line between the United States and the British Provinces. July 2.

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars.

April 9.

---

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

---

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141; Washington Sreet, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLV.

CONTENTS.

I. Religion in France. Vues sur le Protestantism en France. Par J. L. S. Vincent, l'un des Pasteurs de l'Eglise Reformee de Nismes.

II. May's Letters to Hawes. Letters to the Rev. Joel Hawes, D. D. in Review to his 'Tribute to the memory of the Pilgrims.' By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the first Church in Brooklyn, Connecticut.

III. Life and Writings of Origen. Origenis Opera Omnia, quæ Græce vel Latine tantum extant, et ejus Nomine circumferuntur. Opera et studio Caroli Delarue.

IV. On the morality of our Political situation.

V. German Rationalism. The Biblical Repository, January, 1831. Conducted by Edward Robinson, Professor Extraordinary in the Theological Seminary at Andover.

VI. Harmonies of the Gospels. A Harmony of the Gospels, on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D.

VII. Mr Whitman and his Reviewers.

1. Review of Mr Whitman's Letters to Professor Stuart on Religious Liberty. [From 'The Spirit of the Pilgrims.'] With an Appendix not before published.

2. A Reply to the Review of Whitman's Letters to Professor Stuart in 'The Spirit of Pilgrims' for March 1834. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Translation of the Scriptures at Serampore.

IX. Books on Practical Religion. On the Formation of the Christian Character. Addressed to those who are seeking to lead a religious Life. By Henry Ware, Jr. Professor of Pulpit Eloquence, and the Pastoral Care in Harvard University. July 2.

---

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

---

SPLENDID BIBLE. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

---

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

---

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

---

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR,

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 16, 1831. NO. LI.

MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

PRESUMPTION OF SURVIVORSHIP.

Concluded.

We now pass to the decisions of our tribunals at home, whom we shall find treating this subject in a much less fanciful manner. The disquisitions of the ingenious Fearne have given vast celebrity to the Stanwix case, in itself both interesting and affecting. The details of the misfortune, would however, be out of place here. It is sufficient to mention, that General Stanwix and his daughter were cast away in their passage from Ireland to England, and the question of survivorship was argued by counsel for the heirs of either party before the Court of Chancery, in the year 1772. For the succession being in the daughter's representative, her maternal uncle; it was contended, that the General was old and feeble, while the daughter, though of a weaker sex, was of a hale constitution, and in the prime of life, and would therefore probably struggle much longer against drowning. On behalf of the father's representative, his nephew, it was urged, that the ship being lost in tempestous weather, the daughter who was most likely in the cabin, the usual place for ladies on such occasions, and would therefore sooner perish from the waters rushing in, than the general, who, as a man of courage, and used to exposure to the elements, was probably on deck, and might have been sustained some time on some floating portion of the wreck.

A separate claim was brought forward by the representative of a second wife of General Stanwix, who also perished with him. The court finding the arguments on all sides equally solid and ingenious, waived giving any decision, and advised a compromise, to which the several claimants afterwards agreed.

This intricate and subtle question naturally engaged the attention of that most acute of lawyers, Fearne. He composed arguments on both sides, as far as the father and daughter were concerned, of a nature entirely different from those employed on hearing of the cause, quite neglecting the facts and physical probabilities, and discussing the merits of the rival claims, solely as an abstract proposition. He divides the subject into three heads; the priority of death on the one, or on the other side, or the simultaneous decease of both. With a great deal of metaphysical subtlety, he demonstrates the extreme improbability of the last event, ridiculing the dogma, that as the two former presumptions are balanced, and negative each other, the third of necessity survives. His main argument, on the daughter's side, is grounded on the old rule of civil law, that the child shall be presumed to have survived the parent; and he rebuts the objection, that this is a general principle, drawn from cases to whose class this one cannot be referred, by analysing its particular nature. On the father's side, he proffers the more simple reason, that the probability of survival being equal as between the parties, to the parent's chance ought to be added the fact, that he was possessed and died possessed. To his advantage should also be placed the improbable, but possible circumstances of contemporaneous dissolution. The reader will find this dissertation at length in Mr Fearne's posthumous works. It will well repay perusal, from its elegant and amusing form, but it must be regarded rather as sportive than serious, and is at best, perhaps, but a fruitless waste of profuse ingenuity. It was however, turned to some account in the later case of Mason v. Mason, which deserves some notice.

Bryant Mason and his son Francis perished together on a voyage to India. The father had previously made a will bequeathing to each of his children male and female, in all nine, 5000*l.* and the residue of his estate to be divided equally among his sons with the exception of Francis. The question of survivorship arose, because on the presumption that the father first died, the sisters as well as brothers were entitled to equal shares of the 5000*l.* bequeathed to Francis, but if the son was first drowned, his legacy lapsed and fell into the general residue to be divided among the sons only. The cause was brought before Sir William Grant in 1816. The arguments in favor of the daughters' claim were merely those of Fearne in the previous case, and more especially that founded on the rule of civil law. Whetherall, who appeared for them, quoted also the Code Napoleon, Art. 722. For the other side Pigott, Shadwell, Romilly, and Cooke, relied chiefly on the circumstances, that at best there was but a presumption of survivorship in the legatee, and that those who claimed under him ought to prove that he survived. The master of rolls granted an issue to try the question, but we have been unable to find the result. Probably this also was compromised.

It is surely to be regretted that our courts of justice have not hitherto established any settled rules for deciding on these intricate subjects. At the same time it cannot but be perceived that no rules could be framed so perfect as not sometimes to appear absurd, and even unjust. Amid a choice of difficulties it might perhaps do least harm to appoint, that in the absence of proof of survivorship for either party, he who was possessed at the time, shall always be deemed to have survived, so that the property in dispute shall pass to his heirs in all cases. A more uncertain system of practice may certainly be advantageous to lawyers, but it inflicts vexatious doubts on the parties interested, and has been a source of unsuccessful speculation to medical jurists down to the present hour, from the golden time when the Caliph and Zobeide sat by the couch of Abou Hassan and his wife, and offered a hundred sequins to any who would inform them which died first.

We have hitherto neglected to notice the not unfrequent occurrence, where mother and infant expire together during parturition. The fact is, that on this topic nothing satisfactory can be found in the best medical writers. Dr Beck gives the presumption of survivorship in favor of the mother, observing that the child's life may be early endangered by a slow or difficult delivery, by the hæmorrhage consequent on a detachment of the placenta, by a parturition complicated with convulsions, or if very large or prematurely born. On the other hand he admits many cases in which the child may outlive the mother, as if she labor under acute disease, or be in a state of extreme weakness. In short, the probability seems to lean either way according to the comparative strength or weakness manifested by the parent, supposing no accidents to intervene.

Intimately connected with this subject is the inquiry so frequently instituted in our courts both civil and criminal, where the object is to ascertain whether life was present at the moment of birth in a new-born infant, who either sank immediately, or is discovered dead under circumstances leading to suspicion of murder. To constitute a tenant by the courtesy there must, as our readers well know, be issue born alive to the husband by the heiress. It has sometimes happened that the proofs of this fact have been most equivocal, and suits in consequence have been maintained between the alleged tenant and the heir at law. The case of Fish and Palmer tried in the Exchequer, in 1806, is a well known illustration of this fact. It then appeared that Mr Fish's wife had been delivered of an infant supposed to be still born; that she had never bore him other children, and in consequence on her death he resigned her property to the right heir, but was afterwards induced to attempt this action on the presumption that the child was born alive. The evidence in support of this was a declaration of Dr Lyon, then deceased, who had announced an hour before the birth that the child was alive; he had also directed a warm bath to be prepared, and gave the child when born to be immersed. It did not cry or move, or shew any symptoms of life; except that in the water there twice appeared a twiching and tremulous motion of the lips. Some of the physicians examined, gave their opinion that this muscular motion of the lips could not have taken place, had the vital principle been quite extinct. Dr Denman maintained the contrary. He drew a distinction between uterine and extra-uterine life, and attributed to the remains of the former these appearances. The jury found that the child was born alive, but the discoveries of modern science place almost beyond a doubt, that such symptoms of pretended life may be produced by the relaxation of a contracted muscle, or the stimulus of atmospheric air on a body newly exposed to it. We shall proceed then briefly to enumerate those surer tests by which it may be ascertained that life has been present in an infant after birth, which are rendered so painfully important by those trials for child-murder of which every county in England, presents annual instances, when woman are placed at the bar charged with the destruction of their illegitimate offspring; their lives frequently depending on the nature of a surgeon's evidence, after due examination of the body.

To prove that a child was born alive, it is necessary to shew that it has exercised the sanguineous and respiratory functions. Circulation does indeed exist with uterine life, but of a character easily distinguishable from that which follow birth: respiration commences only at parturition. In cases of infanticide, therefore, investigation must be mainly directed to these two points. And the first, of the appearance of the blood. According to the experience of scientific observers, during fœtal life, the blood of the arteries and of the veins, exhibits no difference of color. After birth, as is well known, a great dissimilarity exists, provided circulation has taken place. This is a delicate, but striking test. Again, the presence of much blood in the pulmonary vessels, which is only possible when respiration has taken place,—and on the other hand, its absence from the ductus venosus, a vessel running from the umbilical vein, from ductus arteriosus, which joins the pulmonary artery and the aorta, and from the foramen ovale, which unites the two auricles of the heart, are all proofs of extra-uterine life. Ecchymosis, as our readers will remember, can only take place in the living subject, and is therefore a valuable test, where the marks of blows and injuries are observable on the body. These are the appearances dependent on the blood, which deserve especial notice.

The symptoms indicative of respiration are too well known to need much comment. One word, however, we would say on the mode in which some judges are wont to deal with them. So much compassion is felt on trials of unhappy mothers for infanticide, that the great object pursued seems generally to shake as much as possible the evidence of the medical witness, who, on examination of the body, has formed conclusions that it was alive at birth. It is presumed that a learned Judge was under the influence of this feeling, when he not long ago declared in the hearing of the writer to a surgeon, who stated his conviction, 'that an infant was born alive, from the floating of the lungs in water;' that such an opinion had been exploded and ridiculed for the last twenty years. This (usually termed) hydrostatic test is undoubtedly deceptive now and then, but there is no fact more certain, or more clearly proved by experiment than this, that the lungs will generally float when respiration has taken place, and generally sink when it has not. The conclusion of this unlucky practitioner was not then wholly absurd, but the merciful dispositions of a court of justice, are always well pleased to believe it so—to dismiss the evidence as unimportant, and to find the wretched mother guilty of the minor offence of concealment only. There seems, however, great reason to believe, that the lungs of a still-born child might be inflated, so as to float in water, by artificial means, such as blowing into the mouth; which might be done maliciously, with the design of injuring an innocent parent, or by maternal tenderness endeavoring to resuscitate a lifeless child. It has been proposed to distinguish between the natural and artificial inflation by various means, and more particularly, by weighing the lungs, and thus to bring the hydrostatic test to perfection, but the experiments on this subject do not seem to us so satisfactory as to constitute fit evidence for legal tribunals, or fit matter for prolonging this article.—Law Mag.

---

THE LATE LORD ELLENBOROUGH,

who was a ripe and a good scholar, was peculiarly happy in his Latin quotations, an instance of which occurred one day in the court of King's Bench. It is well known to the senior members of the profession that Erskine was a great favorite with Lord Kenyon, who, though a rigid moralist himself, and accustomed to treat with severity the slightest deviations from rectitude in others, always looked upon Erskine's failings (for he, too, had some of the leaven of human nature in his composition,) with great tenderness and forbearance, apologizing for them whenever they were mentioned, by observing, in his rapid manner, 'Spots in the sun! spots in the sun!' But that he had not the same kindly feeling towards Law is also well known. One day Erskine and Law were warmly opposed to each other in discussing some matter before the judges of the court of King's Bench, when Lord Kenyon appearing to lean in favor of Erskine, and the puisne judges seeming disposed to side with their chief, Erskine, in anticipation of victory, became more glowing and animated than usual, which so irritated Law, who thought that the justice of the case was with him, that, at the conclusion of his speech, turning towards his opponent, he in ignantly poured forth, in his deep and manly tone, the following quotation from the 12th Æneid of Virgil:

* * * * non me tua fervida terrent
Dicta, ferox, Dii me terrent et Jupiter hostis.

Those who remember Erskine in his best days will feel that the epithet 'fervida' was as characteristic of glowing eloquence, as 'ferox' was foreign to his kind and amiable disposition, and that whilst 'Dii' was a suitable appellation of the puisne judges (who may be considered as a sort of dii minores, or terrestrial), 'Jupiter hostis' was powerfully descriptive of the omnipotence of their chief, and of his dislike of Law; in fact, a quotation so apt in all its points (except the one alluded to) to the occasion and the persons, very rarely occurs.

---

From the Legal Observer.

WESTMINSTER HALL AND LORD CHANCELLOR BROUGHAM.

LETTERS OF A HEIDELBURG STUDENT ON THE JURIDICAL INSTITUTIONS OF GREAT BRITAIN.

My Dearest Friend—I arrived in the Thames last week and should have written sooner to you, but that I have since that time been constantly engaged in seeing the most striking wonders of the great city in which I have now the good fortune to reside. According to my promise, I propose to give you from time to time some account of the Juridical Institutions of this country and of the learned men who now preside over them. We have often attempted together to gain some precise intelligence on those subjects; but although there is no want of information on the earlier history of the English laws, thanks to German* industry, you will remember that our information as to the present state of her institutions remained extremely scanty and deficient. I now hope to be able, my dearest Charles, to supply you with abundant information on the subject. Thanks to my letters, I have already made the acquaintance of several English advocates and other eminent persons connected with the law, and I am promised by them not only ample instruction on this important subject, but a personal introduction to most of the great men who now preside over the courts and all other persons from whom I can obtain the proper information.

Your heart will rejoice when I tell you that I have met the kindest reception from those gentlemen to whom I carried introductions; and they all declare the utmost willingness to serve me and to enable me to prosecute my inquiries with vigor. You shall be my judge whether I am successful in them, for I shall detail them, all to you. Instead of filling my letters with useless or insignificant descriptions, I shall devote them to this interesting subject; and I have the satisfaction of knowing that this will be as agreeable to you to read, as it will delightful for me to write.

I will forthwith tell you then, my dearest friend, my first day's adventures in the courts of law in London. Accompanied by a friend who undertook to be my guide, I soon approached the great Hall of Justice which is called Westminster Hall. It is admirably situated for the purpose: being close to both Houses of Parliament, and the venerable Abbey of the same name. I entered Westminster Hall with a certain feeling of awe which was greatly heightened as I contemplated its majestic proportions. When the courts are sitting the scene which it presents is extremely lively and interesting. It is crowded with persons whose hasty steps and anxious faces show at once that they are not there as mere spectators. In another part of the Hall you will see some leading advocate slowly pacing its whole length, his client following his steps and detailing the merits and the demerits of his cause.—A little further on may be observed a group of persons disputing some matter with the greatest earnestness; on approaching nearer to them you will find that they are the parties in a cause which has just been tried and are now fighting the battle over again. The smiling countenance and joyful demeanor of those who have succeeded are here not attempted to be disguised, for the victory is too recent not to be proclaimed. Distress is also sometimes painted on the countenance of those you meet; frequently heightened by the gloom occasioned by a positive defeat. Westminster Hall, is, indeed, a highly interesting scene, on more accounts than one. I will venture to say from what I have seen, that man appears more as he is within its walls than in any other place in London. The stake which is here hazarded is so important that the chance of losing it arouses all the feelings. The scene is so agitating that they cannot be concealed, and they frequently burst forth in angry execration or tumultuous joy.

The courts of equity and of law are all newly built and are ranged on one side of the Hall. The other side of the Hall is occupied by new wooden sheds which greatly offend the eye and suit the general character of the building extremely ill. I fancied that these sheds, which are made of common deal boards, which seem hardly to have gone through the process of planing, were the temporary sheds erected for the convenience of the workmen who have been recently employed in fitting up the courts. My friend informed me however, that in them are actually deposited the records of the court! He must surely be mistaken in this, however; I cannot believe that these miserable hovels can contain such important documents; for it is not credible that a great nation should be at an immense expense to erect Courts of Justice and give every facility for the hearing of causes; and should provide no place for the preservation of their decrees. My friend, however, assures me that this is positively the case.

---

* The most learned work on the Anglo Saxon laws is written by a Gottingen student. It is entitled, 'Versuch einer Darstellung der Geschichte des Angelsächsischen Rechts Von George Philips, Beider Recte Doctor Gottingen, 1825.' Nor is this the only work to which we are indebted from the same author and other Germans on the subject of our laws.—Translator.

The first court at the top of the Hall is the High Court of Chancery: the first in dignity and importance in the country. It is perhaps the most convenient of the whole, but, although light, spacious, and handsome has too much of the air of a theatre, and is contrasted very disadvantageously with the solemnity of the Hall.

And who do you think presides in this great court, my friend? The change is so recent that you may not have heard it; although report with eagle-wing, has probably long ago spread it through Europe. It is the well known Henry Brougham who here presides. How often have we drank this name at Prince Karle's*! How long and long continued have been the shouts when the health of this great man, to whom we looked up as a deliverer from tyranny, was proposed! I remember translating his great speech against the Holy Alliance and reading it amidst the most enthusiastic cheering to the assembled burschen! † Each brother fervently blessed the the eloquent statesman, and his name was again shouted forth with a vehemence sufficient to hurl down the remaining fragments of the castle.

This man, then, is now High Chancellor of England. This office is judicial‡, as well as political, and is the most exalted station in the empire.

When I was told that this was his court, I own, my dear friend, I could not keep my feelings perfectly composed; and I entered it with the deepest emotion of reverence. It was crowded with advocates and attorneys, and also with spectators. He sat on a bench slightly elevated from the floor; fronted by a desk. He is tall and thin; and his face pale and colorless: his features taken separately, might be thought unpleasing: but there is something thoughtful and commanding in his brow; there is a lustre and variety of expression in his eye, that arrest the attention and are strikingly impressive. All his actions and expressions prove to the conviction of him who looks upon him that he is no ordinary man. He is original in all his ideas; and he enters into the business of his court with great energy. He seems fully to be aware that all eyes are upon him, but at the same time he is perfectly careless of it. He is familiar almost to vulgarity in some of his phrases. The idea in his mind is frequently expressed in language the most homely; but it always conveys the exact meaning which he is desirous to express, and he seems perfectly satisfied to prefer sense to sound. He does not suffer himself simply to listen to the addresses made to him by the advocates. He frequently interrupts them, sometimes a little impatiently, but never unkindly. He has, however, been involved in two or three little scenes with some of the most eminent of the counsel; but he is so used to wordy warfare of a more fearful nature that it must be mere child's play to him. He has already shown his contempt for useless forms and unmeaning ceremonies. It was the duty of certain officers to attend him at the sitting of the court. This was not only an idle form, but diverted the attention of these persons from their own duties. The present Chancellor, greatly to the scandal of the old ladies of his court, has dispensed with their attendance entirely. He has also directed an extensive inquiry as to the present state of the law with a view to reforming its defects, and much benefit to the country is expected from it. He has hitherto been bold even to rashness in his decisions; he looks steadfastly into the merits of the cause to be decided, and will not suffer his judgment to be led away by authoritative declarations of what the law is: he inquires into it himself, and if he thinks that, either that or the facts of the case will authorise a particular decision, he will make it; and fearlessly reverse the judgment of the court below, although that judgment may have been pronounced by a man who has been all his life employed in the Courts of Equity. There have been many men exalted to the situation of Chancellor from the courts of common law; but no man so exalted ever showed himself so unembarrassed and fully at his ease as Lord Brougham. He now exerts all his best energies to the duties of his office and to diminish the arrears which preceding Judges have left. He has already displayed great talent and industry in this point, and generally delivers his judgment soon after he has heard a cause. He is not therefore exposed to the painful task of hearing applications from suitors imploring an early decision of their case. His great occupations in his own court have had an evident effect on his labors elsewhere. It is said that he has declared, 'he was never more at leisure.' This however, if he said it, I consider a mere bon mot, because if so in fact, I am told it ought not to be. His time doubtless must be fully occupied. It is true that many of his former occupations have ceased; he is no longer the political journalist; he has probably ceased to edit scientific brochures, but he must still find enough and more than enough to employ him in the multitudinous duties of Lord Chancellor; and if proof were wanting of this, it may be found in the few addresses which he makes on any other than legal subjects in the House of Lords.

On leaving the Lord Chancellor's Court, I proceeded with Mr B., the gentlemen who had accompanied me, to the other courts. On entering them we met Mr ———, the well known advocate, to whom Mr B. was known. After the usual ceremonies of introduction were over, he asked us both to dine with him that day, and assured us that we should meet some eminent persons in the course of the evening. We accordingly accepted his invitation and met some other barristers at his table, and passed a delightful evening; but imagine my joy and surprise, when soon after we went up stairs, in came the great person whom I have just been describing. Lord Brougham and our host were intimate at the bar, and his Lordship had waived all ceremony, and we thus found him among us. Nothing I assure you can be more delightful than his society. He is the most unassuming as well as intelligent man I ever knew. He allows every one to have his share in the conversation, to tell his story, or add his illustration. He laughs heartily and unaffectedly at anything which is ludicrous, whether said by himself or another. He has an infinite fund of humor and anecdote, and is most ready to communicate them. He has not the slightest shade of mystery or pretence about him, he seems to have no ill feeling or jealousy, and in listening to his conversation, you cannot believe that you hear the man who, in the House of Commons, could hardly speak without bitterness or sarcasm; but thus he is in private life; lively, amusing, and kind hearted. After cheering and delighting the whole circle (which was composed of some other distinguished persons) for about an hour, he left us full of admiration and pleasure. Thus is he in the habit of keeping up his old friendships, and is the last man to forget any one he formerly knew. You will be able to conceive that I soon afterwards left the party, anxious not to disturb the feelings which his company had occasioned.

Farewell, my dear friend, you shall soon hear again from yours most heartily and sincerely.

* * *

* A tavern frequented by the Heidelburg Students.

† Students.

‡ The Germans merely associate political functions with the name of the Chancellor.

DIGEST OF ENGLISH CASES.

COMMON LAW.

ARREST.

One foreigner may arrest another in England for a debt which accrued while both were resident in a foreign country, though the laws of that country do not allow arrest for debt. For though the contract is to be interpreted according to the law of the country where it was made, the remedy must be pursued according to the law here, the parties being resident here.—De la Vega v. Vianna, 1 B. & Adol. 284. (affirming the opinion of Heath J. against Eyre C. J. and Rooke J. in Melon v. Duke de Fitzjames, 1 B. & P. 138.)

ASSUMPSIT—CONSIDERATION.

An undertaking to pay the plaintiff's attorney, in an action still pending, his costs, in consideration that the plaintiff will, with the attorney's consent, authorize the defendant in the action to pay over the debt sued for to a creditor of the plaintiff, is not binding; for there is no sufficient consideration moving from the attorney.—Taylor v. Watson, 4 M. & R. 259.

ATTORNEY.

An attorney who has given notice that he will not go on with a cause unless furnished with funds, has a right to desist, and may recover for the business done up to that time.—Rowson v. Earle, 1 M. & M. 538.

BILL OF EXCHANGE.

Defendant accepted a bill drawn on him by one of two partners in his own name only, for a debt due to the partnership: Held, that he was liable to an indorsee; for that the acceptance would have been an answer to an action by the partnership for their debt, until the bill was due and dishonored.—Tomlins v. Lawrence, 3 M. & P. 555.

CHAMPERTY.

An agreement to communicate information to a party which shall enable him to recover a sum of money by action, and to exert influence for procuring evidence to substantiate the claim, in consideration of receiving an eighth of the sum recovered, is illegal and void—Stanly v. Jones, 7 Bing. 369.

CONFESSION.

A statement made by a party charged with administering poison with intent to murder, to a surgeon, after he had said to her, 'you are under suspicion of this, and you had better tell all you know:' Held, not receivable in evidence.—Rex v. Kingston, 4 C. & P. 387.

EJECTMENT.

Possession for twenty years forms a presumptive title, which cannot be countervailed in ejectment by subsequent possession for any shorter period.—Doe d. Harding v. Cooke, 7 Bing. 346.

FUNERAL EXPENSES.

As against a creditor, an executor is allowed for funeral expenses only what is absolutely necessary, regard being had to the degree and condition in life of the deceased. 79*l.* was considered too much, the deceased being a captain in the army on half pay; the Court thought 20*l.* a reasonable sum.—Hancock v. Podmore, 1 B. & Adol. 260.

INSURANCE.

A life insurance is, by the general policy of the law, avoided by the execution of the assured for felony. Amicable Assurance Society, app., Bolland and others, resp., 2 D. & C. 1.

LIBEL.

In an action for a libel on the plaintiff in the way of his trade, where the declaration contains an averment by way of inducement, that it was carried on in an honest and lawful manner, the defendant may give evidence under the general issue to show that the trading was dishonest or illegal; although the effect of such evidence is to prove the truth of the imputations in the libel. —Manning v. Clement, 7 Bing. 362.

LIMITATION, STATUTE OF

Payment by the executor of one of two makers of a joint and several promissory note will not take the debt out of the statute of limitations as against the surviving maker.—Slater v. Lawson, 1 B. & Adol. 397.

A letter from the defendant to the plaintiff respecting the debt, containing in the introductory part of it these words, 'which is not to be used in prejudice of my rights now, or in any future arrangement that may be made,' is only a conditional statement, and not sufficient to take the debt out of the statute of limitations.—Cory v. Bretton, 4 C. & P. 462.

MEDICAL PRACTITIONER.

A medical practitioner, whether licensed or not, is guilty of manslaughter, if the death of a patient be caused by his treatment, and he have shown gross ignorance of his art, or gross inattention to his patient's safety, or gross rashness in the application of a dangerous remedy.—Rex v. Long, 4 C. & P. 398, 423.

On an indictment for manslaughter, where the death was occasioned by the application of a lotion to the skin by a medical practitioner, held that the prisoner might give evidence of the effects of the lotion on other persons.—Ibid. 4 C. & P. 398.

MILL.

By a mortgage of a mill, the stones, tackling, and implements necessary for working it, pass to the mortgagee.—Place v. Fagg, 4 M. & R. 277.

MORTGAGOR AND MORTGAGEE.

The mortgagee, by applying to the tenant for rent to pay the interest of the mortgage money, recognises his possession as lawful, and cannot afterwards eject him on a demise anterior to that application. Doe d. Whitaker v. Hales, 7 Bing. 322.

PARTNERSHIP.

On a plea in abatement to an action on a bill of exchange, it was proved that two persons named in the plea were in fact partners with the two defendants sued; but the jury were directed to find for the plaintiff, if they thought upon the evidence that the plaintiff had reasonable ground to think that the defendants alone constituted the partnership. Held, (over-ruling Dubois v. Lubert, 5 Taunt. 609.) that this direction was right: for the only question on such a plea is, with whom the plaintiff contracted.—De Maulort v. Saunders, 1 B. & Adol. 398.

Where a bill, accepted by one partner in the partnership name, is applied, with the knowledge of the party taking it, in part only to the separate use of the partner accepting, a secret partner is not liable in respect of that part, but he is liable in respect of the residue which was not so applied with the knowledge of the taker.—Wintle v. Crowther, 1 C. & J. 316.

[Bayley B., in delivering judgment, said that Lloyd v. Ashby 2 C. & P. 138, which was cited for the defendant, was re-considered in Vere v. Ashby, 10 B. & C. 288: the former case was not, however, so far as appears by the report, mentioned on the discussion of the latter.]

Persons trading abroad in such manner as would constitute a partnership in this country, may sue here as partners for goods consigned to this country, though they could not sue at the place of trading by the law of that country.—Shaw v. Harvey, 1 M. & M. 526.

PLEADING.

The plaintiff agreed to let the defendant land on building leases, and to lend him a sum of money to assist him in erecting twenty houses, to be repaid at a specified time. When six of the houses had been built, part of the money having been advanced, the defendant, by the plaintiff's request, proceeded no further in the undertaking. The time for payment of the money having elapsed, Held that the plaintiff might recover the sum advanced on a court for money lent, and need not declare specially on the agreement. James v. Cotton, 7 Bing. 266.

A party cannot show, under the plea of non est factum, that he was misled as to the legal effect of the bond, if he was at the time competent to execute it: he must plead it specially.—Edwards v. Brown, 1 C. & J. 307.

A declaration in assumpsit must set forth the whole of the consideration for the defendant's promise; therefore, where the plaintiff alleged that in consideration that he would deliver a horse to the defendant, and pay him a sum of money, in exchange for a mare of the defendant's, the defendant undertook that she was sound; and to prove the warranty, put in a receipt given by the defendant for the money, which stated that both the horse and mare were warranted sound; the declaration was held bad, for not alleging that the plaintiff had warranted his horse sound.—Cross v. Bartlett, 3 M. & P. 537.

A replication to a plea of discharge under the insolvent act, that the defendant was not duly discharged, puts in issue the discharge only, and the petition need not be produced.—Andrew v. Pledger, 1 M. & M. 508.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

An agreement, by which A., who had been employed by B. and C. in their business, agreed to work, during their joint lives, for B. and C. in and for no other person without their written consent, and B. and C. agreed, in consideration thereof, and subject to the other provisions of the agreement, to employ A. as theretofore; providing also that B. and C. should be at liberty, if they found it necessary or as thought fit, to employ other persons besides A., without his being released from his agreement, and allowing A. to work for persons within six miles of London; was held void, as being in partial restraint of trade, and not supported by an adequate consideration. And a promissory note, given by A. in consideration of breaches of the agreement, was held void also and incapable of being set off to a claim by A. against B. and C. for work done.—Young v. Timmins, 1 C. & J. 331.

SLANDER.

Words imputing that a plaintiff is unfit for an office of profit which he holds, by reason of his immorality, are not actionable per se; but only words which are spoken of him in reference to his character or conduct in such office; which impute the want of some necessary qualification for or misconduct in it.—Lumby v. Allday, 1 C. & J. 301.

TROVER.

A refusal by a bailee to deliver goods to the real owner without the authority of the bailor, who has in fact no lien, is sufficient evidence of a conversion.—Wilson v. Anderton, 1 B. & Adol. 450.

WARRANTY.

A party who sells a horse, saying that he is sound to the best of his knowledge, 'but he will not warrant,' is liable in assumpsit on a promise that the horse is sound to the best of his knowledge.—Wood v. Smith, 1 M. & M. 539.

WITNESS.

Ejectment against a party claimed to retain the lands as heir at law to his father. Held, that his mother was a competent witness for him, though her testimony went to show a seisin in law in her husband, which would entitle her to dower: for the judgment in the action would be no evidence of the husband's seisin.—Doe d. Nightingale v. Maisey, 1 B. & Adol. 439.

A defendant who has suffered judgment by default is a competent witness, where he is disinterested.—Warrel v. Jones, 7 Bing. 395.

ENGLISH CASES.

COURT OF CHANCERY—APRIL, 1831.

Thomson v. Barclay and co. and Powles and co.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, having taken his seat, commenced his judgment in this case, which was one of great importance, and had been argued, his Lordship added, with great learning and distinguished ability. It came into this court by way of appeal from a decision of his honor the Vice-Chancellor, upon a demurrer put in by the defendants to the plaintiff's bill, which demurrer his honor allowed. Mr Alderman Thompson (the plaintiff), in his bill charged that he had paid various sums of money to the defendants, in consequence of fraudulent representations made by them respecting a contract for a loan to be made to the Government of Guatemala, in South America. —The defendants, Barclay and Co. were charged in the bill with putting themselves forth as agents for the said loan on the part of the Government of that State, which was formerly a colony of Spain, but then revolted from the dominion of the mother country, and her independence not recognised by the Government of this country. The bill also charged the defendants, Powles and Co., with having represented themselves not to be parties to the said contract of the loan. By those representations the plaintiff was, as it was stated, influenced to make purchases of scrip of the loan, and was also influenced as to the price he should pay for that scrip.—The bill further charged those representations to be untrue, and that the defendants, who put themselves forth as unconnected with the loan, were actually connected with it, and did not give for their shares of the scrip the price which was alleged by them to have been given, and that both parties (defendants) had agreed among themselves, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, that Messrs Barclay and Company should hold a larger proportion of scrip than was then given out. Among the frauds charged by the bill was, that Messrs Barclay and Company had not rendered an account to the Guatemala Goverment of the sums of money they had received on account of the loan; in consequence of which, that Government refused to ratify the contract of loan. By all these means, the plaintiff complained that he was trepanned into advances of large sums of money in the purchase of scrip, which turned out to be of no value. The plaintiff, upon these grounds, sought relief in this court. The defendants demurred to his title to relief upon several grounds. But it was upon the first ground stated, that the demurrer could operate as a bar to relief, because whatever might have been the conduct of the agents, the principal could not be justified in refusing his assent to the acts done by the agent, in virtue of his authority. The ground of fraud then, if the fraud could be established, was the only one on which a claim to equitable relief could be founded. The transactions, as stated by the plaintiff, were marked by gross fraud; and the alleged circumstance that no money had been transmitted to the Guatemala Government out of the proceeds of this loan, was as liable to censure as the other changes made by this Bill. If such a fraud as in this Bill charged were in fact committed—if the defendants had thus practised upon the credulity of the people of this country, and had obtained possession of large sums of money on account of the Government of Guatemala, and then refused to account for the sums received by that Government, it was a case of aggravated fraud and glaring wrong. It was a most melancholy reflection, that a spirit of speculation could arise in any country which could create so much cupidity on one side, and such credulity on the other. This was most disgraceful; but it would be still more disgraceful if the law were not strong enough to give relief from such a wrong.

Sir Edward Sugden observed that the statements in the bill were quite unsupported, and were wholly denied by the defendants.

The Lord Chancellor said that he had not yet done—far from it. He was only stating what the allegations in the bill were previous to his pronouncing his judgment. He was aware that these were exparte statements, to which the defendants did not put in an answer, but thought proper to demur. It was not, however, to be asserted by every one, nor to be understood by every one, that the defendants, by their demurrer, admitted the truth of the aggravated and disgraceful statements in the plaintiff's bill. His Lordship could not for a moment suppose that any men, who had a regard for their character as merchants or as men, would so far disgrace themselves as to admit themselves to be guilty of the offences charged by this bill. He did not understand the defendants by demurring to the bill, to admit the truth of those charges. All the defendants had a right by law to say that, in the case brought against them, there was no law; and if in law they could support such an answer, they had a right to avail themselves of the benefit to be derived from it. All that a demurrer amounted to, in its strictest sense, was, that the party putting it in said in effect thus—'If I admitted, as I do not, that all you have said were true, yet still you have no case against me.' When parties at law acted upon the advice of professional men, they relieved themselves from observations which might otherwise apply to them; and if professional men thought their clients had good ground of demurrer, and did not advise them to demur, they did not advise them properly. He, therefore, would never allow it to be said, without contradiction, that a party by demurring to charges on allegations in a bill admitted them to be true. He was the more anxious to be most distinctly understood in this, because the judgment which he was going to give in affirmance of the decision of his Honor the Vice-Chancellor would preclude the defendants from the opportunity of denying the charges made in the bill in the present stage. All that he understood them to say by their demurrer was, that there were such defects apparent upon the face of plaintiff's bill as rendered it quite unnecessary for the defendants to say—indeed, prevented them from saying—whether the grounds upon which the plaintiff rested his bill to relief were true or not. Several arguments were made in defence of the case of the defendants. First, it was contended that the transaction was usurious; secondly, that there was a want of equity; and, lastly, that, from the peculiar situation of the Guatemala Government for which this loan was said to be contracted, the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief he sought. As it was upon the third of these grounds that he was bound by former decisions of this Court to rest the decision in this case, he would not go at length into the two former grounds. He agreed with the Vice-Chancellor, that the argument upon the ground of usury failed, but he came to that conclusion upon reasons different from those which seemed to have influenced his Honor. He would advert to the two first points, as the parties would have an opportunity, if he was wrong, of carrying this matter before another tribunal. It was contended, that the loan was usurious, because '6 per cent loan was mentioned at the head of the scrip receipts.' The words might indicate a loan at 6 per cent, but the Court would not be justified in applying to the whole transaction the enactments in the Statutes of usury. The ground upon which the Vice-Chancellor thought the loan not usurious was, that it did not appear the interest was to be paid in this country—that his Lordship thought quite immaterial, and the position was calculated to mislead, as laid down. If the contract was made in this country for payment of higher interest than the laws of this country allowed, a contract so made was clearly tainted with usury. But as the bill did not state with sufficient precision that the contract was of such a nature, or for such a purpose, he did not take it to be made out to be usurious. With respect to the second ground of demurrer, that of a general want of equity, he admitted that he was under some difficulty. The cases chiefly relied upon were those of Colt v. Wollason, 2 P. Williams, and Green v. Barrett, which was decided by the present Master of the Rolls, upon the authority of the former case. His Lordship stated the case of Colt v. Wollason, which arose out of a speculation to extract oil from radishes, in 1720, but which turned out to be a mere bubble. The facts were, that an estate was bought in Lincolnshire for 31,000*l* and vested in trustees for the shareholders, subject to pay off a mortgage of 28,000*l*. and after that 5700*l*. more to Wollason, the proprietor; the surplus to be divided among the shareholders. A bubble so apparent could be thought of only in delusions like those of 1720 and 1825, in this country, and the Mississippi scheme in Paris. Sir Joseph Jekyl, who decided that case, called it 'mere moonshine,' the security being as bad as that upon lands in the terra incognita, between 50 and 57 degrees of south latitude, where no land lay. Sir J. Jekyl, indignant at the grossness of the fraud committed and moved with pity for the persons duped, decided that relief ought to be given them. Lord Eldon, in the case of Kemp v. Prior, 7 Vesey, made a similar decision, after some difficulty, and with a leaning against the decision of the case of Colt v. Wollason, as far as it went. By these cases the present Master of the Rolls was bound in the decision of the case of Green v. Barrett. Upon the strength of these cases his Lordship said he would rest the second point of this case.

As to the third point, upon which his decision was to be founded, he had in view the cases of of Jones v. Garcia, and Thompson v. Beering. The principle of the decision in these was, that the contract was made for the benefit of States not recognised by our government, and that principle applied to the present case. The plaintiff's claim here rested upon the ground that Messrs Bentley and Co. were agents to the Guatemala Government, and the defendants said no relief could be afforded by this Court to a person who complained that the parties against whom they asked redress had used the name and authority of that Government, and put themselves forth as its agents; that British subjects could not complain that by such means a fraud was committed on them, or that they had been by such means induced to give away their money. Had this point been now raised for the first time, he confessed he should not have any doubt about it, but should think that the condition of the Guatemala Government was no answer to the case. He could not here concur in the reasoning of Lord Eldon in the case of Jones v. Garcia, when that Learned Lord said that it was known in this country that the State in question in that case had been part of Peru, which belonged to the King of Spain, and that it was impossible in this Court to recognise as independent a State which was part of a country in peace with us, and the independence of which was not acknowledged by this country; and if men would lend their money under such circumstances, they should get it back as they best could. Now, with respect to how far Courts in this country could be called upon to aid a party who made a loan to a foreign State, revolted from the parent country, which was at peace with us, and which loan would be aiding the rebellion, was not the question here; and if it were, he would be disposed to concur in the view taken by Lord Eldon, and say this Court could not grant relief. But if a person came here as agent of a foreign State, and obtained money from the subjects of this country, by issue of scrip receipts worth nothing, or by entering into a secret contract with the confederates, in order to get a higher price for the scrip, the case was different. To say that, because this was a loan to a country which this country had not recognised and that, therefore, the plaintiff had not a locus stendi in judicio would be going farther than the principle of non-recognition. These words

'recognise,' 'acknowledge,' &c, were too general, and the use of them brought some confusion on the subject. He would liken this to a case at the Admiralty Sessions, where, if a Plymouth cruiser, having fitted out a ship, had attacked and taken the mariners of a ship beloning to the Guatemala Government, he would, if, the facts were proved, be hanged for it, although the Guatemala Government had not been recognised by ours. His Lordship, after referring to the case of Kender v. Everetts, and others of recent decision, which decisions were grounded upon the principle of the non-recognition of her States; and, after repeating that he was bound by former decisions, said, that he affirmed the order of the Vice-Chancellor, and allowed the demurrer. But, in dismissing the appeal, he was glad of the probability that this judgment would undergo the revision of another tribunal, where the advantage of the learning of the other Judges could be had.

The decision of the Vice-chancellor affirmed, and the appeal dismissed, but without costs.

---

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

(Sittings in Banco.)

Barber, executrix of Barber, v. Morris.

Mr POLLOCK moved for a rule to show cause why the verdict for the defendant in this case should not be set aside, and a new trial granted, under the following circumstances:

The defendant had lent 700*l.* to a person named Hornby, repayable after three months' notice.—As a collateral security, he insured the life of Hornby, in the Pelican Office. Subsequently Hornby gave the defendant notice that at the expiration of three months he would repay the 700*l.* The defendant then directed the policy of insurance to be sold by auction, and Mr Barber purchased it for 64*l.* The Learned Counsel now contended that as the defendant knew that his interest in the life of Hornby was about to determine, and that as the policy was, of course, worth nothing, he was now liable to be called upon to refund the money. It was certainly true that a clerk from the Pelican Office had given evidence on the trial to the effect that the office generally paid those policies without inquiry as to the assurable interest in cases where they were not legally liable, but this was no answer to the action, for, if the policy was legally bad, the concealment, on the part of the defendant, that the assurable interest was about to determine, was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover.

LORD TENTERDEN said he had left it to the Jury to say whether they believed any concealment was practised by the defendant, and, in the absence of all evidence of concealment, the Jury found that there had been none. Under these circumstances it must be presumed that Mr Barber bought with the determination to take his chance of the money being paid by the Pelican Office. There was, therefore, no ground for disturbing the verdict of the Jury, the defendant, in the absence of fraud or concealment on his part, not being liable to refund the money.

---

During the early part of this week, when Chief Commissioner Reynolds, in the Insolvent Court was interrogating a person then before the Court, as to whether he was a shoemaker? he replied, 'No, I am a cordwainer.' Upon which the Commissioner desired him to explain the difference between the two terms; which he did in the following laconic manner:—A cordwainer is a person who makes shoes for Ladies and Gentlemen; but a shoemaker is one who makes shoes for horses!—Lancaster Gazette.

---

LEGAL REMINISCENCES.

'Celâ sedet Œolus arce,
Sceptra tenens, mollitque animos et temperat iras.'
Æn. i. 56.

The ancients appear to have almost invariably dedicated some particular spot to the administration of justice; and from the fact of the Hebrew Judges sitting at the gates of cities, they obtained the name of 'Elders of the Gate.'* In Zechariah† the Jewish people are commanded, upon their restoration, to execute the judgment of truth and peace 'in their gates.'

The Athenians selected a small eminence near Athens for the seat of the 'Areopagitæ.' It was termed Ἄρειος Πάγος, 'the hill of Mars,' because Mars was supposed to have been tried there for the murder of Hallirothius.

At Granada, in Spain, the street 'Calle de los Gomelles ‡' leads to a massive gate at the entrance of the magnificent palace of Alhamra, or Alhambra.§ Over the gate is a large tower, called the 'Gate of Judgment,' the 'Gate of Justice,' the 'Gate of the Law;' and upon which there is the following inscription in Arabic;—'Turn pale, O wickedness! Wheresoever you go, I will follow! Punishment always speedily follows crime. Draw near, come without fear, ye deserted orphans; here shall ye find the father ye have lost.'

In China, there is an old willow, celebrated from the fact of the Emperor Kang Vang having sat under this tree when he gave judgment upon the differences of the laborers in agriculture. Out of respect to the Emperor, its branches were cut. St Louis often used to sit under the shade of an oak in the wood of Vincennes, when all who had any complaint freely approached: at other times he seated himself upon a carpet spread in a garden, and heard the causes which were brought before him.‖

In the vicinity of Scone there is a tumulus, where the stone chair removed by Kenneth II. from Argyle was placed; and in which the kings of Scotland were crowned in the more ancient times. Upon this hill the King held his court of justice, and promulgated laws. From the 'pleas of the barons' being determined here, it was called 'Mons placiti de Scona omnis terra,' or 'the Mote hill of Scone:' but among the common people it bore the name of 'Boothill,' from a tradition that, 'at the coronation of a king every man who assisted brought so much earth in his boots, that every man might see the King crowned, standing upon his own land.' The 'Hill of Strife¶,' at Uliuish, and the hills called 'Laws,' as 'Kelly Law North Berwick Law,' were places probably devoted to the seat of jurtice.

What a source of gratification must the scientific always discover in the contemplation of sites which have been thus dedicated to, or have formed the scene of, some great and important historical event. Take, for instance, the White House* on the river Tay. in Dyved.† Here Howel, the good son of Cadell, and King of all Cambria, in the tenth century, upon his return from Rome, which he had visited with a view of improving the laws of Cambria, and obtaining a knowledge of the laws of other countries, and of those the emperors of Rome put in force in the isle of Britain during their sovereignty, summoned all the chiefs of the tribes, the family representatives, and all the wise and learned men, both of the clergy and laity, to a collective convention. The laws of Dionwall Moehund being found superior to the whole, were systematised by Blegwryd, and, after the approval of the convention, constitutionally established over all Cambria.

The ruins of Iona. Her monastery and cathedral recall to mind the learning and superstition of even classic ages; while her cemeteries of the Kings of Scotland, Ireland, and Norway, painfully remind the traveller of the short but momentous passage between life and death.

The island of Runeymeed, or Runeymead, where the brave English barons forced from the reluctant Plantagenet the great charter of English liberties, and the charta de foresta.

The ancient and stately hall of Eltham, first built by Edward I. ‡, and the chief residence of Edward II., and where probably the famous statutes, 'De Officio Coronatoris,' 'Of Mortmain,' and Prerogativa Regis,' were enacted. The hall is approached through a long vista of wide-spreading trees; and the picturesque scenery of the spot, the gorgeous roof of the building, and castellated remains, all remind the beholder of historic times, and hours of regal grandeur.

The parliament chambers in the old palaces of Scotland, and particularly Linlithgow and Stirling;§ the latter of which presents a fine view of the river Forth, to Alloa, the once famed residence of the chieftains of Mar; the age of Wallace and Bruce are remembered, and the eye of sympathy sorrows for their fate, and finds a melancholy reflection, that these patriots, born in the land of chivalry, became worthy sons of Caledonia.

The site Fotheringay which holds a prominent place in our annals as the birthplace of Richard III., and the place where the beautiful and accomplished Mary Queen of Scots suffered! Filial piety removed every vestige of its castle, but the name and site still exist. Westminster Hall, where the fatal judgment was given against John Hampden! and, lastly, the rocks in Switzerland, where William Tell, clinging to the crags, braved the abyss, and escaped from his tyrants.

I shall conclude my present observations with the words of our great moralist; 'that man is little to be envied, whose patriotism would not gain force upon the plain of Marathon, or whose piety would not grow warmer among the ruins of Iona.'

TEMPLARIUS.

---

* Deut. xxii. 15, xxv. 7.; Ruth, iv.; Prov. xxi. 23.; Lament. v. 13.

† Chap. viii. 16.

‡ So called from an ancient Moorish family.

§ The red city.

‖ Joinvill, Hist. de. St Louis, p. 13. ed. 1761.

¶ The signification of the Erse word.

 In the island of Sky, or Skye.'

* 'Gwyn,' so called because it was made by a wattling of white rods, for the convenience of hunting.

† This spot is still recognised in the ruins of Whitland Abbey, above Tenby, on the small river Tay, in Carmarthenshire.

‡ The present hall was probably built in the time of Edward IV.

§ Barr. Obs. Stat. 41.

---

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

Assumpsit on a promissory note made by the defendant, who was administratrix of her husband's effects. The note was in these terms. 'Twelve months after date I promise to pay Mr. J. Rydout, or order, the sum of 100*l.* value, received by my late husband.' A verdict was taken for the plaintiff, but leave was reserved by Mr Baron Bolland, who tried the cause, to the defendant to move to have it set aside, and a nonsuit entered, if the court should be of opinion, that, as this was a promise to pay the debt of a third person, the consideration should have been more fully expressed on the face of the instrument.

The Court, under the circumstances of the case, thought the consideration sufficiently expressed. The defendant was an administratrix and having on the face of the note expressed that it was given for value received, must be taken to have known that such was the fact. The consideration might have been forbearance to sue her husband in his lifetime, or perhaps even forbearance to sue her for a debt contracted by her husband.

Rule for nonsuit discharged. Exchequer, M. T. 1830.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 16, 1831.

SPECIAL PLEADING.

The Legislature of New Hampshire, among other things, at its late Session, passed an act, similar to that of the state of Maine, abolishing the system of Special Pleading altogether. The effect of this measure may not turn out to be quite what those who advocated it intended. It will relieve the Members of the Profession from a good deal of unprofitable labor, without deducting a groat from their pay. In New Hampshire, especially, is this the case, where nothing useful was ever gained by skill in this respect, beyond a little delay or temporary convenience to the party. Neither is it likely to prove of any great advantage to the community; since, after all, it is not quite so deadly a thrust at the business of the Profession as the advocates of Reform believe. Besides, that Lawyers are very willing to part with the trouble, the substitute provided, in the nature of a brief statement, will be found quite as likely to make business for them and their clients.

Those who imagine that, because every case can be tried under the general issue, every person can prosecute and defend his own suits, will find themselves deceived. The battle is often hardly begun when the pleadings are closed.

If the necessity for the employment of lawyers is to be done away, not only must legal proceedings be simplified so as to require no professional skill, but the laws must be so plain as to need no interpretation or comment, and evidence so clear as to be aided by no illustration.

Let those, who are ignorant, and those, who are interested or dishonest, sound the alarm as they may, and encourage and propagate the spirit of radical reform; while those, who make laws are human, and those, for whom they are made, are perverse and faithless, there will be men, whose business it is to expound and enforce them, and whom the public will be glad to employ and compelled to pay.

---

QUERE.—A. employs B. to saw timber at B.'s mill. A. fails and assigns his property to C.—B. has a lien for sawing the timber. Neither A. nor C. discharges such lien, but suffer the timber to remain at the mill. What shall B. do to get his pay? A.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

It is understood that the Law, on this subject, has been so changed in New Hampshire, as to extend the prison limits to the lines of the counties. If so, imprisonment for debt, in that State, is virtually abolished.

At the recent Session of the Legislature of Maine, also, an act was passed, entitled 'An act for the abolition of Imprisonment of honest debtors for debt.'

This act provides, generally, that no person shall be arrested or imprisoned, otherwise than is therein provided, in any suit, founded on any contract made or entered into after the act takes effect, or on any former judgment rendered in any suit founded on any such contract. The 3d Section of the act is as follows.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That the creditor or creditors, in any execution, issued as aforesaid, wherein the debt exclusive of costs is not less than five dollars, may at any time notify, as is hereinafter provided, any debtor, named in said execution, to appear before two Justices of the Peace, each of whom shall be of the quorum, a freeholder and disinterested, there to disclose the actual state of such debtor's business affairs, and of all and every description of property, real and personal, which such debtor may have in severalty, or in common with others, or in reversion, or remainder, together with a particular description thereof, and where and with whom the same is in keeping, or deposit; said notification to be issued, on application being made therefor by the creditor or creditors, his or their attorney, by any Justice of the Peace in and for the County where such debtor shall reside, in writing under the hand and seal of said Justice, signifying to the debtor the desire of such creditor, or creditors, to have the disclosure aforesaid made, and the time and place appointed for the making thereof, and said notice shall be served by giving the debtor a true and attested copy thereof in hand or by leaving an attested copy thereof at his or her usual place of abode twenty days at least before the time appointed as aforesaid. And in case any debtor notified as aforesaid, shall neglect to appear as notified, and to make the disclosure aforesaid, and to make answers to such interrogatories, pertinent to the matter, as the execution creditor or creditors, his or their attorney, may see fit to propound in writing, and to make oath to the truth and justness of the said disclosure and answers; or in case any such debtor shall so appear, and comply with the foregoing requisitions of this act, in making said disclosure and in answering said interrogatories. all of which shall be reduced to writing by the Justices, and signed and sworn to by the debtor in their presence and it shall not clearly appear to the said Justices, upon the disclosure, interrogatories and answers in the case, and the other evidence produced by the parties, each of whom shall have a right to produce such other evidence that said debtor has conducted honestly, without collusion, fraud, or intentional concealment, respecting his property, and that said debtor is unable to satisfy said execution, without the aid of property exempted by law from attachment and execution;—then, and in either case, said Justices shall certify on the back of such execution, in writing, under their hands and seals, that due notice had been issued and served upon the aforesaid debtor, to appear before them, the said Justices, for the purpose aforesaid, naming the time when and place where, such appearance was required, and that said debtor did not appear and disclose, and answer interrogatories, and make oath as is herein required; or, as the fact may be, that said debtor did so appear, and disclose, and answer interrogatories, and make oath thereto, as is in and by the act provided, but was adjudged by said Justices not to be entitled to the privilege and benefit allowed by this act, and that said debtor did or did not, as the case may be, appeal from their said adjudication. And it shall be the further duty of said Justices, to annex said disclosure, interrogatories and answers, if there shall be any, to said execution, and return each and every of them into the office of the Clerk of the Court, or unto the Judge, or Justice, from whom said execution may have issued, within twenty days next after their said adjudication, together the original notice and the evidence of the service thereof; and thereupon said Clerk, Judge, or Justice, may issue another execution, on application, the creditor or creditors, his or their attorney, for that purpose, and shall renew it from time to time, as is now allowed by law, running against the body of such debtor in the form of executions issued before the passing of this act; and upon all executions which shall be so issued, the body of such debtor shall be liable to arrest, and commitment to prison, without the benefit of bail thereafter; Provided, however, that if the certificate of said Justices shall in any case show that their decision was appealed from by either party, a new execution shall not be issued, as aforesaid, by the Clerk, Judge, or Justice, until notice of the termination of such appeal shall have been given to said Clerk, Judge, or Justice, in the manner provided in and by the eighth section of this act.

The 4th section provides that where it appears to the Justices, upon such disclosure, and proof that the execution debtor has conducted honestly and without fraud, and that he is unable to satisfy the execution, without the aid of property exempted by Law, and such as is disclosed by him, they shall administer the oath as prescribed by law, unless the creditor appeal from their adjudication; which oath, with the disclosures &c, the original notice and evidence of the service, is to be returned, within 20 days, to the Court from which the execution issued; and thereupon the body of the debtor is forever discharged from liability to arrest or imprisonment for said debt.

The 5th section provides that, whenever the debtor shall, in any such examination or disclosure, disclose, describe or offer to the creditor, any and all the estate belonging to him, not exempted by law, so that it may be taken in execution, he may be admitted to the oath, and the creditor may have a lien on such property, for the term of 30 days thereafter. In case of appeal, the lien continues 30 days after final decision.

Any debtor, committed according to the provisions of the act, may make a new disclosure, by giving notice to the creditor, signifying his desire to that effect, and appointing the time and place, ten days before the day appointed for that purpose.

---

ERRATUM.—The heading of the article, in our last, under Medical Jurisprudence, should have been thus—Identity, and Presumption of Survivorship.

VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS, recently received from Europe, and for sale by GRAY & BOWEN, No 141 Washington street.

Browne's Self Interpreting Bible, with notes, references, illustrations, reflections, and a memoir of the author; in one large quarto volume.

The Mirror of Parliament, edited by John Barrow Esq. This work contains a complete account of the doings and debates in the British Parliament, during the last December session ; in eight parts, folio.

Select Views on the River Clyde, engraved by Joseph Swan, with historical and descriptive illustrations; in one quarto volume, with fortytwo splendid engravings.

Select Views of the Lakes of Scotland, from original paintings ; in two parts.

Hinton's History and Topography of the United States. This work will be completed in thirty numbers, quarto, with ninety engravings; eight numbers are already received.

History of the sufferings of the Church of Scotland, from the restoration to the revolution ; by Rev. Robert Wodrow; 4 vols. 8vo.

History and Antiquities of the Doric Race ; by C. O. Müller ; 2 vols. 8vo.

History of Scotland, from the Union ; by John Struthers ; 2 vols. 8vo.

A Selection from the Papers of the Earls of Marchmont ; illustrative of events from 1685 to 1750 ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, complete in two vols. 8vo.

A System of Geography, popular and scientific ; illustrated by a complete series of maps and other engravings ; by James Bell ; 3 vols. 8vo.

McUre's History of Glasgow, with plates and illustrations ; 1 vol.

History of Modern Greece ; by James Emerson ; 2 vols. 8vo.

Rollins' Ancient History, with Life, notes and numerous maps and plates ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Thompson's Narrative of an official visit to Guatamala ; 1 vol.

Six Years' residence in the United States of America ; by Peter Neilson ; 1 vol.

Lardner's Cyclopedia ; complete set as far as published ; 16 vols.

Lardner's Cabinet Library, annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 1831.

Murphy's Treatise on the art of Weaving; with fifteen engravings ; 1 vol.

Mackenzie on the Diseases of the Eye ; 1 vol.

Spix's Travels in Brazil, with engravings ; 2 vols. 8vo.

BYRON'S WORKS—a new and beautiful edition, with a portrait and other engravings ; in 4 vols. 16mo.

Evan's Sketch of the Denominations of the Christian World ; 1 vol.

Addison's Works ; 4 vols. ; a new edition.

Bowring's Poetry of the Magyars ; 1 vol.

Constable's Miscellany ; vols. 60 to 65 inc.

Family Library.—Lives of British Painters—Lives of Physicians—Life of Bruce—Court and Camp of Buonaparte—Demonology and Witchcraft.

Foreign Tales and Traditions ; 2 vols.

The Casquet, or Literary Gem ; edited by Alexander Whitelaw ; 2 vols.

do do do (2d series) 2 vols.

The Atheneum, an original Literary Miscellany ; 1vol.

The Midsummer Medley for 1830 ; by the author of Brambletye House.

Life on board a Man of War ; 1 vol.

Robertson's Parent's Guide to Baptism ; 1 vol.

Gospel Truth accurately stated and illustrated ; by Rev. John Brown ; 1 vol.

Outline of the Scripture Evidence for the Trinity ; 1 vol.

The New Testament, translated by Doddridge, Campbell and Macknight ; 1 vol. 12mo.

An Essay on Chemical Analysis; by M. Thenard ; translated by J. G. Children ; 1 vol.

Aids to Reflection ; by S. T. Coleridge ; 1 vol.

Fabliaux, or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries.

A Help to Professing Christians ; by Rev. John Barr ; 1 vol.

The Wine Drinker's Manual ; 1 vol.

The Shamrock, a collection of Irish Songs.

The National Minstrel ; a choice selection of popular songs.

Parochial Psalmody ; by J. P. Clarke.

Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History.

Pinnock's Modern Geography and History.

The Caterer ; being a selection of pieces in prose and verse ; 1 vol.

Johnson's Dictionary, complete in one imperial 8vo.

Morewood's Essay on Inebriating Liquors.

Dibdin's Library Companion ; 1 vol.

Biblia Hebraica.

Novum Testamentum Græce.

Aristophanes Comædiæ.

Sophocles Tragædiæ.

Pindari Carmina.

Æschyli Tragædiæ. May 21

---

THIS DAY published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

Art I. The Laws of Population and Wages.

1. Two Lectures on Population, delivered before the University of Oxford in Easter Term, 1828. By Nassau William Senior, late Fellow of Magdalen College, A. M. Professor of Political Economy. To which is added a Correspondence between the Author and the Rev T. R Malthus.

II. Poetry and Romance of the Italians.

1. Della Letteratura Italiana, Di Camillo Ugoni.

2. Storia della Letteratura Italiana. Del cavaliere Giuseppe Maffei.

3. Storia della Letteratura Italiana nel secolo XVIII di Antonio Lombardi.

III. Origin and Progress of the Useful Arts.

The Frugal Housewife. By the Author of Hobomok.

IV. Pennsylvania Biography.

Memoirs of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Part II.

V. Defence of Mechanical Philosophy.

Signs of the Times.—Article VII. in the Ninety-eighth Number of the Edinburgh Review, for June, 1829.

VI. The Cherokee Case.

1. Opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on an Application made by the Cherokee Indians for a Writ of Injunction against the State of Georgia, delivered by Mr Chief Justice Marshall, at the January Term held at Washington, 1831.

VII. The Prospect of Reform in Europe.

L'Avenir. Par M. J. L. Sismondi. Extrait de la Revue Encyclopedique.

VIII. Popular Sports and Festivals.

The Sports and Pastimes of the people of England. By Joseph Strutt. A New Edition, with a Copious Index. By William Hone.

IX. Harvard University

Letter to Governor Lincoln in relation to Harvard University. By F. C. Gray. Second Edition, with an Appendix.

X. Life and Character of Henry Brougham.

1. Speech of Henry Brougham, M. P. on the Present state of the Law.

2. Practical Observations on Popular Education. By H. Brougham, Esq. M. P. F. R. S.

3. Publications of the society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.

XI. North Eastern and Northern Boundary.

1. Decision of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, on the Questions submitted to him by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, for determining the Boundary Line between the United States and the British Provinces. July 2.

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars.

April 9.

---

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

---

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141; Washington Sreet, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLV.

CONTENTS.

I. Religion in France. Vues sur le Protestantism en France. Par J. L. S. Vincent, l'un des Pasteurs de l'Eglise Reformee de Nismes.

II. May's Letters to Hawes. Letters to the Rev. Joel Hawes, D. D. in Review to his 'Tribute to the memory of the Pilgrims.' By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the first Church in Brooklyn, Connecticut.

III. Life and Writings of Origen. Origenis Opera Omnia, quæ Græce vel Latine tantum extant, et ejus Nomine circumferuntur. Opera et studio Caroli Delarue.

IV. On the morality of our Political situation.

V. German Rationalism. The Biblical Repository, January, 1831. Conducted by Edward Robinson, Professor Extraordinary in the Theological Seminary at Andover.

VI. Harmonies of the Gospels. A Harmony of the Gospels, on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D.

VII. Mr Whitman and his Reviewers.

1. Review of Mr Whitman's Letters to Professor Stuart on Religious Liberty. [From 'The Spirit of the Pilgrims.'] With an Appendix not before published.

2. A Reply to the Review of Whitman's Letters to Professor Stuart in 'The Spirit of Pilgrims' for March 1834. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Translation of the Scriptures at Serampore.

IX. Books on Practical Religion. On the Formation of the Christian Character. Addressed to those who are seeking to lead a religious Life. By Henry Ware, Jr. Professor of Pulpit Eloquence, and the Pastoral Care in Harvard University. July 2.

---

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

---

SPLENDID BIBLE. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work, to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy. March 19.

---

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D. Feb. 19.

---

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface. Jan. 8.

---

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No. 25 School Street.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

PUBLISHED BY GRAY AND BOWEN, 141 WASHINGTON STREET.

VOL. I. BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 23, 1831. NO. LII.

MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

MEDICAL EVIDENCE.

Trials of John Davis ;—of Donellan, for poisoning Sir Theodosius Broughton ;—of Donnal ;—of Cowper.

It is not a little surprising, that so intelligent and respectable a class of men as the medical profession should make so poor a figure in the witness-box. In our own experience, we have known so many gentlemen of this profession 'break down,' as it is called, that we have a great distrust of this kind of evidence. We have frequently seen a medical witness called into the box, and positively swear to a certain fact as the result of his experience, and then suffer himself to be completely driven out of his opinion. Take, for instance, the evidence of tests of poison : we have repeatedly heard a doctor declare that he had on analyzation discovered poison—arsenic, for example—in a particular vessel, or in the stomach of a deceased person, and, when asked his reason, he has stated that the existence of a particular fact, or a certain test, was an infallible proof of the presence of the poison ; on cross-examination, this statement had been closely sifted, and he has been forced to admit that the appearance on which he relied is by no means infallible, and might have been produced by other substances : and that, in fact, although the life of the prisoner has been depending on his testimony, he has been guided by mere inference and supposition. We have seen this repeatedly happen : we have alluded to evidence of the presence of poison ; we recollect one recent and remarkable instance on another point, which, as it has never been in print, we shall mention.—At the autumn great Sessions, 1829, John Davis was tried at Carmarthen for the murder of a young woman, who had been his sweetheart. The evidence was entirely circumstantial, and was of the faintest kind ; a bloody hatchet had been found near the young woman, which was, to a certain extent, brought home to the prisoner. This circumstance was the most important proof against him. A medical witness was called, and was asked, by the counsel for the prosecution, his opinion as to the instrument by which the young woman had been murdered. He answered, 'that in his opinion it was either with a hatchet or a billhook.' On cross-examination by the prisoner's counsel, the following questions were asked. Q. 'You said that the wounds were inflicted with a hatchet or a billhook ?'—A. 'Yes.' Q. 'You think they could have been committed with no other instrument whatever ?'—A. 'Yes.' Q. 'You are ready to swear that these were the only two instruments that could by possibility have been used ?'—A. 'I am ready to swear it.' Q. 'You think, then, that precisely the same effect would be produced by a hatchet and a bill-hook ? A. 'I do.' Q. 'The one having a concave, the other a convex edge ?' —A. 'I am of that opinion.' Q. 'These were the only two instruments that could have been used ?'—A. 'I think so.' Q. 'Now, Sir, might not these wounds have been inflicted with a sword ?' —A. 'They could not.' Q. 'Why could they not ?'—'Because the prisoner HAD NO SWORD.' Thus this person's evidence was given throughout on the presumption that the prisoner was actually guilty.

These observations have been suggested by reading a lecture lately delivered by Mr Amos at the London University, reported in the Medical Gazette of the 12th of February, 1831. It will supply us with some further instances of the truth of our opinion on this subject ; and we shall, therefore, quote the most interesting part of it.

'A medical man who has not seen a patient, may, after hearing the evidence of others, be called to prove, on his oath, the general effect of the disease described by them, and its probable consequences in the particular case. Thus, in prosecutions for murder, medical men have been allowed to state their opinions, whether the wounds described by witnesses were likely to be the cause of death ; or, in another description of cases, whether such and such appearances are symptoms of insanity ? So a medical man may be asked his opinion upon many hypothetical points, not proved in evidence, but suggested by the ingenuity of counsel : as, for example, where the strangulation of a new-born infant is charged, whether the swollen and red appearance of the head might not have been occasioned by its being born some time before the body, or been produced by the accidental ligature of the navel-string.

'It is part of the business of a course of lectures upon Medical Jurisprudence, to inform the medical student, when you are summoned upon a trial of this or that description, besides any facts which you may have witnessed, upon what points is the counsel on one or the other side likely to call for your opinion ?

'You will say, it is easy enough to give an opinion. I may answer, that lawyers have the advantage of medical men in this—that the opinions of medical men are submitted to a much more severe ordeal. Having given your opinion, you will be asked, what are the grounds of your opinion ? If you say, your own experience, the extent of this will be narrowly investigated. If you say, from analogical experiments, which you have made upon the lower animals (as it is very frequent that horses and dogs, and cats, and other animals, are drowned or poisoned with a view to throw light on the manner of death of a person supposed to have been murdered), you will be required to give a satisfactory answer to the questions : for example, whether any certain analogy is to be drawn from the effects of any given species of poison upon an animal of the brute creation, to that which it may have upon a human subject ; and whether particular substances, which would kill animals instantaneously, would have no noxious effect, or at least much less immediate effect upon the human subject ?

'I will give some extracts of examinations, where analogy has been stated as the ground of medical opinion.

'[Here the Professor read some passages from the direct and cross-examination of Dr Rattray —and then the following passage from the evidence of John Hunter on the memorable trial of Donellan.]

Mr John Hunter examined by Mr Newnham.

'Q. Is any certain analogy to be drawn from the effects of any species of poison upon an animal of the brute creation, to that which it may have upon the human subject ?—A. As far as my experience goes, which is not a very confined one, because I have poisoned some thousands of animals, they are very nearly the same. Opium, for instance, will poison a dog as well as a man ; arsenic will have very nearly the same effect upon a dog as it would have, I take it for granted, upon a man ; I know something of the effects of them, and I believe their operations will be nearly similar. Q. Are there not many things that kill animals almost instantaneously, that will have no detrimental or noxious effect upon a human subject ; spirits, for instance, occur to me ?—A. I apprehend a great deal depends upon the mode of experiment. No man is fit to make one, but those who have made many and paid considerable attention to all the circumstances that relate to experiments. It is a common experiment, which I believe seldom fails, and it is in the mouth of every body, that a little brandy will kill a cat. I have made the experiment, and have killed several cats ; but it is a false experiment. In all those cases where it kills the cat, it kills her by getting into her lungs, not into her stomach ; because, if you convey the same quantity of brandy, or three times as much, into the stomach, in such a way as that the lungs shall not be affected, the cat will not die. Now, in those experiments that are made by forcing an animal to drink, there are two operations going on ; one is a refusing the liquor, by the animal kicking and working with its throat to refuse it ; the other is a forcing the liquor upon the animal ; and there are very few operations of that kind but some of the liquor gets into the lungs. I have known it from experience. Q. If you had been called upon to dissect a body suspected to have died of poison, should you or not have thought it necessary to have pursued your search through the guts ?—A. Certainly. Q. Do you not apprehend that you would have been more likely to receive information from them than from any other part of the frame ?—A. That is the track of the poison, and I should certainly have followed that track through.'

'Nay, more : you will not always be let off with stating your own opinion, and giving some ground for it, but you will be expected to know something about the opinions of others ; or at least you will appear very ignorant if you do not. And it may be observed, that perhaps lawyers, whose freedom of intellectual inquiry is fettered in the closest and most servile manner by authority, are apt to lay too great stress upon authority in medical matters. You must constantly, therefore, be expected to be taxed with such questions as these : —What are Hunter's opinions upon such or such a subject ? Was Haller, was Dr Mead, of the opinion you are now giving ?

'I remember a medical man, at Lincoln, endeavoring to give the go-by to such questions, by slighting the information which was to be obtained from medical writers ; answering, that "the writers of books would advance anything." Chief Justice Dallas severely reprimanded the witness, observing, that he would not sit in a court of justice and hear science reviled, and the recorded researches of the medical world represented by ignorant tongues as leading only to uncertainty.

'It has been a great reproach to the medical profession, that, on the occasion of celebrated trials, the medical witnesses on the one side and the other have contradicted each other in such a point-blank manner in their opinions delivered upon oath.

'Thus in the case of Donnal, tried at Exeter, in 1817, for poisoning his mother-in-law with arsenic, Dr Edwards, for the prosecution, is asked —What is your opinion, from the appearance of the deceased on dissection, as to the cause of her death ?—A. From the appearance of the stomach and intestines, independently of the examination and analysis of their contents, I have no doubt that the death was produced by arsenic. And, in re-examination, you have stated your opinion that the death was not occassioned by cholera morbus, and have been asked several questions upon the nature of cholera : do you change your opinion ? A. I do not.—When Dr Adam Neale is called for the defence, he is asked—Did you hear distinctly the description Dr Edwards gave of the appearance of the stomach after it was opened ? To what should you, independently of other circumstances, have attributed that appearance ?—A. To no cause but disease. Q. What disease ?—A. Cholera morbus.—In this he is followed by two or three more doctors. Dr Edwards spoke also as to the certainty of two tests he had employed—blue vitriol and lunar caustic; and that the circumstances of Mrs Donnal having eaten onions shortly before her death, could not have affected the tests. The doctors for the defence denied the sufficiency of the tests, and deposed that the test would very probably be affected by the onions.

'So, in Donellon's trial, the doctors for the prosecution were particularly asked as to their opinion upon the symptoms described by Lady Boughton, and which I read on the last occasion ; and they say that they are of opinion, from the symptoms described, that the cause of the death was laurel water. Q. Is the heaving of the stomach a circumstance which attends epilepsy, or apoplexy ?—A. It is not.—Now, when John Hunter is called, he is asked—Are the symptoms that appeared after the medicine was given, such as necessarily to conclude that the person had taken poison ?—A. Certainly not. Q. If an apoplexy had come on, would not the symptoms have been nearly or somewhat similar ? - A. Very much of the same. Q. You have heard of the froth issuing from Sir Theodosius' mouth, a minute or two before he died ; is that peculiar to a man dying of poison ?—A. No ; I should rather suspect an apoplexy. You recollect the circumstances that was mentioned of a violent heaving of the stomach? —A. All that is the effect of the voluntary action being lost, and nothing going on but the involuntary.

'Again, the doctors for the prosecution swore that it was their opinion, from the appearances of the body on dissection, that Sir Theodosius had been poisoned ; and that those appearances could not arise from putrefaction. John Hunter said, that, in his judgment, the appearances were entirely the result of putrefaction, and that they did not afford the least suspicion that Sir Theodosius died of poison.

'But the most remarkable of a multitude of instances of cross-swearing by doctors, with regard to medical opinion, was in the case of Cowper, afterwards a Judge. He was tried for the murder of Mrs Stout, a Quaker lady, whose body was found in a river near Hertford, during the time Cowper was attending the Hertford assizes as a counsel, and who had fallen in love with Cowper. She had also written some love-letters to another swain, signed 'Your loving duck.' The charge against Cowper was, that he had strangled the woman, and then had thrown her body into the river, in order to give a color to the charge of suicide. At the time this happened, Cowper's father and brother were sitting members for Hertford, after a recent election, which had been strongly contested ; and the irritation occasioned by it was still active. Accordingly, a long list of Tory doctors were summoned for the prosecution, and an equally long list of Whig doctors for the defence. The contest was upon a point of medical opinion with regard to bodies found floating, without water in them—how the deceased came by their death. Mrs Stout was found at the top of the water the day after she was missing ; but her body was not opened till six weeks afterwards, when no water was found in it.

[The contradictions of the medical witnesses in this case were very remarkable indeed. We may refer the reader to them in Gordon Smith's Analysis of Med. Ev. pp. 274. 275. 281. 283.]

'I shall have occasion frequently, in the course of my lectures, to advert to the subject of the demeanor of medical witnesses. The hour will just allow of me, this evening, adverting to one piece of advice ; which is, in the witness-box to drop as much as possible the language which is known only to scientific men, and to adopt that which is in popular use. If you have occasion to speak of a person fainting, do not say, as I have heard it said, that you found the patient in a state of syncope ;—and you must not expect a court of justice to understand you if you talk of a person being comatose, or of the appearance of his stomach after death being highly vascular, or of your having discovered poisonous ingredients in his intestines by means of a delicate test. The Judge and counsel are generally very shallow men of science, and it is a great advantage for them to raise a laugh at persons whom they would represent to be using hard names for common things. Veterinary surgeons are a great game for counsel ; as I remember, in particular, a veterinary surgeon, who, when cross-examined by Serjeant Vaughan, was so unfortunate as to make use of the term "suspensary ligament," which the Serjeant interpreted "a hangman's noose." I should guard you also against the use of metaphorical expressions, of which I will give you an example.

'In the examination of Mr Tucker, in Donnall's case, the witness is asked Have you seen the prescription which Mr Edwards wrote that night? No I have not ; but I could wish to see it. (Here the prescription was shown to the witness). Now, supposing a person to have retchings and purgings for several hours, and that you found these attended with frequent and fluttering pulse, in that state of the illness what should you have prescribed ?—A. I should have prescribed diametrically opposite to the prescription of Dr Edwards ; I should consider that prescribed by Dr Edwards as adding weight to a porter's back. Mr Justice Abbott, (to the witness), Don't speak metaphorically : you are speaking just now of a gentleman of experience and respectability ; I don't wish you to conceal your opinion, but only to speak it in different language.

'And considering that, when you are giving testimony in a witness-box, you are discharging a most responsible duty upon your oaths, I should recommend you, even if you should meet with rude and unbecoming treatment from an advocate, that you should not vie with him in a dexterous use of what my Lord Bolingbroke calls "the flowers of Billingsgate." A short extract from a scene in the Oldham Inquest will illustrate my meaning.

'Mr Simmons, a surgeon of Manchester, in undergoing a cross examination by Mr Harmer. "I think," says Mr S., "I am more capable of forming a correct opinion on the subject than Mr Cox." "The jury, Sir," replies Mr H., "will no doubt duly appreciate the value of that self-opinion." Mr Ashworth.—Really, Mr Coroner, I must interpose to protect the witness from this sort of attack. Witness.—Oh ! Mr Ashworth, let me go on, I will teach him surgery ; I am anxious for a little more discussion ; he is not the first lawyer I have taught surgery. Mr Harmer.—Perhaps not ; but notwithstanding the opinion you entertain of your own skill, I should be very sorry to be under your hands. Witness.—Oh ! I'll teach you surgery, Sir. As you have challenged me with a castigation from different medical opinions, I hope you will bring down Dr Cline, Sir Everard Home, and the other leading members of the faculty. I shall be very happy to see them. Mr A.—I will ask you, Mr Coroner, whether the witness is to be attacked in this kind of way. Witness. I am sorry you should interrupt the gentleman, Mr Ashworth ; I am anxious for a little more discussion with him. (Here much clamor ensued, and different gentlemen addressed the Coroner together.) Witness.—I want a little more discussion ; don't interrupt the gentleman ; I should like a little more discussion with him. Mr H.—I beg you will hear Mr Simmons ; he says he wants a little more discussion. The Coroner.—I have exhausted all my patience,' &c.'—Legal Obs.

---

ON THE STUDY AND PRACTICE OF THE LAW.

In a Letter addressed to a Gentleman intended for the Bar, passing through a Solicitor's office.

Before I proceed to point out the course of study which I advise you to pursue, and the elementary works which I recommend you to consult, I consider it useful to commence with some preliminary instruction regarding your general conduct in the transaction of business, the best means of obtaining a practical knowledge of the routine of professional duty, and the details which will enable you to combine the skill of a man of business with the learning of a lawyer.

You will do well to avail yourself of all leisure hours to understand and make yourself master, as soon as possible, of those elementary books to which your attention will be directed. When tolerably well understood, they will enable you to comprehend the details of business in the office, and elsewhere, with much greater facility than the mere routine of such details alone could otherwise afford. But though elementary knowledge and elementary books are absolutely essential in the commencement of your studies, you must never forget that it is detail, and detail alone, that must ultimately be the business of your life, the source of your professional gains and professional honors; and that even elementary knowledge is by far the most valuable, the best understood, and the most lasting on the memory, when it is acquired through the medium of detail.

In this office you may see a certain routine of business, which, after you have left it for the Bar, you will have no further opportunity of observing. During the period that you are here therefore, consider the detail, the practice and the routine, that are passing before your eyes, as the primary objects; and do not esteem anything as too insignificant for your attention. Having observed it, endeavor, by research, and by inquiry and conversation, to trace its meaning, its history, and use, in all the ways that occur to you. You will often find those who know the routine without the least apprehension of its principles; but it should be your anxiety never to rest satisfied with such a state of information. You will find, hereafter, that it will be of the very essence of your profession to pass beyond the surface into the elements and foundation of these uninteresting minutiæ. To pursue the same observation: whenever an instance of business occurs in the office which engages your attention, or becomes a part of your duty, do not be satisfied with the particular part which you are to transact,—trace it from the beginning, unravel its complexities, pursue it watchfully to its termination, endeavor to throw an interest around it, and, as much as you can, to make it your own. You may often, in this way succeed in suggesting something material, that, others have not observed: you may prevent mistakes, and guide the affair to a more useful or more advantageous conclusion. Your own experience is, in the mean time, growing with your labors: not to mention in how high a degree your zeal and industry may be cultivated by habit, and how firm and how warm it makes those friends on whose behalf they are exerted.

Let it be therefore your first care always to master the principles of that which immediately engages your exertions; next to this, pass two or three hours daily in reading the elementary books which I shall hereafter recommend. There are various others to be afterwards read, but those I refer to will suffice for the present. Do not be alarmed at their number. Three hours a day, for a year, would make you thorough master of them all, without trenching upon more active labors; and a man who would devote that time steadily to reading in his profession, would become, in seven years, one of the first lawyers in the kingdom.

I add but a word more on your ulterior pursuits. When you have acquired as much as will be useful to you here, you will find the same observation applicable, in another shape, to your subsequent studies. You will go to a Pleader's office: when there, attend, as the first object, to the details of that office; collect, from the business of the office, and at your leisure, from books, the precedents and forms of pleading; and not merely collect, but observe and understand them, with all the attention of which you are master. Disentangle the obsolete and tautologous language of which they are made up. Observe the points they put in issue—the strictness and logical accuracy with which they bring out the matters to be tried in the cause, and with which they reject and cut off the extraneous and collateral confusion that belongs to all questions in dispute. Observe the evidence, and the rules of evidence, as applied to those forms of pleading. And afterwards, those forms of records which follow upon the verdict and the judgment, till the suit is terminated.

The reading of Cases, and search after them, will be the ultimate stage of your professional studies. This, again, is but the detail of that study which you will never relinquish while in the profession. The sooner you are in a situation to give up elementary reading, and devote yourself to these details and practical researches, the better. Lastly, remember that yours is a profession of incessant competition. Your competitors are daily and nightly at their labors in the closet; and it may be stated, as a proposition true, as a general one, that professional diligence, and professional honor and profit are corresponding and co-equal.

I now proceed to enumerate the several departments of study and practice, which it will be your duty to pursue, in order to obtain a thorough knowledge of your profession.

1. Deeds and Agreements, noticing their forms, and particularly the forms of covenants and agreements, and of the mode of deducing titles to estates. You will have an opportunity of seeing deeds, agreements, and abstracts; and while directing your attention to this subject, you should read and digest the second volume of Blackstone; Watkins' Principles of Conveyancing; Watkins or Scriven on Copyholds; Littleton's Tenures; Preston on Estates and Abstracts; Sugden's Law of Vendors and Purchasers; Coke upon Littleton; Sanders on Uses; Shepherd's Touchstone; urton's Compendium; and Platt on Covenants. The references in these and the other books, after mentioned, should be consulted.

2. Suits in Chancery, the forms of pleadings, and the jurisdiction and practice of that court, will next deserve your attention, particularly as regarding Injunctions, which connect themselves with Actions at Law. You will also have an opportunity of seeing bills, answers, and proceedings in Chancery; and while directing your attention to this point, you should read Mitford's, Cooper's, or Lube's Pleadings; Van Heythuson's Forms, a Synopsis of the Practice of the Court; and Maddock's Principles of Equity.

3. Acquire correct knowledge regarding Actions at Law, and their different sorts, the modes of prosecuting and defending them, and particularly of the pleadings and the practice of courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer. You will also have an opportunity of seeing proceedings in actions, and you will be materially assisted by reading the third volume of Blackstone; Boote's Suit at Law; Stephen on Pleading; Tidd's Practice; and Chitty's Pleadings. You will do right, if, in term time, you go through the different offices, and make yourself well acquainted with the business transacted at each, take as much responsibility upon yourself as you are able, and copy all forms, adverting particularly to the number of days necessary to be observed in the different proceedings, on which the practice wholly depends.

4. Observe the Trials of causes, study the rules of evidence, and the minor points necessary to be attended to in preparing for trial. This you will obtain by attending to causes as they proceed,—by a close consideration of the pleadings, and of the precise facts, and the exact evidence necessary to be, and which can be adduced,—and of the notices proper to be given; and, by reading Peake's, Phillips', and Starkie's, Evidence, the Nisi Prius Reports, and Selwyn's Law of Nisi Prius. The different text books will materially help you, viz. Bailey or Chitty on Bills of Exchange, Ross' Law of Vendors, Long's Law of Personal Property, Abbott on Shipping, Paley's Principal and Agent, Lawes on Charterparties, Montagu and Whittaker on Lien, Caldwell on Arbitrations, Montagu and Gow on Partnership, Parke or Hughes on Insurance, Holt's or George's Law of Libel, Fell on Guarantees, and Adams on Ejectment.

5. Obtain a knowledge of Bankruptcy. This will be acquired by actual business, and by seeing the proceedings which are kept under all commissions, and by reading and digesting all the bankrupt statutes and general orders in bankruptcy. You will also peruse Cooke's, Eden's, Montagu's, Christian's, Cullen's, or Whitmarsh's, Bankrupt Laws. The examination of bankrupts and witnesses before commissioners, forms a material part of business in bankruptcy, and deserves particular attention.

6. Acquire a general knowledge of the law relating to executors and administrators. This will connect itself more or less with the foregoing. Toller's Law of Executors and Administrators, and Preston on Legacies, should be well digested.

7. Acquire a thorough knowledge of merchants, accounts, and of the habits, manner, and forms, of business in general, not only in, but out of the profession, and of every subject connected with the law of merchants. In Beawes' Lex Mercatoria, by Chitty, you will find much useful information.

8. The practice of Sessions is very necessary to be attained, and this you will find in the fourth volume of Blackstone, Nolan's Poor Laws, and Chitty's Criminal Law. Of this practice I profess no particular knowledge, and therefore am unable to promise you any insight into it in our office.

9. The practice in election cases it is also desirable you should be acquainted with, and this you will find in Mr Roe's or Mr Rogers' publication, and in Sergeant Peckwell's cases.

10. The common lawyer may have frequent occasion to be employed in matters connected with the courts of Admiralty, and Ecclesiastical courts. The Admiralty business is divided into that of the Prize court, and that of the Instance court. The general forms of proceedings in both are to be collected from Clarke's Practice, and Marriott's Formulary. The forms of proceeding in the Admiralty court are those of Robinson, Edward, and Dodson; in the Ecclesiastical courts, those of Phillimore and Haggart.

11. Some knowledge of the law of Scotland may be desirable in the more advanced periods of study with a view to practising before the House of Lords.

12. The law of nations is incidentally touched upon in many courts; on this subject, Vattel's Law of Nations is the most approved authority.

In the hope that these suggestions, which are of a practical description and the result of experience, may be of use to you in your professional career, I remain, &c. &c.—Legal Obs.

---

VALUE OF A DOCTOR'S EVIDENCE.

It is, perhaps, not generally known, that the evidence of a physician is, in some cases, twice as good as any other person; as, although it is settled that the declarations of the deceased servants and acquaintances, however intimate, are not admissible in questions of pedigree, Johnson v. Lawson and another, S. C. Bing. 86., 9 Moore, 183., yet the mere conversation of a deceased doctor with a deceased barrister, although related by the doctor to a third person, is a good evidence! Thus, when the question was, whether a barrister or a packer was heir to an estate, and for the packer a witness was called to give evidence of what he had heard a deceased physician of the packer say as to declarations made by the barrister, who was also dead, the evidence was admitted; viz. that the physician had said that he had gone to his chambers and asked him whether he had any relations, to which he answered that he believed not, and that if he had, they must be very distant. M. S. E. T. 1776, 9 Moo. 187.

The answer of the barrister to this Paul Pry of a doctor reminds us of the conversation between Lord Thurlow and the officer of the Herald's College. When Lord Thurlow's patent of peerage was registered by the herald, he begged to know the name of his Lordship's mother? The reply was delivered in a voice of thunder,—'I cannot tell!'—Ib.

AMERICAN DECISIONS.

Nuisance.

If one discharges a gun at wild fowl, with knowledge and warning that the report will affect injuriously the health of a sick person in the neighborhood, and such effect is produced by the discharge, he is guilty of an indictable offence. Commonwealth v. Wing, 9 Pick. 1.

Sale of Ship.

Where a vessel is sold while at sea, it is sufficient for the vendee in order to maintain his title against a subsequent purchaser or attaching creditor, to take possession of her without any unreasonable delay after her arrival.

Whether the purchaser has taken possession of the vessel within a reasonable time after her arrival, is a question to be decided by the jury upon the circumstances of the case.

One eighth of a vessel at sea belonging to Hyannis, was sold to a person residing in Nantucket, on August 11; she arrived at Hyannis August 22, and sailed from there August 29, on a new voyage, and returned there again September 16, and was attached as the property of the vendor September 17. The vendee came from Nantucket by the first packet after receiving news of her arrival, and arrival at Hyannis September 23, and on that day replevied the vessel. It did not appear that the vendee knew of the vessel's being at Hyannis in August, while she was there. Held, that the vendee's title should prevail against the attachment. Joy et al. v. Sears, Ib. 4.

Where H purchased three quarters of a vessel, two quarters for himself and one quarter for C. according to a previous agreement between them, and had the bill of sale of three quarters made to himself alone, and agreed to make a bill of sale of one quarter to C. but when C. applied for a bill of sale afterwards, refused to deliver it; held, that H could maintain no action against C. for the price of one quarter without first tendering a bill of sale.

H, in his life-time, made a bill of sale to C, but did not deliver it, and his executrix more than two years after the original purchase, tendered this bill of sale to C. which he refused to accept. Held, that the executrix could not maintain any action against C. for the price of the one quarter.

A certificate signed by C. that he had purchased one quarter of the vessel of H, is not conclusive evidence of a sale to C. and the property is not transferred to him, if it was understood by the parties at the time the certificate was given, that a bill of sale was to be given in order to complete C's title. Higgins, Ex. v. Chessman. Ib. 7.

New Trial.

In an action on the case to recover damages for the breach of a contract, a new trial may be granted because the damages found by the jury are too small. Taunton Manufacturing Co. v. Smith, Ib. 11.

Trustee Process.

Where G. being summoned as trustee of B. disclosed an indenture of two parts, between B. on the one part, and the respondent of the other part, whereby all the goods and chattels of B. were assigned to the respondent in trust to pay B's creditors, and it did not appear that any creditor had signed or assented to the indenture, the respondent was adjudged trustee. Vial v. Bliss and Tr. Ib. 135.

A general assignment of a debtor's property, real and personal, in trust for the payment of debts, containing a covenant on the part of the trustees, that the debtor shall be permitted to use and occupy the property, committing no waste thereon, until it shall be sold or disposed of in the due execution of the trust, is not per se fraudulent as against creditors not parties to the assignment. Baxter v. Wheelor and Tr. Ib. 21.

Larceny.

Doves are animals feræ naturæ, and cannot be the subject of larceny, unless when they are in the custody of the owner; as, for example, in a dove-house. Commonwealth v. Chase, Ib. 15.

Statute of Limitations.

In the case of a joint and several note made by two promisors, a partial payment made within six years by the administrator of one of them will not take the note out of the statute of limitations as against the surviving promisor. Hathaway v. Haskell, Ib. 42.

Officer's Return.

In trover by an officer against a stranger, for a chattel seized on execution, the officer is not required to prove the seizure by a return on the execution, but he may prove it by parol evidence. Hovey v. Lovell. Ib. 58.

Promissory Note.

Where a sale of chattels is made by A, and he receives the purchaser's note for the price and negotiates it, or obtains payment upon it, and the chattels are afterwards attached as the property of A, in an action of replevin brought by the purchaser against the attaching officer, A is not a competent witness to prove that the sale was fraudulent.

But if it be doubtful whether the note is negotiable or not, and if it is negotiable, whether it has been in fact negotiated, or still remains in the hands or control of A, he is a competent witness.

A judgment in the replevin suit in favor of the officer, would be a bar to an action on the note by A. Bailey v. Foster. Ib. 189.

In an action by the indorsee of a note against the maker, it is no defence that in consequence of the insolvency of the maker, the payee sold it to the plaintiff for much less than the sum due upon it, and upon a verbal condition that the plaintiff would exact of the maker only about as much as the plaintiff gave for the note. Babson v. Webber, Ib. 163.

Trustee Process.

Where one summoned as trustee in a process of foreign attachment, discloses a conveyance of land to him from the principal defendant, he may be interrogated whether there was any agreement in writing or by parol, that he should dispose of the land and account to the defendant for the proceeds.

If such respondent admits that he held the land in trust to sell and account for the proceeds, he may be further interrogated as to the time of the sale and disposition of the proceeds.

Where one summoned as trustee owes the principal defendant a debt which is barred by the statute of limitations, he may rely on such bar, in his answers. Hazen v. Emerson, Ib. 144.

Amendment of Officer's Return.

An amendment made by leave of court, by an officer, to his return on a writ, cannot affect the rights of persons not parties to the suit, acquired before the amendment is made.

An officer returned on a writ, that he had attached a piece of land of the debtor on a certain day. Before that day a mortgage made by the debtor had been placed on record. The officer afterwards, by leave of court, amended his return so as to date the attachment before the recording of the mortgage, though not before before its delivery; and the land was seasonably set off to the creditor on an execution issuing in the case. Held, that the title of the mortgagee should prevail over that of the judgment creditor. Emerson v. Upton, Ib. 167.

Contract.

A person entering into a contract is not bound to the usage of a particular business, unless it is so general as to furnish a presumption of knowledge, or it is proved that he was acquainted with it.

It was a rule in a woollen factory in Andover and some other neighboring factories, that no person employed should leave their service without giving a fortnight's notice of his intention to quit. A weaver, who did not know of this rule, worked in the factory without any agreement as to the terms of service, but was paid by the yard for the work which he turned out. He left the factory without giving any previous notice. Held, that the rule was not binding on him, and that he therefore was not liable to an action for damages by the owner of the factory, for thus leaving. Stevens v. Reeves, Ib. 198.

Corporation.

The by-laws of a corporation required that all transfers of shares should be made in a book to be kept by the treasurer. Held, that an assignment of shares by the deed of the vendor, accompanied by a delivery of the certificates to the vendee, was valid, without any transfer on the books of the corporation, not only between the vendor and vendee, but against a creditor of the former who attached the shares before any notice of the sale had been given to himself or to the treasurer of the corporation.

It seems that the vendee could not compel a payment of dividends, or claim a certificate from the corporation, without first applying to have the transfer made according to the by-law. Sargent v. Essex, M. R. Corp. Ib. 202.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

A, being the owner of a factory and the machinery in it, gave a bond to S, conditioned that he would convey them to S, when certain negotiable notes given as the consideration, should be paid, and that S should have the possession of the property, so long as he continued to pay the notes as they become due, and no longer, and possession was delivered immediately pursuant of the bond. Before the first note became due, the machinery was attached as S's property, and was removed from the factory by the officer, who, before the removal, had full notice of A's title, and the machinery was afterwards sold on execution. A then brought an action against the officer, in which the declaration contained counts in trover and case. Held, 1. That A might maintain case for the injury done to his reversionary interest in the machinery: 2. That the proceeds at the sheriff's sale were not the measure of damages in the action: 3. That the measure of damages was the value of the machinery as it stood in the factory, before its removal.

The court refused to set aside the verdict in this case on the ground of excessive damages, though the amount was nearly three times as much as that produced by the sheriff's sale.

Whether the count in trover could be supported, quære.

It seems that if S himself had removed and sold the machinery, A might have brought trover against the vendee. Ayer v. Bartlett, Ib. 156.

PLEA OF NOLO CONTENDERE.

The plea of nolo contendere to an indictment, has the same effect as a plea of guilty, so far as regards the proceedings on the indictment; and a defendant who is sentenced upon such a plea, to pay a fine, is convicted of the offence for which he was indicted.

But a plea of nolo contendere, with a protestation of the defendant's innocence, will not conclude him in a civil action from disputing the facts charged in the indictment.

A statute directs that a penalty recovered upon an indictment shall go to the county. The record of a conviction under the statute, which stated, that the court directed the fine 'to be disposed of according to law,' was held sufficient. Commonwealth v. Horton, Ib. 206.

ASSIGNMENT.

Where a debtor assigns property to a creditor in payment of a debt, with a covenant of general warranty, and the same property is attached by another creditor, the debtor is a competent witness to support the title of the assignee, in an action between him and the attaching creditor, the witness standing neutral in regard to interest.

Where a point in a cause is clearly proved by competent evidence and found by the jury, a new trial will not be granted because of the incidental admission of improper and not very important evidence tending to prove the same point.

Where property is assigned by a debtor to two persons by one instrument, to 'hold to them respectively in the proportions which the debts due to them respectively bear to each other,' and the assignment is proved to be fraudulent and void as to one of the assignees, it is nevertheless valid in respect to the other who is innocent of the fraud; their interest in the fund being several, though if the instrument were valid in the whole they would take as tenants in common.

As the bona fide assignee in such case takes only an undivided portion of the property, he cannot maintain trespass, trover, or replevin, against an officer who attaches the property on a writ against the assignor, but the officer can legally sell on execution only the part which was fraudulently assigned, and the bona fide assignee will hold as tenant in common with the purchaser: or if the whole shall be sold and such assignee elects to affirm the sale, he will be entitled to a share of the proceeds, having given notice to the officer before they have been paid over.

But where it was agreed by such assignee and the attaching creditor, that a third person should take possession of the property and sell it, and retain the proceeds subject to the legal rights of all persons interested therein, and should pay over the same to such persons and in such proportions as it should be decided judicially they were entitled to, and the property was sold accordingly, it was held, that such assignee might maintain an action against such third person to recover his share of the proceeds. Prince v. Shepard. Ib. 176.

CONTRACT.

Where individuals, having a design to be incorporated for the purpose of creating a water power, cause surveys and estimates to be made of the water power which can be created, and thereupon represent it to be greater than it really is, but without any intention to deceive, persons who subscribe for stock in the corporation upon the faith of such representation and agree to be personally liable for assessments, cannot avoid the contract on the ground of the mistake.

Where an act of incorporation required that the capital stock should consist of 5000 shares, and that the whole number should be subscribed for before an assessment should be laid, and 30 of the 5000 shares were subscribed for by A on account of B, but without authority, it was held, that the capital stock was not all taken up in such a manner as to authorize the corporation to lay an assessment; the effect of A's subscription being not to make him a member of the corporation, but only to subject him to a special action of the case for damages.

If all the shares in such a corporation are taken up by solvent persons, the unexpected insolvency of some of them, whether before or after the corporate powers have been exercised, will not deprive the corporation of the power to lay assessments.

But where only a part of the shares were originally taken up, and some of the subscribers became insolvent, and in laying an assessment to defray preliminary expenses, (which was allowed by the act of incorporation,) the insolvent subscribers were not assessed, and afterwards additional subscribers were obtained, it was doubted whether the corporation could consider the insolvent persons as stockholders.

Whether in a case where by an act of incorporation the shares in the capital are made liable to be sold for non-payment of assessments, and the subscribers to the stock sign an agreement making themselves liable personally to a certain amount, a vote of the corporation, that the subscribers shall be liable personally for only a part of such amount, will have the effect to discharge a dissenting subscriber entirely from his personal liability, quære. Salem Mill-Dam Corp. v. Ropes. Ib. 187.

ENGLISH.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.—APRIL.

Burrells vs. Smith.

This action was tried at the sittings after last Term. It was one of many actions of a like nature which arose out of the failure of the London Western Hospital, a charitable speculation of Dr Sleigh and several other physicians, and an undertaker. The question involved in the cause is one of considerable interest, being, whether or not subscribers to charitable or other institutions, who may act as committee men, are liable for the debts contracted in the undertaking. The present action was brought by a baker for bread supplied to the Hospital, against the defendant, a subscriber and committee man, and a verdict for 52*l.* the amount of his claim, was given by the Jury.

Mr Sergeant SPANKIE now moved for a new trial contending that gentlemen who subscribed to charities of this or any other description, and devoted part of their time to superintending the proper application of their money, could not be considered answerable for demands of tradesmen for goods supplied to the charity. In this instance Mr Smith had given a sum of money, and there his interest and concern in the undertaking ceased—he not considering himself as acting for his own benefit in sitting on the committee. If gentlemen in the situation of Mr Smith were to be made liable for the supplies of tradesmen, there would be a very natural check to the flow of benevolence in the country.

The court admitted the hardship of the case, and expressed a wish that the whole question of liability could be canvassed, although they were of opinion, from the nature of the evidence in the present case, defendant would not receive much benefit from it.

Rule granted.

---

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

Sittings in Banco.

Hoby vs. Pitt.

Mr Sergeant Russell moved for a rule to show cause why the verdict in this case for the plaintiff should not be set aside, and a new trial granted, under the following circumstances:—

The plaintiff employed the defendant as his attorney in two actions, which had been brought against him by two different individuals. The defendant, not having much Common Law practice, went with the plaintiff to an attorney named Wodehouse, who acted as Mr Pitt's agent in actions at Common Law, on the Saturday before the opening of the Commission of Assize, which was on the Thursday following. Mr Wodehouse undertook to have the briefs delivered to Counsel, if the plaintiff would bring him the money on the Monday. The plaintiff brought some witnesses on the Tuesday when Mr Wodehouse informed him that others were necessary, upon which he said he would bring them on the ensuing day, together with the money for the briefs. He did not come, however, and, as the briefs were not delivered, he lost both actions. He then brought an action against Mr Pitt, to recover from him the costs and damages which he had sustained in both actions. This action was tried at the last Assizes for Hereford, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, with damages, 166*l.* 19*s.*

The Learned Counsel now moved for a rule to set aside the verdict, on the ground, first, that the plaintiff was himself the cause of his own loss, in not having furnished the money, which it was contended that the attorney was not bound to supply; and, secondly, on the ground of excessive damages, inasmuch as in one of the actions Mr Hoby had no good ground of defence.

The Court granted a rule to show cause, a case having been cited in which it had been held that an attorney was not bound to proceed if his client did not furnish him with the means of doing so.

---

The Apothecaries' Company vs. Ryan.

This was an action tried at the last Assizes for the county of Kent, for the purpose of recovering from the defendant, who is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, certain penalties for having practised as an apothecary, he not being a licentiate of the Apothecaries' Company. The Jury found for the plaintiff, on the ground that in one of the cases adduced there was no external injury, such as constituted it a surgical case, according to the direction of the Learned Judge, Mr Baron Bayley.

Mr Platt now moved for a rule to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial granted, on the ground of misdirection on the part of the Learned Judge, in stating that, unless there was some external injury or disease, the case could not be considered as surgical; and, secondly, on the ground that the evidence of the principal witness, who was a member of the Apothecaries' Company, was inadmissible, he being an interested witness, inasmuch as the penalty went one half to the informer, and the other half to the Company.

The Learned Judges, after hearing the Counsel at considerable length, gave their opinions seriatim. Though they were unanimous in thinking that the line laid down by Mr Baron Bayley as to the limit of a surgeon's practice was too narrow, yet they felt equally certain that one of the cases adduced against the defendant could not be construed into a surgical case. The patient was laboring under consumption and the defendant sent him medicine. It was true he also bled him; but the mere circumstance of its being necessary to bleed the patient was not sufficient to make the case a surgical one, for it was well known that every apothecary in the kingdom was in the habit of performing that operation; besides which it was equally well known that consumption was a medical, and not a surgical, complaint; while also the defendant had sent medicine,w hich clearly did not come within the province of a surgeon. Upon the other point, however—namely, the admissibility of the evidence of the witness alluded to—the Court had great doubts; and upon that ground and that alone, a rule was granted to show cause.

Mr Platt said that Mr Ryan had displayed so much talent and skill in his profession, in the treatment of the very cases which had been adduced against him, that the gentlemen who heard the trial thought the Company ought at once to have made him a member of their fraternity—(a laugh.)

Lord Tenterden (laughing)—Perhaps so; but you cannot make that part of your motion—(a laugh). We have no power to issue a mandamus to compel them to do so.

---

LEGAL CHRISTMAS BOXES.

In the report of the Commissioners for inquiring into the duties, salaries, and emoluments of the judges, &c of the courts of justice in England, it appears that the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, 'according to ancient usage, receives annually at Christmas four yards of broad cloth from Blackwell Hall, and thirtysix loaves of sugar presented to him by particular officers on the plea side of the Court; and that each Puisne judge receives annually from the same officers a small silver plate and eighteen loaves of sugar.—Literary Panorama, Dec. 1818.

---

FEME COVERT.

On shewing cause against a rule, calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the bail-bond should not be delivered up to be cancelled on filing common bail, on the ground that the defendant had been arrested on a promissory note given by her when a married woman, the following facts appeared: The defendant had gone to the bankrupt, of whom the plaintiffs were assignees, and told them that she was a married woman, but that she was about to be divorced. She had some time afterwards gone again, and producing a piece of parchment, which she declared to be an Act of Parliament divorcing her from her husband, and empowering her to marry a banker in Pall Mall, ordered some clothes for her wedding. A few days after she gave a promissory note for the amount and on this instrument she was arrested. It was contended, that as she had represented herself at the time of getting credit to be unmarried, she must be left to her plea, and could not be relieved on motion.

In support of the rule it was submitted, that as it was not negatived by the bankrupt, that he knew she was a married woman at the time the note was given, the defendant was entitled to be discharged. If the arrest had been for the goods, and not on the note, it would have been different.

The Court was of opinion, that the defendant ought not to be discharged on motion, as she had clearly obtained credit by a fraudulent representation of her circumstances. Rule discharged, with costs. Littledale, J. Simon and others, assignees of Rogers, v. Winnington, M. T. 1830.

---

SIR WILLIAM BLACKSTONE.

In the Oxford collection of verses, on the birth of the prince of Wales, (George the Fourth,) there is the following elegant compliment to this learned commentator, on the Laws of England, in a copy of Latin verses, insribed to the celebrated Dr King, principal of St Mary Hall, by the Hon. Thomas Fitzmaurice, brother to the marquis of Lansdowne, at that time a gentleman commoner at Oxford, and who was attending Sir William (then Dr) Blackstone's lectures:

——Me spinosa morantur
Sed jucunda simul Juris documenta Britanni
Deflectuntque alio, nam quis salebrosa locorum
Respuat, atque illo comes ire docento recuset,
Cui Musa, eloquii grato moderamine, legum,
Enodare dedit laqueos, et pandere jussit
Perplexos æditus et cæca retexere fila?

European Mag. Sept. 1793.

Should the contemplated changes of the law take place, Blackstone's admirable work will fall into practical oblivion. It will cease to be useful as an initiatory work for the legal student, and will be consulted only by the curious, who desire to learn what the law once was, and by the general reader who wishes to peruse a fine specimen of didactic composition. Some lively observations on the effect produced on the law in his time, by tampering and botching, are to be found in the original letter of the learned commentator, published in the Jurisprudent, No. 50.

THE JURISPRUDENT.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 23, 1831.

The present number completes the first volume of the Jurisprudent. The experience of a year had satisfied us, if not our readers, that the materials for such a Journal are abundant, and that, with proper management, it may be made profitable to the Publishers, and instructive and acceptable to the Profession. How far we have succeeded in making our Paper of the latter character, it is for others to judge.

The project of a weekly Legal Newspaper, was, we believe, entirely new in this country and in England, when we commenced our undertaking. Since then one or more publications of the kind have been started in London and have met with great success. Although we are not permitted to say quite as much for ourselves touching the patronage we have received, we can, in truth, say, that it has been equal to our expectations.

Circumstances, however, exist, which render it expedient to suspend the publication of our paper for a few weeks, at least.

Should our old subscribers, after that, see fit to continue their patronage, and the public afford us reasonable ground of encouragement, we shall recommence the Jurisprudent, under more favorable circumstances, and in another (octavo) form.

Should such be the event, we shall be glad to receive aid from our friends, and shall hope to convince them, at the end of another volume, that our wisdom has grown with our experience, and to find ourselves, that our list of subscribers has grown with both.

---

SALVAGE.

The City of Edinburgh steam vessel of 450 tons' burden, with 50 passengers and a cargo from Leith to London, in the beginning of January last met with foul weather off Flamborough Head; and, after reaching the Humber on the 12th, she took shelter under a shoal at the mouth of the river. The gale increasing, she was driven from her anchor, and proceeded towards Blakeney, on the coast of Norfolk, but was unable to cross the bar. On the 13th she anchored about three miles from the coast, in nine fathoms' water. Here the circumstances took place which formed the subject of the suit. On the part of the salvors (boatmen in Blakeney, twenty-five in number) it was alleged, that the steam vessel, when first seen, was in great distress, driving towards a lee shore, the wind E. N. E.; that she made signals of distress; and the salvors, after endeavoring in vain to get out the lifeboat, kept watch all night on the deck; that the steamer manifested an intention of running on the lee shore, which would have been certain destruction, but the salvors, by waving a jacket, warned her off; that the weather continued extremely boisterous after the vessel had got off Blakeney bar, the salvors still endeavoring to get to her assistance, and the steamer still showing signals of distress, night and day; that on the 15th they succeeded in getting to her, and found that a boat from Wells had reached her; that the mate of the City of Edinburgh had admitted that her engine was ruined, that she was strained to pieces, and that her seams were so open that you might see the green sea through the engine room ; that the master told the salvors the vessel and cargo were worth 33,000*l.*, and that they would be well rewarded for their trouble ; that they exerted themselves at the risk of their lives, and got her into Blakeney harbor that day, and continued on board till the 17th, when the storm had abated ; that the master (Fraser) refused then to make any remuneration beyond the sum of 10*l.* for pilotage, which had since been increased to a tender of 15*l.*

On the part of the ship and cargo it was alleged, in the first place, that when they were approaching Blakeney the wind was not E. N. E., but E. by S., which did not blow direct upon the land : and further, that upon nearing Blakeney, the flag was hoisted on the church, to denote that there was sufficient water, but being unable to see the buoy, owing to a sudden fall of snow, the master was obliged to haul off, and remained all the ensuing day, (the 13th) within three miles of the shore; that the only color shown was the union jack at the foretop-mast head, the usual signal for a pilot, which in the evening (as was customary) was exchanged for a light ; that on that and the following day no pilot came out (though a boat might have come with the greatest safety,) notwithstanding an additional (customary) signal shown in the mizen rigging ; that at daylight on the 15th, the vessel having rode out the gale during the night, a boat from Wells came to the vessel, and tendered aid; that the master was warned of the extortionate character of the Blakeney men ; that the only engagement made when the Blakeney boat came up (which claimed the right of piloting) was for piloting the steamer into Blakeney harbor ; that when in the harbor the master was informed, that during the gale some sailors had volunteered to man the life-boat, to go to the assistance of the vessel, but the Blakeney men had taken it from the sailors, saying it would not pay them for their trouble, but, if the storm increased, the vessel would go on shore, and then they should get well paid ; that the master never stated the value of the ship and cargo was 33,000*l.*, or any other amount ; that it was in fact only 13,000*l.*; and he denied that he had promised any remuneration beyond the pilotage.

Dr Adams, for the salvors, contended that a fair claim for salvage was laid in the whole of the conduct of the salvors' from the time of waving the jacket, which saved the vessel from destruction, to the salvors going off, at the imminent peril of their lives, as soon as it was practicable, and bringing the vessel into Blakeney harbor. He contended, that it was not the duty of a pilot, for mere pilotage, to risk his life by going in bad weather to a vessel which wanted a pilot. Attempts had been made to put off the life-boat, which was found to be impracticable ; and with respect to the extraordinary statement alleged on hearsay, that the salvors had prevented others from going to the vessel's relief, he would only say, that if these men had so misconducted themselves, they should have been proceeded against before the local magistrates, under an act of parliament (57 G. 3. c. 70.) for improving Blakeney harbor, and which inflicted penalties on pilots refusing to go out. He contended that the charge should have been differently made ; and that it was only set up to detract from the merit of the service, and to injure the present benefit and the future prospects of the men by unfounded and cruel allegations.

The King's Advocate (with whom was Dr Phillmore) said, that in a claim for salvage the first merit was promptness in rendering service, and contempt of danger ; but he looked in vain for one circumstance to show such merit in this case. The utmost service was one of pilotage. As to the assertions respecting the state of the vessel and its open seams, it was strange that she had actually undergone no caulking since, and had yet performed thirteen voyages. Giving to the salvors the whole benefit of their plea, there had been no salvage service rendered. But when the evidence of the owners was examined, the case assumed a character of importance to the interests of navigation, which the court was bound to protect against extortionate demands of this nature.

Sir C. Robinson proposed to the two Trinity Masters by whom he was assisted the following questions :—First, whether, regard being had to the state of the wind and weather on the 13th and 14th of January, it was in the power of the salvors to go off to the vessel as pilots, and bring her into the harbor ; secondly, whether their services on the 15th were so enhanced by the danger as to establish a claim to a reward, in addition to their pilotage, on that account.

The two gentlemen declared their opinion to be, that, allowing there was difficulty and danger in getting off on the 13th and 14th, there had been a want of exertion on the part of the salvors ; and that they had made no fair trial, which it was their duty to make, as pilots ; and that there was no danger whatever on the 15th ; and that all the service rendered that day was simple pilotage, the weather being moderate, and the wind fair for the harbor.

Sir C. Robinson declared that such was his opinion : and he therefore pronounced against the claim for remuneration. With regard to the charge against the salvors, of refusing to go out, in expectation of reaping an advantage from the expected augmented peril of the vessel, he observed, that the charge ought to have been more specific, and brought in a different form. As to the cost, he was not, under all the circumstances, disposed to give them against the salvors. He could not by any means extenuate their conduct. It was wrong, it was foolish ; but it was the way in which persons in their situation were too apt to act, and he could not put such interpretation upon it as to say that it was malicious. On the other hand, the master's conduct had been negligent, to say the least of it, in not bringing the charge in a more specific shape, and not making any complaint upon the subject in his protest. By giving costs against the salvors, he should throw upon these poor people a burden greater than their pilotage. He should pronounce for the tender, and decree all the salvors' expenses. —Admiralty Court, H. T. 1831.

---

LAW AGAINST A MAN SPENDING MORE THAN HE HAS.

During the protectorate of Cromwell (1657) an act of parliament was passed, entitled 'An act for punishing of such persons as live at high rates, and have no visible estate, profession, or calling, answerable thereto.' The preamble recites, that 'divers lewd and dissolute persons in this commonwealth live at very high rates and great expenses, having no visible estate, &c to maintain themselves in their licentious, loose, and ungodly practices, but make it their trade and livelihood to cheat, deboyst, cozen, and deceive the young gentry and other good people of this commonwealth.' The authority given to magistrates under this act was curious. Every justice of the peace, mayor, or head officer, might issue his warrant to bring such persons before him, and require bail for their appearance at the next general session, and in default of such bail commit them to prison. They were then to be indicted at the said sessions 'for living at high rates and great expenses, having no visible estate,' &c ; and upon conviction they were commited to hard labor for three months. Upon a second conviction they were to be committed as aforesaid, and detained until discharged by the jnstices in open sessions. If this law were now in force, how crowded would be the House of Correction ! How constantly would the treadmill be kept in motion ! How would the company at our fashionable hotels, theatres, and promenades, be thinned ! The revival of the law would excite as great a commotion in Bond Street and Brighton, as Lord Wynford's bill is likely to create 'on the other side of the water.'

Literary Panorama, July, 1819.

---

A ROYAL OUTLAW.

The king of Spain was outlawed in Westminster hall, I being of counsel against him. A merchant had recovered costs against him in a suit, which because he could not get, we advised to have him outlawed for not appearing, and so he was. As soon as Gondemar heard that, he presently sent the money, by reason, if his majesty had been outlawed, he could not have had the benefit of law, which would have been very prejudicial, there being then many suits depending betwixt the king of Spain and our English merchants.—Selden's Table Talk.

---

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Practice of Conveyancing, comprising Rules for the Preparation and Examination of all ordinary Abstracts of Title, together with the law of Evidence connected with the Title to Real and Personal Property. By James Stewart, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq. Barrister at Law.

Practical Points or Maxims in Conveyancing: being Selections from the MSS. of Mr Butler, Mr Preston, Mr Bradley, Mr Barton, Sen , the late Mr Downing, and others. The whole revised and arranged alphabetically for the use of Students and Practitioners. With Explanatory Remarks, and an Appendix containing Observations on Shelley's settlement. By Charles Barton, Jun. Esq. of the Middle Temple.

Archbold's Summary of the Law relative to Pleadings and Evidence in Criminal Cases; with Precedents of Indictments, &c, and the Evidence necessary to support them. Fourth Edition, corrected and enlarged, with the Decision and Statutes to the present time. By John Jervis, of the Middle Temple, Esq. Barrister at law.

An Abridgment of the Law of Nisi Prius. By William Selwyn, Esq. Barrister at Law. The Eighth Edition, with considerable alterations and additions.

Concise Forms in Conveyancing. By Thomas Coventry, Esq. Barrister at Law. Fourth Edition.

A Memoir of the Life of Robert Henley, Earl of Northington, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain. By the Right Hon. Robert, Lord Henley, his Grandson.

A Treatise on the Parties to Actions, the Forms of Actions, and on Pleading; with Second and Third Volums, containing Precedents of Pleadings in three Volumes. By Joseph Chitty, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. The Fifth Edition, corrected and enlarged.

VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS, recently received from Europe, and for sale by GRAY & BOWEN, No 141 Washington street.

Browne's Self Interpreting Bible, with notes, references, illustrations, reflections, and a memoir of the author; in one large quarto volume.

The Mirror of Parliament, edited by John Barrow Esq. This work contains a complete account of the doings and debates in the British Parliament, during the last December session ; in eight parts, folio.

Select Views on the River Clyde, engraved by Joseph Swan, with historical and descriptive illustrations; in one quarto volume, with fortytwo splendid engravings.

Select Views of the Lakes of Scotland, from original paintings ; in two parts.

Hinton's History and Topography of the United States. This work will be completed in thirty numbers, quarto, with ninety engravings; eight numbers are already received.

History of the sufferings of the Church of Scotland, from the restoration to the revolution ; by Rev. Robert Wodrow; 4 vols. 8vo.

History and Antiquities of the Doric Race ; by C. O. Müller; 2 vols. 8vo.

History of Scotland, from the Union; by John Struthers ; 2 vols. 8vo.

A Selection from the Papers of the Earls of Marchmont ; illustrative of events from 1685 to 1750 ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, complete in two vols. 8vo.

A System of Geography, popular and scientific ; illustrated by a complete series of maps and other engravings ; by James Bell ; 3 vols. 8vo.

McUre's History of Glasgow, with plates and illustrations ; 1 vol.

History of Modern Greece ; by James Emerson ; 2 vols. 8vo.

Rollins' Ancient History, with Life, notes and numerous maps and plates ; 3 vols. 8vo.

Thompson's Narrative of an official visit to Guatamala ; 1 vol.

Six Years' residence in the United States of America ; by Peter Neilson ; 1 vol.

Lardner's Cyclopedia ; complete set as far as published; 16 vols.

Lardner's Cabinet Library, annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 1831.

Murphy's Treatise on the art of Weaving; with fifteen engravings ; 1 vol.

Mackenzie on the Diseases of the Eye ; 1 vol.

Spix's Travels in Brazil, with engravings ; 2 vols. 8vo.

BYRON'S WORKS—a new and beautiful edition, with a portrait, and other engravings ; in 4 vols. 16mo.

Evan's Sketch of the Denominations of the Christian World ; 1 vol.

Addison's Works ; 4 vols. ; a new edition.

Bowring's Poetry of the Magyars; 1 vol.

Constable's Miscellany ; vols. 60 to 65 inc.

Family Library.—Lives of British Painters—Lives of Physicians—Life of Bruce—Court and Camp of Buonaparte—Demonology and Witchcraft.

Foreign Tales and Traditions ; 2 vols.

The Casquet, or Literary Gem ; edited by Alexander Whitelaw ; 2 vols.

do do do (2d series) 2 vols.

The Atheneum, an original Literary Miscellany; 1vol.

The Midsummer Medley for 1830; by the author of Brambletye House.

Life on board a Man of War ; 1 vol.

Robertson's Parent's Guide to Baptism; 1 vol.

Gospel Truth accurately stated and illustrated ; by Rev. John Brown ; 1 vol.

Outline of the Scripture Evidence for the Trinity ; 1 vol.

The New Testament, translated by Doddridge, Campbell and Macknight ; 1 vol. 12mo.

An Essay on Chemical Analysis; by M. Thenard; translated by J. G. Children ; 1 vol.

Aids to Reflection ; by S. T. Coleridge ; 1 vol.

Fabliaux, or Tales of the 12th and 13th centuries.

A Help to Professing Christians ; by Rev. John Barr ; 1 vol.

The Wine Drinker's Manual ; 1 vol.

The Shamrock, a collection of Irish Songs.

The National Minstrel ; a choice selection of popular songs.

Parochial Psalmody ; by J. P. Clarke.

Pinnock's Sacred Geography and History.

Pinnock's Modern Geography and History.

The Caterer ; being a selection of pieces in prose and verse ; 1 vol.

Johnson's Dictionary, complete in one imperial 8vo.

Morewood's Essay on Inebriating Liquors.

Dibdin's Library Companion ; 1 vol.

Biblia Hebraica.

Novum Testamentum Græce.

Aristophanes Comædiæ.

Sophocles Tragædiæ.

Pindari Carmina.

Æschyli Tragædiæ. May 21

---

THIS DAY published by GRAY & BOWEN, 141 Washington street, the North American Review, No. LXXII.

Contents.

Art I. The Laws of Population and Wages.

1. Two Lectures on Population, delivered before the University of Oxford in Easter Term, 1828. By Nassau William Senior, late Fellow of Magdalen College, A. M. Professor of Political Economy. To which is added a Correspondence between the Author and the Rev T. R Malthus.

II. Poetry and Romance of the Italians.

1. Della Letteratura Italiana, Di Camillo Ugoni.

2. Storia della Letteratura Italiana. Del cavaliere Giuseppe Maffei.

3. Storia della Letteratura Italiana nel secolo XVIII di Antonio Lombardi.

III. Origin and Progress of the Useful Arts.

The Frugal Housewife. By the Author of Hobomok.

IV. Pennsylvania Biography.

Memoirs of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Part II.

V. Defence of Mechanical Philosophy.

Signs of the Times.—Article VII. in the Ninety-eighth Number of the Edinburgh Review, for June, 1829.

VI. The Cherokee Case.

1. Opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on an Application made by the Cherokee Indians for a Writ of Injunction against the State of Georgia, delivered by Mr Chief Justice Marshall, at the January Term held at Washington, 1831.

VII. The Prospect of Reform in Europe.

L'Avenir. Par M. J. L. Sismondi. Extrait de la Revue Encyclopedique.

VIII. Popular Sports and Festivals.

The Sports and Pastimes of the people of England. By Joseph Strutt. A New Edition, with a Copious Index. By William Hone.

IX. Harvard University

Letter to Governor Lincoln in relation to Harvard University. By F. C. Gray. Second Edition, with an Appendix.

X. Life and Character of Henry Brougham.

1. Speech of Henry Brougham, M. P. on the Present state of the Law.

2. Practical Observations on Popular Education. By H. Brougham, Esq. M. P. F. R. S.

3. Publications of the society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.

XI. North Eastern and Northern Boundary.

1. Decision of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, on the Questions submitted to him by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, for determining the Boundary Line between the United States and the British Provinces. July 2.

---

JUST PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN,

Peter Parley's Tales about the Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Peter Parley's Tales of the Sea.

These volumes, by the author of Peter Parley, will complete a series of Tales for Children, designed to interest them in History and Geography. Those previously published are Parley's Tales about America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Sun, Moon, and Stars.

April 9.

---

ESSAY ON JUNIUS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, an Essay on Junius and his Letters; embracing a sketch of the Life and character of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and memoirs of certain other distinguished individuals; with reflections Historical, Personal and Political, relating to the affairs of Great Britain and America, from 1763 to 1785, by Benjamin Waterhouse, M. D.

'As to the book itself, it can say this in its behalf, that it does not merely confine itself to what its title promises, but expatiates freely into whatever is collateral.'—Harris' Hermes. April 9.

---

THIS DAY PUBLISHED, by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141; Washington Sreet, The Christian Examiner and General Review, No. XLV.

CONTENTS.

I. Religion in France. Vues sur le Protestantism en France. Par J. L. S. Vincent, l'un des Pasteurs de l'Eglise Reformee de Nismes.

II. May's Letters to Hawes. Letters to the Rev. Joel Hawes, D. D. in Review to his 'Tribute to the memory of the Pilgrims.' By Samuel J. May, Pastor of the first Church in Brooklyn, Connecticut.

III. Life and Writings of Origen. Origenis Opera Omnia, quæ Græce vel Latine tantum extant, et ejus Nomine circumferuntur. Opera et studio Caroli Delarue.

IV. On the morality of our Political situation.

V. German Rationalism. The Biblical Repository January, 1831. Conducted by Edward Robinson, Professor Extraordinary in the Theological Seminary at Andover.

VI. Harmonies of the Gospels. A Harmony of the Gospels, on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D.

VII. Mr Whitman and his Reviewers.

1. Review of Mr Whitman's Letters to Professor Stuart on Religious Liberty. [From 'The Spirit of the Pilgrims.'] With an Appendix not before published.

2. A Reply to the Review of Whitman's Letters to Professor Stuart in 'The Spirit of Pilgrims' for March 1834. By Bernard Whitman.

VII. Translation of the Scriptures at Serampore.

IX. Books on Practical Religion. On the Formation of the Christian Character. Addressed to those who are seeking to lead a religious Life. By Henry Ware, Jr. Professor of Pulpit Eloquence, and the Pastoral Care in Harvard University. July 2.

---

TALES OF TRAVELS.—Recently published by GRAY & BOWEN, TALES OF TRAVELS in Central Africa, and Tales of Travels West of the Mississippi, with Maps and numerous Engravings, by Solomon Bell, late keeper of the Traveller's Library, Province House Court, Boston. These volumes are the first of a series which are intended to supply to the Children of the United States, an entertaining abstract of the most popular books of Travels which have lately appeared.

G. & B. also have for sale—

Peter Parley's Tales about Africa.

Peter Parley's Tales about Europe.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals, with three hundred Engravings.

Peter Parley's Juvenile Tales.

Peter Parley's Winter Evening Tales.

Peter Parley's Geography for Children. April 9.

---

SPLENDID BIBLE. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, a superb Bible, without note or comment, in two volumes, Imperial octavo. It was the design of the publishers, in this work to produce the most perfect specimen of typography of which the American Press is capable. The paper is of the finest quality, the type new, large and open. The work has been carefully collated with the best Oxford editions, and great attention has been paid to accuracy.

March 19.

---

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141 Washington Street, 'A Harmony of the Gospels,' on the plan proposed by Lant Carpenter, LL. D.

Feb. 19.

---

WEBSTER'S WRITINGS. Just published by GRAY & BOWEN, No. 141, Washington-street—Speeches and Forensic Arguments by Daniel Webster, with a highly finished portrait drawn from life, and engraved on steel, by J. B. Longacre.

'We offer this volume of Mr Webster's Speeches to our Countrymen in full confidence that they will sustain the high reputation they have already acquired for Political Wisdom, and true Eloquence.'—Editor's Preface.

Jan. 8.

---

THE JURISPRUDENT

IS PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY EVENING, AT THREE DOLLARS A YEAR.

BY GRAY AND BOWEN.

Printed by Isaac R. Butts, No 25 School Street.